START

Microfilmed By:

NORTHEAST DOCUMENT CONSERVATION CENTER
Andover, MA 01810

August 1994

Camera Operator:
Kathy Wilder

MASTER NEGATIVE
NUMBER:
BSO-56-071

MICROFILMED
August 1993 - April 1994

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOK MICROFILMING PROJECT

Funded in part by

THE NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE HUMANITIES

Grant No. PS-20709-93

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MICROFILMING PROJECT

A Cooperative Project Between the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives and the Boston Public Library (August 1993 - April 1994)

The Microfilming Project incorporates two collections of scrapbooks housed in two separate repositories. The first set of scrapbooks (80 volumes) resides within the Allen A. Brown Collection of the Boston Public Library (BPL) Music Department. Their call number is M.125.5. The second set of scrapbooks (132 volumes) resides within the Press Clippings collection of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (BSO) Archives. They have the designation Pres 56.

The BPL scrapbooks begin with the founding of the BSO in 1881 and continue, through 79 seasons, to 1960. Articles consist mainly of reviews and feature stories from Boston and New York newspapers. Occasionally, magazine articles and press releases are also included. The scrapbooks cover most aspects of the BSO.

The BSO scrapbooks run from 1889, the Orchestra's 9th season, to 1973. In addition to local reviews and features, the volumes contain articles culled from national and international publications. The scrapbooks document, in detail, all aspects of the BSO: The Symphony Orchestra (including subscription concerts, tours, and trips), the Boston Pops, the Tanglewood Festival, the Tanglewood Music Center, and Symphony Hall.

The two sets of scrapbooks have been filmed as two separate entities. Researchers wanting to look at specific seasons or subjects must examine both sets of films to ensure full coverage.

The scrapbooks do not represent the complete holdings of either location on the subject of the BSO.

Requests for positive microfilm copies of individual rolls, or of film sets, should be directed to the respective repository:

Music Department
Boston Public Library
Post Office Box 286
Boston, MA 02117

Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives
Symphony Hall
Boston, MA 02115

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOKS

1889 - 1973

132 VOLUMES

Source: Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives

FINDING AID

Boston Symphony Orchestra Scrapbooks (Series 56, Sub-Series 1)

Source: Press Office (Office of the Public Relations Director)

The BSO scrapbooks comprise part of one series in the BSO Archives. Series 56, Press Clippings, is divided by format into 3 sub-series: 1) Scrapbooks, 1889-1973 (132 volumes); 2) Loose Clippings, 1931-1991 (9 record cartons); and 3) Oversize Newspapers and Journals, 1919-1979 (1 oversize box). Each sub-series is arranged chronologically.

The scrapbooks contain concert notices and reviews, record reviews, and feature articles. Early scrapbooks may also contain programs, tickets, and subscription orders. Materials are organized by concert season into the following categories: BSO (including tours); Kneisel Quartet (and later Boston Symphony Chamber Players); Boston Pops (referred to in early years as Promenade concerts); and Tanglewood (including the Tanglewood Music Center, the Tanglewood Festival, Tanglewood-on-Parade, and the Fromm Festival of Contemporary Music).

Reviews and articles cover a wide range of subjects: Founder H.L. Higginson; BSO conductors, players, trustees, and other personnel; guest artists and composers; BSO and Pops performances and recordings; U.S. and overseas tours; BSO/Cecilia Society joint performances; open rehearsals; and special events connected to anniversary celebrations and fundraising.

Feature stories document changes in the size, composition, and location of the orchestra. Topics include the hiring of women and minorities; the unionization of players; controversies (such as the internment of conductor Karl Muck during World War II); the sale of the old Music Hall; and the construction of Symphony Hall and other structures (such as the Koussevitsky Music Shed at Tanglewood).

Reproductions of the materials in the collection may not be made without permission from the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives.

GUIDE TO CONTENTS

Institution: BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Series Name: PRESS CLIPPINGS
Series Number: 56
Series Dates: 1889-1991

Sub-series Name: SCRAPBOOKS
Sub-series Number: 1
Sub-series Dates: 1889-1973

VOLUME LISTING

VOL	TITLE	DATES
1	BSO	1889-1890
2	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1890-1891
3	BSO	1891-1892
4	Promenade (Pops)	1892
5	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1892-1893
6	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1893-1894
7	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1894-1895
8	BSO	1895-1896
9	Promenade (Pops)	1895-1896
10	BSO	1896-1897
11	BSO	1897-1898
12	Promenade (Pops)	1897-1898
13	BSO	1898-1899
14	BSO	1899-1900
15	Pops	1899-1900
16	BSO	1900-1901
17	BSO	1901-1902
18	Pops	1901-1903
19	BSO	1902-1903
20	BSO	1903-1904
21	BSO	1904-1905
22	Pops	1904-1905
23	BSO	1905-1906
24	BSO	1906-1907
25	BSO	1907-1908
26	BSO	1908-1909
27	BSO Pops	1909-1910
28	BSO Pops	1910-1911
29	BSO Advertisements	1910-1911
30	BSO Pops	1911-1912
31	BSO Pops	1912-1913
32	BSO Pops	1913-1914
33	BSO Pops	1914-1915
34	BSO Pops	1915-1916
35	BSO Pops	1916-1917
36	BSO Pops	1917-1918
37	Karl Muck	1918
38	BSO Pops	1918-1919
39	BSO Pops	1919-1920
40	BSO Advertisements	1919-1920
41	BSO Pops	1920-1921
42	BSO Pops	1921-1922
43	BSO BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1922-1923
44	BSO Pops	1922-1924
45	BSO Pops	1924
46	BSO BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1924-1926
47	BSO Pops	1925-1926
48	BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1926-1927
49	BSO Pops	1926-1928
50	BSO	1928
51	BSO Pops	1928-1929
52	BSO Pops U.S. Tour	1929-1930
53	BSO	1930-1931
54	BSO Pops	1931-1932
55	BSO Pops	1932-1933
56	BSO	1933-1934
57	BSO	1934-1935
58	BSO	1935-1936
59	BSO	1936-1937

VOL	TITLE	DATES
60	Pops
	Tanglewood	1936-1937
61	BSO	1937
62	BSO	1937-1938
63	Pops
	Tanglewood	1938
64	BSO	1938-1939
65	Pops
	Tanglewood	1939
66	BSO	1939-1940
67	Tanglewood	1939-1941
68	BSO
	Pops	1940
69	BSO	1940-1941
70	Tanglewood	1940-1944
71	BSO	1941-1942
72	BSO	1942-1943
73	BSO	1943-1944
74	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1944-1945
75	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1945-1946
76	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1946-1947
77	Tanglewood	1947-1948
78	BSO	1947-1949
79	Tanglewood	1949-1950
80	BSO	1949-1951
81	Tanglewood	1950-1951
82	BSO
	Pops	1951-1952
83	BSO
	Pops	1952-1953
84	Tanglewood	1952-1953
85	BSO	1953-1955
86	Tanglewood	1953-1954
87	Tanglewood	1954-1955
88	BSO
	Pops	1955-1956
89	Tanglewood	1955-1956
90	Tanglewood	1955-1956
91	European Tour	1956
92	European Tour	1956-1957
93	BSO
	Pops	1956-1957
94	Tanglewood	1957
95	BSO	1957-1958
96	BSO
	Pops	1958-1959
97	BSO	1958-1959
98	Tanglewood	1958-1959
99	Tanglewood	1959
100	BSO
	Pops	1959-1960
101	Tanglewood	1959-1960
102	Far Eastern Tour	1959-1960
103	BSO
	Pops	1960-1961
104	Tanglewood	1961
105	BSO
	Pops	1961-1962
106	Tanglewood	1962
107	BSO
	Pops	1962-1963
108	Tanglewood	1963
109	BSO
	Pops	1963-1964
110	Tanglewood	1963-1964
111	BSO
	Pops	1964-1966
112	Tanglewood	1965
113	BSO 85th Anniversary	1965
114	BSO
	Pops	1965-1966
115	Tanglewood	1966
116	BSO
	Pops	1966-1967
117	Tanglewood	1967
118	BSO
	Pops	1967-1968
119	Tanglewood	1968-1969
120	BSO
	Pops	1968-1969
121	Tanglewood	1969
122	BSO
	Pops	1969-1970
123	Tanglewood	1970
124	BSO
	Pops	1970-1971
125	Tanglewood	1971
126	BSO
	Pops	1971-1972
127	European Tour	1970-1971
128	European Tour	1971
129	Tanglewood	1972
130	BSO
	Pops	1972-1973
131	Tanglewood	1973
132	BSO
	Pops	1973-1974

MATERIALS NOT FILMED

SUB-SERIES NUMBER	SUB-SERIES NAME	SUB-SERIES DATES
2	Loose Clippings	1931-1991
3	Oversize Newspapers and Journals	1919-1979

COPYRIGHT STATEMENT

The copyright law of the Unites States - Title 17, United States Code - concerns the making of photocopies or other reproductions of copyrighted material.

Under certain conditions specified in the law, libraries and archives are authorized to furnish a photocopy or other reproduction. One of these specified conditions is that the photocopy or other reproduction is not to be "used for any purpose other than private study, scholarship, or research." If a user makes a request for, or later uses, a photocopy or reproduction for purposes in excess of "fair use," that user may be liable for copyright infringement.

This institution reserves the right to refuse to accept a copy order if, in its judgment, fulfillment of the order would involve violation of the copy-right law.

TECHNICAL DATA

IMAGE PLACEMENT: IA IB IIA IIB

REDUCTION RATIO: 16:1

FILM STOCK:

Reel 71

Volumes 117-119

Tanglewood, BSO, Pops

1967-1969

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

A3

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

MULTIPLE EXPOSURES DUE TO COLOR VARIATIONS

VOLUME 117

Tanglewood

1967

Tanglewood 1967

Pre Season	.	1 - 6
1st Week	.	7 - 11
2nd Week	.	12 - 17
3rd Week	.	18 - 24
4th Week	.	25 - 32
5th Week	.	33 - 40
6th Week	.	41 - 50
7th Week	.	51 - 59
8th Week	.	60 - 66
Tanglewood on Parade	.	67 - 69
Berkshire Music Centre	.	70 - 72
Pre Season Pops	.	73 - 76
Pops at Tanglewood	.	77 - 79
Tues. night Chamber Concerts	.	80
Weekend Preludes	.	81
Fromm Festival	.	82 - 91
Grants and Awards	.	92 - 96
Miscellany	.	67 - 100
Tanglewood Symposium	.	101 - 103
Esplanade	.	104 - 107

PRE- SEASON

1

A Tanglewood Summer

TIMES (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
CIRC. 635,600

MAR 27 1967

New England Newsclip

Berkshire Festival: Their Calendar Says June

By R. E. KRIEGER

It may still be winter, but they're thinking summer in the offices of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, where they have just announced some of the program for the 1967 Tanglewood season at Lenox, Mass.

The eight - week Tanglewood season will begin on June 30 with an evening concert by the Boston Symphony with Erich Leinsdorf conducting.

There will be six guest conductors to share the conducting task with Mr. Leinsdorf over the 24-concert season, the 30th season of the orchestra in the Berkshires.

Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct the three programs of the Festival's opening week, with the first guest conductor, Jorge Mester, appearing on July 7.

Antonio Janigro will conduct on July 14 and will also be soloist at that concert, performing in Vivaldi's Cello Concerto.

Seiji Ozawa, also scheduled to conduct this summer at the Saratoga Performing Arts Center and at Lincoln Center, will make his fourth conducting appearance at Tanglewood on July 22. Mr. Ozawa is music director of the Toronto Symphony and the Rapinia Festival.

Rafael Kubelik, recent guest conductor of the Boston Symphony for a three-week period, will conduct at Tanglewood July 28 and 29.

William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony, will conduct on Aug. 4 and 12.

★ ★ ★

THE NEWLY appointed president of the New England Conservatory, Gunther Schuller, will be guest conductor of Aug. 18. Mr. Schuller, head of contemporary music activities at the Berkshire Center, will include Ive's "Symphony No. 4" on his program.

Mr. Schuller will also be conducting at Lincoln Center this summer, where the American premiere of his opera "The Visitation" will be performed.

In a partial rundown of the Tanglewood program this summer, Mr. Leinsdorf has revealed that the season will open with three concerts by the entire orchestra, followed by two weeks of chamber music concerts devoted to Bach and Mozart.

This initial plan is similar to that of 1966.

On July 15, during Bach week, there will be a performance of the B Minor Mass, Mr. Leinsdorf conducting, and with Helen Boatwright, Beverly Wolff, Florence Kopleff, Gene Bullard and Tom Krause as soloists.

A concert version performance of the rarely heard original version of Beethoven's opera, "Fidelio," is scheduled for Aug. 5.

This follows a pattern Mr. Leinsdorf started in 1965 with similar versions of "Lohengrin" and "The Magic Flute."

Beethoven revised the opera twice, the first being immediately after its premiere, and the second some seven years later.

The cast for the original "Fidelio" will include the East German soprano Hanne-Lore Kuhse, Mary Ellen Pracht, George Shirley (familiar to Albany audiences), Nico Castel, Ara Berberian, Harold Enns and the Finnish baritone, Tom Krause, who sang in the premiere of Britten's "War Requiem" at Tanglewood in 1963.

★ ★ ★

VERDI'S "REQUIEM" will be performed on Aug. 19 and joining Mr. Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony as soloists will be Martina Arroyo, Tatiana Troyanos, Michele Molese and Ezio Flagello.

At the final concert of the season on Aug. 20, Mr. Flagello will take part in an all-Wagner program and sing in Wotan's Farewell from "Die Walkure." Marilyn Horne will also be soloist in the Immolation Scene from "Die Gotterdammerung."

The Friday evening programs throughout the season will begin at 9 p.m., following the weekend preludes beginning at 7 p.m. The Saturday concerts will begin at 8 p.m. and Sundays at 2:30 p.m. Open rehearsals will take place each Saturday morning.

There will be two special concerts. Arthur Fiedler will conduct the Boston "Pops" on Aug. 8 and "Tanglewood on Parade" will be held on Aug. 18.

Further information on the festival at Tanglewood may be obtained by writing The Berkshire Festival, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass., 02115.

WHISTON PRESS CLIPPING SERVICE
BUFFALO, N. Y.

Albany, N. Y.
Knickerbocker - News
047

Bostonians' Eight-Week Season At Tanglewood Opens June 30

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced that its 1967 Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., will begin on Friday, June 30, and will run for eight weeks through Aug. 20.

Two weeks, the second and third, will be devoted to music by Vivaldi, Bach and Mozart performed by a chamber orchestra composed of Boston Symphony musicians. Jorge Mester and Antonio Janigro will be guest conductors for one concert each during the chamber-orchestra weeks.

Guest conductors for full orchestra concerts will be Rafael Kubelik (July 28 and 29), Seiji Ozawa (July 22), Gunther Schuller (Aug. 18) and William Steinberg (Aug. 4 and 12). All the other concerts will be under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, the permanent conductor of the Boston Symphony.

Among the special works and programs to be presented are Bach's Mass in B minor (July 15) and the 1805 version of Beethoven's "Fidelio" in concert form (Aug. 20), Verdi's Requiem (Aug. 19) and a Wagner program (Aug. 20).

Arthur Fiedler will lead the Boston Pops Orchestra in a Pension Fund benefit concert on Aug. 8 and in a "Tanglewood-on-Parade" concert on Aug. 17 to benefit the Berkshire Music Center.

Among the soloists listed are Malcolm Frager, Evelyne Crochet, Claude Frank, Eden and Tamir, Lillian Kallir, Theodore Lettvin, Van Cliburn and John Browning, pianists; Yehudi Menuhin, Shmuel Ashkenasi and Itzhak Perlman, violinists, and Marilyn Horne, Martina Arroyo and Helen Boatwright, sopranos.

Friday concerts will begin at 9 P.M., Saturday concerts at 8 and Sunday concerts at 2:30.

Before each Friday concert, the orchestra will offer Weekend Preludes at 7 P.M. for ticket holders of the regular Friday concerts.

A brochure with complete Berkshire Festival information may be obtained from the Festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass., 02115.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 SUN. 122,607

FEB 19 1967

GUESTS AT TANGLEWOOD — Among the guests artists to be presented at Tanglewood during the 1967 summer season are, from left, bass Ara Berbarian, tenor Nico [illegible], soprano Beverly Wolff and conductor Seiji Ozawa. Berbarian and Castel will perform in a concert presentation of Beethoven's "Fidelio." Miss Wolff will be a soloist in Bach's B Minor Mass. Ozawa's program has not been announcer.

SIX CONDUCTORS, SOLOISTS IN '67 TANGLEWOOD SEASON

Six guest conductors will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the 1967 summer season at Tanglewood. The eight-week Berkshire Music Festival at Lenox, Mass., will open on June 30 with a full-orchestra concert under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, music director.

Jorge Mester will be the first guest conductor of the season, appearing with the orchestra on July 7. Antonio Janigro will conduct the orchestra on July 14 when he will also appear as soloist in the Vivaldi Cello Concerto.

Seiji Ozawa will make his fourth appearance at Tanglewood in as many years on July 22. Rafael Kubelik will conduct on July 28 and 29 and William Steinberg, conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony, will conduct concerts on Aug. 4 and 12.

Gunther Schuller, president of the New England Conservatory and head of contemporary music activities at Tanglewood, will conduct the concert of Aug. 18 including Charles Ives' Symphony No. 4.

The changes incorporated in the Tanglewood schedule last season will be retained this year. The Friday evening concerts will again begin at 9:00 p.m., preceeded by a Weekend Prelude which begins at 7:30. This plan met with great success last year.

The season will again open with the full orchestra present and the abbreviated chamber orchestra presenting the concerts of the second and third weekends which will feature the music of Bach and Mozart. The Bach week will include a performance of the B Minor Mass with soloists Helen Boatwright, Beverly Wolff, Florence Kopleff, Gene Bullard and Tom Krause.

This season's opera-in-concert form will be the original version of Beethoven's "Fidelio" which will be presented on Aug. 5. The cast will include Hanne-Lore Kuhse, Mary Ellen Pracht, George Shirley, Nico Castel, Tom Krause and Ara Berbarian.

The concluding week of the season will feature Verdi's Requiem on Aug. 19. The final concert on Aug. 20 will be devoted to Wagner, with Ezio Flagello singing Wotan's Farewell from "Die Walkure" and Marilyn Horne singing the solo in the Immolation Scene from "Die Gotterdammerung."

Two special concerts are scheduled in addition to the regular weekend performances. Arthur Fiedler will conduct the Boston Pops in the annual pension fund benefit on Aug. 8 and the "Tanglewood on Parade" benefit for the Berkshire Music Center will be presented on Aug. 18.

The full season's schedule will be announced shortly and may be obtained by writing Berkshire Festival, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass.

SUNDAY HERALD TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 310,000

APR 7 1968 New England Newsclip

2

Show Guide | MUSIC

Tanglewood Time Getting Closer

By McLAREN HARRIS

During usual years the arrival of an announcement of the forthcoming Tanglewood season at this point on the calendar seems like the most frivolous sort of wishful thinking.

As spring of 1968 makes its most auspicious entrance within recent memory, news of the 31st season of the Berkshire Festival appears as a proper item for consideration.

This summer's Berkshire Festival runs from July 5 through Aug. 25, following a long-standing tradition of entangling its first weekend with the July 4th holiday.

The Boston Symphony concert schedule follows the same pattern as the last two years: a weekend prelude of chamber music each Friday at 7 p.m., followed by the orchestra concert at 9; Saturday nights at 8:30; and Sunday afternoons at 2:30. And now there is even another series by the Ensembles of the Boston Symphany on Sunday mornings at 10:30 in the Tanglewood Theater. As in past years, open rehearsals will be held on Saturday mornings at 10:30, previewing the evening programs.

This, as you can see, is about as close to the saturation point as a weekend can come without exhausting the players, and one may speculate that if there yet exist free, non-musical moments here or there, Tanglewood officials will find them.

ERICH LEINSDORF will conduct 16 of the 24 Boston Symphony concerts. Guest conductors for the remaining eight will include a Pierre Monteux protege and director of the Netherlands Chamber Orchestra, David Zinman (July 12), Minneapolis Symphony conductor Stanislaw Skrowaczewski (July 19), San Francisco music director Josef Krips (July 28), Detroit Symphony dircetor Sixten Ehrling (Aug. 2), Pittsburgh conductor William Steinberg (Aug. 4), Charles Wilson, the BSO's assistant conductor (Aug. 9), former BSO music director Charles Munch (Aug. 17), and composer Aaron Copland (Aug.23).

It will be a good summer for the classic and romantic eras (aren't they all?). There will be three Mozart programs, two Beethoven programs, three Brahms programs and one program each for Mendelssohn, Berlioz and Wagner—plus, of course, programs of the mixed variety.

For the first pair of weekends, while the Pops entertains seagulls and Storrow Drive traffic on the Esplanade, the Symphony will present three Mozart programs under Leinsdorf, including vocal music sung by Beverly Sills (Saturday, July 6), and a Baroque-plus-Hayden weekend on July 12-14, with Haydn's compete Lord Nelson Mass on Satruday.

SKROWACZEWSKI will conduct the same Berlioz - Lutoslawski Dvorak program on July 19 which he led this past season at Symphony Hall; Van Cliburn will perform the Tchaikovsky First on July 20 and Grant Johannesen will be back for another Beethoven "Emperor" on July 21. Pianist Jorge Bolet (sound the "t," please) will appear on July 26 and Aug. 4; Malcolm Frager will play a version of the Schumann Piano Concerto on Aug. 3 which he himself discovered; Gina Bachauer will deliver two Rachmaninoff concerti, Nos. 3 and 2, respectively, on Aug. 9 and 10, then the Brahms Second on Aug. 11 (Thereafter, we may presume, she vacations on the Antilles).

"Special interest" programs? The Lord Nelson Mass, plus Bach's Cantata 51, "Jauchzet Gott," with Saramae Endich, on July 13; Brahms' Requiem on July 27; Berlioz, "Romeo and Juliet" on Aug. 17; Copland conducting 20th-century music on Aug. 23; Wagner's prelude to "Tristan," finale to "Rheingold" and "Die Walkuere," Act I, on Aug. 24; and the final program of works for chorus and orchestra, plus the Symphony No. 1, of Brahms.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,200

MAR 14 1967 New England Newsclip

Junior Choirs of Churches To Sing in Tanglewood Shed

A large-scale Junior Choir Festival will be held in the Shed at Tanglewood at 4 p.m. Sunday, June 18, it was announced today by the Berkshire chapter of the American Guild of Organists.

The junior choirs of Berkshire County churches will participate, under the direction of a nationally prominent choral conductor to be announced. A total of 750 singers have already been registered for the festival, and represents churches of all the major denominations, both Protestant and Catholic.

The program will follow the pattern set last June when the adult choirs of Berkshire County presented a festival under the same auspices. On that occasion, the massed choir numbered 400. An audience of more than 4,000 nearly filled the large shed. It will be called an Interfaith Festival of Hymns and Anthems, with the children's choir singing the anthems, and the audience joining in all the hymns. The hymns will be common to all the faiths, and area clergymen will participate.

Mrs. Kenneth D. Beardsley, organist at Grace Episcopal Church in Dalton, is general chairman, assisted by Mrs. Howard A. Fohrhaltz, choir director of the First Methodist Church.

Churches still may enter their choirs before the deadline of March 15 by contacting Mrs. Beardsley at 30 Pleasant St., Dalton. The program is open to the public, free of charge.

SUNDAY REGISTER
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
CIRC. 115,200

APR 2 1967 New England Newsclip

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
ERICH LEINSDORF
Music Director

Complete Programs For The 1967 Berkshire Festival

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's eight week Berkshire Festival opens on Friday evening, June 30 at the orchestra's summer home, Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.), with a concert conducted by Music Director Erich Leinsdorf. Weekend concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given on Fridays at 9 p.m., Saturdays at 8 p.m. and Sunday afternoons at 2:30 p.m. Prior to each of the Friday programs, the Orchestra will offer Weekend Preludes for those who arrive at Tanglewood early in the evening. The Preludes begin at 7 p.m. and many of the weekend soloists will perform at these programs which are provided at no extra cost to those holding tickets to the Friday evening Orchestra concert.

The second and third weeks of this summer's Festival will be performed by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians with music by Bach, Mozart, and Vivaldi scheduled for performance. As he has each summer since he announced the plan in 1963, Mr. Leinsdorf will continue the series of Mozart piano concertos. Guest conductors Jorge Mester (July 7) and Antonio Janigro (July 14) will each conduct one program during the chamber orchestra weeks.

Other guest conductors who will appear at Tanglewood this summer are Rafael Kubelik (July 28 and 29); Seiji Ozawa (July 22); Gunther Schuller (August 18); and William Steinberg (August 4 and 12).

On July 15 Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Bach's B minor Mass and on August 5 the Music Director will conduct a concert performance of the original 1805 version of Beethoven's only opera, "Fidelio." In the closing weekend of the Tanglewood season Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Verdi's Requiem on August 19 and an all-Wagner program August 20.

Two benefit events are scheduled for the summer at Tanglewood. Arthur Fiedler will conduct the Boston Pops Orchestra on August 8 for the Boston Symphony Pension Fund, and Tanglewood-on-Parade which benefits the Berkshire Music Center will be held on August 17.

Six programs of chamber music will be given on Tuesdays evenings.

A brochure with complete Berkshire Festival information may be obtained by writing: festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass. 02115.

Friday, June 30, 9 p.m.
LEINSDORF
Prokofiev: Symphony No. 5
Beethoven: Violin Concerto
Yehudi Menuhin

Saturday, July 1, 8 p.m.
LEINSDORF
Beethoven: Symphony No. 4
Prokofiev: Lt. Kije Suite
David Clatworthy
Beethoven: Symphony No. 7

Sunday, July 2, 2:30 p.m.
LEINSDORF
Prokofiev: Scenes from Romeo and Juliet
Beethoven: Piano Concerto No. 4
Malcolm Frager

Friday, July 7, 9 p.m.
MESTER
Mozart Program :
Symphony No. 33
Piano Concerto, K. 466
Claude Frank
Adagio and Fugue, K. 546
Symphony No. 35

Saturday, July 8, 8 p.m.
LEINSDORF
Mozart Program:
March, K. 408
Piano Concerto, K. 456
Evelyne Crochet
Haffner Serenade

Sunday, July 9, 2:30 p.m.
LEINSDORF
Mozart Program:
Divertimento, K. 205
Piano Concerto, K. 491
Claude Frank
Symphony No. 40

Friday, July 14, 9 p.m.
JANIGRO
Vivaldi Program:
Sinfonia in C
Cello Concerto in C
Antonio Janigro
Flute Concerto
Doriot Dwyer
Concerto "Alla Rusticia"
Bassoon Concerto in E minor
Sherman Walt
Oboe Concerto in D minor
Ralph Gomberg
Piccolo Concerto in C minor
Lois Schaefer
Concerto Grosso in A

Saturday, July 15, 8 p.m.
LEINSDORF
Bach: B minor Mass
Helen Boatwright,
Beverly Wolff,
Florence Kopleff,
Gene Bullard,
Tom Krause,
Tanglewood Choir,
Berkshire Chorus

Sunday, July 16, 2:30 p.m.
LEINSDORF
Bach Program:
Suite No. 3
Wedding Cantata
Helen Boatwright
Violin Concerto in A minor
Joseph Silverstein
Cantata No. 174
Beverly Wolff,
Gene Bullard,
Tom Krause,
Tanglewood Choir

Friday, July 21, 9 p.m.
LEINSDORF
Mendelssohn: Midsummer Night's Dream Overture
Schuller: Diptych
Bartok: Concerto for Two Pianos and Percussion
Poulenc: Concerto for Two Piano Eden and Tamir
Strauss: Till Eulenspiegel

Saturday, July 22, 8 p.m.
OZAWA
Mendelssohn: Hebrides Overture
Takemitsu: Requiem for Strings
Ligeti: Atmosphere
Berlioz: Symphonie Fantastique

Sunday, July 23, 2:30 p.m.
LEINSDORF
Schumann: Symphony No. 1
Berg: Wozzeck Excerpts
Mendelssohn: Piano Concerto in G minor
Lilian Kallir
Stravinsky: Firebird Suite

Friday, July 28, 9 p.m.
KUBELIK
Haydn: Symphony No. 102
Martinu: Double Concerto
Franck: Symphony in D minor

Saturday, July 29, 8 p.m.
KUBELIK
Smetana: Moldau
Elgar: Violin Concerto
Shmuel Ashkenasi
Brahms: Symphony No. 4

Sunday, July 30, 2:30 p.m.
LEINSDORF
Webern: Six Pieces, Op. 6
Schubert: Symphony No. 9
Grieg: Piano Concerto
Van Cliburn

Friday, August 4, 9 p.m.
STEINBERG
Beethoven Program:
Symphony No. 8
Piano Concerto No. 3
Theodore Lettvin
Symphony No. 5

Saturday, August 5, 8 p.m.
LEINSDORF
Beethoven: "Fidelio"
(original version of 1805)
Hanne-Lore Kuhse, George Shirley, Tom Krause, Mary Ellen Pracht, Ara Berberian, Nico Castel, Harold Enns, Tanglewood Choir, Berkshire Chorus

Sunday, August 6, 2:30 p.m.
LEINSDORF
Brahms Program:
Academic Festival Overture
Symphony No. 3
Violin Concerto
Joseph Silverstein

Friday, August 11, 9 p.m.
LEINSDORF
Moussorgsky: Khovanchina Prelude
Tchaikovsky: Symphony No. 6
Sibelius: Violin Concerto
Itzhak Perlman

Saturday, August 12, 8:30 p.m.
STEINBERG
Glinka: Kamarinskaya
Borodin: Symphony No. 2
Tchaikovsky: Manfred Symphony

Sunday, August 13, 2:30 p.m.
LEINSDORF
Prokofiev: Piano Concerto No. 1
John Browning
Colgrass: As Quiet As
Rachmaninoff: Paganini Rhapsody
John Browning

Friday, August 18, 9 p.m.
SCHULLER
Dvorak: Othello, Overture
Schubert: Symphony No. 8
Ives: Symphony No. 4

Saturday, August 19, 8 p.m.
LEINSDORF
Verdi: Requiem
Martina Arroyo,
Tatiana Troyanos,
Michele Molese,
Ezio Flagello,
Tanglewood Choir,
Berkshire Chorus

Sunday, August 20, 2:30 p.m.
LEINSDORF
Wagner Program:
Die Meistersinger: Prelude
Die Walkure: Ride; Wotan's Farewell
Ezio Flagello
Gotterdammerung: Dawn, Rhine Journey,
Interludes, Siegfried's Death
Immolation Scene
Marilyn Horne

SUNDAY HERALD TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 310,000

APR 7 1968

New England Newsclip

2

Show Guide | MUSIC

Tanglewood Time Getting Closer

By McLAREN HARRIS

During usual years the arrival of an announcement of the forthcoming Tanglewood season at this point on the calendar seems like the most frivolous sort of wishful thinking.

As spring of 1968 makes its most auspicious entrance within recent memory, news of the 31st season of the Berkshire Festival appears as a proper item for consideration.

This summer's Berkshire Festival runs from July 5 through Aug. 25, following a long-standing tradition of entangling its first weekend with the July 4th holiday.

The Boston Symphony concert schedule follows the same pattern as the last two years: a weekend prelude of chamber music each Friday at 7 p.m., followed by the orchestra concert at 9; Saturday nights at 8:30; and Sunday afternoons at 2:30. And now there is even another series by the Ensembles of the Boston Symphany on Sunday mornings at 10:30 in the Tanglewood Theater. As in past years, open rehearsals will be held on Saturday mornings at 10:30, previewing the evening programs.

This, as you can see, is about as close to the saturation point as a weekend can come without exhausting the players, and one may speculate that if there yet exist free, non-musical moments here or there, Tanglewood officials will find them.

ERICH LEINSDORF will conduct 16 of the 24 Boston Symphony concerts. Guest conductors for the remaining eight will include a Pierre Monteux protege and director of the Netherlands Chamber Orchestra, David Zinman (July 12), Minneapolis Symphony conductor Stanislaw Skrowaczewski (July 19), San Francisco music director Josef Krips (July 28), Detroit Symphony dircetor Sixten Ehrling (Aug. 2), Pittsburgh conductor William Steinberg (Aug. 4), Charles Wilson, the BSO's assistant conductor (Aug. 9), former BSO music director Charles Munch (Aug. 17), and composer Aaron Copland (Aug.23).

It will be a good summer for the classic and romantic eras (aren't they all?). There will be three Mozart programs, two Beethoven programs, three Brahms programs and one program each for Mendelssohn, Berlioz and Wagner—plus, of course, programs of the mixed variety.

For the first pair of weekends, while the Pops entertains seagulls and Storrow Drive traffic on the Esplanade, the Symphony will present three Mozart programs under Leinsdorf, including vocal music sung by Beverly Sills (Saturday, July 6), and a Baroque-plus-Hayden weekend on July 12-14, with Haydn's compete Lord Nelson Mass on Satruday.

SKROWACZEWSKI will conduct the same Berlioz - Lutoslawski Dvorak program on July 19 which he led this past season at Symphony Hall; Van Cliburn will perform the Tchaikovsky First on July 20 and Grant Johannesen will be back for another Beethoven "Emperor" on July 21. Pianist Jorge Bolet (sound the "t," please) will appear on July 26 and Aug. 4; Malcolm Frager will play a version of the Schumann Piano Concerto on Aug. 3 which he himself discovered; Gina Bachauer will deliver two Rachmaninoff concerti, Nos. 3 and 2, respectively, on Aug. 9 and 10, then the Brahms Second on Aug. 11 (Thereafter, we may presume, she vacations on the Antilles).

"Special interest" programs? The Lord Nelson Mass, plus Bach's Cantata 51, "Jauchzet Gott," with Saramae Endich, on July 13; Brahms' Requiem on July 27; Berlioz, "Romeo and Juliet" on Aug. 17; Copland conducting 20th-century music on Aug. 23; Wagner's prelude to "Tristan," finale to "Rheingold" and "Die Walkuere," Act I, on Aug. 24; and the final program of works for chorus and orchestra, plus the Symphony No. 1, of Brahms.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (c)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,200

MAR 14 1967

New England Newsclip

Junior Choirs of Churches To Sing in Tanglewood Shed

A large-scale Junior Choir Festival will be held in the Shed at Tanglewood at 4 p.m. Sunday, June 18, it was announced today by the Berkshire chapter of the American Guild of Organists.

The junior choirs of Berkshire County churches will participate, under the direction of a nationally prominent choral conductor to be announced. A total of 750 singers have already been registered for the festival, and represents churches of all the major denominations, both Protestant and Catholic.

The program will follow the pattern set last June when the adult choirs of Berkshire County presented a festival under the same auspices. On that occasion, the massed choir numbered 400. An audience of more than 4,000 nearly filled the large shed. It will be called an Interfaith Festival of Hymns and Anthems, with the children's choir singing the anthems, and the audience joining in all the hymns. The hymns will be common to all the faiths, and area clergymen will participate.

Mrs. Kenneth D. Beardsley, organist at Grace Episcopal Church in Dalton, is general chairman, assisted by Mrs. Howard A. Fohrhaltz, choir director of the First Methodist Church.

Churches still may enter their choirs before the deadline of March 15 by contacting Mrs. Beardsley at 30 Pleasant St., Dalton. The program is open to the public, free of charge.

SUNDAY REGISTER
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
CIRC. 115,200

APR 2 1967

New England Newsclip

Complete Programs For The 1967 Berkshire Festival

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
ERICH LEINSDORF
Music Director

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's eight week Berkshire Festival opens on Friday evening, June 30 at the orchestra's summer home, Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.), with a concert conducted by Music Director Erich Leinsdorf. Weekend concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given on Fridays at 9 p.m., Saturdays at 8 p.m. and Sunday afternoons at 2:30 p.m. Prior to each of the Friday programs, the Orchestra will offer Weekend Preludes for those who arrive at Tanglewood early in the evening. The Preludes begin at 7 p.m. and many of the weekend soloists will perform at these programs which are provided at no extra cost to those holding tickets to the Friday evening Orchestra concert.

The second and third weeks of this summer's Festival will be performed by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians with music by Bach, Mozart, and Vivaldi scheduled for performance. As he has each summer since he announced the plan in 1963, Mr. Leinsdorf will continue the series of Mozart piano concertos. Guest conductors Jorge Mester (July 7) and Antonio Janigro (July 14) will each conduct one program during the chamber orchestra weeks.

Other guest conductors who will appear at Tanglewood this summer are Rafael Kubelik (July 28 and 29); Seiji Ozawa (July 22); Gunther Schuller (August 18); and William Steinberg (August 4 and 12).

On July 15 Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Bach's B minor Mass and on August 5 the Music Director will conduct a concert performance of the original 1805 version of Beethoven's only opera, "Fidelio." In the closing weekend of the Tanglewood season Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Verdi's Requiem on August 19 and an all-Wagner program August 20.

Two benefit events are scheduled for the summer at Tanglewood. Arthur Fiedler will conduct the Boston Pops Orchestra on August 8 for the Boston Symphony Pension Fund, and Tanglewood-on-Parade which benefits the Berkshire Music Center will be held on August 17.

Six programs of chamber music will be given on Tuesdays evenings.

A brochure with complete Berkshire Festival information may be obtained by writing: festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass. 02115.

Friday, June 30, 9 p.m.
LEINSDORF
Prokofiev: Symphony No. 5
Beethoven: Violin Concerto
Yehudi Menuhin

Saturday, July 1, 8 p.m.
LEINSDORF
Beethoven: Symphony No. 4
Prokofiev: Lt. Kije Suite
David Clatworthy
Beethoven: Symphony No. 7

Sunday, July 2, 2:30 p.m.
LEINSDORF
Prokofiev: Scenes from Romeo and Juliet
Beethoven: Piano Concerto No. 4
Malcolm Frager

Friday, July 7, 9 p.m.
MESTER
Mozart Program :
Symphony No. 33
Piano Concerto, K. 466
Claude Frank
Adagio and Fugue, K. 546
Symphony No. 35

Saturday, July 8, 8 p.m.
LEINSDORF
Mozart Program:
March, K. 408
Piano Concerto, K. 456
Evelyne Crochet
Haffner Serenade

Sunday, July 9, 2:30 p.m.
LEINSDORF
Mozart Program:
Divertimento, K. 205
Piano Concerto, K. 491
Claude Frank
Symphony No. 40

Friday, July 14, 9 p.m.
JANIGRO
Vivaldi Program:
Sinfonia in C
Cello Concerto in C
Antonio Janigro
Flute Concerto
Doriot Dwyer
Concerto "Alla Rusticia"
Bassoon Concerto in E minor
Sherman Walt
Oboe Concerto in D minor
Ralph Gomberg
Piccolo Concerto in C minor
Lois Schaefer
Concerto Grosso in A

Saturday, July 15, 8 p.m.
LEINSDORF
Bach: B minor Mass
Helen Boatwright,
Beverly Wolff,
Florence Kopleff,
Gene Bullard,
Tom Krause,
Tanglewood Choir,
Berkshire Chorus

Sunday, July 16, 2:30 p.m.
LEINSDORF
Bach Program:
Suite No. 3
Wedding Cantata
Helen Boatwright
Violin Concerto in A minor
Joseph Silverstein
Cantata No. 174
Beverly Wolff,
Gene Bullard,
Tom Krause,
Tanglewood Choir

Friday, July 21, 9 p.m.
LEINSDORF
Mendelssohn: Midsummer Night's Dream Overture
Schuller: Diptych
Bartok: Concerto for Two Pianos and Percussion
Poulenc: Concerto for Two Piano Eden and Tamir
Strauss: Till Eulenspiegel

Saturday, July 22, 8 p.m.
OZAWA
Mendelssohn: Hebrides Overture
Takemitsu: Requiem for Strings
Ligeti: Atmosphere
Berlioz: Symphonie Fantastique

Sunday, July 23, 2:30 p.m.
LEINSDORF
Schumann: Symphony No. 1
Berg: Wozzeck Excerpts
Mendelssohn: Piano Concerto in G minor
Lilian Kallir
Stravinsky: Firebird Suite

Friday, July 28, 9 p.m.
KUBELIK
Haydn: Symphony No. 102
Martinu: Double Concerto
Franck: Symphony in D minor

Saturday, July 29, 8 p.m.
KUBELIK
Smetana: Moldau
Elgar: Violin Concerto
Shmuel Ashkenasi
Brahms: Symphony No. 4

Sunday, July 30, 2:30 p.m.
LEINSDORF
Webern: Six Pieces, Op. 6
Schubert: Symphony No. 9
Grieg: Piano Concerto
Van Cliburn

Friday, August 4, 9 p.m.
STEINBERG
Beethoven Program:
Symphony No. 8
Piano Concerto No. 3
Theodore Lettvin
Symphony No. 5

Saturday, August 5, 8 p.m.
LEINSDORF
Beethoven: "Fidelio"
(original version of 1805)
Hanne-Lore Kuhse, George Shirley, Tom Krause, Mary Ellen Pracht, Ara Berberian, Nico Castel, Harold Enns, Tanglewood Choir, Berkshire Chorus

Sunday, August 6, 2:30 p.m.
LEINSDORF
Brahms Program:
Academic Festival Overture
Symphony No. 3
Violin Concerto
Joseph Silverstein

Friday, August 11, 9 p.m.
LEINSDORF
Moussorgsky: Khovanchina Prelude
Tchaikovsky: Symphony No. 6
Sibelius: Violin Concerto
Itzhak Perlman

Saturday, August 12, 8:30 p.m.
STEINBERG
Glinka: Kamarinskaya
Borodin: Symphony No. 2
Tchaikovsky: Manfred Symphony

Sunday, August 13, 2:30 p.m.
LEINSDORF
Prokofiev: Piano Concerto No. 1
John Browning
Colgrass: As Quiet As
Rachmaninoff: Paganini Rhapsody
John Browning

Friday, August 18, 9 p.m.
SCHULLER
Dvorak: Othello, Overture
Schubert: Symphony No. 8
Ives: Symphony No. 4

Saturday, August 19, 8 p.m.
LEINSDORF
Verdi: Requiem
Martina Arroyo,
Tatiana Troyanos,
Michele Molese,
Ezio Flagello,
Tanglewood Choir,
Berkshire Chorus

Sunday, August 20, 2:30 p.m.
LEINSDORF
Wagner Program:
Die Meistersinger: Prelude
Die Walkure: Ride; Wotan's Farewell
Ezio Flagello
Gotterdammerung: Dawn, Rhine Journey,
Interludes, Siegfried's Death
Immolation Scene
Marilyn Horne

SUNDAY COURANT
HARTFORD, CONN.
CIRC. 182,650

MAR 26 1967

New England Newsclip

The Lively Arts —

Midst Snow and Ice

By T. H. Parker

The skiing must be good in the Berkshire hills right now, and at Tanglewood anyone stepping over from the big concert shed to the refreshment tent doubtless could use a pair of snowshoes.

Nevertheless, Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been doing a little early-birding and has laid out the general shape of things to come at the Berkshire Festival where the BSO will hold its annual eight-weeks summer season beginning June 30.

In the spirit of sharing and box office building, Mr. Leinsdorf announces that six guest conductors will spell him on the Tanglewood podium. Mr. Leinsdorf will get the Festival airborne by conducting the first three programs on the opening weekend, himself. Then Jorge Mester will have the orchestra on July 7, and Antonio Janigro will conduct on July 14. At that concert Mr. Janigro will also appear as soloist in the Vivaldi 'Cello Concerto.

★

On July 22, in the Festival's fourth week, Seiji Ozawa, music director of the Toronto Symphony and the Ravinia Festival, will make his fourth appearance as guest conductor in as many years. The following weekend of July 28 and 29, Rafael Kubelik, recent conductor of the Boston Symphony (he led the orchestra here in Hartford this winter) will be on the podium. William Steinberg of the Pittsburgh Symphony (also a Hartford visitor recently) will be the guest conductor for the August 4 and 12 concerts. Gunther Schuller, newly appointed president of the New England Conservatory, will take over the concert on August 18. Mr. Schuller is also head of the contemporary music activities at the Berkshire Music Center, and will include Ives' Symphony No. 4 on his program.

Mr. Leinsdorf has also indicated some of the major works he intends to perform during the upcoming season. As in 1966, the Berkshire Festival will open with three concerts by the entire orchestra, followed by two weeks of chamber concerts devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart. On July 15, during the Bach week, Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct the B Minor Mass with soloists Helen Boatwright, Beverly Wolff, Florence Kopleff, Gene Bullard and Tom Krause.

And following a pattern established in the summer of 1965, with the concert version of "Lohengrin," and last summer's "Magic Flute," Mr. Leinsdorf has scheduled the rarely-heard original version of Beethoven's opera "Fidelio." This will be given on Saturday evening, August 5.

★

The cast for the Boston Symphony "Fidelio" will include the East German soprano, Hanne-Lore Kuhse as Leonore; Mary Ellen Pracht as Marcelline; and George Shirley as Florestan. Nico Castel will sing Jaquino; Tom Krause will be heard as Pizarro; Ara Berbarian will be the Rocco and Don Fernando will be portraved by Harold Enns.

Verdi's Requiem will be given on the Saturday evening (August 19) of the Berkshire Festival's concluding week. Joining Mr. Leinsdorf, the orchestra and the festival chorus as soloists will be Martina Arroyo, Tatiana Troyanos, Michele Molese and Ezio Flagello.

At the final concert on Sunday afternoon, August 20, Mr. Flagello will take part in an all-Wagner program, and be heard in Wotan's Farewell, from "Die Walkuere." Marilyn Horne will sing the Immolation Scene from "Goetterdaemmerung."

The Philadelphia Inquirer
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
D. 522,941 SUN. 956,206

MAY 7 1967

Tanglewood offers 'Fidelio'

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Tanglewood festival will open June 30 and offer 24 concerts in its eight-week season at Lenox, Mass.

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the three opening week concerts before sharing programs with guest conductors Jorge Mester, Antonio Janigro, Seiji Ozawa, Rafael Kubelik, William Steinberg and Gunther Schuller.

Major works scheduled are Bach's Mass in B minor, July 15; Verdi's Requiem, Aug. 19; Ive's Symphony No. 4, Aug. 18. A performance of the original version of Beethoven's opera, "Fidelio" will be performed Aug. 5. Singers in this will be Hanne-Lore Kushe, Mary Ellen Pracht, George Shirley, Nico Castel, Tom Krause, Ara Berberian and Harold Enns.

The festival will close Aug. 20 with a Wagner program featuring singers Marilyn Horne and Ezio Flagello.

SUNDAY HERALD
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 239,100

APR 23 1967

New England Newsclip

McLAREN HARRIS, Music Critic:

'Bigger Is Better' Hampers Festivals

This is spring, according to the calendar, and spring is followed by summer; and in this area of the Great Cultural Proliferation, as surely as the seasons change, summer will be accompanied by myriad music festivals, appearing like wildflowers across rural and urban America.

They are phenomena of the late 1950's and 1960's — latecomers and upstarts, think we Bostonians, who take pride in the Boston Symphony's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, scheduled to begin its fourth decade this summer in Lenox.

But most summer festivals, including Tanglewood, involve similar conditions — concerts by large ensembles in outdoor or semi-enclosed settings designed to hold audiences numbering in the thousands. And many festivals, again including Tanglewood, have encountered criticism from time to time for presenting bland, uninteresting programs, adjusted to the lowest common denominator of audience taste.

WE BROUGHT UP the situation recently with Erich Leinsdorf. "Has the hunt for repertoire been difficult?" we asked.

"Yes," said Mr. Leinsdorf. "To keep works from becoming old and stale, to keep things fresh : that is the greatest problem. We must not ignore the new, but we do not wish to forsake the old, either."

"Has there been any attempt to keep programs conservative because of audiences or conditions at Tanglewood?"

"No, I would not say that we stress conservatism," Mr. Leinsdorf responded, "or that we rely too much upon the standard repertoire. But the conditions suggest certain types of programming. The Music Shed seats 6500 people, and add many more who sit on the lawn; it was not built for Baroque music. We are generally better off performing works written for large places.

"When facilities are built for a certain capacity," he continued, "one has an obligation, perhaps, to aim for that capacity. Large places are an outgrowth of tourism and an increase of leisure for our audiences as well as an expansion of musical activity; they are not wholly inspired by commercialism. But much of the music we play was composed for smaller places, too.

"OF COURSE we cannot ignore audieuce tastes," Mr. Leinsdorf went on, "but we cannot sit still with our programs. As music progresses a conductor must find a bridge between audiences and composers. This is particularly necessary in the 20th century, for the composer of the last 50 years is like the scientist: he writes for experts — those who have the training to analyze his materials and intents.

"This was not so in the 18th and 19th centuries," he added. "Except for certain Bach works and late Beethoven the music was immediately accessible.

"But there has been absolutely no pressure on programming from the trustees," Mr. Leinsdorf asserted. "I remember an occasion when Mr. Cabot (Henry B. Cabot, president) even returned a donation from a person who expressed a strong wish that the orchestra play no more modern music. That was a rare and extreme case, however."

THE SYMPHONY conductor mentioned several highlights of the coming Tanglewood season: the opening Beethoven-Prokofiev weekend, June 30-July 2; the all-Vivaldi program, Antonio Janigro conducting, on July 14; Bach's B minor Mass on July 15; a concert performance of Beethoven's "Fidelio" on Aug. 5; and Verdi's Requiem on Aug. 19.

"We are doing the original version of 'Fidelio,' " he said, "and in this version it seems to be an American premiere. The original score has existed in publication since 1905, and Richard Strauss once conducted it in Europe. At least half the pages are different from the revised 'Fidelio,' and upon study you become aware of the deficiencies of the new score."

Back on the audience-program issue, we couldn't help dropping an acid remark, not directed at Mr. Leinsdorf or Tanglewood, about certain promoters who seem more entranced with audience figures than with performance excellence, and how this appears in line with prevailing philosophies of eternal expansion — "bigger and better" becomes "bigger is better."

"The quantitative theory is a melancholy thing," he lamented, then chuckled, "but if you keep this up we shall both be in front of the House Committee on Un-American Activities for making treasonable statements."

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,200

APR 18 1967

New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Seeks Young Talent

Boston University, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center have pooled their academic and musical talents for the second summer, to offer a program aimed specifically at high school juniors who are gifted instrumentalists.

Toward Degree

The courses at Tanglewood, which can be applied toward a bachelor of music degree at Boston University, will include applied music, music theory and orchestra and chamber music.

The faculty will be drawn from the Boston University School of Fine and Applied Arts and from the ranks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Tanglewood faculty members from the Boston Symphony also teach at the school of fine and applied arts.

The program extends from June 25 through Aug. 20 and will be held on the grounds at Tanglewood.

"We hope to provide an atmosphere of challenge from which will come the fullest realization that musicians are artists by offering an intensive and protracted contact with actual performance on the highest level," is a description of the program given by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a director of the Music Center.

Further information on the program for high school juniors may be obtained from, Dr. Wilbur Fullbright, Boston University School of Fine and Applied Arts, 855 Commonwealth Ave., Boston.

TIMES (e)
HARTFORD, CONN.
CIRC. 132,250

MAY 18 1967

New England Newsclip

Itzhak Perlman In New Britain

By GEORGE W. STOWE

There is no denying the phenomenal talents of Itzhak Perlman, the young Israeli violinist who played the Sibelius Concerto with the New Britain Symphony last night in Welte Auditorium.

Not since Heifetz was playing this demanding work regularly has anyone performed it with the technical poise and solidity that Perlman brings to it. From the lyrical opening of the first movement to the bravura finale he was always in perfect command of his instrument and of the music.

* * *

The standing ovation at the end was the spontaneous, instantaneous reaction of the audience to a remarkable performer (Perlman has the handicap of playing seated because of paralysis) and a remarkable performance. Incidentally, Perlman will be playing this same concerto with the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood this summer.

For many (and that includes this reviewer) this was the most interesting program by the orchesrta under Etzel Wilhoit this season. It was an all-Sibelius program, which in itself is something one seldom encounters these days. Despite his popularity in the Thirties and early Forties the Finnish composer is relatively neglected today (except for the Violin Concerto).

The ubiquitous "Finlandia," of course, has its currency on "pops" programs and this was the opening selection at last night's concert. I must say that it was a relief to not have a ponderous chorus in the background.

In the composer's First Symphony Wilhoit admirably captured the craggy grandeur of this romantic score, although there was not too much finesse or careful melding of the various choirs of the orchestra. The woodwinds had an off night and there were several noticeable miscues but the general orientation and warmth of the performance were commendable.

* * *

Wilhoit must be commended for bringing to our attention the fact that Sibelius at his best left a musical heritage that deserves more attention from conductors. While the current interest in the Danish Carl Nielsen is welcome, his Finnish compatriot still speaks with considerable eloquence.

For this final event in the New Britain concert series the hall was better filled than it has been for any program I have attended. We hope this augurs well for the success of next season's series at Central Connecticut College.

The Hartford Times
Saturday, March 25, 1967
18

The Arts

Tanglewood, Saratoga, Newport Prepare for Festive Summer

WITH the arrival of spring, the performing arts festivals of the East are announcing completion of summer schedules for Tanglewood, Saratoga and Newport. And for those who can go to Montreal, Expo, 67 offers a tremendous range of opportunity to hear the great orchestras, opera, ballet and theater companies of five continents.

After an eight-week tour of London, Soviet Russia and Western Germany by its chamber group this Spring, the Boston Symphony will present 24 concerts in its Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., beginning June 20. Erich Leinsdorf announces that six guest conductors, Jorge Mester, Antonio Janigro, Seiji Ozawa, Rafael Kubelik, William Steinberg and Gunther Schuller, will share direction with him.

Leinsdorf also plans to present the rarely heard original "Leonore" version of Beethoven's opera "Fidelio" inconcert form on Aug. 5. On the concluding weekend Verdi's "Requiem" will be presented Aug. 19 with the festival chorus and soloists, and the following day an all-Wagner program.

Three concerts will be presented each weekend of the Berkshire Festival, starting at 9 p.m. Fridays, 8 p.m. Saturdays and 2:30 Sundays. The weekend Preludes at 7 p.m. Fridays for early arrivals will be continued, as will the open rehearsals Saturday mornings. The complete schedule will be announced later.

* * *

Saratoga, where the New York City Ballet and the Philadelphia Orchestra shared the first season last year in the Saratoga Performing Arts Center with its 5,100 seat amphitheater, will see them again this summer.

From July 7-30 the ballet will be there. The late opening is to enable the ballet to appear July 2-5 at Expo 67 in Montreal at the request of the U.S. State Department.

George Balanchine reports he is choreographing a new ballet to music by Greek composer Iannis Xenakis which is scored for 60 strings, providing opportunity for the 60 strings of the Saratoga Performing Arts Center's new music school, the Congress of Strings, in addition to the ballet company's regular orchestra.

Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra will present 16 concerts, opening Aug. 3 with Van Cliburn as soloist. Last season Cliburn's appearance was greeted with the 5,100-seat amphitheater filled and 8,000 more on the lawn.

Ormandy plans a Brahms cycle, and has invited five guest conductors, Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, Charles Munch, Lorin Maazel, Seiji Ozawa and Julius Rudel. Ormandy himself will conduct the last two concerts with the Mormon Tabernacle Choir and soloists performing the Brahms Requiem Aug. 26 and Handel's "The Messiah" Aug. 27.

The Metropolitan Opera's first-appearances at Newport, R.I., last season have resulted in the scheduling of a 10-day Verdi Festival there this summer starting Aug. 17 with the entire company in residence.

Grace Bumbry whose interpretation of the role of Lady Macbeth won high praise at Salzberg, will sing that role in the opening concert performance, with Kostas Paskalis, who likewise aroused critical enthusiasm in the title role of Verdi's "Macbeth" at Glyndebourne, repeating his role, both for the first time with the Met.

The Verdi Festival will include represesentative works from all phases of the composer's output, operatic films,taped concerts of little-known Verdi operas, a Verdi Exhibition, an Opera Bazar of Workshops operalogues, musical analyses and demonstrations, short recitals and other events.

more

The Saratoga Center also has scheduled a Russian dance festival Aug. 7, 8 and 9 with 260 performers from dance companies in many parts of the Soviet Union, presented by S. Hurok.

On July 1 and 2 there also will be performances by Yehudi Menuhin and the Bath Festival Orchestra.

An expanded Newport Folk Festival is planned July 10-16. International square dancing has been added for Monday evening and Tuesday morning and afternoon, with story-telling, tall tales and jokes — something new for Newport — Tuesday evening. Last year's innovation of Children's Day will be continued on Wednesday, with craft demonstrations Wednesday through Sunday. The four large evening concerts will take place Thursday through Sunday.

* * *

As a Spring Salute to the Romantic Age, the Kansas City Performing Arts Foundation will stage Offenbach's operetta "Orpheus in the Underworld" the evenings of May 26 and 30 and a May 28 matinee with top Broadway and opera personnel including the Robert Joffrey Ballet Company.

SUNDAY COURANT
HARTFORD, CONN.
CIRC. 182,650

MAR 26 1967

New England Newsclip

The Lively Arts —

Midst Snow and Ice

By T. H. Parker

The skiing must be good in the Berkshire hills right now, and at Tanglewood anyone stepping over from the big concert shed to the refreshment tent doubtless could use a pair of snowshoes.

Nevertheless, Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been doing a little early-birding and has laid out the general shape of things to come at the Berkshire Festival where the BSO will hold its annual eight-weeks summer season beginning June 30.

In the spirit of sharing and box office building, Mr. Leinsdorf announces that six guest conductors will spell him on the Tanglewood podium. Mr. Leinsdorf will get the Festival airborne by conducting the first three programs on the opening weekend, himself. Then Jorge Mester will have the orchestra on July 7, and Antonio Janigro will conduct on July 14. At that concert Mr. Janigro will also appear as soloist in the Vivaldi 'Cello Concerto.

★

On July 22, in the Festival's fourth week, Seiji Ozawa, music director of the Toronto Symphony and the Ravinia Festival, will make his fourth appearance as guest conductor in as many years. The following weekend of July 28 and 29, Rafael Kubelik, recent conductor of the Boston Symphony (he led the orchestra here in Hartford this winter) will be on the podium. William Steinberg of the Pittsburgh Symphony (also a Hartford visitor recently) will be the guest conductor for the August 4 and 12 concerts. Gunther Schuller, newly appointed president of the New England Conservatory, will take over the concert on August 18. Mr. Schuller is also head of the contemporary music activities at the Berkshire Music Center, and will include Ives' Symphony No. 4 on his program.

Mr. Leinsdorf has also indicated some of the major works he intends to perform during the upcoming season. As in 1966, the Berkshire Festival will open with three concerts by the entire orchestra, followed by two weeks of chamber concerts devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart. On July 15, during the Bach week, Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct the B Minor Mass with soloists Helen Boatwright, Beverly Wolff, Florence Kopleff, Gene Bullard and Tom Krause.

And following a pattern established in the summer of 1965, with the concert version of "Lohengrin," and last summer's "Magic Flute," Mr. Leinsdorf has scheduled the rarely-heard original version of Beethoven's opera "Fidelio." This will be given on Saturday evening, August 5.

★

The cast for the Boston Symphony "Fidelio" will include the East German soprano, Hanne-Lore Kuhse as Leonore; Mary Ellen Pracht as Marcelline; and George Shirley as Florestan. Nico Castel will sing Jaquino; Tom Krause will be heard as Pizarro; Ara Berbarian will be the Rocco and Don Fernando will be portrayed by Harold Enns.

Verdi's Requiem will be given on the Saturday evening (August 19) of the Berkshire Festival's concluding week. Joining Mr. Leinsdorf, the orchestra and the festival chorus as soloists will be Martina Arroyo, Tatiana Troyanos, Michele Molese and Ezio Flagello.

At the final concert on Sunday afternoon, August 20, Mr. Flagello will take part in an all-Wagner program, and be heard in Wotan's Farewell, from "Die Walkuere." Marilyn Horne will sing the Immolation Scene from "Goetterdaemmerung."

The Philadelphia Inquirer
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
D. 522,941 SUN. 956,206

MAY 7 1967

Tanglewood offers 'Fidelio'

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Tanglewood festival will open June 30 and offer 24 concerts in its eight-week season at Lenox, Mass.

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the three opening week concerts before sharing programs with guest conductors Jorge Mester, Antonio Janigro, Seiji Ozawa, Rafael Kubelik, William Steinberg and Gunther Schuller.

Major works scheduled are Bach's Mass in B minor, July 15; Verdi's Requiem, Aug. 19; Ive's Symphony No. 4, Aug. 18. A performance of the original version of Beethoven's opera, "Fidelio" will be performed Aug. 5. Singers in this will be Hanne-Lore Kushe, Mary Ellen Pracht, George Shirley, Nico Castel, Tom Krause, Ara Berberian and Harold Enns.

The festival will close Aug. 20 with a Wagner program featuring singers Marilyn Horne and Ezio Flagello.

SUNDAY HERALD
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. [illegible]

APR 23 1967

England Newsclip

McLAREN HARRIS, Music Critic:

'Bigger Is Better' Hampers Festivals

This is spring, according to the calendar, and spring is followed by summer; and in this area of the Great Cultural Proliferation, as surely as the seasons change, summer will be accompanied by myriad music festivals, appearing like wildflowers across rural and urban America.

They are phenomena of the late 1950's and 1960's — latecomers and upstarts, think we Bostonians, who take pride in the Boston Symphony's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, scheduled to begin its fourth decade this summer in Lenox.

But most summer festivals, including Tanglewood, involve similar conditions — concerts by large ensembles in outdoor or semi-enclosed settings designed to hold audiences numbering in the thousands. And many festivals, again including Tanglewood, have encountered criticism from time to time for presenting bland, uninteresting programs, adjusted to the lowest common denominator of audience taste.

WE BROUGHT UP the situation recently with Erich Leinsdorf. "Has the hunt for repertoire been difficult?" we asked.

"Yes," said Mr. Leinsdorf. "To keep works from becoming old and stale, to keep things fresh : that is the greatest problem. We must not ignore the new, but we do not wish to forsake the old, either."

"Has there been any attempt to keep programs conservative because of audiences or conditions at Tanglewood?"

"No, I would not say that we stress conservatism," Mr. Leinsdorf responded, "or that we rely too much upon the standard repertoire. But the conditions suggest certain types of programming. The Music Shed seats 6500 people, and add many more who sit on the lawn; it was not built for Baroque music. We are generally better off performing works written for large places.

"When facilities are built for a certain capacity," he continued, "one has an obligation, perhaps, to aim for that capacity. Large places are an outgrowth of tourism and an increase of leisure for our audiences as well as an expansion of musical activity; they are not wholly inspired by commercialism. But much of the music we play was composed for smaller places, too.

"OF COURSE we cannot ignore audience tastes," Mr. Leinsdorf went on, "but we cannot sit still with our programs. As music progresses a conductor must find a bridge between audiences and composers. This is particularly necessary in the 20th century, for the composer of the last 50 years is like the scientist: he writes for experts — those who have the training to analyze his materials and intents.

"This was not so in the 18th and 19th centuries," he added. "Except for certain Bach works and late Beethoven the music was immediately accessible.

"But there has been absolutely no pressure on programming from the trustees," Mr. Leinsdorf asserted. "I remember an occasion when Mr. Cabot (Henry B. Cabot, president) even returned a donation from a person who expressed a strong wish that the orchestra play no more modern music. That was a rare and extreme case, however."

THE SYMPHONY conductor mentioned several highlights of the coming Tanglewood season: the opening Beethoven-Prokofiev weekend, June 30-July 2; the all-Vivaldi program, Antonio Janigro conducting, on July 14; Bach's B minor Mass on July 15; a concert performance of Beethoven's "Fidelio" on Aug. 5; and Verdi's Requiem on Aug. 19.

"We are doing the original version of 'Fidelio,' " he said, "and in this version it seems to be an American premiere. The original score has existed in publication since 1905, and Richard Strauss once conducted it in Europe. At least half the pages are different from the revised 'Fidelio,' and upon study you become aware of the deficiencies of the new score."

Back on the audience-program issue, we couldn't help dropping an acid remark, not directed at Mr. Leinsdorf or Tanglewood, about certain promoters who seem more entranced with audience figures than with performance excellence, and how this appears in line with prevailing philosophies of eternal expansion — "bigger and better" becomes "bigger is better."

"The quantitative theory is a melancholy thing," he lamented, then chuckled, "but if you keep this up we shall both be in front of the House Committee on Un-American Activities for making treasonable statements."

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,200

APR 18 1967

New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Seeks Young Talent

Boston University, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center have pooled their academic and musical talents for the second summer, to offer a program aimed specifically at high school juniors who are gifted instrumentalists.

Toward Degree

The courses at Tanglewood, which can be applied toward a bachelor of music degree at Boston University, will include applied music, music theory and orchestra and chamber music.

The faculty will be drawn from the Boston University School of Fine and Applied Arts and from the ranks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Tanglewood faculty members from the Boston Symphony also teach at the school of fine and applied arts.

The program extends from June 25 through Aug. 20 and will be held on the grounds at Tanglewood.

"We hope to provide an atmosphere of challenge from which will come the fullest realization that musicians are artists by offering an intensive and protracted contact with actual performance on the highest level," is a description of the program given by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a director of the Music Center.

Further information on the program for high school juniors may be obtained from, Dr. Wilbur Fullbright, Boston University School of Fine and Applied Arts, 855 Commonwealth Ave., Boston.

TIMES (e)
HARTFORD, CONN.
CIRC. 132,250

MAY 18 1967

New England Newsclip

Itzhak Perlman In New Britain

By GEORGE W. STOWE

There is no denying the phenomenal talents of Itzhak Perlman, the young Israeli violinist who played the Sibelius Concerto with the New Britain Symphony last night in Welte Auditorium.

Not since Heifetz was playing this demanding work regularly has anyone performed it with the technical poise and solidity that Perlman brings to it. From the lyrical opening of the first movement to the bravura finale he was always in perfect command of his instrument and of the music.

* * *

The standing ovation at the end was the spontaneous, instantaneous reaction of the audience to a remarkable performer (Perlman has the handicap of playing seated because of paralysis) and a remarkable performance. Incidentally, Perlman will be playing this same concerto with the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood this summer.

For many (and that includes this reviewer) this was the most interesting program by the orchesrta under Etzel Wilhoit this season. It was an all-Sibelius program, which in itself is something one seldom encounters these days. Despite his popularity in the Thirties and early Forties the Finnish composer is relatively neglected today (except for the Violin Concerto).

The ubiquitous "Finlandia," of course, has its currency on "pops" programs and this was the opening selection at last night's concert. I must say that it was a relief to not have a ponderous chorus in the background.

In the composer's First Symphony Wilhoit admirably captured the craggy grandeur of this romantic score, although there was not too much finesse or careful melding of the various choirs of the orchestra. The woodwinds had an off night and there were several noticeable miscues but the general orientation and warmth of the performance were commendable.

* * *

Wilhoit must be commended for bringing to our attention the fact that Sibelius at his best left a musical heritage that deserves more attention from conductors. While the current interest in the Danish Carl Nielsen is welcome, his Finnish compatriot still speaks with considerable eloquence.

For this final event in the New Britain concert series the hall was better filled than it has been for any program I have attended. We hope this augurs well for the success of next season's series at Central Connecticut College.

The Hartford Times
Saturday, March 25, 1967
18

The Arts

Tanglewood, Saratoga, Newport Prepare for Festive Summer

WITH the arrival of spring, the performing arts festivals of the East are announcing completion of summer schedules for Tanglewood, Saratoga and Newport. And for those who can go to Montreal, Expo, 67 offers a tremendous range of opportunity to hear the great orchestras, opera, ballet and theater companies of five continents.

After an eight-week tour of London, Soviet Russia and Western Germany by its chamber group this Spring, the Boston Symphony will present 24 concerts in its Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., beginning June 20. Erich Leinsdorf announces that six guest conductors, Jorge Mester, Antonio Janigro, Seiji Ozawa, Rafael Kubelik, William Steinberg and Gunther Schuller, will share direction with him.

Leinsdorf also plans to present the rarely heard original "Leonore" version of Beethoven's opera "Fidelio" inconcert form on Aug. 5. On the concluding weekend Verdi's "Requiem" will be presented Aug. 19 with the festival chorus and soloists, and the following day an all-Wagner program.

Three concerts will be presented each weekend of the Berkshire Festival, starting at 9 p.m. Fridays, 8 p.m. Saturdays and 2:30 Sundays. The weekend Preludes at 7 p.m. Fridays for early arrivals will be continued, as will the open rehearsals Saturday mornings. The complete schedule will be announced later.

* * *

Saratoga, where the New York City Ballet and the Philadelphia Orchestra shared the first season last year in the Saratoga Performing Arts Center with its 5,100 seat amphitheater, will see them again this summer.

From July 7-30 the ballet will be there. The late opening is to enable the ballet to appear July 2-5 at Expo 67 in Montreal at the request of the U.S. State Department.

George Balanchine reports he is choreographing a new ballet to music by Greek composer Iannis Xenakis which is scored for 60 strings, providing opportunity for the 60 strings of the Saratoga Performing Arts Center's new music school, the Congress of Strings, in addition to the ballet company's regular orchestra.

Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra will present 16 concerts, opening Aug. 3 with Van Cliburn as soloist. Last season Cliburn's appearance was greeted with the 5,100-seat amphitheater filled and 8,000 more on the lawn.

Ormandy plans a Brahms cycle, and has invited five guest conductors, Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, Charles Munch, Lorin Maazel, Seiji Ozawa and Julius Rudel. Ormandy himself will conduct the last two concerts with the Mormon Tabernacle Choir and soloists performing the Brahms Requiem Aug. 26 and Handel's "The Messiah" Aug. 27.

The Metropolitan Opera's first-appearances at Newport, R.I., last season have resulted in the scheduling of a 10-day Verdi Festival there this summer starting Aug. 17 with the entire company in residence.

Grace Bumbry whose interpretation of the role of Lady Macbeth won high praise at Salzberg, will sing that role in the opening concert performance, with Kostas Paskalis, who likewise aroused critical enthusiasm in the title role of Verdi's "Macbeth" at Glyndebourne, repeating his role, both for the first time with the Met.

The Verdi Festival will include represesentative works from all phases of the composer's output, operatic films,taped concerts of little-known Verdi operas, a Verdi Exhibition, an Opera Bazar of Workshops operalogues, musical analyses and demonstrations, short recitals and other events.

more

The Saratoga Center also has scheduled a Russian dance festival Aug. 7, 8 and 9 with 260 performers from dance companies in many parts of the Soviet Union, presented by S. Hurok.

On July 1 and 2 there also will be performances by Yehudi Menuhin and the Bath Festival Orchestra.

An expanded Newport Folk Festival is planned July 10-16. International square dancing has been added for Monday evening and Tuesday morning and afternoon, with story-telling, tall tales and jokes — something new for Newport — Tuesday evening. Last year's innovation of Children's Day will be continued on Wednesday, with craft demonstrations Wednesday through Sunday. The four large evening concerts will take place Thursday through Sunday.

* * *

As a Spring Salute to the Romantic Age, the Kansas City Performing Arts Foundation will stage Offenbach's operetta "Orpheus in the Underworld" the evenings of May 26 and 30 and a May 28 matinee with top Broadway and opera personnel including the Robert Joffrey Ballet Company.

4

AMSTERDAM, N. Y.
RECORDER & DEMOCRAT
D. 13,500

MAR 28 1967

Tanglewood Will Open On June 30

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's eight-week Berkshire Festival will open Friday evening, June 30, at Tanglewood, Massachusetts, with a concert conducted by Music Director Erich Leinsdorf.

Weekend concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given on Fridays at 9 p.m., Saturdays at 8 p.m., and Sunday afternoons at 2:30 p.m.

Prior to each of the Friday programs, the orchestra will offer weekend preludes for those who arrive at Tanglewood early in the evening. The preludes begin at 7 p.m. and many of the weekend soloists will perform at these programs which are provided at no extra cost to those holding tickets to the Friday evening Orchestra concert.

The second and third weeks of this summer's festival will be performed by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony musicians with music by Bach, Mozart, and Vivaldi scheduled for performance. As he has each summer since he announced the plan in 1963, Mr. Leinsdorf will continue the series of Mozart piano concertos. Guest conductors Jorge Mester (July 7) and Antonio Janigro (July 14) will each conduct one program during the chamber orchestra weeks.

Other guest conductors who will appear at Tanglewood this summer are Rafael Kubelik (July 28 and 29); Seiji Ozawa (July 22); Gunther Schuller (Aug. 18); and William Steinberg (August 4 and 12).

On July 15, Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Bach's B minor Mass and on Aug. 5 the Music Director will conduct a concert performance of the original 1805 version of Beethoven's only opera, "Fidelio." In the closing weekend of the Tanglewood season Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Verdi's Requiem on Aug. 19 and an all-Wagner program Aug. 20.

Two benefit events are scheduled for the summer at Tanglewood. Arthur Fiedler will conduct the Boston Pops Orchestra on Aug. 8 for the Boston Symphony Pension Fund, and Tanglewood-on-Parade which benefits the Berkshire Music Center will be held on Aug. 17.

Six programs of chamber music will be given on Tuesday evenings.

A brochure with complete Berkshire Festival information may be obtained by writing: Festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass. 02115.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600

MAR 5 1967

New England Newsclip

Can Summer Be Far Away?

The Boston Symphony has announced several highlights of its 30th Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. The eight-week season will begin Friday evening, June 30, and conclude Sunday afternoon, Aug. 20.

A concert performance of Beethoven's first version of "Fidelio" will be given Saturday evening, Aug. 5. Verdi's Requiem is planned for Saturday evening, Aug. 19, and the next day, there will be an all-Wagner program of scenes from "Die Walkure" and "Die Gotterdammerung."

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, and six guest conductors will share the Tanglewood podium. Twenty-four concerts are again on the schedule, Fridays at 9, Saturdays at 8 and Sundays at 2:30. Week-end Preludes, chamber concerts of an hour's duration, again will precede the Friday concerts, beginning at 7.

Leinsdorf will conduct the opening week-end, June 30-July 2. Then come two week-ends of the "Bach-Mozart" series for chamber orchestra. Jorge Meister will be guest conductor July 7 and Antonio Janigro will be conductor and soloist July 14 in the Vivaldi Cello Concerto.

Conductors Seiji Ozawa will appear July 22, Rafael Kubelik July 28-29, William Steinberg Aug. 4 and 12, and Gunther Schuller Aug. 18. Schuller, president-elect of the New England Conservatory, is head of contemporary music activities at the Berkshire Music Center and will conduct the Ives Symphony No. 4.

The Bach week-end will include a performance of the B minor Mass. Soloists will be Helen Boatwright, Beverly Wolff, Florence Kopleff, Gene Bullard and Tom Krause.

Beethoven's "Fidelio," in manuscript called "Leonore," had its premiere in 1805. Two revisions followed, one shortly after the premiere, and the other, more familiar version, about seven years later.

The cast for the 1805 version of "Fidelio" will include the East German soprano Hanne-Lore Kuhse as Leonore, Mary Ellen Precht as Marcelline, George Shirley as Florestan, Nico Castel as Jaquino, Tom Krause as Pizarro, Ara Berberian as Rocco and Harold Enns as Don Fernando.

Under Leinsdorf's direction, the Berkshire Festival has in its last two seasons presented opera in concert. Wagner's "Lohengrin" was spread over a whole week-end in 1965 and Mozart's "The Magic Flute" was done last season.

Soloists in the Verdi Requiem will be Martina Arroyo, Tatiana Troyanos, Michele Molese and Ezio Flagello. Flagello also will be heard in the Wagner program in Wotan's Farewell from "Die Walkure." On that program Marilyn Horne will do the Immolation Scene from "Die Gotterdammerung."

Two special concerts also will be part of the 1967 festival. On Aug. 8 Arthur Fiedler will conduct the annual Boston Pops concert. And on Aug. 18, "Tanglewood on Parade," the annual benefit for the Berkshire Music Center, will be held.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 835,000 SUN. 1,500,000

MAY 7 1967

Along the Culture Trail Up in the Berkshire Hills

By MICHAEL STRAUSS

PITTSFIELD, Mass. — Nothing elates a resort owner more than a heavy influx of reservations before the vacation season even opens. This appears to be the happy situation Berkshire County hotel operators and innkeepers face as they apply the final touches to their preparations for the coming summer.

John V. Geary, executive director of the Berkshire Hills Conference, an organization dedicated to generating visitor interest in this area, is already proclaiming the weekend of July 28-30 as a sure sellout. One reason is the appearance, at Tanglewood, of Van Cliburn and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Annual Attractions

Mr. Geary adds that the increasing appeal of Berkshire entertainment staples, such as the Tanglewood concerts, the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival and the Berkshire Playhouse's theatrical offerings, are doing much to produce advance hotel and motel reservations.

A prosperous summer appears to be such a sure thing at this stage that Mr. Geary has been searching for an added explanation. He places part of the credit on Expo 67, pointing out that U.S. 7, which passes through such Berkshire communities as Sheffield, Great Barrington, Stockbridge, Lenox and Williamstown, as well as Pittsfield, is one of the direct routes to Montreal.

Music Festival

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's appearances at the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, near Lenox, will last eight weeks. The main cultural attraction in the area for the last 31 years, the forthcoming season will run from June 30 to Aug. 20.

The Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival, the Williamstown Summer Theater and the Berkshire Theater Festival at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge again will provide visitors with entertainment from late June through August.

Innkeepers and motel owners in the Berkshires believe they will be able to handle the increasing business with more ease than in the past, for additional sleeping, recreation and dining facilities will be available this summer.

One new hostelry is the Berkshire Motor Inn, on U.S. 7 in Great Barrington. A three-section complex, it replaces the venerable Berkshire Inn, which was destroyed by fire in 1965. The new two-story, 64-unit motel is set back from Great Barrington's tree-lined Main Street; its facilities include a glass-enclosed swimming pool and a 500-seat restaurant.

The inn's developers have preserved the 207-year-old William Cullen Bryant House as part of the complex. It was in this cottage that the famous poet married Frances Fairchild in 1821.

A Key Attraction

The frame building has been moved twice in recent years, but never by more than a few dozen yards. It remains a key sightseeing attraction, and some say it will benefit, rather than suffer, from the proximity of the new inn.

One of the Berkshires' most noted eating places, The Springs in New Ashford, is undergoing the most ambitious expansion in its 37-year history. The new addition completely surrounds the old structure. It increases the dining room area to three rooms, and provides a new cocktail lounge, also with facilities for dining, and a fireplace lounge. A 10-unit addition to the motel at The Springs is also new.

Guests in the new unit are afforded spectacular views of the Berkshire Mountains. To the southwest is Brodie Mountain, and to the northeast is 3,491-foot-high Mount Greylock, the highest point in Massachusetts.

The Oak n' Spruce resort in the South Lee Valley recently completed a modernization program. When the hotel was founded two decades ago, it consisted of a barn, a main building and two large dormitories that accommodated 64 guests.

Modern motel units were added several years ago, and this summer will mark the end of the hotel's "bunk room" and "bunk bed" era. The dormitories have been converted into rooms with twin beds.

Hotel Renovated

At the Eastover in Lenox, the main guest house, once the home of a millionaire, has been renovated. The hotel's owner, George Bisacca, also plans to erect three plantation-style motel buildings.

Jug End at South Egremont, the largest and southernmost resort hotel in Massachusetts, has added two more structures to its 35-building complex. The new buildings, which offer accommodations for 40 guests, have large picture windows and shady porches that command views of the resort's golf course and trout pond.

Ray Hunold

PATCHWORK QUILT—Alsatian dog surveys the scene from the summit of Mount Greylock in the Berkshires.

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350

JUN 15 1967

New England Newsclip

Westover News

Air Force Band To Perform At Tanglewood

WESTOVER AFB — The U. S. Air Force Band from Washington, D. C., will perform the 22d at Tanglewood Amphitheater in Lenox, base officials announced Wednesday.

The concert, which marks the band's first appearance at the shed, begins at 8 p. m.

Lt. Col. Arnold D. Gabriel will conduct the concert as a tribute to the Lenox bicentennial year.

The shed is the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which also features star musicians.

The U. S. Air Force Singing Sergeants will also appear in the concert which marks the first time a military band has been invited to appear at the Tanglewood Festival, officials said.

Included in the program will be A Lincolnshire Posy, Grainger; Variations on a Korean Folk Song, Chance; and the Strategic Air Command March, Williams; being performed in honor of the 20th anniversary of the U. S. Air Force.

The program is open to the public without charge.

* * *

MAJOR ASSIGNED

Maj. Alvin I. Opolinsky has been assigned to the base weather station as detachment commander of Det. 10, 8th Weather Sqdn., Military Air Command, officials said.

He replaced Lieutenant Col. Raymond J. Dengler who has been reassigned as detachment commander of Det. 15, 8th Weather Sqdn., Ramey AFB, Puerto Rico.

He was special projects officer in Headquarters 8th Weather Sqdn., here before assuming his present position.

* * *

MEDAL PRESENTED

At a recent special ceremony at the 57th Air Div. office, Col. Wallace Wall, Jr 57th Air Div. commander presented the Air Gallantry Medal to Col. Kenneth E Wehrman, newly named 99th Bomb Wing vice-commander.

The medal (equivalent to the Air Force Air Medal) was awarded to Col. Wehrman for his outstanding achievement as director of operations 4133rd Bomb Wing (Provisional), Andersen, AFB, Guam, from April 1 to Oct. 1, 1966.

During this period, he rendered outstanding service to the Republic of South Vietnam through direct support and participation in combat operational missions against the opposing force of the Vietnamese people and flew 30 combat missions as airborne commander, officials said.

Courier EXPRESS
BUFFALO
Western New York's Greatest Newspaper
D. 158,172 SUN. 299,377

JUN 25 1967

Erich Leinsdorf

TO CONDUCT AT TANGLEWOOD—Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the orchestra in music by Beethoven and Prokofiev Friday, Saturday and next Sunday at the opening of the 30th Berkshire Festival in Lenox, Mass. The festival continues through August 20. Featured works will be Bach's B Minor Mass (July 15), Beethoven's "Fidelio" (Aug. 5) and Verdi's Requiem (Aug. 19).

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 SUN. 122,607

JUN 25 1967

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

TROY TIMES RECORD
Monday, June 12, 1967

Elnora School To Sponsor Special Course

Shenendehowa Central School at Elnora will offer a summer enrichment program in the lively arts this summer. The program, which is under the direction of William Crowder, director of music, will be taught for six weeks from July 5 to Aug. 16.

The program provides opportunity for students to attend area music, drama, art, dance and science activities that occur only during the summer months. While most of the experiences will be outside of the classroom, each event will be formally previewed and reviewed.

The cost of the program to the students will be $21 which provides for obtaining tickets at special rates in area activities which the student will attend. The school district will provide transportation.

Only 40 students can be handled in this program. These students will meet in a formal class situation three days a week to listen to lectures and group discussions, see films and slide demonstrations in the lively arts area. In addition, time will be devoted to library work. The other two days of the week students will visit such places as the Saratoga Performing Arts Center, Tanglewood Festival, Berkshire Festival, Williamstown Museum, Stratford-Shakespeare Festival, Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival, Rensselaerville Science Institute, Lake George Opera Co. and the Glens Falls Museum.

Provision is being made for students to take both driver education and the program in the lively arts. Students who wish to register for the lively arts program should do so in the high school office before the close of school.

THE OHIO NEWS BUREAU COMPANY
Cleveland 15, Ohio
First Clipping Bureau In Ohio

TRANSCRIPT (e)
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
CIRC. 13,500

JUN 19 1967

New England Newsclip

Ticket Office At Tanglewood Opens Today

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announced that its festival ticket office at Tanglewood, Lenox, will open for the 1967 Berkshire Festival today. Unil June 30, the Ticket Office will be open daily from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. with the exception of Sunday, June 26 when the hours will be 1 p.m. to 5 p.m.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the 1967 Berkshire Festival with a concert under the direction of Music Director Erich Leinsdorf on Friday evening, June 30. Concerts will be given each weekend throughout the eight week Festival which closes Sunday, August 20. The Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer center for the advanced study of music, will open on Sunday afternoon, June 25.

Once the Festival concerts have begun the daily hours for the festival ticket office will remain 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. and on concert nights through intermission. Sunday hours will be 10 a.m. through the intermission of the afternoon concert.

Information pertaining to the Berkshire Festival tickets and programs may be obtained from the Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240.

JOURNAL & PRESS
SOMERVILLE, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 12,600

JUN 22 1967

New England Newsclip

Chan. 2 to Broadcast Tanglewood Concerts

For the second consecutive summer WGBH-FM will broadcast all Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts directly from Tanglewood, starting Friday, June 30, at 9 p.m.

Throughout July and much of August, WGBH radio will carry live all major events at the 1967 Berkshire Festival in Lenox. Tuesday-Thursday at 8 p.m. the programs will feature performances of chamber music and concerts by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra. Fridays at 9 p.m., Saturdays at 8 p.m., and Sundays at 2:30 p.m., the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be heard directly from the Tanglewood Shed.

Programs of contemporary music held Sunday mornings throughout the Tanglewood season will be broadcast in stereo by WGBH-FM the following night (Mondays) at 8 p.m.

To inaugurate the Festival Friday, June 30, Erich Leinsdorf conducts Prokofiev's Symphony No. 5 and Beethoven's Concerto in D for Violin and Orchestra. Yehudi Menuhin will be soloist in the Beethoven concerto.

Saturday, July 1, at 8 p.m., Leinsdorf has chosen Symphony No. 4 by Beethoven, Prokofiev's "Lieutenant Kiji Suite" (David Clatworthy, baritone), and Beethoven's Symphony No. 7.

JUN 25 1967
ALBANY, N.Y., SUNDAY, JUNE 25, 1967 I-1

NOT COMPETING, BUT OVERLAPPING—That the region could support two major music festivals, Tanglewood and Saratoga (inset), was proven at the box office last summer, although some hard-core fans of each still look askance at the other. Actually, ". . . the two are more akin artistically than their more stalwart defenders seem to recognize. The fare at the two overlaps considrably, it is simply done up in different wrappings . . ."

Tanglewood Versus Saratoga? Not Really

By JOAN SIMMONS

The final settling of the books for the 1966 summer season put everyone's mind at ease as to whether or not the area could support two major music festivals.

This may have soothed the business managers and all personnel directly connected with either Tanglewood or the Saratoga Performing Arts Center, but it did little to placate the hard-core fans of either establishment who know what they like and are ready to argue its relative merits at the drop of a hat.

But what either party may find hard to believe is that both are right simply by taking into consideration the quite distinct and equally valuable personalities of the two centers.

Depending on who you listen to Tanglewood is either tasteful and refined or just plain stuffy. On the other hand SPAC is either more liberal and varied or terribly commercial.

Mean The Same . . .

In either case all adjectives mean the same thing. Compared with SPAC Tanglewood may not be exactly "stuffy" but it is certainly more conservative — 36 years of tradition alone would indicate a leaning in this direction. It developed in a time when a music festival was a more aristocratic pasttime and many of its current supporters date back to the original festival.

SPAC is a creation of the 1960's, with no traditions, and of a time when the music center is the property of the people and even subsidized by public funds. Therefore it of necessity must be more sensitive to what a larger portion of the people want.

(Neither place, it should be noted, is the property af any particular age group, as both draw equally from all age groups from the cradle up.)

From the other side of the fence, SPAC bears up well against charges of being commercial, although it must put more emphasis on money since it is still paying its original bills. Tanglewood has long since ceased to worry about the financial problems just now facing the Saratoga management. After all it was Koussevitzky, the single most influential person in the development of Tanglewood, who also originated the Boston Pops (and nobody can accuse them of being stuffy) for quite commercial reasons.

In discussing his program for the opening season at Saratoga Eugene Ormandy avoided calling his selections "popularized" but preferred the world "conservative" pointing out that even the artist must be realistic when it comes to the establishment of a new market. Therefore he picked what he considered to be some of the most popular of the good music literature.

And that is the key to all the thinking about programming at Saratoga, whether it is the Philadelphia Orchestra, the New York City Ballet or the overall balance of scheduling for the coming season. "Stars and Stripes" and "Swan Lake" are frequent

See TANGLEWOOD, Page I-5.

TANGLEWOOD

Lenox, Mass., west of town, off Route 183, Box Office: (413) 637-1600. Mail: Festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass., 02115.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's eight-week Berkshire Festival opens its 31st season at its summer home on Friday. Music director Eric ic Leinsdorf will conduct 16 of the 24 programs.

Performances are at 9 p.m. Fridays, 8 p.m. Saturdays and 2:30 p.m. Sundays. Prelude performances are held at 7 p.m. Fridays, free to Friday evening ticket holders.

Courier EXPRESS
BUFFALO
Western New York's Greatest Newspaper
D. 158,172 SUN. 299,377

JUN 25 1967

Erich Leinsdorf

TO CONDUCT AT TANGLEWOOD—Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the orchestra in music by Beethoven and Prokofiev Friday, Saturday and next Sunday at the opening of the 30th Berkshire Festival in Lenox, Mass. The festival continues through August 20. Featured works will be Bach's B Minor Mass (July 15), Beethoven's "Fidelio" (Aug. 5) and Verdi's Requiem (Aug. 19).

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 SUN. 122,607

JUN 25 1967

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

TROY TIMES RECORD
Monday, June 12, 1967

Elnora School To Sponsor Special Course

Shenendehowa Central School at Elnora will offer a summer enrichment program in the lively arts this summer. The program, which is under the direction of William Crowder, director of music, will be taught for six weeks from July 5 to Aug. 16.

The program provides opportunity for students to attend area music, drama, art, dance and science activities that occur only during the summer months. While most of the experiences will be outside of the classroom, each event will be formally previewed and reviewed.

The cost of the program to the students will be $21 which provides for obtaining tickets at special rates in area activities which the student will attend. The school district will provide transportation.

Only 40 students can be handled in this program. These students will meet in a formal class situation three days a week to listen to lectures and group discussions, see films and slide demonstrations in the lively arts area. In addition, time will be devoted to library work. The other two days of the week students will visit such places as the Saratoga Performing Arts Center, Tanglewood Festival, Berkshire Festival, Williamstown Museum, Stratford-Shakespeare Festival, Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival, Rensselaerville Science Institute, Lake George Opera Co. and the Glens Falls Museum.

Provision is being made for students to take both driver education and the program in the lively arts. Students who wish to register for the lively arts program should do so in the high school office before the close of school.

TRANSCRIPT (e)
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
CIRC. 13,500

JUN 19 1967

Ticket Office At Tanglewood Opens Today

The Boston Symphony Orchestra ~~announced that its~~ festival ticket office at Tanglewood, Lenox, will open for the 1967 Berkshire Festival today. Unil June 30, the Ticket Office will be open daily from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. with the exception of Sunday, June 26 when the hours will be 1 p.m. to 5 p.m.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the 1967 Berkshire Festival with a concert under the direction of Music Director Erich Leinsdorf on Friday evening, June 30. Concerts will be given each weekend throughout the eight week Festival which closes Sunday, August 20. The Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer center for the advanced study of music, will open on Sunday afternoon, June 25.

Once the Festival concerts have begun the daily hours for the festival ticket office will remain 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. and on concert nights through intermission. Sunday hours will be 10 a.m. through the intermission of the afternoon concert.

Information pertaining to the Berkshire Festival tickets and programs may be obtained from the Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240.

JOURNAL & PRESS
SOMERVILLE, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 12,600

JUN 22 1967
New England Newslip

Chan. 2 to Broadcast Tanglewood Concerts

For the second consecutive summer WGBH-FM will broadcast all Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts directly from Tanglewood, starting Friday, June 30, at 9 p.m.

Throughout July and much of August, WGBH radio will carry live all major events at the 1967 Berkshire Festival in Lenox. Tuesday-Thursday at 8 p.m. the programs will feature performances of chamber music and concerts by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra. Fridays at 9 p.m., Saturdays at 8 p.m., and Sundays at 2:30 p.m., the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be heard directly from the Tanglewood Shed.

Programs of contemporary music held Sunday mornings throughout the Tanglewood season will be broadcast in stereo by WGBH-FM the following night (Mondays) at 8 p.m.

To inaugurate the Festival Friday, June 30, Erich Leinsdorf conducts Prokofiev's Symphony No. 5 and Beethoven's Concerto in D for Violin and Orchestra. Yehudi Menuhin will be soloist in the Beethoven concerto.

Saturday, July 1, at 8 p.m., Leinsdorf has chosen Symphony No. 4 by Beethoven, Prokofiev's "Lieutenant Kiji Suite" (David Clatworthy, baritone), and Beethoven's Symphony No. 7.

THE OHIO NEWS BUREAU COMPANY
Cleveland 15, Ohio
First Clipping Bureau In Ohio

MARK I BOMB SIMULATOR' evastating it gets . . .

ning This Week

Tanglewood Versus Saratoga?

Continued from Page I-1.

program choices for more than just their artistic value.

Further Than Tanglewood . . .

Similarly in widening the area of representation to folk and popular music the management has gone to the best in the field, with such names as Harry Belafonte, Theodore Bikel and Herb Alpert lined up for this season.

Of course in allowing folk music, Saratoga has gone further than Tanglewood would consider. Even its own Boston Pops appear only once a season and then at a special concert rather than during the regular weekend series. And there are those who are aligned with Tanglewood who think this is once too often but reconcile themselves to the fact that this concert draws the largest single crowd all season. (It even outdraws Van Cliburn who is regarded in much the same light and tolerated for the same reason by some at both centers . . . he appeared at both last year and will be returning to both this season.)

More Scholarly . . .

The air at Tanglewood is a bit richer in the scholarly approach to music, a natural outgrowth of its resident music school which boasts many of the best composers and performers of the mid-20th Century as either students or instructors. These student musicians present their own complete summer schedule of concerts as well as being obviously in attendance at all BSO performances. (There is something about sitting next to a bearded young man intently following the score which gives a more intellectual feel to a concert.)

But the instructional phase is not being overlooked by Saratoga. It too is aiming at the student but, as in everything else, with a difference.

SPAC's first major educational project was aimed at the public grade school children in two experimental sessions last year and in weekly programs this coming season. Also added this year are courses in ballet and stringed instruments, both aimed at the developing professional.

And while SPAC does not, as yet anyway, have Tanglewood's courses in composition, conducting, etc., it has opened up to a wider field, even sponsoring a course in high school horse riding, which may seem a bit too far afield. Nevertheless it is sponsored by the American Dressage Institute, which is run by individuals quite prominent in the areas of dance and music professionally. Besides can you think of a better place to set up shop during the summer?

In capsule form, the two establishments are more akin artistically than their more stalwart defenders seem to recognize. The fare at the two centers overlaps considerably, it is simply done up in different wrapping.

Artistically one is full grown, the other a mere neophyte. But socially there is a difference. SPAC is a burst of new society in the center of very old society complete with full dress openings and champagne receptions, all very thick with the air of being "now," just another aspect of its being of the 60's.

Tanglewood may put forth its musicians in black tie but you will never find one in the audience. Being quite devoid of an elegant restaurant or bar the grounds boast only a snack bar and picnic tables combined with a long tradition of picnic lunches before the performance.

All of which only understates the more reserved "establishment" outlook of the festival which places entertainment in the realm of the private party of a more traditional society.

This is not to directly associate either center with a particular segment of Society. Tanglewood's private parties come in rags and designer originals as do Saratoga's more festive supporters.

The physical plants are quite similar in size and beauty of grounds. While Tanglewood is rustic, Saratoga derives a more elegant air from its new building and the old Hall of Springs. There is just one big difference: Tanglewood has harder seats.

Youngstown Vindicator
Youngstown, O.
P.M. - circ. 99,070
Sun. - circ. 155,590

JUN 1 2 67

Tanglewood to Launch 27th Year Next Sunday

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass. — The Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer center for the advanced study of music, will begin its 27th session here Sunday June 25, with opening exercises at 2:30 p.m. in the Theatre.

During the week some 250 musicians will register for the eight-week session held in conjunction with the Orchestra's Berkshire Festival. Two programs inaugurated last year are being continued and expanded so as to bring the total enrollment to more than 400.

Boston University's School of Fine and Applied Arts and the New England Conservatory will include music courses for college credit at the Berkshire Music Center and a theater program carried on in association with the Berkshire Theater Festival in their operations at Tanglewood. In addition, Boston University will inaugurate an eight-week program in painting and drawing this summer.

Leinsdorf to Talk

Erich Leinsdorf will deliver the principal address at the June 25 exercises which include the traditional singing of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia." This work written especially for the opening of the Music Center in 1940 and subsequently sung each year, will be conducted by Paul Calloway, organist and choirmaster of the Washington Cathedral and a member of the Berkshire Music Center faculty for the past three summers.

Of the music center's total enrollment 125 will be members of the fellowship program. The fellowship program is directed at those young musicians who have completed their training and are active performers. The program is designed to emphasize chamber music for advanced instrumentalists, singers and composers.

The Tanglewood Institute consisting of three seminars, each with an informational focus for its members, provides a program for the musical layman teacher, student and nonperforming musician in an environment where he may broaden his musical horizons.

Throughout the summer the participants in the music center will take part in more than 30 concerts and programs which are open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, those who make voluntary contributions for the support of the Center's activities. Sunday's exercises are open to the public and tea will be served in the Tanglewood garden immediately following the ceremonies.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

Albany Knickerbocker News
Monday, June 26, 1967

TANGLEWOOD

Lenox, Mass., west of town, off Route 183, Box Office: (413) 637-1600. Mail: Festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass., 02115.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's eight-week Berkshire Festival opens its 31st season at its summer home on Friday. Music director Eric Leinsdorf will conduct 16 of the 24 programs.

Performances are at 9 p.m. Fridays, 8 p.m. Saturdays and 2:30 p.m. Sundays. Prelude performances are held at 7 p.m. Fridays, free to Friday evening ticket holders.

6 Tanglewood Opens Today

The Music Shed at Tanglewood will be the scene of the opening concerts of the 1967 Berkshire Festival. Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the orchestra for three concerts of music by Beethoven and Prokofiev for the opening weekend of the Festival (June 30, July 1, 2). The Festival will consist of 24 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and will extend until Aug. 20. Featured works during this Berkshire Festival will be the Bach B minor Mass on July 15, Beethoven's Fidelio on Aug. 5, and the Verdi Requiem on Aug. 19.

Erich Leinsdorf will deliver the principal address at opening exercises at 2.30 p. m. in the theater for the 27th session of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood today. Included in the exercises will be the traditional singing of Randall Thompson's Alleluia.

This work written especially for the opening of the Music Center in 1940 and subsequently sung each year, will be conducted by Paul Calloway, organist and choirmaster of the Washington Cathedral and a member of the Berkshire Music Center faculty for the past three summers.

Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the orchestra in three concerts of music by Beethoven and Prokofiev for the opening weekend. The Festival will consist of 24 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and will extend to Aug. 20.

During the past week some 250 musicians registered for the eight week session held in conjunction with the Orchestra's Berkshire Festival.

Two programs inaugurated last year are being continued and expanded so as to bring the total enrollment to more than 400.

Boston University's School of Fine and Applied Arts and the New England Conservatory will include music courses for college credit at the Berkshire Music Center and a theater program carried on in association with the Berkshire Theater Festival in their operations at Tanglewood.

In addition, Boston University will inaugurate an eight-week program in painting and drawing this summer.

Of the Music Center's total enrollment 125 will be members of the Fellowship Program which is directed at those young musicians who have completed their training and are active performers.

The program is designed to emphasize chamber music for advanced instrumentalists, singers and composers.

The Tanglewood Institute consisting of three seminars, each with an informational focus for its members, provides a program for the musical layman teacher, student and non-performing musician in an environment where he may broaden his musical horizons.

Throughout the summer the participants in the Music Center will take part in more than 30 concerts and programs which are open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, those who make voluntary contributions for the support of the Center's activities.

The exercises are open to the public and tea will be served in the Tanglewood garden immediately following the ceremonies.

SUNDAY REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 116,000

JUN 25 1967 New England Newsclip

JOURNAL
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,500

JUN 29 1967 New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Festival Opens Tomorrow

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin its thirtieth season in the Berkshires with a weekend of concerts of music by Beethoven and Prokofiev (June 30, July 1, 2) Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct all three concerts.

Mr Leinsdorf will open the Friday evening (June 30, 9:00 p.m.) program with Prokofiev's Symphony No. 5. Yehudi Menuhin will be soloist for the Beethoven Violin Concerto. The concert will be preceded by the Weekend Prelude (7 p.m.) Malcolm Frager will perform piano music of Beethoven and Prokofiev.

On Saturday evening (July 1 8 p.m.) Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Beethoven's Symphonies No. 4 and No. 7. The program will also include Prokofiev's Lt. Kije Suite with David Clatworthy as soloist.

Sunday afternoon (July 2 2:30 p.m.) the Orchestra will perform Scenes from Prokofiev's Romeo and Juliet and, with Malcolm Frager as soloist, Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4.

The concerts at Tanglewood this summer will mark thirty-one years since the Boston Symphony Orchestra first performed in the Berkshires at "Holmwood" in 1936. The gift of Tanglewood to the Orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan in the autumn of 1936 gave a permanent summer home to which it has returned each summer save two during World War II.

The first Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Pension Fund will be held Saturday morning (July 1) at 10:30. These rehearsals will take place each Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season. Ticket information on the Berkshire Festival concerts and the rehearsals may be obtained from the Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts 01240.

YEHUDI MENUHIN—Soloist at Tanglewood's opening weekend.

Tanglewood Season to Open

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin its thirtieth season in the Berkshires with a weekend of concerts of music by Beethoven and Prokofiev (June 30, July 1, 2). Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct all three concerts.

Mr. Leinsdorf will open the Friday at 9 p.m. program with Prokofiev's Symphony No. 5. Yehudi Menuhin will then be soloist for the Beethoven Violin Concerto. The concert will be preceded by the weekend prelude at 7 p.m. Malcolm Frager will perform piano music of Beethoven and Prokofiev.

At 9 p.m. Saturday Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Beethoven's Symphonies No. 4 and No. 7. The Program will also include Prokofiev's Lt. Kije Suite with Davidd Clatworth as soloist.

At 2:30 p.m. July 2, the orchestra will perform Scenes from Prokofiev's Romeo and Juliet and, with Malcolm Frager as soloist, Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4.

★ ★ ★

THE CONCERTS at Tanglewood this sumer will mark 31 years since the Boston Symphony Orchestra first performed in the Berkshires at "Holmwood" in 1936. The gift of Tanglewood to the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan in the autumn of 1936 gave a permanent summer home to which it has returned each summer, save two during World War II.

The first open rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Pension Fund will be held Saturday at 10:30 a.m. These rehearsals will take place each Saturday at 10:30 throughout the Tanglewood season. Ticket information on the Berkshire Festival concerts and the rehearsals may be obtained from the festival ticket office, Tanglewood, Lenox Mass. 01240.

Tomorrow at 2:30 p.m. the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer center for the advanced study of music, will hold its traditional opening exercises. Following the exercises in the Tanglewood Theater, tea will be served in the formal gardens. Tomorrow's events at Tanglewood are open to the public.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

Albany Knickerbocker News
Saturday, June 24, 1967

6

Tanglewood Opens Today

The Music Shed at Tanglewood will be the scene of the opening concerts of the 1967 Berkshire Festival. Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the orchestra for three concerts of music by Beethoven and Prokofiev for the opening weekend of the Festival (June 30, July 1, 2). The Festival will consist of 24 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and will extend until Aug. 20. Featured works during this Berkshire Festival will be the Bach B minor Mass on July 15, Beethoven's Fidelio on Aug. 5, and the Verdi Requiem on Aug. 19.

Erich Leinsdorf will deliver the principal address at opening exercises at 2.30 p. m. in the theater for the 27th session of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood today. Included in the exercises will be the traditional singing of Randall Thompson's Alleluia.

This work written especially for the opening of the Music Center in 1940 and subsequently sung each year, will be conducted by Paul Calloway, organist and choirmaster of the Washington Cathedral and a member of the Berkshire Music Center faculty for the past three summers.

Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the orchestra in three concerts of music by Beethoven and Prokofiev for the opening weekend. The Festival will consist of 24 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and will extend to Aug. 20.

During the past week some 250 musicians registered for the eight week session held in conjunction with the Orchestra's Berkshire Festival.

Two programs inaugurated last year are being continued and expanded so as to bring the total enrollment to more than 400.

Boston University's School of Fine and Applied Arts and the New England Conservatory will include music courses for college credit at the Berkshire Music Center and a theater program carried on in association with the Berkshire Theater Festival in their operations at Tanglewood.

In addition, Boston University will inaugurate an eight-week program in painting and drawing this summer.

Of the Music Center's total enrollment 125 will be members of the Fellowship Program which is directed at those young musicians who have completed their training and are active performers.

The program is designed to emphasize chamber music for advanced instrumentalists, singers and composers.

The Tanglewood Institute consisting of three seminars, each with an informational focus for its members, provides a program for the musical layman teacher, student and non-performing musician in an environment where he may broaden his musical horizons.

Throughout the summer the participants in the Music Center will take part in more than 30 concerts and programs which are open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, those who make voluntary contributions for the support of the Center's activities.

The exercises are open to the public and tea will be served in the Tanglewood garden immediately following the ceremonies.

SUNDAY REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 116,000

JUN 25 1967

New England Newsclip

JOURNAL
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,500

JUN 29 1967

New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Festival Opens Tomorrow

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin its thirtieth season in the Berkshires with a weekend of concerts of music by Beethoven and Prokofiev (June 30, July 1, 2) Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct all three concerts.

Mr Leinsdorf will open the Friday evening (June 30, 9:00 p.m.) program with Prokofiev's Symphony No. 5. Yehudi Menuhin will be soloist for the Beethoven Violin Concerto. The concert will be preceded by the Weekend Prelude (7 p.m.) Malcolm Frager will perform piano music of Beethoven and Prokofiev.

On Saturday evening (July 1 8 p.m.) Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Beethoven's Symphonies No. 4 and No. 7. The program will also include Prokofiev's Lt. Kije Suite with David Clatworthy as soloist.

Sunday afternoon (July 2 2:30 p.m.) the Orchestra will perform Scenes from Prokofiev's Romeo and Juliet and, with Malcolm Frager as soloist, Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4.

The concerts at Tanglewood this summer will mark thirty-one years since the Boston Symphony Orchestra first performed in the Berkshires at "Holmwood" in 1936. The gift of Tanglewood to the Orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan in the autumn of 1936 gave a permanent summer home to which it has returned each summer save two during World War II.

The first Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Pension Fund will be held Saturday morning (July 1) at 10:30. These rehearsals will take place each Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season. Ticket information on the Berkshire Festival concerts and the rehearsals may be obtained from the Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts 01240.

YEHUDI MENUHIN—Soloist at Tanglewood's opening weekend.

Tanglewood Season to Open

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin its thirtieth season in the Berkshires with a weekend of concerts of music by Beethoven and Prokofiev (June 30, July 1, 2). Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct all three concerts.

Mr. Leinsdorf will open the Friday at 9 p.m. program with Prokofiev's Symphony No. 5. Yehudi Menuhin will then be soloist for the Beethoven Violin Concerto. The concert will be preceded by the weekend prelude at 7 p.m. Malcolm Frager will perform piano music of Beethoven and Prokofiev.

At 9 p.m. Saturday Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Beethoven's Symphonies No. 4 and No. 7. The Program will also include Prokofiev's Lt. Kije Suite with Davidd Clatworth as soloist.

At 2:30 p.m. July 2, the orchestra will perform Scenes from Prokofiev's Romeo and Juliet and, with Malcolm Frager as soloist, Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4.

★ ★ ★

THE CONCERTS at Tanglewood this sumer will mark 31 years since the Boston Symphony Orchestra first performed in the Berkshires at "Holmwood" in 1936. The gift of Tanglewood to the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan in the autumn of 1936 gave a permanent summer home to which it has returned each summer, save two during World War II.

The first open rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Pension Fund will be held Saturday at 10:30 a.m. These rehearsals will take place each Saturday at 10:30 throughout the Tanglewood season. Ticket information on the Berkshire Festival concerts and the rehearsals may be obtained from the festival ticket office, Tanglewood, Lenox Mass. 01240.

Tomorrow at 2:30 p.m. the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer center for the advanced study of music, will hold its traditional opening exercises. Following the exercises in the Tanglewood Theater, tea will be served in the formal gardens. Tomorrow's events at Tanglewood are open to the public.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUR.
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YOR
STATE SERVICE

Albany Knickerbocker News
Saturday, June 24, 1967

FIRST WEEK - JUNE 30 - JULY 1 - 2

7

PATRIOT-LEDGER (e)
QUINCY, MASS.
CIRC. 58,900
JUL 3 1967
New England Newsclip

The Sound of Music

A Tanglewood Opening For Two

By Peter M. Knapp

LENOX — Tanglewood, glistening and green from an abundance of early summer moisture, is again the focus of attention for Boston Symphony fans, thousands of whom attended the opening concerts over the weekend here of the 1967 Berkshire Music Festival.

The next two weekends will see smaller ensembles for the Mozart-Bach series, but the full orchestra was on hand for the three opening programs. Music Director Erich Leinsdorf devoted them entirely to music by Prokofiev and Beethoven.

Yesterday, 6,218 came on a muggy afternoon for gilt-edged performances of scenes from Prokofiev's "Romeo and Juliet" ballet score, and Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4 in which Malcolm Frager was soloist.

ERICH LEINSDORF . . . strike up the summer festival

Emotional Heat

In the Prokofiev, Leinsdorf turned on the emotional heat for this dramatic and evocative music. With its much-admired melodies, skillful use of a wide range of instrumental effects, and piquant harmonies, "Romeo and Juliet" is ideal festival music.

The performance was far superior to that early this year in Symphony Hall, ardent and taut. The Beethoven concerto rounded out the successful afternoon with a restrained and poetic interpretation by Frager — for some years now a Tanglewood favorite. Beethoven's G major concerto invites introspection rather than bravura. This suits Frager perfectly, since he is that kind of pianist.

His playing, and Leinsdorf's careful accompaniment, created an atmosphere of thoughtfulness and repose. Frager is inclined to understate the first movement (and yesterday to use more pedal than necessary), but his playing still had eloquence and grace. The dialogue of the brief second movement, and the cadenza of the first, were notes transformed into poetry.

Frager's perceptive playing demonstrates how exciting music can be from an artist who values refinement, articulation and sensitivity above overwhelming technique.

Saturday Delights

Fair weather and splendid orchestral playing graced Saturday night's concert, which attracted 7,040. In his maroon festival jacket, Leinsdorf directed the Beethoven Fourth and Seventh Symphonies and Prokofiev's "Lieutenant Kije" Suite.

Both Beethoven symphonies received strong, and often eloquent, treatment. Leinsdorf whipped up the finales of each with great momentum; the driving conclusion of the Seventh brought down the house.

The slow movements of both symphonies were exceptionally beautiful, immaculate in detail, finally modeled, and with a good sense of forward movement. The orchestral texture in these sections reflected the high level of individual and collective musicianship the Symphony players have achieved. One recalls with pleasure Gino Cioffi's clarinet work in the Fourth Symphony and the clarity of the fugal section of the Seventh.

If the Fourth Symphony had its share of propulsion, the mighty rhythms of the Seventh in Leinsdorf's conception accumulated tremendous power. It was performance of raw energy, one which tested the ability of the musicians to keep up with his tempo while preserving the decisive rhythmic patterns.

Rousing Finale

The finale, perhaps, became too pressed for comfort, but it was exciting. The pressure also showed somewhat on the musicians in the coda of the first movement when the brass strayed from pitch, and toward the end of the scherzo, when the orchestral tune seemed awry.

Leinsdorf observed repeats in both symphonies where they are often omitted — for example, in the expositions of the first movements and the trios of the scherzi. This practice costs him in the general forward thrust of a symphonic movement, whatever the arguments of tradition or structural balance.

The "Lieutenant Kije" Suite, background music Prokofiev wrote in 1933 for a movie, is a sure-fire crowd-pleaser. For this Tanglewood performance, Leinsdorf went back to Prokofiev's original version with solos in the Romance and Troika sections sung in a strong and attractive baritone by David Clatworthy. He was best in the Romance; the vocal solo doesn't carry as well in the sleigh-ride of the Troika as Prokofiev's later purely instrumental arrangement.

The performance of this brilliantly orchestrated score went very well, with expert trumpet solos by Armando Ghitalla. The coarse dances of Kilje's wedding night have had more of a flexible "swing."

Damp Opener

Friday night's opener was dampened somewhat by the weather, cool and moist with the haze softening the lighting of the grounds. A gathering of 4,783 huddled inside the shed to hear Prokofiev's Symphony No. 5 and the Beethoven Violin Concerto, for which Yehudi Menuhin was soloist.

Though it was not a night for lively sonic effects (the timpani produced sodden thuds), Menuhin overcame the atmospheric hazards in producing a tone that seemed to become increasingly voluptuous. Menuhin caressed the larghetto, in a slow and dreamy pacing, with extraordinary purity and graceful phrasing.

In the outer movements, the soloist played with a patrician refinement, carefully sculpting each line. It was not a "big", robust, dramatic performance — that was evident from the first entrance. Rather, it was gentle, deliberate in tempo with a number of passages broadening out. It might even be called "feminine" in a positive sense, in contrast to the driving, bold masculinity one usually associates with Beethoven.

During the first movement, Menuhin had his problems with pitch, but by the end of the section had his considerable technique under control for the Kreisler cadenza's punishing demands. And his trills were breathtaking in their evenness and variation of intensity.

The Prokofiev symphony, which the BSO premiered in this country several months after its first hearing in Moscow, is one of the more familiar symphonic scores of the Russian composer.

Though written toward the end of the war, in the summer of 1944, it has only occasional somber overtones. Certainly the Sixth Symphony is a more deeply-felt, tragedy-laden composition. Only in the adagio does Prokofiev really turn solemn, and the material here is not really profound enough to be called tragic.

Symphonic Survey

The symphony in a way is a survey of Prokofiev's strengths and weaknesses. It has interesting thematic content in the first movement, especially in the rising first theme which recurs in the finale, and the continual movement and interplay of voices (the brass having prominent parts in the countermelodies) invite attention. The perky second movement, propelled by an insistent rhythm, is typical of the Prokofiev scherzo style — sardonic, witty, acerb.

As a whole, however, the Fifth Symphony seems to outlast its material and Leinsdorf did not succeed in giving it a completely unified point. While the performance was usually tidy and the climaxes were impressive enough, it was not entirely compelling.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900
JUL 3 1967
New England Newsclip

Music Review

Opening at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

ALL THREE programs of the first Tanglewood weekend were divided ~~fairly~~ evenly between Beethoven and Prokofieff, a choice which allowed the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music director Erich Leinsdorf ample opportunity to show their rich resources in every respect.

A soloist for each concert further illuminated the generally brilliant programs. Yehudi Menuhin, making his Tanglewood debut, played the Beethoven violin concerto Friday night, baritone David Clatworthy had opportunities in two sections of the Prokofieff "Lieutenant Kije" suited Saturday night and yesterday afternoon Malcolm Frager was welcomed back in the Beethoven fourth piano concerto.

Yehudi Menuhin

* * *

THERE IS sufficient contrast between the two composers to maintain variety and in most cases compelling interest. Leinsdorf eased off occasionally and allowed the impact of the performances to become dull-edged, a situation understandably possible after the reassembly of the orchestra after the end of its regular Boston season.

The distinction between the two composers and the two eras became progressively more apparent as the weekend unfolded, Beethoven, even in his most boisterous moments, refined, and Prokofieff, in between many moving episodes, the brash-to-infectiously vulgar extrovert.

* * *

FRIDAY NIGHT, the Soviet composer's fifth symphony came through harsh and loud. True, he requisitions a very wide complement of instruments including an excessive percussion section. He has the special faculty of giving his slow movements a compelling forward urge and the more agitated ones a spirit of delirious abandon. These all were conveyed by the orchestra.

Menuhin's performance of the Beethoven was loftily poetic. He took extreme liberties with details in which sometimes the conductor followed at an approximate distance, but it was a different and entirely warranted reading of the masterpiece. From the poise and respectful dignity he maintained during the long orchestral introduction, during which he never once fussed with the pegs to tune nor flexed his finger muscles for minor setting-up exercises, he played of a musical majesty. He spun phrases to wisp-thin tenuousness, an accomplishment Leinsdorf might well have emulated in other situations, and painted other details with the last millimeter of his bow with telling endearment.

* * *

THERE MAY BE violinists who can ascend the opening octave passages with greater precision, or whose bow may never waver, but there are very, very few who can sing as did Menuhin that evening. He used his marvellous bow to shape phrases, and did not shape his phrases by the limitations of his bow. The slow movement was ethereally beautiful, the finale slower than I have ever heard it, but who can protest that allegro can mean cheerful? We are too conditioned by the manner of the conservatory graduate who fidgets during the introduction and, by the time he reaches the finale, thinks he is on a speedway. Menuhin made lovely, unforgettable music.

It was thus doubly interesting to hear Frager yesterday afternoon when he, too, played with leisurely deliberation, trespassing into the recherche at times. One cannot dispute him his version of allegro moderato but it does become difficult to retain consistency when he still chooses almost a same approach in the andante con moto.

* * *

THE BEETHOVEN Fourth Symphony Saturday night never soared above the horizon. What could Beethoven have envisaged when he asked the violins to play widely separated quavers in the introduction? Was he marking time or was there a suggestion of a gasp or the expectation of an aspiration? Surely he didn't intend a routine set of highway markers, played with alternate bow strokes.

And why must the opening theme of the adagio be broken into two bows, thus maintaining tonal strength from the 18 violins, when the flute, with the same phrase later, blows it so limpidly and fragilely in one beautiful line, and with one breath?

The "Kije" scenes and the "Romeo and Juliet" suites are very similar, full of romanticism, graphic humor, much comic opera, and bits of many other things. They were highly enjoyable, being played with color and vigor and the various solos allotted to the principals within the orchestra came off brilliantly. The matter of orchestral balance often goes unregarded when the music moves on hellbound for leather but that neither affects nor reduces the excitement engendered in the performances.

* * *

THE BARITONE solos in the Kije suite were sung by David Clatworthy with a splendid voice and complete grasp of the humor and spirit of two assignments. The weather played its entire repertory, from a drizzle on Friday night, a fair evening Saturday and uncertain skies yesterday afternoon. Nevertheless the audiences totaled just short of 20,000.

The Hartford Times July 1, '67

Tanglewood Music Heard

By GEORGE W. STOWE

Yehudi Menuhin, whose growing fame as a conductor has obscured the fact he first achieved renown as a violinist, was the soloist for the opening program at Tanglewood last night.

And his vehicle was the familiar Beethoven Concerto, something he has performed and recorded many times. Needless to say, the collaboration with the Boston Symphony under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf was enough to make the opening of the Berkshire Festival more than ordinarily absorbing.

* * *

Francescatti's patrician elegance or Heifetz uncanny technical control were not to be found in Menuhin's interpretation last night. However, there was a gentle warmth to the performance that was most affecting in the slow movement, something I have not heard since the legendary Fritz Kreisler was in his heyday.

To be sure, the weather was hardly conducive to the best results. The damp and drizzly atmosphere at Lenox must have interfered with Menuhin's playing. His tempi in the first and last movement were a little more deliberate than usual. The middle movement, however, was something to store away in fond memory.

Leinsdorf and the Bostonians were a bulwark of strength in the concerto, giving the soloist the opportunity to mold his interpretation and yet keeping the orchestral profile in sharp focus.

Incidentally, the violinist at 50 still looks so youthful that I could not help thinking of his early career as a child prodigy. At the end of the concerto he received thunderous applause from the audience.

* * *

Prokofiev's 5th Symphony remains his most powerful work in this form and Leinsdorf is one of its most eloquent interpreters. Many will recall that this conductor is in the process of recording a Prokofiev cycle for RCA Victor and that his recording is perhaps the finest reading.

At any rate, the orchestra was in prime form last night for the Prokofiev. The first movement had a monolithic strength that inspired a spontaneous scattering of applause, the motoric scherzo was beautifully set forth, and even the rather meandering finale came off with surprising conviction.

The drizzle outside kept the audience down to a little over 3,000, one of the smallest turnouts for a Tanglewood opening.

Rain Curbs Attendance At Tanglewood Concert

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

Everything but the weather favored the first concert of the 1967 Tanglewood season last night. Despite misty skies, there were 4,783 in the audience.

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, divided his program, as he will the two others to come this weekend, between Beethoven and Prokofiev. The soloist of the evening was violinist Yehudi Menuhin, making his Tanglewood debut.

The Prokoviev fifth symphony has special significance for the Tanglewood Shed. It was written in the last twelve-month of World War II and is redolent of the victorious atmosphere which was nearing a climax at that time.

Serge Koussevitsky, then the incumbent Boston conductor, lost no time in letting American audiences hear the symphony after its first performance in Moscow in 1945. The work was first played in this country in November of that year and at Tanglewood the following August.

The symphony has been a favorite of conductors as well as audiences. The record shows that it has been played in this area, not always in the Shed, by Mitropoulos, Bernstein, Ormandy and Leinsdorf as well as Koussevitsky.

The Wunderkind

Menuhin, at 51, has been front and center on the musical platform during the life time of most concertgoers.

The Wunderkind, as he was known from his earliest performances, has become a mature artist. He has shed the technical wizardry which first astonished audiences in this country and in Europe and has become a strong interpreter and a painter of tone-color.

Menuhin has been playing the Beethoven concerto for 40 years.

He is in this country with an ensemble he has organized in England, where he lives for most of the year. He and his group will do the circuit from Expo 67 to the Berkshire Festival, Saratoga and other way stations. Menuhin performs sometimes as a soloist and sometimes with the enemble.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900
JUL 1 1967
New England Newsclip

8

NEWS (e)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 98,600
JUL 1 1967
New England Newsclip

Menuhin Superb

Memorable Tanglewood Opening

By ARTHUR T. ANDREWES

Despite mist and rain the opening concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood proved to be an event greater than nature had the power to dampen.

When two musical giants such as Conductor Erich Leinsdorf and violin virtuoso Yehudi Menuhin join talents with one of the world's finest orchestras then a bit of rain is little enough price to pay for the privilege of listening.

The program opened with Prokofiev's Symphony Number 5 Opus 100. On previous occasions we have heard the work delivered with a shocking, brassy, almost jagged force that delighted many in the audience. Mr. Leinsdorf, with his usual gentle strength, brought about a more pleasing rendition. The work was aggressive without being audacious.

It is more than likely that the spirit and emotional countenance created by Mr. Leinsdorf is more in keeping with the composer's original score. Much of the cacophony found in today's modern music is the result of exhibitionist conductors who have no respect for the composer's initial concept. Mr. Leinsdorf has this respect and the resulting music is phenomenal.

The themes of Prokofiev's work are richly adventuresome, noble and passionate, but never boring. His approach to the music made this pieee an artistic image of his own feelings and emotions spurred by the war which surrounded him as he composed.

After a brief intermission, the Tanglewood audience (having swelled to 4783) listened in silent admiration as Beethoven's Concerto for Violin in D Major was performed with brilliant sensitivity by Yehudi Menuhin.

Appearing for the first time at Tanglewood, Mr. Menuhin seemed to be totally unaware of the forbidding tale that "rain is bad for violinists." If he was forced to make any adjustments on his instrument they were made by his compensating fingering and without interruption in the flow of the music.

During the cadenzas, in the silence when only the sound of his instrument enriched the air and when displaying the fullest range potential of the violin, Mr. Menuhin created a warm excitement that dispelled any thought of the weather.

The audience's response to the Beethoven Concert was a standing ovation that brought conductor and soloist to the podium repeatedly during four minutes of steady applause.

It was only when the house lights flooded the shell did we become concious of the idea that the concert was over and that the memory of the music was the only thing we could hope to carry through the mist to the parking lot.

However, none of us could deny that a bit of permanent warmth would be carried as long as our memories could retain Yehudi Menuhin Erich Leinsdorf, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra opening the 1967 season at Tanglewood.

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350
JUL 1 1967
New England Newsclip

Yehudi Menuhin Is Ideal For Opening of Tanglewood

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX—The cold drizzle at Tanglewood seemd to have contrasting effects on the opening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1967 Berkshire Music Festival.

Audience of 4783

It kept the audience down to 4783 but didn't dampen the spirits of the listeners huddled under topcoats and blankets.

It took some of the gleam off the celebrated tone of the Boston strings, a circumstance which, in my view, helped the Beethovn Violin Concerto and hindered the Prokofiev Symphony No. 5.

Yehudi Menuhin was the soloist for the concerto, and it is difficult to imagine anyone giving it a more loving and appropriate performance.

Gentle and Caressing

His manner was gentle and caressing, his technique gracefully liquid and his tone warm and mellow. It was a combination ideally fitted for his most famous of concertos.

The orchestra, as may be expected under the guidance of Erich Leinsdorf provided a support almost perfectly placed under the light, lyrical level of the solo violin.

It was Menuhin's first performance at Tanglewood.

The Prokofiev Fifth Symphony, which opened the program, is a big, grand daydreamer, but the usual Prokofievian tonal brilliance seemed to be dulled.

Shine Off Strings

The shine was off the strings, and the brass was brightly dramatic only during the fourth movement. But the second movement was strongly propulsive and rhythmically biting, and the contrasting, flowing melodies and grinding thrusts were carefully balanced.

This is a symphony of breadth and grandeur, and Leinsdorf showed a high respect for its large-scale structure.

Its first performance in the United States was by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1945.

Audience Doubles

There were about a thousand listeners in the shed at 7 to hear the start of the prelude program by Malcolm Frager, pianist, and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, the orchestra's principle flute. There were about 2000 at the end.

Frager is a young man at home with many piano styles and he again gave evidence of his versatility Friday.

He played Beethoven's F Major Sonata, Op. 10, No. 2, with an appropriately delicate, Mozartean sensitivity, and three pieces by Prokofiev with a strongly-evident sense of the percussive brilliance and rhythmic pulse characteristic by Prokofiev.

Frager Sunday

With Miss Dwyer he played sections from Beethoven's "Six Themes with Variations," Op. 105, and "Ten Themes with Variations,' Op. 107.

It was a nice collaboration. The players were equally expressive although occasionally not exactly together and there were passages during which the low register flute was overpowered by the piano. But the music was sweetly pleasant.

Frager is scheduled to play the solo part of Beethoven's piano Concerto No. 4 with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Sunday afternoon.

Tonight David Clatworthy, baritone, will be soloist for Prokofiev's "Lieutenant Kije" suite. Also on the program will be Beethoven's Symphonies No. 4 and No. 7.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
ALBANY TIMES UNION
Sunday, July 2, 1967

047

Tanglewood Music Lovers Return for 30th Opening

By ROBERT J. BARBER

Erich Leinsdorf, Yehudi Menuhin, Beethoven and Prokofiev teamed up at Tanglewood over the weekend to open the 30th season of the Berkshire Music Festival.

More than 10,000 music lovers braved unpredictable weather to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday and Saturday evenings.

Friday's presentation of Beethoven's only violin concerto, D Major, Op. 61, was played by Mr. Menuhin was a magnificence that could only come from a man who first performed it as a boy of 10.

His presentation was the final of the evening and was greeted by the audience with a standing ovaton.

Friday night's program opened with Prokofiev's Symphony No. 5, Op. 100, a monumental work written in Russia in a single month during the summer of 1944.

He stated at the time that he intended it as a "hymn to free and happy man, to his mighty powers, his pure and noble spirit."

But he added, later, "I cannot say that I deliberately chose this theme. It was born in me and clamored for expression. The music matured within me. It filled my soul."

And it was obvious that the music did the same for the Friday night audience, just as it did in January of 1945 in Moscow and in November of the same year when Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony introduced it to America.

Saturday evening, The Boston Symphony again turned to Beethoven and Prokofiev. Baritone David Clatworthy performed with the orchestra in Prokofiev's Lieutenant kije.

This afternoon, Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Prokofiev's Scenes from Romeo and Juliet and Beethoven's piano Concerto No. 4 in G Major played by Mr. Frager in first performance in this version at the Festival concerts.

SUNDAY TELEGRAM
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 107,550
JUL 2 1967
New England Newsclip

Menuhin Sensational In Tanglewood Opener

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Yedhudi Menuhin gave the 30th Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood a sensational start Friday night with his performance of the Beethoven violin concerto.

This has been a Beethoven-Prokofiev weekend. Erich Leinsdorf is conductor of the full-sized Boston Symphony Orchestra. During the next two weekends, about half of the orchestra will be in Boston to perform the Esplanade Concerts under Arthur Fiedler.

Music suitable for a smaller orchestra will be performed at Tanglewood.

Friday night, the orchestra gave a sensitive, sonorous, sometimes clangorous performance of Prokofiev's Symphony No. 5, Opus 100. Menuhin brought the audience to rousing enthusiasm with the Beethoven.

It was one of those rare occasions of total agreement between soloist, conductor, and orchestra. Leinsdorf was not an arbitrator, but rather the influence in power that welded components.

The broad orchestral introductions of the concerto made a reliable prediction of the soloists's style and intentions. It was a clear course from the start.

Although he was by no means an infallible technician — we've rarely known Menuhin to be so thoroughly imbued with the task at hand — it was pure Beethoven, devoid of unessential visual or tonal affectation.

Bowing was strong and relaxed. Some foreign tones were heard but the playing was essentially brilliant. Tone was smooth, vibrating, and richly textured.

The first movement had nobility along with sentiment, rebellion and vitality. A tender dialogue was carried on in the slow movement.

The concluding rondo was jovial, somewhat long-winded, but audibly dashing.

Overall impression was deep concern with the work's valid, truthful qualities. Long and persistent applause was not for the man but his performance of the Beethoven.

The beauty of listening to Prokofiev's Fifth Symphony is that you can interpret it as you please. About all the composer had to offer was that "it is a symphony about the spirit of man." That covers a multitude of virtues and vices.

Except in the lingering, languorus slow movement, Leinsdorf sought virtuosic effect and some shock treatment. In spots it was bombastic.

All of it was superbly played. The symphony itself is liberally peppered with murky harmonies, zigzagging melodies, pompous proclamations and ingenious use of instruments.

Leinsdorf kept a firm hand over these massive materials and maintained fine balances. Outlay of rhythmic energy in the finale was remarkable and enhanced by the music shed's acoustics.

Malcolm Frager played music by Beethoven and Prokofiev for Friday night's "Weekend Prelude." The recital would have petered out without the Prokofiev.

He gave a loosely romantic version of Beethoven's Sonata in F Major, Opus 10, No. 2. The first movement was fragile clean, methodical workmanship.

Excerpts from Beethoven's trivial variations, Opus 105 and Opus 107, were played by Frager and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, first flutist with the Boston Symphony. In spite of his heavy-handedness, the flutist's crystaline tone and phrase elegance could be discerned. But the music itself was so much nonsense and would have been long since interred if Beethoven's name wasn't affixed to it.

Frager vindicated himself with brilliant performances of a prelude, march, and Sonata No. 3 by Prokofiev.

Newsday
GARDEN CITY, N. Y.
D. 400,124
JUL 3 1967

Berkshire Opening: Beethoven With Birds

By Al Cohn
Newsday Staff Correspondent

Lenox, Mass.—One of these summers, Erich Leinsdorf is going to do something about getting the starlings that nest in the Tanglewood Music Shed to shriek in tune with his orchestra. Then the Berkshire Festival will have just about achieved perfection.

Until then, the outdoor music lovers up here will have to punt up with discordant birds chirping along with the precision Boston Symphony, a situation that left no one complaining yesterday at the close of the 30th annual festival's opening weekend. An estimated 18,000 in all were on hand for concerts Friday and Saturday nights and yesterday afternoon, and each occasion was ripe with reason for satisfaction.

From a weather standpoint, the season got off to a dismal start Friday night. A misty rain and cold temperatures (in sharp contrast to last year's Fourth of July weekend temperatures in the 100s) kept a relatively small crowd off the sprawling lawn, huddled under the shed to listen to a brief program of Prokofiev and Beethoven, the composers of the weekend. The dankness seemed accentuated by Prokofiev's Symphony No. 5, with its piercing scherzo and the general ominous theme of the World War II work. Then came Yehudi Menuhin and Beethoven's "Violin Concerto," and it wouldn't have mattered if it had started snowing.

The climate gave an old-recording type quality to the performance, but this almost made it more interesting, like listening to an ancient disk of Caruso or Galli-Curci. Playing with what appeared to be a minimum of exertion, Menuhin interpreted the concerto with typical understatement and the clear, beautiful tone that is unmistakably his own. Those interested in a close-up of his technical skills were more than satisfied by specially arranged credenzas in the first and third movements. Menuhin flashed through these passages with a power and diversity that suggested the output of four violins, rather than one.

Both music and weather were lovely Saturday night. The shed and lawn were filled with the largest crowd of the weekend, 7,000, and even the compulsive gin-rummy players had to stop to take in the beauty of two Beethoven symphonies and a Prokofiev suite, easing daylight along to nightfall. Leinsdorf was right on target with the symphonies, bringing the quiet excitement out of the Fourth and all of the majesty and gradually swelling power out of the Seventh. The "Lieutenant Kije Suite," fire movements describing the life of an imaginary Russian officer, was alternately lively and quietly provocative. David Clatworthy was a fine baritone soloist.

All ended well yesterday, despite occasional clouds that frustratd the sun-worshippers. The concert opened with scenes from Profofiev's music for the ballet "Romeo and Juliet." This was the lengthiest offering of the weekend, including infrequently performed portions of the original ballet score. The orchestra did well in handling the shift from lyrical to dissonant themes. Soloist Malcom Frager concluded with a sensitive reading of the lovely Beethoven Concerto for Piano and Orchestra No. 4. The starlings were as off-key as usual, but it is a long season.

Westbury Republic July 5th 1967

Berkshire Festival Under Way

The 30th Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony at its Tanglewood summer home, opened Tuesday with a musical program combining Prokofiev and Beethoven, brilliantly conducted by the Boston's Musical Director, Erich Leinsdorf.

Friday evening began with a Prelude Concert of lesser-known works by the two composers, with soloists Malcolm Frager, pianist, and Doriot Dwyer, flute.

Friday's major concert featured the Prokofiev Symphony No. 5, and the Beethoven Violin Concerto in D major. Despite the inclement weather, a devoted crowd of 4,783, gathered in the Shed to hear Yhudi Menuhin in his first appearance at Tanglewood. He rendered a most triumphant performance of the concerto, and offered the audience a rare treat. Menuhin has been playing this concerto for 40 years, first as a child prodigy, then as a mature musician. Menuhin is presently occupied as artistic director of two music festivals in his adopted countries, England and Switzerland.

He is also conductor of the Bath Festival Orchestra, and concertizes very little in the United States. His rendering of the Beethoven Concerto was sensitive, his tone quality singing. The playing was brilliant in parts, always melodic and lovely.

Prokofiev and Beethoven are certainly opposites, yet the programs combined the works of these two composers with interesting and even exciting results. Saturday's program featured the Prokofiev Lieutenant Kije Orchestral Suite, as well as two Beethoven Symphonies, the fourth and the seventh. The program was superbly balanced. The earlier Beethoven Fourth, a pastoral and placidly contemplative symphony and the later Beethoven Seventh with its grander scope and insistent rhythmic patterns in each movement, were delightfully and almost satirically contrasted with the droll Lieutenant Kije Orchestra Suite.

The Kije Suite was first composed for a motion picture. It is written in five sections, depicting the life of an imaginary military hero, from his birth to his funeral. It is vaguely reminiscent of Wagner in the strains of the first section, Birth of Kije. The music almost subverts itself, achieving a tongue-in-cheek irony as it progresses through the illusionary Romance, Wedding, Troika, and Burial of Kije.

The Boston's premiere Tanglewood performance of the Suite employed Prokofiev's original arrangement, with a baritone solo sung by David Clatworthy. This solo is usually played by the tenor saxophone, but when sung the words and intonation of the song lend a colorful and almost folk-song quality to the work.

The weekend concerts concluded on Sunday afternoon with a delightful performance of Prokofiev's Scenes from Romeo and Juliet, Op. 64. This was the first performance of this work at Tanglewood. It was first composed in 1935 as ballet music for the Bolshoi Theatre in Moscow. The music is composed in a leit-motif style, with specific musical themes portraying Juliet, Romeo, and Tybalt.

The music is simple yet poignant, as the orchestra spins out the tragic Shakespeare story, told so well in Prokofiev's score. The Boston's performance was a truly memorable one. The sensitivity of the drama was felt with every note the orchestra played.

The concluding work of Sunday's program was the Beethoven Piano Concerto No. 4, in G major, Op. 58, with Malcolm Frager at the piano. Well-known to Tanglewood audiences for the past five years, Mr. Frager has literally matured at the Festival's Steinway pianos. His performance this year of this piano concerto was a combination of musicianship and poetic perfection, an eloquent artistic statement.

Menuhin Uniquely Beautiful at Tanglewood

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Music Critic

LENOX — At Friday evening's Boston Symphony concert at Tanglewood, the season's first, Yehudi Menuhin gave the most beautiful performance of Beethoven's Violin Concerto that I have ever heard. It was not the most perfect: intonation was often strange, and in the finale the rhythm was sometimes puzzling, too. At the same time, there were things about the violin playing as such that were really masterful: control of articulation, for example (and Menuhin makes severe demands on himself in that matter), and the lovely tone, which is delicate without being small or mincing, sweet and full without being heavy and blowzy, and concentrated even in the low register.

It was, though, the musical character of the playing that conveyed so well the breadth of form and the serenity of the work, and that made Menuhin's performance uniquely beautiful. For once the first movement development, and especially the moving passage in G minor, remained part of the composition instead of becoming a self-indulgent, pathetic and essentially irrelevant episode.

Menuhin played Kreisler's cadenza, itself a remarkable combination of virtuoso writing and compositional intelligence. Most violinists who play it — and I am thinking particularly of Isaac Stern's performance in Boston a couple of years ago — communicate only its virtuosity, and the famous passage when the two themes are played simultaneously becomes merely the climax of a series of outrageous technical difficulties.

When Menuhin played it with his greater maturity about relating local events to larger ones, it was clear that the heightened compositional density of this passage made it the cadenza's structural climax. Altogether, indeed, he showed how the cadenza continues, comments on, wraps up Beethoven's ideas, how, in other words, it is part of the concerto rather than an intrusion upon it.

Always when I have heard others play the Beethoven, the cadenza has become such an aggressive and detached display piece that audiences have taken its ending as the signal to relax and cough, thus spoiling Beethoven's beautiful stroke of bringing the lovely second theme back once more when the orchestra enters. With Menuhin, the cadenza was so obviously part of the piece, its ending open, and the orchestral entrance a continuation, rather than a break, that the hush remained, and for the first time in a public concert I could hear not only this magic moment but, as it were, the whole movement through to the end.

I am convinced that Rudolf Kolisch is right in insisting that Beethoven's markings for the second movement imply a faster tempo than the conventional one at which Menuhin, too, played it. Nevertheless, Menuhin's playing was the most engrossing I have experienced of this Larghetto because of the anti-sentimental, noble lyricism of the phrasing, the refinement of the sound itself, and the improvisatory fantasy with which the decorations to the theme were "spoken."

And for all this, Erich Leinsdorf provided a framework that started with a somewhat neutral playing of the first ritornello and became, with the soloist's entrance, stronger in character, sensitive, and finely integrated in detail as well as in large dimensions.

The concert began with Prokofiev's Symphony No. 5, played rather roughly, but with pleasing energy. Soggy weather kept the audience below 5000.

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,100

JUL 3 1967 New England Newsclip

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 102,400

JUL 3 1967 New England Newsclip

Malcolm Frager plays at Tanglewood opening

By Clifford Barnes

Lenox, Mass.

It was cool and misty at Tanglewood's Music Shed as pianist Malcolm Frager walked on stage Friday night, rubbing his hands against the chill. The audience response to his one-hour recital, prelude to the opening weekend of the Berkshire Music Festival, supplied the warmth that was lacking. In turn, the pianist warmed up the large crowd assembled to hear music director Erich Leinsdorf conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The first of eight weekends for this 30th season in the Berkshires was devoted entirely to the music of Beethoven and Prokofiev. The only reason for pairing these two seems to be that their works are strong points in Mr. Leinsdorf's repertoire. More Beethoven is scheduled for the sixth week.

The prelude recital was appealing because Mr. Frager programed some music that isn't often heard. Beethoven's two sets of themes with variations, Op. 105 and 107, were written for piano solo, or piano with flute or violin. Flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer joined in playing five excerpts that sparkled with guileless charm.

Sensitive to mood

One theme was a variant of "The Last Rose of Summer," another was the Russian folksong "Minka." The variations for the second set are more imaginative and longer. Mr. Frager crouched over the keyboard with glee, or sat seriously straight, befitting the mood of the music.

There was the Beethoven F-major Sonata (Op. 10, No. 2), the Prelude and March from Prokofiev's Opus 12, and Prokofiev's Third Sonata (Op. 28). The pianist deftly brought out left hand melodies. Each work was polished, and the Prokofiev built to a tempestuous finale.

Mr. Frager played the Beethoven Piano Concerto No. 4 with the orchestra on Sunday afternoon. The "run-through" at Saturday morning's open rehearsal displayed an interpretation of extraordinary sensitivity.

Yehudi Menuhin was soloist in the Beethoven Violin Concerto for the opening concert Friday night. After 44 years on the concert stage, he knows how to produce a tone that is vibrant and full-bodied. His fingers, however, did not always hit the exact spot for perfect intonation. Surprisingly enough, this occurred in rapid passage-work as well as slower legato.

The cadenzas for the first and last movements were his best moments—even though the ones he used, by Kreisler, at times seemed inappropriate to Beethoven. Conductor and orchestra worked together with the soloist to produce a performance that had the audience cheering.

Sang with gusto

The surprise on Saturday night's concert was hearing Prokofiev's "Lieutenant Kijé" Suite with the baritone solos restored from the original film score. David Clatworthy sang in Russian the "Romance" and "Troika" with great gusto. Martin Hoherman left his first-chair place in the cello section to contribute orchestral coloring on a saxophone. Armando Ghitalla played the opening and closing cornet solos off stage.

The purely symphonic works varied in quality on Friday and Saturday. On both evenings the orchestral sound in the Music Shed was rich and resonant. The musicians could not be heard to better advantage anywhere. The crowd sitting or reclining on the lawns around the shed seemed delighted.

The Prokofiev Fifth Symphony was given an audience-stirring performance, and justly so. The composer's inspiration caught the imagination of the conductor and his musicians. Even the war-like cannon shots on the timpani were not over-done.

Beethoven's Fourth Symphony was marked by finely shaped phrases and carefully controlled dynamics. The long flowing melodies were particularly well played in the second and third movements, especially as contrasted with the syncopated accents in the third.

The Seventh Symphony was a different matter. With each successive movement, the expressions on the faces of the orchestra (from where I sat) showed less interest and involvement with the task at hand. It became a task, in spite of Mr. Leinsdorf's conducting.

Yet he whipped up such a storm with the last movement that the audience gave it a rousing ovation.

GAZETTE (e)
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 94,350

JUL 1 1967 New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Series

Leinsdorf Begins His Fifth Season

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — Erich Leinsdorf began his fifth summer at Tanglewood last night by conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program which fascinatingly balanced the vigor of Prokofiev against the gentler moments of Beethoven.

To the latter, the Violin Concerto in D Major, Op. 61, Yehudi Menuhin brought the aristocratic technical skill and warmth of tone which expressed a personality long devoted to music and his fellow man.

Gazette Review

The weather, for the most part avoiding outright rain, but dampening everything, limited the throng but did not curb the many enthusiastic recalls.

Weekend Prelude

The 9 o'clock concert was preceded by a Weekend Prelude at 7, again the music of Beethoven and Prokofiev, with Malcolm Frager as pianist, at times assisted by Mrs. Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Boston Symphony first flutist.

This motif will prevail tonight, as Leinsdorf conducts the Beethoven Fourth and Seventh Symphonies and an orchestral suite from Prokofiev's music for "Lt. Kije." Sunday's 2:30 concert will bring Frager in the Beethoven Piano Concerto No. 4 in G major, and an orchestral fare scenes form Prokofiev's "Romeo and Juliet."

The Prokofiev Fifth last night was a splendid festival opener, vital outgoing music, cloaking technical skills under dashing forms. This was a Boston Symphony showcase in reverse; instead of spotlighting individual instruments it revealed their many gorgeous composite colors.

Tremendous Drive

The movements brought in turn tremendous drive, a droll but insatiably driven scherzo, grief ranging from placid acceptance to frantic struggle, and an "Allegro giocoso" whose humor was often on the grim side.

The Beethoven concerto, a sizable piece orchestrally, brought in the violin first as a sensitive obbligato, than as a full partner in the tenderness of the "Larghetto." In last night's fine version, the solo never lost its poise, and the orchestra, though carefully balanced, never seemed suppressed.

HERALD (m)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 158,700

JUL 3 1967 New England Newsclip

MUSIC

Beethoven Vies With Prokofiev

By MCLAREN HARRIS
Music Critic

LENOX—The Boston Symphony Orchestra spends but eight weeks of each year in the Berkshires. For residents of the area and travelers from other locales, however, this can amount to an entire seanon; audiences totalling 18,000 attended the three weekend concerts conducted by Erich Leinsdorf which opened the Tanglewood season, and judging from the reception they are determined to squeeze 24 weeks' applause into these eight.

The programs, on the surface, reflected a departure from the romantic-spiced offerings which usually characterize holiday week-ends: only Beethoven and Prokofiev were represented. Even so the works were selected for general consumption and included Beethoven's Fourth and Seventh Symphonies, the Violin Concerto and the Fourth Piano Concerto; and Prokofiev's Symphony No 5, the "Lieutenant Kije" suite and scenes from "Romeo and Juliet."

Beethoven Better

In truth Beethoven was better represented than Prokofiev, the latter's conservative Fifth Symphony is often looked upon as a retreat from the forward beauty of the violin concertos and the Scythian Suite, as well as an artistic sellout to the Soviet regime.

The "Lieutenant Kije" is generally accepted for what it is — incidental music for a motion picture comedy—but in "Romeo" fingers are more frequently pointed at the banalities and obviousness of the movements than at their structural and orchestral expertise.

Neither Leinsdorf nor the orchestra was in an apologetic mood, however, and Prokofiev's bombast, wit, and either mock or genuine tenderness in "Kije" and "Romeo" were delivered with full-throated brilliance; the symphony's straightforward melodic approaches and fanfare were accorded equal respect.

Full Maturity

The two soloists, Yehudi Menuhin and Malcolm Frager, were of particular interest. Menuhin is 51 this year, though it may seem as if he should be older, having been a celebrated performer for as long as I can remember. His violin work on Friday bespoke full maturity and assurance, but without presumption.

The phrases of the Beethoven Concero's larghetto were sustained in gentle, tapered legatos without losing the flow of a cantilena; his placement and intonation appeared unshakably accurate. True, he had a tendency to rush through passages of bravura in the finale, but not so much as to break the thread of continuity or overrun his colleagues. If there is such a quality as performance integrity, Menuhin possesses it.

Malcolm Frager was soloist on Sunday for the Beethoven Piano Concerto No. 4, a work which often finds itself bypassed between the direct charm of No. 3 and magnificence of the "Emperor." If anyone has the sense to treat the fourth as pure music Frager does, and did.

Whole Manner

His whole manner was basically introspective, as has been observed before; moments of pianistic quietude emerged unhurried, soulful and memorable, while the ornamental work, such as the arpeggios concluded the finale, took on an ethereal sparkle. I wonder if, at another time, I would find this performance lacking in muscle; but Sunday, ending a weekend of large Beethoven and Prokofiev, I was gratified.

The orchestra's performances were robust, not to say dynamically heavy, for most of the weekend. This appeared to be what audiences wanted: for the big-voiced Beethoven symphonies, framing the "Lieutenant Kije" on Saturday, were received with enthusiam (the Seventh's performance was graced with flourishes by the third-desk cellos).

There was some longing for quiet, however, evidenced by the sudden hush and attention which descended over the mandolin-accompanied morning serenade from Prokofiev's "Romeo" on Sunday. That movement, as others, came in for spontaneous applause.

10

TELEGRAM (m)
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 62,350

JUL 3 1967 New England Newsclip

Attendance at Berkshire Festival Is Disappointing

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — The first weekend of Berkshire Music Festival concerts at Tanglewood fared well artistically with music by Beethoven and Prokofiev but was only moderately successful audience-wise.

Total attendance for the three days, including the Saturday morning open rehearsal, was 19,965. This is not an impressive figure for a Tanglewood weekend by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra.

For the next two weekends, the orchestra will be curtailed to half size so that some of its members can perform in the Boston Esplanade concerts. Next weekend, the Berkshire programs are all-Mozart.

Beethoven Concerto

Yesterday afternoon, 32-year-old pianist Malcolm Frager gave an intensely musical performance of Beethoven's Concerto No. 4 in G major, Opus 58, with the Boston Symphony conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

It was anything but "razzle-dazzle." The pianist was totally engrossed with beauty of sound, and truth, There wasn't a pounded chord or a lacy passage that lacked a note.

Leinsdorf abided by the unusually slow tempo set by the pianist in his eight-measure introduction. The pages of orchestral matter that followed didn't waver an iota. Some may have found it unduly conservative.

Everything was conscientious in Frager's playing — technique, nuances, restrained volume, and not a particle of flamboyance.

The slow movement was a compelling dialogue between subdued keyboard and assertive orchestra. The concluding rondo was fluent, incisive and brilliant.

Frager responded to four curtain calls.

Yesterday's performance of Prokofiev's two "Romeo and Juliet" suites was affluent in sound with instantaneous, clear-cut patterns of rhythm and dynamics.

Most memorable was the strenuous, stentorean "Dance of the Knights," the score's most vital music. Other landmarks were the gorgeous Romeo theme in low strings and brass, gossamer lightness of the "Interlude," and clattering swells of volume in the final sequences.

The work takes 55 minutes to play. Leinsdorf conducted it from memory, including usually unused sections from the original score.

Saturday night's concert, also conducted by Leinsdorf, was efficient but only modestly exciting. It should have been infinitely more so, since it included Beethoven's Seventh Symphony.

Direction and effect in the Beethoven Seventh were tailored to the "grand manner." Leinsdorf made plenty of room for lyricism. Big moments were enforced by fine work in brasses.

The Funeral March had an active pace giving it nobility rather than mournful sobriety. The finale was energetic but created problems for horns.

Sunny-dispositioned Fourth Symphony by Beethoven ran true to form. After a drawlingly slow introduction, it finally achieved bursting spirit.

The slow movement sounded almost matter-of-fact. The minuet was vitalized and the rondo was full-speed without tonal casualties or shabby phrasing.

Saturday night's "Lieutenant Kije" suite by Prokofiev was more effectual programming.

Soloist for 'Kije" was the richly voiced young American baritone, David Clatworthy. Singing in Russian, he brought lyrical contours to the "Romance," and verve to "Troika," although the latter got off to a shaky orchestral start.

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350

JUL 3 1967 New England

At Tanglewood

Frager Virtuosity Finds BSO Able Collaborator

By C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — Immediately after Malcolm Frager and the Boston Symphony Orchestra played Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4 at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon it was impossible to believe that it might have been played more beautifully.

Welcome Blend

Music seldom seems as sensational in retrospect as it does at the moment of hearing and many things conspired Sunday to make that performance special.

First, the setting was ideal. A warm, lazy, sunny summer afternoon amid the green serenity of Tanglewood is exactly right for the dream-wold created by the graceful melodies and benevolence of this concerto.

Second, Frager's style and talent were equal to the test. He had the virtuosic technique needed to sail through the intricate runs and delicate filigree with seeming ease and he had the sensitivit y and insight of a first-rate chamber musician needed to express the intimacy that is the essence of this concerto.

Oneness

Third, conductor Erich Leinsdorf's superb sense of timing and the Boston musicians' incredible unity helped establish a beautifully balanced and perfectly coordinated collaboration with the piano.

This report is beginning to sound overweight with superlatives, but it may turn out that Sunday's concerto will be one of the two or three most beautiful moments of the orchestra's 24 Tanglewood concerts this summer.

But that was only half of the concert prepared for the 6218 listeners.

"Romeo and Juliet"

The first half was taken up with a collection of excerpts from Prokofiev's "Romeo and Julliet" ballet, Op. 64.

It was an entertaining sequence of 16 short pieces strung so closely together it was impossible for anyone not thoroughly acquainted with the music to keep track of them. music to keep track of them.

The pieces were organized by Leinsdorf from the ballet score and probably, although the program notes do not specifically acknowledge it, from one or more of the three suitis Prokofiev made from the ballet score.

Musical Tendons

It is a work held together rigorously by the plot of the Shakespeare play and loosely by the system of leitmotivs the composer invented for each of the major characters.

It is continuously and delightfully melodic, has a minimum of the brilliant clash and clangor that appears in some of Prokofiev's early work, presents scenes of beauty and tragedy, sudden drama and gaiety as well as touches of humor.

It was very popular with the audience Sunday, which broke into the sequence a couple of times to applaud.

Next weekend is the annual Mozart weekend. Scheduled are three symphonies, three piano concertos, four miscellaneous works and some solo piano.

SUNDAY REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS
CIRC. 115,950

JUL 2 1967 New England Newsclip

At Tanglewood

Substance and Spice In Beethoven, Prokofiev

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — Beethoven and Prokofiev made a nice match Saturday night at Tanglewood.

Leinsdorf Conducts

Erich Leinsdorf led the Boston Symphony Orchestra through a quietly but thoroughly satisfying performance of Beethoven's Symphonies No. 4 and 7 and Prokofiev's "Lieutenant Kije" Suite, Opus 60.

The suite provided a brightly spicy middle for a program that began and ended with symphonies of substance. It also provided music much less familiar than the symphonies, although the style of Prokofiev no longer offers surprises.

The suite was expanded from incidental music Prokofiev wrote for a comic movie in 1933. It was a movie about an imaginary lieutenant unknowingly invented by the czar when nervous about calling attention he misread an official report.

Salt and Pepper

The czar's subordinates were to his mistake, so they perpetuated the error by creating fake papers and imaginary events so that there would be "somebody" to represent the czar's mistake.

The suite has five parts, two of which call for songs sung by a baritone soloist (often performed by a tenor saxophonist).

The suite is light and piquant, full of salt and pepper. There are bright piccolo passages, sessions of rapid drum taps, staccato themes from the brass in dense chords and frequent lively melodies from cornet and trumpet.

Clatworthy Strong

It is a continuously entertaining, although not brilliantly dramatic, piece.

David Clatworthy sang the vocal solos with a youthful vigor and open-throated, brightly clear resonance. His manner was assured and strong.

The symphonies were predictably profound.

Leinsdorf paced them with careful deliberation and, as usual, with special care for structural balance and distinct phrasing.

Strings Have Sheen

The strings seemed to have regained the barely perceptible loss of sheen (because of excess humidity) noticed Friday, and the beauty of orchestral sonority equaled the seemingly faultless precision and clarity.

There were 7040 listeners, and although there may have been a few on the spacious lawns who weren't listening intensely, there were no voices raised in complaint.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 SUN. 122,607

JUL 3 1967

Tanglewood 'Immense Success'

By ROBERT J. BARBER

Probably the most popular works of Beethoven are the Symphonies 3, 5 and 9 and his Piano Concerto No. 5.

The fact that Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony, did not open Tanglewood's 27th season with these seemed to make no difference to his admirers.

It was a weekend of Prokofiev and Beethoven starting Friday evening, climaxing Sunday afternoon. The program featured soloists Yehudi Menuhin, violinist; Malcolm Frager, pianist; and David Clatworthy, baritone.

Saturday evening's Symphony No. 7 was the most exciting and proved again that Mr. Leinsdorf and the Boston Orchestra are incomparable when it comes to presenting a relatively unfamiliar program and making it a great success.

The voice of young Mr. Clatworthly is magnificent and his rendition of Prokofiev's "Lieutenant Kije" was delivered in such a casual manner as to lead one to believe anyone could sing it.

Sunday afternoon, Mr. Leinsdorf presented Prokofiev's "Scenes from Romeo and Juliet" to the delight of the thousands in the theater and on the lawn.

Mr. Frager, who has played with the Albany Symphony in past seasons, received an enthusiastic reaction in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4.

The orchestra and the soloists were splendid — as was expected, so a word about Sunday's musical background. Prokofiev composed "Romeo and Juliet" in 1935 for the Bolshoi Theater in Moscow. But it was first performed in 1938 at Brno, Czechoslovakia.

The idea of putting Shakespeare's masterpiece to music for a ballet horrified many at the time but Prokofiev was able to project the emotions of the two principals in a manner which still stuns audiences.

His "Lieutenant" and "Romeo and Juliet" were both commissioned works and he said at the time:

"When I am asked to write music for a ballet or a film, I rarely consent immediately, even if I know the text of the work, for it takes me from five to ten days to 'see' it, that is, to visualize the characters, their emotions and their actions in terms of music."

When the ballet was completed, no one would produce it because the dancers found rythms istricate and those who heard the music were dismayed.

Yesterday's performance and those of the past have proved Prokofiev knew what he was doing. Mr. Leinsdorf used portions of the original ballet, some of which do not appear in any of the various suites.

Beethoven offered his Fourth Piano Concerto for publication in 1806 and it was an immediate success — like many of the revolutionary compositions of the great composer.

The Concerto remained for many years comparatively unknown and was almost totally forgotten.

Its revival was due to Mendelssohn, who, as conductor of the Gewandhaus Concerts at Leipzig, seized the opportunity to reintroduce the concerto and many other works that might have gathered dust.

The opening weekend of Tanglewood was an immense success—musically if not at the box office — and the presentation of the music of Mozart this week should offset any financial setbacks suffered in the opening week.

ENTERPRISE (e)
LEOMINSTER, MASS.
CIRC. 4,600

JUL 1 1967 New England Newsclip

First Performances Mark Berkshire Music Festival

Nine events at Tanglewood are listed on the Berkshire Festival's second week calendar. In addition to the three weekend concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra the second week's program includes the first concert in the Tuesday evening Berkshire Festival Chamber Music series and the first performances by the members of the Berkshire Music Center.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts will be devoted to the music of Mozart. Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has invited Jorge Mester to be guest conductor for the 9 p.m. July 7 concert. The concert will begin with the Symphony No. 33. Claude Frank will be soloist for the Piano Concerto, K.466: and the concert will conclude with the Adagio and Fugue, K. 546, and the Symphony No. 35.

The evening Weekend Prelude 7 p.m. July 7, will feature Evelyne Crochet who will give a recital of Mozart's piano music.

Miss Crochet will also be the soloist for the 8 p.m., July 8, when Erich Leinsdorf conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Mozart Piano Concerto, K. 456. The program will also include the March, K. 408 and the Haffner Serenade.

At 2:30 p.m. July 9, the concert will have Claude Frank as its soloist. He will perfrom the Mozart Piano Concerto, K. 491, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. Mr. Leinsdorf will also conduct the Divertimento, K. 205 and the Symphony No. 40.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players will give their first concert in the United States following a six week tour of the Soviet Union at 8 p.m. July 4, as the first concert in the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music series are Phyllis Curtin, so-composed of the principal players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will present a second concert in this series on July 25. Other artists to appear in this series are Phyllis Curtin, so prano, July 11; The Zimbler Sinfonietta, July 18; Igor Kipnis, harpsichord, and Roman Totenberg, violin, Aug. 2.

NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

Albany Knickerbocker News
Saturday, July 1, 1967

Krieger

THE AISLE SEAT

A Saratoga Preview at Tanglewood

By R. E. Krieger

LENOX, Mass. — The Berkshire breeze, dripping with fog, blew through the Music Shed at Tanglewood last night disregarded by the nearly 5,000 bundled and raincoated people who had come to hear violinist Yehudi Menuhin.

The concert marked the opening of the 30th Berkshire Music Festival, now famed throughout the world for the quality of its concerts and for the major musicians who have attended the music school.

★ ★ ★

MR. MENUHIN, scheduled to perform at the Saratoga Center tonight and tomorrow night with the Bath Festival Orchestra, was at his masterful best in

YEHUDI MENUHIN — The violinist appeared as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night in its opening concert, in the Beethoven Violin Concerto.

Beethoven's only violin concerto, the D Major Op. 61.

It is a monumental work, in its way, and despite the sogginess of the night air, Mr. Menuhin was magnificent including in his performance the famed, and unbelievable, Kreisler cadenzas.

His tone can only be called voluptuous, if not unworldly, and his technique (as always) was extraordinary.

The audience greeted his performance with a giant crashing of applause punctuated by bravo and a standing ovation.

★ ★ ★

THE CONCERTO was the latter half of the opening with Prokofiev's Fifth Symphony being performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf, looking as svelte as ever, as the season's opener.

Composed during the war years in 1944 it had its premiere in Moscow and Prokofiev viewed it as "a hymn to free and happy Man." In the light of the time it was composed it is compelling in emotion bringing forth the tragedy of war and then the faith in Russia's future.

It was, incidentally, introduced in America by the same orchestra (the Boston Symphony) in 1945 under the direction of the late Serge Koussevitsky.

The work is enormously exciting what with a brace of percussionists all working like mad with some beautifully performed trumpet and trombone work in the second movement.

MR. LEINSDORF has a new podium this year. Between he and the audience there is now a metal rail and the podium is covered with deep-pile red carpeting. It's gorgeous.

As is usual on Friday nights the main concert was preceded beginning at 7 p.m. by works of Prokofiev and Beethoven performed by pianist Malcolm Frager, who appeared with the Albany Symphony last season.

He will perform in concert with the Boston Symphony tomorrow beginning at 2:30 p.m. in Beethoven's Fourth Piano Concerto.

The orchestra will also be heard in scenes from Prokofiev's "Romeo and Juliet" and it will be the first performance in this version at Tanglewood.

★ ★ ★

THIS EVENING, beginning at 8 p.m. baritone David Clatworthy will perform with the orchestra in Prokofiev's orchestra suite, "Lieutenant Kije," the version being the first time given at Tanglewood.

The orchestra will also be heard in Beethoven's Fourth Symphony and Seventh Symphony.

Getting back to Mr. Menuhin for a moment mainly because he is performing at Saratoga tonight (and you'll be sorry if you miss the concert as it holds immense promise).

He made his soloist debut at the age of 7 and since that time has appeared with every major orchestra in the world.

★ ★ ★

AT PRESENT he is the artistic director of two festivals. The first is in Bath, England where he also conducts the orchestra, the same one that you will be hearing tonight at Saratoga.

The other is in Saanen, in the Bernese Oberland of Switzerland.

LEINSDORF ON STAGE: Erich Leinsdorf, music director of Tanglewood, strides on stage at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer home to open the 31st season of weekend concerts.

With Mr. Menuhin at Saratoga will be his sister Hepzibah, a talented concert pianist, and harpsichordist George Malcolm.

Then on Monday and Tuesday the first annual folk festival opens at Saratoga with Theo Bikel, Ian and Sylvia, Tom Paxton and Paul Butterfield and his Blues Band scheduled for Monday.

★ ★ ★

TUESDAY has the Lovin' Spoonful and Jim Kweskin and his Jug Band scheduled, among others.

On Thursday the Lippizaner horses are shown off to the press and then on Friday the New York City Ballet comes in with the first of five performances of George Balanchine's "The Jewels."

DAVID CLATWORTHY — The baritone will perform the Prokofiev "Lt. Kije Suite" at the Tanglewood concert tonight. The Orchestra's other works will be Beethoven's Symphonies No. 4 and 7.

PRELUDE TO PERFORMANCE: Marlcolm Frager, left, appeared with Erich Leinsdorf at the Berkshire Festival Weekend Prelude last night, and will be soloist tomorrow afternoon in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900
JUL 7 1967
New England Newsclip

11

Mozart Will Dominate Second Tanglewood Week

The music of Mozart will highlight the second week of concerts at Tanglewood.

The weekend program will begin this evening at 7 when Evelyne Crochet will present a concert of Mozart's piano music in the Weekend Prelude.

Crochet To Play

At 9, guest conductor Jorge Mester will direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a concert that will include Mozart's 33rd symphony, the Adagio and Fugue, K. 546, and Symphony No. 35. Pianist Claude Frank will be soloist in the K. 466 piano concerto.

On Saturday evening at 8, Miss Crochet will perform the Mozart Piano Concerto, K. 456, with Erich Leinsdorf conducting. The program will also include the March, K. 408, and the Haffner Serenade.

Sunday's concert at 2:30 p.m. will again feature pianist Frank. He will perform the Mozart Piano Concerto, K. 491, conducted by Leinsdorf, who will also direct the BSO in the Divertimento, K. 205, and the Symphony No. 40.

In addition, the regular open rehearsal for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund will be held Saturday at 10 a.m.

Information on all Tanglewood events may be obtained by contacting the Tanglewood Festival ticket office in Lenox.

SUNDAY TELEGRAM
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 107,550
JUL 2 1967
New England Newsclip

July 2, 1967

Works by Mozart Set at Tanglewood

Concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this weekend at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will feature music of Mozart.

Jorge Mester will be guest conductor for the program Friday at 9 p.m. when Claude Frank will be soloist for the "Piano Concerto, K. 546." Also to be heard is "Symphony No. 35."

The Friday Weekend Prelude at 7 p.m. will present Evelyne Crochet in a recital of Mozart's piano music.

Miss Crochet will be the soloist for the concert Saturday at 8 p.m. when Erich Leinsdorf will conduct. The program will include "Piano Concerto, K. 456," "March, K. 408" and "Haffner Serenade."

Leinsdorf also will conduct the program Sunday at 2:30 p.m. when Frank will be soloist in "Piano Concerto, K. 491." Other numbers will be "Divertimento, K. 205" and "Symphony No. 40."

There will be an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Saturday at 10 a.m.

Schenectady Union-Star
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 30,615
JUL 5 1967

Music

Berkshire Festival To Feature Mozart

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

The music of one composer is rarely used to completely dominate a Berkshire Music Festival weekend of concerts at Tanglewood.

Three concerts this weekend, plus Friday night's Weekend Prelude, are all music by Mozart. Years ago, these "smaller orchestra" concerts were given in the 2,500-seat Concert Hall at Tanglewood.

Their popularity has increased to such an extent that they are now performed in the Music Shed with 6,500 seats and an overflow audience extends to the surrounding grounds.

Friday night's preliminary recital, beginning at 7 and free to ticket holders for the regular 9 p.m. concert, is Mozart piano music played by Evelyne Crochet.

Jorge Mester will conduct the Boston Symphony on Friday night in Symphonies Nos. 33 and 35 and Adagio and Fugue, K.546. Claude Frank is soloist in Piano Concerto, K.466.

Saturday night's concert, beginning at 8 p.m., , will feature Miss Crochet in Piano Concerto, K.456. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct March, K.408, and the Haffner Serenade.

Leinsdorf will conduct the orchestra Sunday afternoon (2:30 p.m.) in Divertimento, K.205 and Symphony No. 40. Frank will be soloist in Piano Concerto,K.491.

JACOB'S PILLOW — The second week of the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival at Lee will have matinees on Thursday, Friday and Saturday (July 6, 7 and 8) at 3:00 p.m., and evening performances at 8:40 p.m. on Friday and Saturday.

Soloists from the Manhattan Festival Ballet will be featured. Balance of the program is Norman Walker and Co., with Cora Cahan in "A Passage for Angels," and Rebecca Harris in dances of India, North Africa, Korea and Hawaii.

GRIM PROSPECT — Admonitions to music students who won't practice are common fedder. So are managerial rebukes of temperamental divas in tour and guest conductors who can't get along with orchestras.

The Alpian word of foreboding, however, is contained in an advertisement sponsored by Broadcast Music Inc. There's a copy in the current issue of High Fidelity Magazine that incorporates Musical America.

It's headed, "The Day Music Stopped."

The result is hard to contemplate. Composers have stopped creating. Musicians are silent. No more phonograph records. People no longer sing.

America's economic loss is shattering. Some 5,000 radio stations are without music. Most go off the air. Television programs and commercials are restricted to "straight talk." The juke box is extinct.

Over 13 million children who have been studying music no longer have use for pianos, violins or other instruments. The country's 1,385 symphony orchestras and 782 opera producing groups have gone out of existence.

Most nightclubs, theaters, dance halls and concert halls have closed down. Hundreds of thousands former musicians are out of work. The tax loss is incalculable.

Not to mention the music critics. . .

MERRIWEATHER PRIZES — Knowing what has happened to James Oliver Buswell IV since he won the Merriweather Post Contest in Washington, D.C., five years ago, 17-year-old Eugene Fodor must be elated over his prospects.

Buswell, by the way, will appear on the Worcester Community Concerts program next season.

Young Fodor, a violinist from Golden, Colo., won the 1967 Merriweather Award. It includes a cash prize of $1,500 and an invitation to appear as guest soloist with the National Symphony Orchestra conducted by Howard Mitchell.

Since winning the Merriweather Award, Buswell (now 20) has skyrocketed to fame. He recently received rave notices following a recital at Philharmonic Hall, New York City.

TIDBITS — We doubt if any music critic will ever be invited to attend and review a certain occasional program at Buckingham Palace.

Although it isn't widely circulated information, both Queen Elizabeth and Princess Margaret play the Irish harp and piano. Prince Charles prefers trumpet and cello. Princess Anne is following her mother's example at the keyboard. The youngest member of the family, Prince Andrew, is taking violin lessons.

NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

Albany Knickerbocker News
Saturday, July 1, 1967

Krieger

THE AISLE SEAT

A Saratoga Preview at Tanglewood

By R. E. Krieger

LENOX, Mass. — The Berkshire breeze, dripping with fog, blew through the Music Shed at Tanglewood last night disregarded by the nearly 5,000 bundled and raincoated people who had come to hear violinist Yehudi Menuhin.

The concert marked the opening of the 30th Berkshire Music Festival, now famed throughout the world for the quality of its concerts and for the major musicians who have attended the music school.

★ ★ ★

MR. MENUHIN, scheduled to perform at the Saratoga Center tonight and tomorrow night with the Bath Festival Orchestra, was at his masterful best in Beethoven's only violin concerto, the D Major Op. 61.

YEHUDI MENUHIN — The violinist appeared as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night in its opening concert, in the Beethoven Violin Concerto.

It is a monumental work, in its way, and despite the sogginess of the night air, Mr. Menuhin was magnificent including in his performance the famed, and unbelievable, Kreisler cadenzas.

His tone can only be called voluptuous, if not unworldly, and his technique (as always) was extraordinary.

The audience greeted his performance with a giant crashing of applause punctuated by bravo and a standing ovation.

★ ★ ★

THE CONCERTO was the latter half of the opening with Prokofiev's Fifth Symphony being performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf, looking as svelte as ever, as the season's opener.

Composed during the war years in 1944 it had its premiere in Moscow and Prokofiev viewed it as "a hymn to free and happy Man." In the light of the time it was composed it is compelling in emotion bringing forth the tragedy of war and then the faith in Russia's future.

It was, incidentally, introduced in America by the same orchestra (the Boston Symphony) in 1945 under the direction of the late Serge Koussevitsky.

The work is enormously exciting what with a brace of percussionists all working like mad with some beautifully performed trumpet and trombone work in the second movement.

MR. LEINSDORF has a new podium this year. Between he and the audience there is now a metal rail and the podium is covered with deep-pile red carpeting. It's gorgeous.

As is usual on Friday nights the main concert was preceded beginning at 7 p.m. by works of Prokofiev and Beethoven performed by pianist Malcolm Frager, who appeared with the Albany Symphony last season.

He will perform in concert with the Boston Symphony tomorrow beginning at 2:30 p.m. in Beethoven's Fourth Piano Concerto.

The orchestra will also be heard in scenes from Prokofiev's "Romeo and Juliet" and it will be the first performance in this version at Tanglewood.

★ ★ ★

THIS EVENING, beginning at 8 p.m. baritone David Clatworthy will perform with the orchestra in Prokofiev's orchestra suite, "Lieutenant Kije," the version being the first time given at Tanglewood.

The orchestra will also be heard in Beethoven's Fourth Symphony and Seventh Symphony.

Getting back to Mr. Menuhin for a moment mainly because he is performing at Saratoga tonight (and you'll be sorry if you miss the concert as it holds immense promise).

He made his soloist debut at the age of 7 and since that time has appeared with every major orchestra in the world.

★ ★ ★

AT PRESENT he is the artistic director of two festivals. The first is in Bath, England where he also conducts the orchestra, the same one that you will be hearing tonight at Saratoga.

The other is in Saanen, in the Bernese Oberland of Switzerland.

With Mr. Menuhin at Saratoga will be his sister Hepzibah, a talented concert pianist, and harpsichordist George Malcolm.

Then on Monday and Tuesday the first annual folk festival opens at Saratoga with Theo Bikel, Ian and Sylvia, Tom Paxton and Paul Butterfield and his Blues Band scheduled for Monday.

★ ★ ★

TUESDAY has the Lovin' Spoonful and Jim Kweskin and his Jug Band scheduled, among others.

On Thursday the Lippizaner horses are shown off to the press and then on Friday the New York City Ballet comes in with the first of five performances of George Balanchine's "The Jewels."

LEINSDORF ON STAGE: Erich Leinsdorf, music director of Tanglewood, strides on stage at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer home to open the 31st season of weekend concerts.

DAVID CLATWORTHY — The baritone will perform the Prokofiev "Lt. Kije Suite" at the Tanglewood concert tonight. The Orchestra's other works will be Beethoven's Symphonies No. 4 and 7.

PRELUDE TO PERFORMANCE: Marlcolm Frager, left, appeared with Erich Leinsdorf at the Berkshire Festival Weekend Prelude last night, and will be soloist tomorrow afternoon in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4.

Works by Mozart Set at Tanglewood

Schenectady Union-Star
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 30,615
JUL 5 1967

Concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this weekend at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will feature music of Mozart.

Jorge Mester will be guest conductor for the program Friday at 9 p.m. when Claude Frank will be soloist for the "Piano Concerto, K. 546." Also to be heard is "Symphony No. 35."

The Friday Weekend Prelude at 7 p.m. will present Evelyne Crochet in a recital of Mozart's piano music.

Miss Crochet will be the soloist for the concert Saturday at 8 p.m. when Erich Leinsdorf will conduct. The program will include "Piano Concerto, K. 456," "March, K. 408" and "Haffner Serenade."

Leinsdorf also will conduct the program Sunday at 2:30 p.m. when Frank will be soloist in "Piano Concerto, K. 491." Other numbers will be "Divertimento, K. 205" and "Symphony No. 40."

There will be an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Saturday at 10 a.m.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900
JUL 7 1967
New England Newsclip

11

Mozart Will Dominate Second Tanglewood Week

The music of Mozart will highlight the second week of concerts at Tanglewood.

The weekend program will begin this evening at 7 when Evelyne Crochet will present a concert of Mozart's piano music in the Weekend Prelude.

Crochet To Play

At 9, guest conductor Jorge Mester will direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a concert that will include Mozart's 33rd symphony, the Adagio and Fugue, K. 546, and Symphony No. 35. Pianist Claude Frank will be soloist in the K. 466 piano concerto.

On Saturday evening at 8, Miss Crochet will perform the Mozart Piano Concerto, K. 456, with Erich Leinsdorf conducting. The program will also include the March, K. 408, and the Haffner Serenade.

Sunday's concert at 2:30 p.m. will again feature pianist Frank. He will perform the Mozart Piano Concerto, K. 491, conducted by Leinsdorf, who will also direct the BSO in the Divertimento, K. 205, and the Symphony No. 40.

In addition, the regular open rehearsal for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund will be held Saturday at 10 a.m.

Information on all Tanglewood events may be obtained by contacting the Tanglewood Festival ticket office in Lenox.

SUNDAY TELEGRAM
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 107,560
JUL 2 1967
New England Newsclip

July 2, 1967

Music

Berkshire Festival To Feature Mozart

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

The music of one composer is rarely used to completely dominate a Berkshire Music Festival weekend of concerts at Tanglewood.

Three concerts this weekend, plus Friday night's Weekend Prelude, are all music by Mozart. Years ago, these "smaller orchestra" concerts were given in the 2,500-seat Concert Hall at Tanglewood.

Their popularity has increased to such an extent that they are now performed in the Music Shed with 6,500 seats and an overflow audience extends to the surrounding grounds.

Friday night's preliminary recital, beginning at 7 and free to ticket holders for the regular 9 p.m. concert, is Mozart piano music played by Evelyne Crochet.

Jorge Mester will conduct the Boston Symphony on Friday night in Symphonies Nos. 33 and 35 and Adagio and Fugue, K.546. Claude Frank is soloist in Piano Concerto, K.466.

Saturday night's concert, beginning at 8 p.m. , will feature Miss Crochet in Piano Concerto, K.456. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct March, K.408, and the Haffner Serenade.

Leinsdorf will conduct the orchestra Sunday afternoon (2:30 p.m.) in Divertimento, K.205 and Symphony No. 40. Frank will be soloist in Piano Concerto,K.491.

JACOB'S PILLOW — The second week of the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival at Lee will have matinees on Thursday, Friday and Saturday (July 6, 7 and 8) at 3:00 p.m., and evening performances at 8:40 p.m. on Friday and Saturday.

Soloists from the Manhattan Festival Ballet will be featured. Balance of the program is Norman Walker and Co., with Cora Cahan in "A Passage for Angels," and Rebecca Harris in dances of India, North Africa, Korea and Hawaii.

GRIM PROSPECT — Admonitions to music students who won't practice are common fedder. So are managerial rebukes of temperamental divas in tour and guest conductors who can't get along with orchestras.

The Alpian word of foreboding, however, is contained in an advertisement sponsored by Broadcast Music Inc. There's a copy in the current issue of High Fidelity Magazine that incorporates Musical America.

It's headed, "The Day Music Stopped."

The result is hard to contemplate. Composers have stopped creating. Musicians are silent. No more phonograph records. People no longer sing.

America's economic loss is shattering. Some 5,000 radio stations are without music. Most go off the air. Television programs and commercials are restricted to "straight talk." The juke box is extinct.

Over 13 million children who have been studying music no longer have use for pianos, violins or other instruments. The country's 1,385 symphony orchestras and 782 opera producing groups have gone out of existence.

Most nightclubs, theaters, dance halls and concert halls have closed down. Hundreds of thousands former musicians are out of work. The tax loss is incalculable.

Not to mention the music critics. . .

MERRIWEATHER PRIZES — Knowing what has happened to James Oliver Buswell IV since he won the Merriweather Post Contest in Washington, D.C., five years ago, 17-year-old Eugene Fodor must be elated over his prospects.

Buswell, by the way, will appear on the Worcester Community Concerts program next season.

Young Fodor, a violinist from Golden, Colo., won the 1967 Merriweather Award. It includes a cash prize of $1,500 and an invitation to appear as guest soloist with the National Symphony Orchestra conducted by Howard Mitchell.

Since winning the Merriweather Award, Buswell (now 20) has skyrocketed to fame. He recently received rave notices following a recital at Philharmonic Hall, New York City.

TIDBITS — We doubt if any music critic will ever be invited to attend and review a certain occasional program at Buckingham Palace.

Although it isn't widely circulated information, both Queen Elizabeth and Princess Margaret play the Irish harp and piano. Prince Charles prefers trumpet and cello. Princess Anne is following her mother's example at the keyboard. The youngest member of the family, Prince Andrew, is taking violin lessons.

12

SECOND WEEK - JULY 7, 8 & 9

SUNDAY REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 115,950

JUL 2 1967 New England Newscip

Tanglewood Offers Nine Events For Second Week of Festival

Nine events at Tanglewood are listed on the Berkshire Festival's second week calendar. In addition to the three weekend concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra the second week's program includes the first concert in the Tuesday evening Berkshire Festival Chamber Music series and the first performances by the members of the Berkshire Music Center.

Mozart Music

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts will be devoted to the music of Mozart. Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has invited Jorge Mester to be guest conductor for the 9 p. m. Friday evening concert.

The concert will begin with the Symphony No. 33. Claude Frank will be soloist for the Piano Concerto, K.466; and the concert will conclude with the Adagio and Fugue, D 546, and the Symphony No. 35.

The Friday evening Weekend Prelude at 7 p. m. will feature Evelyne Crochet who will give a recital of Mozart's piano music.

Miss Crochet will also be the soloist for the Saturday evening 8 p. m. program when Erich Leinsdorf conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Mozart Piano Concerto, K. 456. The program will also include the March, K. 408 and the Haffner Serenade.

Sunday Soloist

Sunday afternoon's Sunday Soloist concert 2.30 p. m., the 9th will have Claude Frank as its soloist. He will perform the Mozart Piano Concerto, K. 491, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. Mr. Leinsdorf will also conduct the Divertimento, K. 205 and the Symphony No. 40.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players will give their first concert in the United States following a six week tour of the Soviet Union on Tuesday evening the 4th, 8 p. m. as the first concert in the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music series.

Boston Symphony Chamber Players will give their first concert in this country at Tanglewood on Tuesday at 8 p. m. following a seven week international tour. The Chamber Players were heard in England, the Soviet Union and West Germany. Tuesday's concert at Tanglewood will be the opening program of the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music series.

The Chamber Players, composed of the principal players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will present a second concert in this series on the 25th. Other artists to appear in this series are Phyllis Curtin, soprano, on the 11th; The Zimbler Sinfonietta, on the 18th; Igor Kipnis, harpsichord, and Roman Totenberg, violin, Aug. 2.

Open Rehearsal

The regular Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday at 10 a. m.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to three events at Tanglewood next week. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the first concert of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra on Wednesday evening at 8 p. m. in the Theater.

On Thursday evening at 8 p. m. a concert of Baroque Music will be presented by members of the Center.

There will be four concerts of Baroque Music during the present season (the 6th, 20th, Aug. 3, 16th) under the general direction of Igor Kipnis.

On Sunday morning (the 9th, 10 a. m.) there will be a concert of chamber music by members of the Center. The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are those who make voluntary contributions to aid in reducing the Center's deficit. In addition to providing funds for the Music Center, the Friends also provide an audience for young musicians in keeping with the Center's basic philosophy of training performers through performance.

This afternoon's Boston Symphony Orchestra program at 2.30 p. m. contains music of Prokofiev and Beethoven. Malcolm Frager will be soloist for the Beethoven Piano Concerto No. 4. The balance of the program will be Scenes from Prokofiev's Romeo and Juliet.

The Aisle Seat

Eighty-seven of the administrative and music staff at Tanglewood showed up over the weekend to hear the Yehudi Menuhin concerts at the Saratoga Performing Arts Center. Coals to Newcastle or a reciprocal trade agreement?

★ ★ ★

It's an all Mozart weekend at Tanglewood this Friday, Saturday and Sunday with pianist Claude Frank as principal soloist. Which also reminds us that Lincoln Center, for the second consecutive year will present a Mozart Festival at Philharmonic Hall during the month of August.

★ ★ ★

Is it true that one of the areas' more aggressive and fearless acting groups, the Galaxy Players, is folding? The reason given is no money and no men.

★ ★ ★

Rod Steiger's dream, we learn from an informant, is to do poetry readings with his wife, Claire Bloom.

stars

Beatrice Straight, star of the highly acclaimed "Phedre" in New York and London last year, will be playing Blanche DuBois in "A Streetcar Named Desire," the next production at the Berkshire Theater Festival beginning on July 11. It will be her first crack at the role. Miss Straight is the winner of a "Tony" award for best actress in "The Crucible."

★ ★ ★

The Capital Area Modern Dance Council will hold a special series of modern dance classes, to be taught by New York choreographer and dancer Paul Sanasardo, July 24-28 at Old Chapel, Union College. For information contact Pat Peterson, RD 3, Ballston Spa.

stars

The Berkshire Music Barn at Lenox, Mass., opens its 13th season Saturday and Sunday with Indian musician Ravi Shankar and folk singer Judy Collins.

R.E.K.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

Albany Knickerbocker News
Wednesday, July 5, 1967

HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE (e)
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
CIRC. 14,250

JUL 11 1967 New England Newscip

All Mozart Weekend At Tanglewood

Music of Mozart highlighted all three of the second weekend's concerts in the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, with two piano soloists featured at each, Evelyne Crochet and Claude Frank.

Friday evening's program at 9:00 was preceded by the usual now-established Bonus Prelude recital, at 7:00 in the Big Shed, performed by Miss Crochet. We heard only part, missing the Fantasy in C minor, K475 and the first movement of Mozart's Dmajor Sonata, K. 311, the latter a subject of debate by musicologists as to whether the composer had his musician friend Cannabich's daughter in mind when he wrote it.

The Andante is a tender movement, and Miss Crochet made it so, but we were disappointed in the third movement and the following Aminor Sonata, finding little style or flavor in either. Again, Miss Crochet's forte seemed to be in the slower movement, much more dramatic than the Dmajor, but even here the nuances were not pronounced, and the pianist herself seemed unhappy about the sounds being produced. Her technique is ample and all-encompassing, but her touch much of the time lacked a certain gentility and responsiveness to dynamic changes.

An award winner in Geneva and Moscow's Tschaikowsky Competition, Miss Crochet has been heard in Boston, with and without the orchestra, last winter playing Mozart's B-flat major Concerto, K. 456, with the BSO in Providence, New York and Boston, and she also performed Saturday evening at the Festival, to repeated applause under Erich Leinsdorf's direction. This concert began with March No. 3 in Cmajor, K408 and ended with the "Haffner" Serendae in Dmajor, K. 250, Joseph Silverstein concertmaster playing the solo violin, with his dependable virtuosity and achingly swet tone, receiving thunderous acclaim after the brilliant Rondo section.

Guest conductor for Friday's concert was the youthful Jorge Mester, newly appointed to the Louisville Symphony Orchestra. Born in Mexico City of Hungarian parents, Mr. Mester's musical sensitivity was apparent after the first few phrases had been struck by an orchestra that received and responded to his directions with warmth and unswerving attention.

The program opened with Mozart's B flat Symphony, No. 33 K. 319, composed in 1779 in Salzburg, intentionally not demanding for its players, light and happy, with a preponderance of turns and grace notes. Mr. Mester carves phrases with great plasticity, using his left hand almost entirely, after a suggestion of pulse with his right. He knows the BSO musicians will carry on without specifics for each section and directed most of his attention to the violins, with the most felicitous results. seconds and firsts sounding like one perfect instrument, the titillating rhythms when called for, exactly that every nuance and dynamic exploited with the greatest care ranging from delicate grace to crisp strength. It was an excellent introduction for this talented young conductor's first Tanglewood concert.

Mozart's Piano Concerto No 20 in D Minor, K466, brought together the always empathic artistry of Claude Frank with the reciprocal sensitivity of Jorge Mester, both strongly individual but in their approach to music having the same intense probing of the composer's deepest meanings. Mester didn't have to look at Frank; exchange was tacit but electric. Frank played through the orchestra to the audience, keeping closely attuned with intermittent shadow play over the keys, flowing into each statement without a breath. It was a splendidly achieved reading by all concerned, as the listeners were quick to acknowledge. Throughout the concert, Mester did not acknowledge applause without the orchestra, except for this work when he allowed the soloist to take first place.

Ater intermission, young Mester conducted Mozart's excellently conceived Adagio and Fugue in C minor for Strings, K. 546, definitely Bach-ish in the fullness of the Fugue, which was a bit hurried in tempo but nonetheless clearly presented. We almost didn't stay for the final "Haffner" Symphony in D major, No. 35, K. 385, but were delighted we did. The first movement, whose phrases are heard through the others, was played without repeats, the whole work given its proper stature.

Sunday's concert directed by Erich Leinsdorf, started with the Divertimento in D major, K. 205, composed in 1773, full of the most delightful musical surprises, with Joseph Silverstein again in virtuoso solo, and with Burton Fine, principal viola, in a gentle duo with lightly touched bass accompaniment. Claude Frank again charmed with the C minor Concerto, K. 491. Mr. Leninsdorf in understanding accord with the orchestra and soloist. The great G minor Symphony was played with all its inherent incisiveness, and moving beauty, as directed by Mr Leinsdorf and submitted by his quite incomparable musicians.

M. deB.B.

BERKSHIRE COURIER
GT. BARRINGTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,400

JUL 13 1967 New England Newscip

Mozart Featured At Tanglewood This Weekend

LENOX – This weekend the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts will be devoted to the music of Mozart. Jorge Mester will be guest conductor Friday evening at 9. The concert will begin with the Symphony No. 33. Claude Frank will be soloist for the Piano Concerto, K.466; and the concert will conclude with the Adagio and Fugue, K. 546, and the Symphony No. 35.

The Friday evening weekend prelude at 7 will feature Evelyne Crochet giving a recital of Mozart's piano music.

Miss Crochet will also be the soloist Saturday evening at 8 in the Mozart Piano Concerto, K. 456. The program will also include the March, K. 408 and the Haffner Serenade.

Sunday afternoon at 2:30 Claude Frank will soloist perform the Mozart Piano Concerto, K. 491, with the BSO. Leinsdorf will also conduct the Divertimento, K. 205 and the Symphony No. 40.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players will give their first concert in the United States following a six-week tour of the Soviet Union on Tuesday evening as the first concert in the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music series. The Chamber Players, composed of the principal players of the BSO, will present a second concert in this series on July 25. Other artists to appear in this series are Phyllis Curtin, soprano, July 11; The Zimbler Sinfonietta, July 18; Igor Kipnis, harpischord, and Roman Totenberg, violin, August 2.

12

SECOND WEEK - JULY 7, 8 & 9

Tanglewood Offers Nine Events For Second Week of Festival

Nine events at Tanglewood are listed on the Berkshire Festival's second week calendar. In addition to the three weekend concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra the second week's program includes the first concert in the Tuesday evening Berkshire Festival Chamber Music series and the first performances by the members of the Berkshire Music Center.

Mozart Music

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts will be devoted to the music of Mozart. Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has invited Jorge Mester to be guest conductor for the 9 p. m. Friday evening concert.

The concert will begin with the Symphony No. 33. Claude Frank will be soloist for the Piano Concerto, K.466; and the concert will conclude with the Adagio and Fugue, D 546, and the Symphony No. 35.

The Friday evening Weekend Prelude at 7 p. m. will feature Evelyne Crochet who will give a recital of Mozart's piano music.

Miss Crochet will also be the soloist for the Saturday evening 8 p. m. program when Erich Leinsdorf conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Mozart Piano Concerto, K. 456. The program will also include the March, K. 408 and the Haffner Serenade.

Sunday Soloist

Sunday afternoon's Sunday Soloist concert 2.30 p. m., the 9th will have Claude Frank as its soloist. He will perform the Mozart Piano Concerto, K. 491, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. Mr. Leinsdorf will also conduct the Divertimento, K. 205 and the Symphony No. 40.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players will give their first concert in the United States following a six week tour of the Soviet Union on Tuesday evening the 4th, 8 p. m. as the first concert in the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music series.

Boston Symphony Chamber Players will give their first concert in this country at Tanglewood on Tuesday at 8 p. m. following a seven week international tour. The Chamber Players were heard in England, the Soviet Union and West Germany. Tuesday's concert at Tanglewood will be the opening program of the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music series.

The Chamber Players, composed of the principal players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will present a second concert in this series on the 25th. Other artists to appear in this series are Phyllis Curtin, soprano, on the 11th; The Zimbler Sinfonietta, on the 18th; Igor Kipnis, harpsichord, and Roman Totenberg, violin, Aug. 2.

Open Rehearsal

The regular Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday at 10 a. m.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to three events at Tanglewood next week. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the first concert of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra on Wednesday evening at 8 p. m. in the Theater.

On Thursday evening at 8 p. m. a concert of Baroque Music will be presented by members of the Center.

There will be four concerts of Baroque Music during the present season (the 6th, 20th, Aug. 3, 16th) under the general direction of Igor Kipnis.

On Sunday morning (the 9th, 10 a. m.) there will be a concert of chamber music by members of the Center. The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are those who make voluntary contributions to aid in reducing the Center's deficit. In addition to providing funds for the Music Center, the Friends also provide an audience for young musicians in keeping with the Center's basic philosophy of training performers through performance.

This afternoon's Boston Symphony Orchestra program at 2.30 p. m. contains music of Prokofiev and Beethoven. Malcolm Frager will be soloist for the Beethoven Piano Concerto No. 4. The balance of the program will be Scenes from Prokofiev's Romeo and Juliet.

The Aisle Seat

Eighty-seven of the administrative and music staff at Tanglewood showed up over the weekend to hear the Yehudi Menuhin concerts at the Saratoga Performing Arts Center. Coals to Newcastle or a reciprocal trade agreement?

★ ★ ★

It's an all Mozart weekend at Tanglewood this Friday, Saturday and Sunday with pianist Claude Frank as principal soloist. Which also reminds us that Lincoln Center, for the second consecutive year will present a Mozart Festival at Philharmonic Hall during the month of August.

★ ★ ★

Is it true that one of the areas' more aggressive and fearless acting groups, the Galaxy Players, is folding? The reason given is no money and no men.

★ ★ ★

Rod Steiger's dream, we learn from an informant, is to do poetry readings with his wife, Claire Bloom.

stars

Beatrice Straight, star of the highly acclaimed "Phedre" in New York and London last year, will be playing Blanche DuBois in "A Streetcar Named Desire," the next production at the Berkshire Theater Festival beginning on July 11. It will be her first crack at the role. Miss Straight is the winner of a "Tony" award for best actress in "The Crucible."

★ ★ ★

The Capital Area Modern Dance Council will hold a special series of modern dance classes, to be taught by New York choreographer and dancer Paul Sanasardo, July 24-28 at Old Chapel, Union College. For information contact Pat Peterson, RD 3, Ballston Spa.

stars

The Berkshire Music Barn at Lenox, Mass., opens its 13th season Saturday and Sunday with Indian musician Ravi Shankar and folk singer Judy Collins.

R.E.K.

HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE (e)
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
CIRC. 14,250
JUL 11 1967
New England Newsclip

All Mozart Weekend At Tanglewood

Music of Mozart highlighted all three of the second weekend's concerts in the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, with two piano soloists featured at each, Evelyne Crochet and Claude Frank.

Friday evening's program at 9:00 was preceded by the usual now-established Bonus Prelude recital, at 7:00 in the Big Shed, performed by Miss Crochet. We heard only part, missing the Fantasy in C minor, K475 and the first movement of Mozart's Dmajor Sonata, K. 311, the latter a subject of debate by musicologists as to whether the composer had his musician friend Cannabich's daughter in mind when he wrote it.

The Andante is a tender movement, and Miss Crochet made it so, but we were disappointed in the third movement and the following Aminor Sonata, finding little style or flavor in either. Again, Miss Crochet's forte seemed to be in the slower movement, much more dramatic than the Dmajor, but even here the nuances were not pronounced, and the pianist herself seemed unhappy about the sounds being produced. Her technique is ample and all-encompassing, but her touch much of the time lacked a certain gentility and responsiveness to dynamic changes.

An award winner in Geneva and Moscow's Tschaikowsky Competition, Miss Crochet has been heard in Boston, with and without the orchestra, last winter playing Mozart's B-flat major Concerto, K. 456, with the BSO in Providence, New York and Boston, and she also performed Saturday evening at the Festival, to repeated applause, under Erich Leinsdorf's direction. This concert began with March No. 3 in Cmajor, K408 and ended with the "Haffner" Serendae in Dmajor, K. 250, Joseph Silverstein concertmaster playing the solo violin, with his dependable virtuosity and achingly swet tone, receiving thunderous acclaim after the brilliant Rondo section.

Guest conductor for Friday's concert was the youthful Jorge Mester, newly appointed to the Louisville Symphony Orchestra. Born in Mexico City of Hungarian parents, Mr. Mester's musical sensitivity was apparent after the first few phrases had been struck by an orchestra that received and responded to his directions with warmth and unswerving attention.

The program opened with Mozart's B flat Symphony, No. 33 K. 319, composed in 1779 in Salzburg, intentionally not demanding for its players, light and happy, with a preponderance of turns and grace notes. Mr. Mester carves phrases with great plasticity, using his left hand almost entirely, after a suggestion of pulse with his right. He knows the BSO musicians will carry on without specifics for each section and directed most of his attention to the violins, with the most felicitous results. seconds and firsts sounding like one perfect instrument, the titillating rhythms when called for, exactly that every nuance and dynamic exploited with the greatest care ranging from delicate grace to crisp strength. It was an excellent introduction for this talented young conductor's first Tanglewood concert.

Mozart's Piano Concerto No 20 in D Minor, K466, brought together the always empathic artistry of Claude Frank with the reciprocal sensitivity of Jorge Mester, both strongly individual but in their approach to music having the same intense probing of the composer's deepest meanings. Mester didn't have to look at Frank: exchange was tacit but electric! Frank played through the orchestra to the audience, keeping closely attuned with intermittent shadow play over the keys, flowing into each statement without a breath. It was a splendidly achieved reading by all concerned, as the listeners were quick to acknowledge. Throughout the concert, Mester did not acknowledge applause without the orchestra, except for this work when he allowed the soloist to take first place.

Ater intermission, young Mester conducted Mozart's excellently conceived Adagio and Fugue in C minor for Strings, K. 546, definitely Bach-ish in the fullness of the Fugue, which was a bit hurried in tempo but nonetheless clearly presented. We almost didn't stay for the final "Haffner" Symphony in D major, No. 35, K. 385, but were delighted we did. The first movement, whose phrases are heard through the others, was played without repeats, the whole work given its proper stature.

Sunday's concert directed by Erich Leinsdorf, started with the Divertimento in D major, K. 205, composed in 1773, full of the most delightful musical surprises, with Joseph Silverstein again in virtuoso solo, and with Burton Fine, principal viola, in a gentle duo with lightly touched bass accompaniment. Claude Frank again charmed with the C minor Concerto, K. 491. Mr. Leninsdorf in understanding accord with the orchestra and soloist. The great G minor Symphony was played with all its inherent incisiveness, and moving beauty, as directed by Mr Leinsdorf and submitted by his quite incomparable musicians.

M. deB.B.

BERKSHIRE COURIER
GT. BARRINGTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,400
JUL 13 1967
New England Newsclip

Mozart Featured At Tanglewood This Weekend

LENOX – This weekend the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts will be devoted to the music of Mozart. Jorge Mester will be guest conductor Friday evening at 9. The concert will begin with the Symphony No. 33. Claude Frank will be soloist for the Piano Concerto, K.466; and the concert will conclude with the Adagio and Fugue, K. 546, and the Symphony No. 35.

The Friday evening weekend prelude at 7 will feature Evelyne Crochet giving a recital of Mozart's piano music.

Miss Crochet will also be the soloist Saturday evening at 8 in the Mozart Piano Concerto, K. 456. The program will also include the March, K. 408 and the Haffner Serenade.

Sunday afternoon at 2:30 Claude Frank will soloist perform the Mozart Piano Concerto, K. 491, with the BSO. Leinsdorf will also conduct the Divertimento, K. 205 and the Symphony No. 40.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players will give their first concert in the United States following a six-week tour of the Soviet Union on Tuesday evening as the first concert in the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music series. The Chamber Players, composed of the principal players of the BSO, will present a second concert in this series on July 25. Other artists to appear in this series are Phyllis Curtin, soprano, July 11; The Zimbler Sinfonietta, July 18; Igor Kipnis, harpischord, and Roman Totenberg, violin, August 2.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
Albany Knickerbocker News
Wednesday, July 5, 1967

SUNDAY TELEGRAM
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 107,550
JUL 9 1967 New England Newsclip

Mexican Conductor Mester Makes Tanglewood Debut

LENOX — The tuneful, precisely designed music of Mozart has been holding forth at Tanglewood this weekend.

Acoustical panels are installed on the Music Shed stage to make a compact area for the 50 players, about half of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mexican conductor Jorge Mester led the orchestra in the opening concert of the Berkshire Music Festival's second weekend on Friday night.

It was a Boston Symphony debut for the personable young director. Mester has attracted widespread attention by conducting buffoon concerts and recordings of music attributed to the imaginative and satiric "P.D.Q. Bach."

CLAUDE FRANK

'Rave' Applause

Friday night's highly successful debut and his approaching post as the Louisville Symphony's regular conductor counteract any idea that Mester is not to be taken seriously.

Soloist with the orchestra was Claude Frank in Piano Concerto in D minor, No. 20.

Orchestral program was Symphony No. 33, in B flat major; Adagio and Fugue for Strings; Symphony No. 35, in D major, "Haffner," .385.

If we were reviewing applause, Frank's reception after the concerto would compel a "rave."

Fine Passagework

In most respects, his performance was sensitive in tone and animated with elan. Mester and the orchestra gave Frank tailored musianship to suit his style and fully expose his fluent passagework.

Frank's Mozart was by no means fragile. The two cadenzas and most of the last movement indulged in a bravura style that was quite out of keeping with the rest.

The young pianist has a collection of irrelevant mannerisms that either look picturesque or ridiculous. The accelerated speed set by the pianist for the finale didn't faze the orchestra. The conductor saw to it that it ended in a tie.

Spirited Dance

Mester is a sensibly energetic conductor. He instigates mood and style, and doesn't merely reflect them from the orchestra. He has efficiency and a sound knowledge of detail.

Symphony No. 33 was in the best "sing-song" Mozart tradition. Tempos were astutely selected to keep the two allegro movements vivacious and the slow one emotional. The minuet was in the style of a light, spirited dance.

The orchestra gave it a dutifully precise performance, rather than meaningful.

Rich intonation was heard in the adagio, (especially in low strings), and the accompanying fugue was expertly engineered and disciplined.

The "Haffner" was the better played of the two symphonies. It was vigorous, well-marked with contrasts and polished filigree. Tonal porcelain was produced in the slow movement. The minuet was aristocratic with grace and dignity, and the rondo brought the concert to a sparkling close.

Fantasy in C

Friday night's "Weekend Prelude" was Mozart piano music played by the Parisian Evelyn Crochet. Her program was Fantasy in C minor; Sonata in D major; Sonata in A minor.

Miss Crochet's technical equipment was equal to her highly developed sense of muscianship.

As shown in the fantasy, Miss Crochet has a mind of her own and the courage to stick by her convictions. The work was heavily engraved with romantic traits.

But Miss Crochet was a marvel at distinguishing between the carefree mood of the D major sonata and the stern indignation that pervades the one in A minor.

R.M.

At Tanglewood

Boston Symphony's Weekend Features Mozart Programs

By R. E. Krieger

LENOX, Mass. — It's all Mozart this weekend at Tanglewood, the initial concert last night featuring pianist Claude Frank in a superb performance of Mozart's Piano Concerto in D Minor, No. 20, K.466.

Krieger

Written by Mozart in 1785 it is one of his most emotional works and Frank, certainly one of the very best pianists that we know of, measured up to the demands admirably.

His coloration, his technique, his emotional concepts were at all times sparkling and immensely valid.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra last night was under the direction of 32-year-old Jorge Mester, the newly appointed conductor of the Louisville Symphony and he, too, was admirable in all respects.

★ ★ ★

THE EVENING opened with the Symphony No. 33 and it was immediately evident that not only was Mr. Mester enjoying himself immensely but that he held a remarnably fluid control over the orchestra.

Three encores greeted him after this work and set the evening's emotion for the ensuing piano concerto with Frank.

Frank, a familiar figure a Tanglewood, has performed with all the major orchestras. . . the New York, Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago, Detroit, Denver, and orchestras all throughout Europe.

We feel that he is on the threshhold of international reknown. He is so well thought of by Erich Leinsdorf that it was his piano playing you heard during the television story of Beethoven's life done last year with Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony.

★ ★ ★

AFTER HIS playing of the concerto last night he and Mester were called back again for five curtain calls and even then the applause splattered on.

After intermission it was the Adagio and Fugue for Strings, a splendid lead-in to the Symphony No. 35 in D Major, commonly known as The "Haffner"

It was written, on order, for a soiree at the home of Burgomaster Sigmund Haffner of Salzburg, hence the name. It shouldn't be confused with the "Haffner Serenade."

It was beautifully done last night especially the final movement that whirls along leaving one breathless at the conclusion.

★ ★ ★

THIS evening beginning at 8:30 p. m. Evelyne Crochet is piano soloist in the Piano Concerto No. 18 and that's also when you'll be able to hear the Haffner Serenade that we mentioned above with concertmaster Joseph Silverstein as soloist.

Tomorrow at 2:30 p.m. Mr. Frank returns again as soloist in the Piano Concerto No. 24 and the symphony work will be the No. 40 in G Minor.

Both tonight's and tomorrow's concerts will be conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

Of special note is the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music Series which will feature soprano Phyllis Curtin at 8 p.m. Tuesday and then next Saturday a concert that many have been looking forward to . . . the Bach B Minor Mass.

PHYLLIS CURTIN—The operatic soprano will be featured Tuesday at the 8 p.m. Chamber Music Concert at Tanglewood. The first half of the all-French program will consist of song-settings for six poems of Verlaine, done by Debussy and Faure. Faure's "Chanson d'Eve" will comprise the second half of the program.

CLAUDE FRANK—The pianist is solo performer with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood in an all-Mozart program tomorrow afternoon.

ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
Albany Knickerbocker News
Saturday, July 8, 1967

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900
JUL 8 1967 New England Newsclip

Mozart Program Opens Festival's Second Week

The concert at Tanglewood last night was the first of the Berkshire Festival second weekend. All three programs are to be devoted solely to Mozart, a plan devised by Serge Koussevitzky at the 1944 Berkshire Festival which has become a tradition upheld by all the subsequent music directors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Last night's concert also marked the Tanglewood debut of a young guest conductor, the first of this season, Jorge Mester. There were two symphonies, No. 33 (K319) in B Flat Major and No. 35 (K385) in D Major. The strings alone played the Adagio and Fugue (K546) written originally for string quartet but which is so demanding and expansive that it benefits enormously from the added weight of the fortified voices.

The piano concerto No. 20 (K466) was played by Claude Frank who will also be heard in another of the Mozart concertos Sunday afternoon. Mlle. Evelyne Crochet will be the soloist Saturday evening in the piano concerto No. 18 (K456).

Fewer Strings

Mozart wrote for what today would be considered little more than a chamber orchestra and so the full complement of strings is neither required nor utilized in this weekend's programs. Furthermore, Mozart wrote for few wind instruments in his symphonies, a fact made more conspicuous when a symphony of his is placed adjacent to a symphony of the later half of the 19th century. For instance in last night's symphony in B flat he wrote for only two oboes, two bassoons and two horns, in addition to the strings, of course. And in the D major these same winds are used but there are also parts for two trumpets and kettledrums.

There can be no more noticeable facet of the change and progress in music between Mozart's day and that of recent years than to note what personnel is required to play, as last week, for example Prokofieff, or Mahler and Strauss. But mere multiplication of forces still does not deprive Mozart of his unique appeal.

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,100
JUL 10 1967 New England Newsclip

Tanglewood's Mozart Weekend

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Music Critic

LENOX—The past weekend at Tanglewood was devoted to Mozart, with Jorge Mester and Erich Leinsdorf conducting the Boston Symphony, and Claude Frank and Evelyne Crochet as piano soloists.

Frank, sensitive and intelligent, was at his best in the D minor Concerto. K.466, on Friday night. There was much to admire also in his playing of the C minor Concerto K.491, on Sunday afternoon, but orchestra and piano were so far separated in pitch that the performance became a torment to listen to. It should, in fact, have been stopped for general tuning after the piano's first entrance, and I'm sorry that soloist and conductor, neither of them deaf, thought more of decorum than of Mozart, and went ahead with their sour travesty.

Mester, who has been active in New York as string player and conductor, and who takes over the Louisville Symphony this Fall, is a musical and vivacious conductor. His interpretations of the Symphonies No. 33 in B Flat and No. 35 in D, "Haffner," had appealing energy, warm phrasing of the lyric melody, a few tricks, and rather a heavy sound. He is a melody line conductor, devoted to the first violins no matter what they are doing. His impulses, unsupported by a striking interpretative intelligence, produced pleasant, if hardly exhaustive, performances of the two symphonies, and at least a gratifyingly alert framework for the D minor Concerto.

There was, however, neither the intellectual nor the technical equipment to make even the beginning of sense out of the great Adagio and Fugue in C minor for strings, K.546.

In the tensionless style that seems to me so perverse an approach to Mozart, Leinsdorf got the orchestra to do some elegantly finished playing in the charming D major Divertimento, K. 205, and in the G minor Symphony, K. 550. The orchestra's contribution to the C minor Concerto was not only out of tune, but mainly broken bridges and misgaged tempi and rhythms.

TIMES (e)
HARTFORD, CONN.
CIRC. 133,800
JUL 7 1967 New England Newsclip

THE HARTFORD TIMES, Friday, July 7, 1967

Jorge Mester Guest Conductor at Tanglewood

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts at Tanglewood this weekend will be devoted to music of Mozart.

Erich Leinsdorf, music director has invited Jorge Mester to be guest conductor tonight at 9

Claude Frank will be soloist for the Piani Concerto, K.466; and the concert will conclude with the Adagio and Fugue, K. 546, and the Symphony No. 35. In the Weekend Prelude tonight at 7 p.m. Evelyne Crochet will give a Mozart piano recital.

Miss Crochet will be soloist Saturday at 8 p.m. when Erich Leinsdorf conducts the Mozart Piano Concerto, K. 456.

The program will include the March, K. 408 and the Haffner Serenade.

Sunday's 2:30 p.m. concert will have Claude Frank soloist

74

Syracuse Herald Journal July 10 '67

Throng enjoys Mozart and sun at Berkshire

..By GEORGE LEIDAL..

LENOX, Mass.—Wriggling their toes in the Tanglewood turf yesterday, thousands swarming to the Berkshire Music Festival soaked up Mozart and sun.

Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra offered the second of eight Sunday afternoon concerts under the Tanglewood Shed—an all Mozart program.

A pianist familiar to Syracusans, after his appearance here last season with the Syracuse Symphony, delighted the summer music fans.

An ebullient Claude Frank breezed through Mozart's "Piano Concerto No. 24 in C minor."

Leinsdorf faced a few moments when the orchestra overshadowed a flute in dialogue with the solo piano but managed to balance the three elements within moments.

Under the shed, the Berkshire humidity neared the uncomfortable stage and many forsook their $6.50 seats for the latter half of the program—Mozart's "Symphony No. 40 in G minor."

Shoes came off, blankets were spread on the plush bluegrass grounds around the shed and hundreds stretched out in outdoor living room comfort.

Not a sound disturbed the outdoor listeners. All maintained silence, allowing the acoustics of the shed to project the symphonic sounds to suntanning souls.

Intermission conversations overheard frequently centered on comparisons between the Saratoga Performing Arts Center (SPAC) and Tanglewood.

The two areas—about one hour apart by car—are not bitter competitiors since SPAC offers ballet now, and Tanglewood the Boston Symphony as it has since 1936.

When the Philadelphia Orchestra encamps by Saratoga's bubbling waters, it will be the atmosphere that differentiates the cultural offerings since both orchestras offer high level programs.

"We're established at Tanglewood," Sandy Sistare, press officer for the Berkshire Festival, says, "People relax here and are comfortable."

One scanning of the lawns during a Tanglewood concert is prrof that people relax here.

Dress ranges from yachting elegance to boaggy bermudas for men and summer haute couture to culottes for women.

Next weekend, Syracusans have reserved scores of places under the shed and on the lawns for the Bach "B minor Mass" feaguring soprano Helen Boatwright and slated for Saturday evening.

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30 p.m. the Syracuse soprano is also featured on an all Bach program in the shed.

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 26,000
JUL 6 1967
New England Newsclip

Mozart Weekend At Tanglewood

Nine events at Tanglewood are listed on the Berkshire Festival's second week calendar.

CLAUDE FRANK

EVELYN CROCHET

In addition to the three weekend concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra the second week's program includes the first concert in the Tuesday evening Berkshire Festival Chamber Music series and the first performances by the members of the Berkshire Music Center.

The Boston Symphony concerts will be devoted to the music of Mozart. Erich Leinsdorf, music director, has invited Jorge Mester to be guest conductor for the Friday evening (July 7, 9 p.m.) concert. The concert will begin with Symphony No. 33. Claude Frank will be soloist for the Piano Concerto, K. 466 and the concert will conclude with Adagio and Fugue, K. 546 and Symphony No. 35.

The Friday evening Weekend Prelude (July 7, 7 p.m.) will feature Evelyne Crochet in a recital of Mozart's piano music.

Miss Crochet will also be the soloist Saturday evening (July 8, 8 p.m.) when Mr. Leinsdorf conducts the orchestra in the Mozart Piano Concerto, K. 456. Program will also include the March, K. 408 and the Haffner Serenade.

Sunday afternoon's (July 9, 2:30 p.m.) concert will have Claude Frank as soloist in the Mozart Piano Concerto, K. 491, with Mr. Leinsdorf conducting. Program also includes the Divertimento, K. 205 and the Symphony No. 40.

Information on all Tanglewood events may be obtained by writing Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240. (Telephone: (413) 637-1600.)

NEWS (e)
FRAMINGHAM, MASS.
CIRC. 15,900
JUL 6 1967
New England Newsc

FEATURED — Evelyne Crochet will give a recital of Mozart's piano music at 7 o'clock Friday evening at the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox. She will also be the soloist for the Saturday evening concert at 8 o'clock when Erich Leinsdorf conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Mozart Piano Concerto, K. 456.

Fine Program Ends Mozart Weekend at Tanglewood

By ROBERT J. BARBER

Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra brought a weekend of Mozart to a rousing climax Sunday afternoon at Tanglewood.

Starting with the gentle divertimento in D major; inserting the piano concerto No. 24 in C minor with the remarkable Claude Frank as soloist, and then ending the program with the exciting symphony No. 40 in G minor, Leinsdorf carried the huge audience with him through the emotional symphonic crescendo.

The G minor symphony is cast as plainly as any symphony of Mozart in a pervasive mood and style. It is strongly incisive music which attains its strength by deftness and concentration instead of by massive means. And that's the way Leinsdorf brought it out.

Frank performed the concerto with a perfection few could reach in a work generally considered to be Mozart's most independent, challenging, and prodigious in this form.

Frank Lauded

If Mozart could be said ever to have ignored his public in a concerto and followed his own inner promptings, it was here.

But Frank easily met the challenge. His playing was a triumph and he was called back for bows time and time again.

It was a weekend of Mozart but it was also a weekend of Claude Frank.

Friday night's program also featured Frank in a superb rendition of Mozart's Piano Concerto in D Minor, No. 20 K. 466.

Frank, at the age of 41, is rapidly becoming an international figure in the world of music and his performance of the difficult concerto proves why.

He has great technique but more than that he has the feel of the music and projects it to the audience and to the orchestra.

Well known in Albany as well as Tanglewood, Frank has performed with practically every major orchestra in the United States.

Friday's Program

The Friday night program was under the baton of guest conductor Jorge Mester, his first appearance with the Boston Symphony, but hopefully not his last.

The youthful 32-year-old conductor led the famous orchestra with enhtusiasm and sensitivity, wearing a delighted smile both while conducting and while taking the many bows the sparsely populated theater demanded.

Besides the concerto, Mester conducted the orchestra in Mozart's Symphony No. 33 in B Flat Major, K. 319; Adagio and Fugue for Strings, K. 546 and Symphony No. 35 in D Major, ("Haffner") K. 385.

Saturday evening, Leinsdorf took charge of the orchestra, opening with Mozart's March No. 3 in C Major, K. 408: Piano Concerto No. 18 in B Flat, K. 456 with Evelyne Crochet as soloist; and Serenade in D Major ("Haffner") K. 250, with the violin solo by Joseph Silverstein.

Miss Crochet was her usual magnificent self in rendering the concerto under familiar circumstances. She played it last winter with the Boston Symphony in Boston, Providence and New York. She has also appeared at the Berkshire Music Festival previously.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 SUN. 122,607
JUL 10 1967

NEWS (e)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 98,600
JUL 10 1967
New England Newsclip

Mozart at Tanglewood

A Rich, Full Experience

By ARTHUR T. ANDREWES

Sunday afternoon concerts at Tanglewood's Berkshire Music Festival are always a delight. This particular Sunday, conductor Erich Leinsdorf, pianist Claude Frank, and composer Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart combined talents to make the occasion more than delightful. It was a rich, full experience.

The audience was prepared by the performance of Mozart's "Divertimento in D major." This work uses a combination of orchestral strings and just two horns. As out of balance as this mixture might seem, numerically, Mozart uses the instrumentation to surprising ends.

The major work of the day was "Piano Concerto in C minor" featuring piano soloist, Claude Frank. His treatment of the Austrian composer's work lacks nothing. When there was need for delicacy, a tenderness prevailed; when there was a necessity for strength, it was formidable.

The best way to enjoy Frank's playing is by joining those who can hear him well but cannot see him. Many times his almost contrived, flamboyant arm and body movements will deceive one into thinking the entire performance is mechanical and planned.

However, this feeling quickly slips away in the face of the magnificent treatment of the concerto, a form that Mozart made popular. For all of the quality established by the composer, the brilliance and clarity of Claude Frank's own cadenzas reemphasize his position as one of the world's greatest pianists.

"Symphony in G minor," the final selection of the program, is a powerful piece of music. While there is a strong spiritual influence, the emotional impact of this symphony is undeniable. The haunting turmoil and passionate declarations found in the notes and measures of this score make its music far more memorable than its title.

It would be a surprise to most of the Tanglewood patrons, from those under the protective roof of the music shed to those great numbers lying on the lawns, if the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the dynamic sensitivity of Erich Leinsdorf, was not perfect.

It is not impossible for this great aggregation to err, but it would seem highly unlikely. It is an organization soundly supported by both finance and administrative organization. Unlike the Springfield Symphony Orchestra, there is no need for the artist to beg for funds enough to stay alive.

Vivaldi and Bach will be featured next week end at Tanglewood.

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350
JUL 10 1967
New England Newsclip

At Tanglewood

Strong Mozart Concert Intellectually Satisfying

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — Erich Leinsdorf, Claude Frank and the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave 5126 listeners a strong Mozart program Sunday afternoon at Tanglewood.

Gentle Adagio

The two major works on the program contain more substance than one usually expects in Mozart's instrumental music. They were the Piano Concerto No. 24 in C Minor, K. 491, with Frank as soloist, and Symphony No. 40 in G Minor, K. 550.

Even the Divertimento D. Major, K. 205, which opened the program has a finale with a measure of tension and drama . . . a somewhat surprising ingredient for party music.

The best of the Divertimento Sunday, perhaps, was the gentle, lyrical adagio, the middle movement of five. It was a velvety beauty.

Beethovenesque

The strength of the afternoon, however, lay in the concerto and the symphony, both works with serious, dark, ominous elements and Beethovenesque touches.

Claude Frank, the pianist for the concerto, has a somewhat distracting tendency to move about on his chair, but I have never heard him play Mozart's music less than superlatively.

He has what may be an instinctive understanding of the volumes, note lengths and subtle rhythmical variations that sound exactly right for Mozart.

Powdered Wig

The K. 491 concerto is perhaps Mozart's most impassioned concerto, and Frank performed his own cadenzas in it. They, too, sounded right with just enough romantic chromaticism to fit this unusually, for Mozart, emotional concerto.

The symphony is probably Mozart's most popular. It has a multitude of beautiful melodies, many passages of the sort of delicate nicety one has learned to expect to come from under Mozart's powdered wig and a large amount of breadth and depth.

It is one of the final three symphonies Mozart wrote, presumably for his own satisfaction, and the Beethovenesque thunder he put into it, even without drums or trumpets, must have come as a shock to its first listeners.

Polished Sheen

It is, also, the sort of score ideally fitted for Leinsdorf's style as conductor—well-ordered structure, carefully shaped phrases and round, gleaming, warm, firm tones.

Sunday afternoon the symphony had all these things. It was not emotionally arousing, but it was intellectually fully satisfying, neat, witty and packed with subtle nuances clearly visible under the polished sheen.

The weekend's total attendance was 18,689. The first weekend it was 18,041.

Bach, Vivaldi

Next weekend will be full of Baroque music and will again use the reduced (about 45 players) semi-chamber orchestra.

Antonio Janigro will conduct an all-Vivaldi program Friday and Leinsdorf will, with a chorus and several vocal soloists, conduct Bach's B Minor mass Saturday night and an all-Bach program including instrumental works and a couple of cantatas Sunday afternoon.

NEWS
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.
BI-WEEKLY CIRC. 1,150
JUL 6 1967
New England Newsclip

At Tanglewood

EVELYNE CROCHET, pianist, will be heard twice this weekend at Tanglewood. Her first appearance will be Friday at the weekend prelude at 7:00 p.m. and she will also appear on Saturday at 8:00 p.m. when she will be heard with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Mozart's Piano Concerto, K. 456.

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350
JUL 8 1967
New England Newsclip

Pianist Claude Frank Stars at Tanglewood

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX—Jorge Mester was guest conductor at Tanglewood Friday night for the first of the weeknd's three Mozart concerts, but Claude Frank was the star.

Usual Dexterity

Frank was soloist for the Piano Concerto in D Minor, No. 20, K. 466 and he played it with his usual elegance, sensitivity and dexterity.

His feeling for Mozart is special. I have never heard him play a phrase of it that didn't sound right, even including those that contained an extremely rare fumble.

Aside from the delicacy of nuance and decoration, most impressive is his smoothness of continuity. It was especially noticeable during the serene second movement.

Orchestra Prodded

Mester, the conductor, is the young man who distinguished himself not only as the youngest member of the faculty of the Juilliard School, but also as the promoter of the satirical concert series in New York which has presented the works of the "world's most neglected composer, P. D. Q. Bach."

He is short, has black curly hair and led (prodded might be a better word) a Boston's Symphony Orchestra with mildly exaggerated motions that placed high emphasis on downbeats.

He seemd more interested in the precision of phrase attacks than in endings and in the placement of entries of the varying sections of the orchestra than in what they might do after they had joined the game.

Best in "Haffner"

One result was a diminishing of the airy, lightfooted element in Mozart's scores. (The conductor had the scores with him, but he seldom looked at them and probably didn's need them.)

The orchestral program included Symphonies No. 33 (K. 319) and 35 (K.385) and the "Adagio and Fugue for Strings," (K.546).

The best sounds came during the K.385 Symphony, a superserenade known as "Haffner," but the adagio and fugue was more interesting because of its infrequency of hearing and its origins.

Very Bach-Like

The fugue was written for two keyboard instruments and the adagio later for string quartet, or four-part string orchestra. It was very Bach-like and, it must be admitted, came forth a bit heavily.

The rest of it was slightly leaden, also . . . except for Claude Frank's lilting contribution.

The weekend prelude program at 7 was presented by Evelyne Crochet, a young pianist who is scheduled to play the solo part tonight when Erich Leinsdorf conducts the orchestra for Mozart's Piano Concerto, No. 18 in B flat, (K.456).

Strong-Fingered

She started with the rather dull Fantasy in C. Minor, (K. 475), built up a little action with the Sonata in D. Major, (K.311), and finished with the dramatic Sonata in A Minor, (K.310).

She played with a strong-fingered technique that seemed to increase gradually in accuracy, dexterity and expressiveness.

She showed a high degree of pianistic talent, but she never seemed to achieve the seemingly effortless finesse so necessary to Mozart's piano music.

Also on tonight's program will be Mozart's March No. 3, (K. 408), and his famed "Haffner" serenade, (K250).

Westbury American
14 July '67

Tanglewood Weekend All Mozart

The genius that was Mozart was matched only by the brilliance of the Boston Symphony virtuoso musicians. Last weekend at Tanglewood the orchestra was somewhat depleted, but still most adequate to perform the all-Mozart Festival for the weekend's three concerts.

Friday evening's Prelude Concert featured three of Mozart's less familiar sonatas for the piano, brilliantly executed by the charming and talented Miss Evelyne Crochet. She is considered in the musical world as one of the most promising and talented of the younger pianists. Her technique was flawless, and her musical style sensitive and compelling. She reminded this reviewer of a younger Rudolph Serkin. She was indeed one of his proteges and studied with him. Miss Crochet was awarded the first medal in Geneva in 1956 in the International Competition held there, and was one of the winners of the Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow in 1958.

The major concert Friday evening returned to Tanglewood the eminent and gifted Claude Frank. His interpretation and performance of the famed and beautiful Mozart Piano Concerto No. 20, K 466 in D Minor will long be remembered. The audience thundered their applause and bravos for at least six bows before they permitted him to retire at intermission.

Friday's concert was conducted by Jorge Mester, 32-year-old maestro making his debut as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony. He has recently been appointed conductor and musical director of the Louisville Symphony Orchestra. His musical career in the United States began when he was awarded a violin scholarship at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, and subsequently he became interested in conducting while he was a student at the Juilliard School of Music, where, following his studies, he became the youngest faculty member in the history of the school. He has earned widespread acclaim for his conducting of the works of the long and best neglected composer, PDQ Bach.

Saturday evening's concert brought back Erich Leinsdorf, beloved conductor of the Festival, as well as Evelyne Crochet, performing Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 18, in B flat, K. 456, which was a premiere performance at the Festival. This concerto was somewhat disappointing to this reviewer since it was not a vehicle which gave her an opportunity to demonstrate her technical prowess, despite the fact that she was quite stirring when she played her own cadenza. This reviewer found the work one of Mozart's lesser works. Miss Crochet was charming and skillful, but her performance in the Prelude Concert the evening before was much more exciting.

The concert opened with Mozart's March No. 3 in C major, K. 408, and the last half of the program was the highlight of the evening. Leinsdorf conducted ("Haffner"), K. 250, in 8 movements, four of which were soloed by Joseph Silverstein, violinist and concertmaster of the orchestra. Silverstein played with beautiful tone, exuberant, vigorous yet poetic in the Menuetto, Rondo, Menuetto galante and Andante. His performance was truly inspired and the audience was vociferous in its appreciation, almost stopping the performance of the last movements. The audience of 6,601 were most enthusiastic.

Sunday afternoon's concert returned Frank in the performance of Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 24, in C minor, K. 491, which had much to be admired, but did not measure up to Frank's performance of the D minor K. 466 concerto which he played on Friday night. However, he is a pianist of great appeal and Mozart's explosion of dark, tragic and passionate emotion was transmitted to the audience by Frank's superb intelligence and understanding of the music.

Frank played his own cadenza. It is interesting that this concerto was considered one of Mozart's highest achievements in the concerto form and Mr. Frank's sensitive and compelling interpretation equalled the composer's demands of the artist.

Sunday's concert began with Mozart's Divertimento in D major, K. 205, played most elegantly and charmingly by the orchestra and delighted the audience, hundreds of whom enjoyed the musical fresco on the beautiful lush grounds of Tanglewood. Mozart's Symphony No. 40 in G minor, K. 550 concluded Sunday afternoon's delightful concert.

Next weekend, the third in the Festival, will be devoted to Vivaldi and Bach Friday evening, with Antonio Janigro, member of the Boston Symphony, cellist, conducting and also performing Vivaldi's Cello Concerto in D. Other first desk musicians of the Boston will also be heard as soloists that night. Doriot Dwyer will perform Vivaldi's Flute Concerto, Sherman Walt playing the Bassoon Concerto in E minor. Ralph Gomberg will be featured in Vivaldi's Oboe Concerto in D minor and Lois Schaefer will play the Piccolo Concerto in C minor. Friday evening's Prelude Concert at 7 p.m. will feature Bach's organ music played by E. Power Biggs, world famous organist.

Saturday evening, Leinsdorf will conduct Bach's B minor Mass, with soloists Boatwright, Wolff, Kopleff, Bullard, Krause as well as the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus. Sunday afternoon's concert is an all-Bach program featuring Suite No. 3, Wedding Cantata with Helen Boatwright, soprano, Violin Concerto in A minor with Joseph Silverstein as soloist, and Cantata No. 174 with Beverly Wolff, mezzo-soprano, Gene Bullard, tenor, Tom Krause, baritone, and the Tanglewood Choir. This coming weekend promises to be one of the outstanding programs of the season.

"SCM"

Westbury Republican
July 5th '67

The summer season of Tanglewood began last weekend with a total audience of 18,041 for the three major concerts and will continue until Aug. 20, with concerts each Friday evening, the Prelude Concert at 7 p.m. and the major one at 9 p.m. Saturday evening concerts begin at 8 p.m. and Sunday afternoon concerts at 2:30 p.m. Next week will feature an all-Mozart program, with Claude Frank, piano soloist on Friday evening, and again on Sunday afternoon. Evelyne Crochet, pianist, will perform Saturday evening. Ticket information may be obtained by writing the Box Office, Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

SCM

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350
JUL 10 1967
New England Newsclip

At Tanglewood

Strong Mozart Concert Intellectually Satisfying

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — Erich Leinsdorf, Claude Frank and the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave 5126 listeners a strong Mozart program Sunday afternoon at Tanglewood.

Gentle Adagio

The two major works on the program contain more substance than one usually expects in Mozart's instrumental music. They were the Piano Concerto No. 24 in C Minor, K. 491, with Frank as soloist, and Symphony No. 40 in G Minor, K. 550.

Even the Divertimento D. Major, K. 205, which opened the program has a finale with a measure of tension and drama . . . a somewhat surprising ingredient for party music.

The best of the Divertimento Sunday, perhaps, was the gentle, lyrical adagio, the middle movement of five. It was a velvety beauty.

Beethovenesque

The strength of the afternoon, however, lay in the concerto and the symphony, both works with serious, dark, ominous elements and Beethovenesque touches.

Claude Frank, the pianist for the concerto, has a somewhat distracting tendency to move about on his chair, but I have never heard him play Mozart's music less than superlatively.

He has what may be an instinctive understanding of the volumes, note lengths and subtle rhythmical variations that sound exactly right for Mozart.

Powdered Wig

The K. 491 concerto is perhaps Mozart's most impassioned concerto, and Frank performed his own cadenzas in it. They, too, sounded right with just enough romantic chromaticism to fit this unusually, for Mozart, emotional concerto.

The symphony is probably Mozart's most popular. It has a multitude of beautiful melodies, many passages of the sort of delicate nicety one has learned to expect to come from under Mozart's powdered wig and a large amount of breadth and depth.

It is one of the final three symphonies Mozart wrote, presumably for his own satisfaction, and the Beethovenesque thunder he put into it, even without drums or trumpets, must have come as a shock to its first listeners.

Polished Sheen

It is, also, the sort of score ideally fitted for Leinsdorf's style as conductor—well-ordered structure, carefully shaped phrases and round, gleaming, warm, firm tones.

Sunday afternoon the symphony had all these things. It was not emotionally arousing, but it was intellectually fully satisfying, neat, witty and packed with subtle nuances clearly visible under the polished sheen.

The weekend's total attendance was 18,689. The first weekend it was 18,041.

Bach, Vivaldi

Next weekend will be full of Baroque music and will again use the reduced (about 45 players) semi-chamber orchestra.

Antonio Janigro will conduct an all-Vivaldi program Friday and Leinsdorf will, with a chorus and several vocal soloists, conduct Bach's B Minor mass Saturday night and an all-Bach program including instrumental works and a couple of cantatas Sunday afternoon.

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350
JUL 8 1967
New England Newsclip

Pianist Claude Frank Stars at Tanglewood

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX—Jorge Mester was guest conductor at Tanglewood Friday night for the first of the weeknd's three Mozart concerts, but Claude Frank was the star.

Usual Dexterity

Frank was soloist for the Piano Concerto in D Minor, No. 20, K. 466 and he played it with his usual elegance, sensitivity and dexterity.

His feeling for Mozart is special. I have never heard him play a phrase of it that didn't sound right, even including those that contained an extremely rare fumble.

Aside from the delicacy of nuance and decoration, most impressive is his smoothness of continuity. It was especially noticeable during the serene second movement.

Orchestra Prodded

Mester, the conductor, is the young man who distinguished himself not only as the youngest member of the faculty of the Juilliard School, but also as the promoter of the satirical concert series in New York which has presented the works of the "world's most neglected composer, P. D. Q. Bach."

He is short, has black curly hair and led (prodded might be a better word) a Boston's Symphony Orchestra with mildly exaggerated motions that placed high emphasis on downbeats.

He seemd more interested in the precision of phrase attacks than in endings and in the placement of entries of the varying sections of the orchestra than in what they might do after they had joined the game.

Best in "Haffner"

One result was a diminishing of the airy, lightfooted element in Mozart's scores. (The conductor had the scores with him, but he seldom looked at them and probably didn's need them.)

The orchestral program included Symphonies No. 33 (K. 319) and 35 (K.385) and the "Adagio and Fugue for Strings," (K.546).

The best sounds came during the K.385 Symphony, a super-serenade known as "Haffner," but the adagio and fugue was more interesting because of its infrequency of hearing and its origins.

Very Bach-Like

The fugue was written for two keyboard instruments and the adagio later for string quartet, or four-part string orchestra. It was very Bach-like and, it must be admitted, came forth a bit heavily.

The rest of it was slightly leaden, also . . . except for Claude Frank's lilting contribution.

The weekend prelude program at 7 was presented by Evelyne Crochet, a young pianist who is scheduled to play the solo part tonight when Erich Leinsdorf conducts the orchestra for Mozart's Piano Concerto, No. 18 in B flat, (K.456).

Strong-Fingered

She started with the rather dull Fantasy in C. Minor, (K. 475), built up a little action with the Sonata in D. Major, (K.311), and finished with the dramatic Sonata in A Minor, (K.310).

She played with a strong-fingered technique that seemed to increase gradually in accuracy, dexterity and expressiveness.

She showed a high degree of pianistic talent, but she never seemed to achieve the seemingly effortless finesse so necessary to Mozart's piano music.

Also on tonight's program will be Mozart's March No. 3, (K. 408), and his famed "Haffner" serenade, (K250).

NEWS
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.
BI-WEEKLY CIRC. 1,150
JUL 6 1967
New England Newsclip

At Tanglewood

EVELYNE CROCHET, pianist, will be heard twice this weekend at Tanglewood. Her first appearance will be Friday at the weekend prelude at 7:00 p.m. and she will also appear on Saturday at 8:00 p.m. when she will be heard with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Mozart's Piano Concerto, K. 456.

14 July '67
Westbury American

Tanglewood Weekend All Mozart

The genius that was Mozart was matched only by the brilliance of the Boston Symphony virtuoso musicians. Last weekend at Tanglewood the orchestra was somewhat depleted, but still most adequate to perform the all-Mozart Festival for the weekend's three concerts.

Friday evening's Prelude Concert featured three of Mozart's less familiar sonatas for the piano, brilliantly executed by the charming and talented Miss Evelyne Crochet. She is considered in the musical world as one of the most promising and talented of the younger pianists. Her technique was flawless, and her musical style sensitive and compelling. She reminded this reviewer of a younger Rudolph Serkin. She was indeed one of his proteges and studied with him. Miss Crochet was awarded the first medal in Geneva in 1956 in the International Competition held there, and was one of the winners of the Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow in 1958.

The major concert Friday evening returned to Tanglewood the eminent and gifted Claude Frank. His interpretation and performance of the famed and beautiful Mozart Piano Concerto No. 20, K 466 in D Minor will long be remembered. The audience thundered their applause and bravos for at least six bows before they permitted him to retire at intermission.

Friday's concert was conducted by Jorge Mester, 32-year-old maestro making his debut as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony. He has recently been appointed conductor and musical director of the Louisville Symphony Orchestra. His musical career in the United States began when he was awarded a violin scholarship at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, and subsequently he became interested in conducting while he was a student at the Juilliard School of Music, where, following his studies, he became the youngest faculty member in the history of the school. He has earned widespread acclaim for his conducting of the works of the long and best neglected composer, PDQ Bach.

Saturday evening's concert brought back Erich Leinsdorf, beloved conductor of the Festival, as well as Evelyne Crochet, performing Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 18, in B flat, K. 456, which was a premiere performance at the Festival. This concerto was somewhat disappointing to this reviewer since it was not a vehicle which gave her an opportunity to demonstrate her technical prowess, despite the fact that she was quite stirring when she played her own cadenza. This reviewer found the work one of Mozart's lesser works. Miss Crochet was charming and skillful, but her performance in the Prelude Concert the evening before was much more exciting.

The concert opened with Mozart's March No. 3 in C major, K. 408, and the last half of the program was the highlight of the evening. Leinsdorf conducted ("Haffner"), K. 250, in 8 movements, four of which were soloed by Joseph Silverstein, violinist and concertmaster of the orchestra. Silverstein played with beautiful tone, exuberant, vigorous yet poetic in the Menuetto, Rondo, Menuetto galante and Andante. His performance was truly inspired and the audience was vociferous in its appreciation, almost stopping the performance of the last movements. The audience of 6,601 were most enthusiastic.

Sunday afternoon's concert returned Frank in the performance of Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 24, in C minor, K. 491, which had much to be admired, but did not measure up to Frank's performance of the D minor K. 466 concerto which he played on Friday night. However, he is a pianist of great appeal and Mozart's explosion of dark, tragic and passionate emotion was transmitted to the audience by Frank's superb intelligence and understanding of the music.

Frank played his own cadenza. It is interesting that this concerto was considered one of Mozart's highest achievements in the concerto form and Mr. Frank's sensitive and compelling interpretation equalled the composer's demands of the artist.

Sunday's concert began with Mozart's Divertimento in D major, K. 205, played most elegantly and charmingly by the orchestra and delighted the audience, hundreds of whom enjoyed the musical fresco on the beautiful lush grounds of Tanglewood. Mozart's Symphony No. 40 in G minor, K. 550 concluded Sunday afternoon's delightful concert.

Next weekend, the third in the Festival, will be devoted to Vivaldi and Bach Friday evening, with Antonio Janigro, member of the Boston Symphony, cellist, conducting and also performing Vivaldi's Cello Concerto in D. Other first desk musicians of the Boston will also be heard as soloists that night. Doriot Dwyer will perform Vivaldi's Flute Concerto, Sherman Walt playing the Bassoon Concerto in E minor. Ralph Gomberg will be featured in Vivaldi's Obpe Concerto in D minor and Lois Schaefer will play the Piccolo Concerto in C minor. Friday evening's Prelude Concert at 7 p.m. will feature Bach's organ music played by E. Power Biggs, world famous organist.

Saturday evening, Leinsdorf will conduct Bach's B minor Mass, with soloists Boatwright, Wolff, Kopleff, Bullard, Krause as well as the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus. Sunday afternoon's concert is an all-Bach program featuring Suite No. 3, Wedding Cantata with Helen Boatwright, soprano, Violin Concerto in A minor with Joseph Silverstein as soloist, and Cantata No. 174 with Beverly Wolff, mezzo-soprano, Gene Bullard, tenor, Tom Krause, baritone, and the Tanglewood Choir. This coming weekend promises to be one of the outstanding programs of the season.

"SCM"

Westbury
Republican
July 5th '67

The summer season of Tanglewood began last weekend with a total audience of 18,041 for the three major concerts and will continue until Aug. 20, with concerts each Friday evening, the Prelude Concert at 7 p.m. and the major one at 9 p.m. Saturday evening concerts begin at 8 p.m. and Sunday afternoon concerts at 2:30 p.m. Next week will feature an all-Mozart program, with Claude Frank, piano soloist on Friday evening, and again on Sunday afternoon. Evelyne Crochet, pianist, will perform Saturday evening. Ticket information may be obtained by writing the Box Office, Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

SCM

16

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 192,400

JUL 11 1967 New England Newsclip

Mozart revisited at Tanglewood

By Louis Chapin

Lenox, Mass.

Tanglewood's serene green seems to be less ruffled than ever by the winds of new music. Yet for this writer, returning there for part of a Mozart weekend after more than a season's absence, any lurking regrets at the conservatism were quickly dissipated by fresh musical experience: Evelyne Crochet's luminous playing of two sonatas (K. 310 and 311) and the C minor Fantasy at Friday's "weekend prelude" (an inviting innovation from last season).

Looking as classic as an Ingres portrait, Miss Crochet sat down and played with an introspective insight which forced continual redefinition of the word "classic" itself.

Particularly in the free romantic breathing of the Fantasy and in the dark-chorded slow movement of the A minor sonata (K. 310), she proved how closely a Mozart reading can approach the kind of subjectivity usually attached to Beethoven. And Miss Crochet thinks and feels so clearly through her playing that the danger of sentimentalizing Mozart never even presents itself.

The danger for this occasion was simply that her invitation was more interesting than the party.

Architecture or furniture?

The nine o'clock program, in which Jorge Mester conducted two symphonies (Nos. 33 and 35), the D minor piano concerto (with Claude Frank as soloist), and the Adagio and Fugue for Strings, could hardly help being a letdown—even though in his debut with the orchestra Mr. Mester (a former Tanglewood student) showed himself admirably equipped in technique and musical grasp.

It was Miss Crochet's fault, I suppose. In contrast to her Mr. Mester looked as though he might be interpreting Beethoven, while producing a satisfactory, energetic, orthodox Mozart sound.

But he is young; and to watch Erich Leinsdorf at the next morning's open rehearsal (at Tanglewood you can hear a lot of music in an evening and a morning!) was to realize how all-important experience is in interpreting this composer.

Mr. Leinsdorf, who was preparing for the Sunday afternoon concert (again with Mr. Frank's collaboration) seems more than ever the definitive Mozart conductor. As an agile master of economy he has eliminated every movement not needed to project the music's precise architecture. Mr. Mester, on the other hand, appears intelligently but needlessly busy with the furniture.

And speaking of architecture, Mr. Frank has a way of touching piano chords from time to time during the orchestra tuttis, as though to keep the concerto's structure as it passes. His Mozart style is underphrased, cooler, and more objective than Miss Crochet's, but authoritative.

The best moments of this visit brought to mind Paul Klee's query about his own work: "Do I radiate warmth? Coolness? There is no talk of such things when you have got beyond white heat."

Even on an unspectacular weekend, things can get hot this classic way at Tanglewood.

On the Esplanade

Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
Symphony No. 2 in D major ..... Brahms
Fugue in G minor ..... Bach
Serenade, "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" ..... Mozart
Tales from the Vienna Woods, Waltzes ..... Johann Strauss, Jr.

Wednesday Morning, July 12, at 10:15
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
Pomp and Circumstance ..... Elgar
Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra ..... Britten
Narrator: Ellen Bottomley
Violin Concerto in E minor ..... Mendelssohn
Soloist: Lynn Chang
Sleigh Ride ..... Mozart
Sleigh Ride ..... Anderson
Farandole, from L'Arlesienne ..... Bizet
The Star-Spangled Banner

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900

JUL 10 1967 New England Newsclip

Music Review

Mozart at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE SECOND weekend at Tanglewood offered three programs of Mozart. The Boston Symphony Orchestra was conducted by music director Erich Leinsdorf yesterday afternoon and Saturday evening. Friday evening the first guest conductor of the season, Jorge Mester, newly appointed conductor of the Louisville Symphony and onetime student at the Berkshire Music Center, made his debut with the Boston orchestra and a very promising one it was.

The pantry of Mozart's music is extremely large and ample. There is food for every occasion and for most tastes. If it can be said of any composer, it might be fitting to say of Mozart that, played with reasonable proficiency, his music would please audiences more than that of some other composers, especially of a later vintage, played with comparable competence. Not that Mozart amateurs lack discrimination, but there is an inimitable ingredient in most of his music which engages the attention and sympathy of most of us at any recital.

* * *

THE POINT, however, is that the deeper impressions Mozart makes require performers with a high sense of taste and of fastidiousness. These were the factors which were sufficiently in evidence during the three programs to warrant a seal of high approval.

Leinsdorf ended his concert yesterday afternoon with the big G minor symphony No. 40, K550. A conductor who "hears" this symphony as less than a headlong forward rush must question the indication "allegro molto." I have always felt that it can raise an audience to clouds of enchantment when played with a bit of distant wistfulness, and that is the way Leinsdorf started it. But he didn't, or couldn't, stay in that mood and, after several wavering doubts, settled into a faster and more conventional pace.

* * *

THE D MAJOR Divertimento, K205, has five fascinating movements in a succession of contrasting episodes, much like the nine or ten of the Haffner Serenade, D major, K250, with which Saturday night's concert ended. This latter has several movements for violin solo which were executed by concertmaster Joseph Silverstein with the suavity and dulcitude of maple syrup.

Mester led two symphonies Friday night: No. 33, B flat major, and the Haffner, D major, No. 35. Haffner was a leading businessman and the burgomaster of Salzburg who befriended the young Mozart many times. It pleased the young genius to reciprocate when the occasion arose, and so there exists a small accumulation of "Haffner" music from which Mozart served himself in various applications.

* * *

MESTER HAS a nice sense of differentiation between the incisive impact of rhythmic themes in both works and the more spun-out singing phrases which appear in the development of each symphony.

The Adagio and Fugue, K385, benefits by the tight fibrous texture string sections afford, beyond the efforts of the single instruments of a string quartet for which it is written. The adagio was serenely lovely but the fugue manifests itself more eloquently when less rushed.

Each program had a piano soloist. Claude Frank did the D minor piano concerto, K446, Friday night with Mester and the C minor No. 24 yesterday. Frank plays Mozart with keen insight and with the same sparkling articulation with which he electrified his audience last year in the first Beethoven concerto. Yesterday the orchestral introduction to the finale was not sufficiently contrasted with the preceding larghetto and the character of the movement was not realized until the piano entered with brisk elan and crisp spirit.

* * *

SATURDAY NIGHT Evelyne Crochet made a welcome reappearance after an absence of a few years, playing the B flat concerto, K456. Miss Crochet seasoned her grasp of the essence of Mozart with a pinch of poetry, a happy and fortuitous combination. It is common practice to compliment a female soloist to say that she plays like a man. Miss Crochet won her audience because she played extremely well and "like a lady should."

Worcester Daily Telegram Mon. July 10, 1967

Music: Berkshire Festival Features Mozart

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Mozart's music was magnetic fare for moderately-sized audiences at Tanglewood's second weekend of the Berkshire Music Festival. Total attendance was 18,679 Friday night through yesterday afternoon.

The curtailed Boston Symphony Orchestra of 50 players was conducted on Saturday night and yesterday afternoon by Erich Leinsdorf.

Piano soloists were Evelyne Crochet on Saturday night, and Claude Frank yesterday.

Little advance attention had been given to Joseph Silverstein's lengthy solo violin performance on Saturday in Serenade No. 7 in D major, "Haffner," K.250. The concert master received tremendous response.

All of Saturday night's program, and yesterday's "Divertimento in D major," K.205 was some of Mozart's best entertainment music, written by the mile for sheer pleasure o to make a quick profit.

Musicianship Displayed

Miss Crochet disclosed he thorough musicianship in Pian Concerto No. 18 in B flat, K.456 A highly attractive feature sharply contrasted by yester day's pianist, was Miss Cro chet's confining all flossiness t Mozart's music, and not to the method of presenting it.

She covered a wide range of dynamics without exaggeration at either end. Leinsdorf helped immensely by allowing nothing to obscure the keyboard role.

Consequently, the concerto remained the happy affair that it is. Nothing was done to fatten it with intrigue.

Some of Miss Crochet's speeds were slightly rushed and her technique was not spotless. These were slight deterrents to an otherwise musicianly performance.

Fussy Fanciwork

Saturday night's March No. 3 in C major, K.408, gave an impression of stateliness in spite of its fussy fanciwork. Actually, thi slittle-known piece is close to Mozart's operatic style.

Long-winded as it gets, the "Haffner" Serenade was played with such simplicity of style and melodic delight that it survived the patience of most listeners.

Silverstein contributed a warmly-toned, adroit account of the solo portion which has the dimension of a full-fledged concerto. Even through its tiresome repetitions, the orchestra seemed obsessed with the music's beauty of language and consummate grace.

The Divertimento introduction, as played yesterday afternoon, was some of the weekend's most vibrant sound. Leinsdorf skillfully wove it into the body of the work. The minutes had genteel mien and were held to the role of light, uninvolved dances. The trio of the second minuet was particularly well-played by horns and bassoon.

Expressive conversation was heard in the slow movement. The full-speed finale had unexpected turns, all easily negotiated.

Frank is one of the most demonstrative pianists on the platform. He even finds it necessary to "silently" play along with the orchestral portions.

He has a good technique and sound musical impulses. Unfortunately, they suffer the consequences of visual window-dressing of the "gingerbread" type.

SUNDAY REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 115,950

JUL 9 1967 New England Newsclip

Mozart's Melancholy Projected Smoothly

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX—Evelyne Crochet was smoother and easier with Mozart's music Saturday night at Tanglewood than she was Friday when she played three solo pieces for the weeknd prelude program.

Saturday, she was soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf's direction for Mozart's Concerto No. 18 in B Flat, K. 456.

It is a pleasant concerto with a lovely, sad-sweet middle movement and a brisk, busy last movement full of runs and dancing decorations.

She was surer and steadier Saturday and though somewhat lacking in brilliance and sparkle, she produced a warm-toned affectionate sound that was perfectly suited to the long, flowing semi-melancholic middle movement.

The program opened with a simple little march, one of three listd in the Mozart Catalogue as K. 408. It was tossed off quickly and with graceful ease as if it were an appetizer.

After intermission came the long "Haffner" Serenade, K. 250, not to be confused with the "Haffner" Symphony played Friday.

The symphony started life as a six-movement serenade, but was shortened by Mozart to four movements for a concert. The serenade still has its original eight movements and if played with all its repeats will last more than an hour. It was scheduled for 57 minutes Saturday.

It has many appealing sections and Burgomeister Haffner's daughter, the bride for whose wedding it was written, must have been delighted, as was Saturday's audience of 6601.

The listeners were especially pleased with Joseph Silverstein's treatment of the solo violin passages assigned for the second, third and fourth movements.

It is a solo part woven deeply in and out of the music, and Silverstein played it from memory with a light, sweet tone and agile accuracy befitting party music. I don't think he missed a single note.

He is the concertmaster of the orchestra and many of its members, including the conductor, joined the audience when it broke into the serenade to applaud him. He had to take four bows.

This afternoon, Claude Frank (who played a concerto Friday night) will return to play the solo part in Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 24 inC Minor, K 491.

The program will open with the Divertimento in D Major, K. 205. The Mozart weekend will end with the Symphony No. 40 in G Minor, K. 550.

Friday night's attendance, announced Saturday morning, was 4465.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 537,050

JUL 23 1967 New England

How Could It Happen?

Out-of-Tune Nightmare at Tanglewood

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

When Claude Frank played Mozart's C minor Piano Concerto with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony two weeks ago at Tanglewood, piano and orchestra were so out of tune with each other that the performance was a nightmare, one produced by a first-rate pianist at a good instrument and one of the world's great orchestras under a conductor with a reputation as a taskmaster in the cause of clean playing.

How could it happen?

Granted that the weather was the hot and extremely humid sort that causes intonation troubles and that conditions were therefore difficult, other questions remain:

Why was the piano tuned to a pitch lower than the Boston Symphony's, that being an unusually high one?

Why did the orchestra not tune to the piano's A between the Divertimento that began the program and the Concerto?

Why, once the performance had begun, did the wind players, whose discrepancy with the piano was particulary embarrassing, not adjust their pitch?

Why was no attempt made to adjust the tuning after the first movement?

Why, for that matter, was the performance sounding as it did, allowed to go on even to the end of the first movement?

The heat-humidity problem is not new, least of all to the Boston Symphony, which has been giving outdoor concerts Summers at Tanglewood since 1940. Nor was it a rare, almost forgotten problem that suddenly reappeared that Sunday afternoon, for the same thing, I was told, happened the previous evening in Evelyn Crochet's performance of the B flat Concerto, K.456, and with less painful results only because there is a less elaborate piano-wind interplay in that work than in the exceptionally richly scored C minor.

Perhaps the spoiled performance of the C minor Concerto is just to be regarded as a technical accident to be regretted and forgotten. I think not, though, and the memory of the disaster, and the fear of what it means, continues to nag. Most of all, my mind keeps coming back to wondering about Claude Frank's and Erich Leinsdorf's roles in it.

Both heard what was happening and both suffered, or so we must assume. Both, we know, chose to ignore what they heard. One can speculate about what kept them from stopping a performance that must have pained them—the soloist's reluctance to make a gesture that might be interpreted as disrespectful to the orchestra whose guest, in a manner of speaking, he was, and to its conductor; the conductor's feeling that in a concerto it was not up to him to make such a decision and such a move; the desire to maintain normal concert decorum, coupled with the tradition of professionalism that says the show must go on.

But what kind of professionalism is it that commits the show, by making it go on, to being a bad show? And a bad show is what we got, a travesty of something important that the people involved were equipped to do well.

The point is, surely, that Frank and

STEINBERG Continued on Page A-25

★ STEINBERG
Continued from Page A-21

Leinsdorf were there to play Mozart as well as possible, and that any decisions about the performance should have been made with that aim in view and no other. Whatever decisions made them persist with the sour twanging and squealing were essentially irrelevant, and that is what makes the event distressing to have witnessed and to think about. That the two musicians involved are among the most thoughtful and in earnest about their work makes for more discomfort, not less.

Already too much of what makes up the musical climate in which we live is nonmusical. Commercial interests are involved, and so is an energetic public relations industry. Most of the writing from which the public gets some of its ideas about music is ignorant, thus necessarily irrelevent also.

Think, too, of the stultifying ritual of the concert hall, where snobbery, boredom and indifference, bad manners, noise, the lazy, deadly, repetitious reportory, make war, effective war, on musical values.

Arturo Benedetti Michelangeli is regarded as a nuisance and a crank because he gives a hard time to the people responsible for providing him with an excellent piano in impeccable playing condition. He does, however, get just such a piano, and that is more to the point than the comfort of managers and tuners.

It's own excellence is the only justification for an artistic act, and it is though music were destroyed a little each time a musician allows himself to be deflected from the search for that excellence. That is why I am sorry that Frank and Leinsdorf did not stop on that afternoon as though to say, "This is not what we stand for."

GAZETTE (e)
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 94,350

JUL 8 1967 New England Newsclip

Second Weekend at Tanglewood

Mozart Works Are Featured

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — For the Berkshire Festival's second weekend at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony ensemble has been reduced to about 45 players, for three concerts of music by Mozart.

Next week, the same personnel will offer music of Bach and Vivaldi.

Last night, before the concert in the big music shed, a bonus weekend prelude featured Evelyne Crochet, pianist, in Mozart's Fantasy in C minor, K.475, the Sonata in D major, K.311, and Sonata in A minor, K.310. Miss Crochet, heard often at Boston and Tanglewood, will be soloist tonight with the orchestra in the Piano Concerto No. 18 in B flat, K.456, in the 8 p.m. concert.

Gazette Review

Claude Frank, a Boston favorite, heard last night in the Piano Concerto in D minor, No. 20, K.466, will again appear with the orchestra Sunday in the 2:30 concert, playing the Piano Concerto No. 24 in C minor, K.491.

Berkshire Alumnus

Last night's conductor was Jorge Mester, 32-year-old Berkshire Music Center alumnus, recently appointed conductor of the Louisville Symphony Orchestra. The concerts tonight and tomorrow will be conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

Miss Crochet's playing was projected to the big shed and surrounding lawns by the use of a small auxiliary shell. She chose for her sensitive fingers music stressing Mozart's moods even more than his technical prowess.

Peaks in Cadenzas

Frank's part in the concerto, reaching its individual peak in the cadenzas added by Beethoven, was more impressive than the orchestra's playing, though the latter was consistently efficient and warm. This pianist has a pleasing range of dynamics and a delightful sense of phrasing.

Mester's conducting of Symphony No. 33, in B flat major, K.319, was energetic and discerning, though not inspired. The spontaneous joy and familiar beauties of the "Haffner" Symphony No. 35 in D major, K.385, ended the evening graciously.

In between was a worthily conceived performance of the Adagio and Fugue for Strings, K.546.

TELEGRAM (m)
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 62,350

JUL 10 1967 New England Newsclip

Music: Berkshire Festival Features Mozart

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Mozart's music was magnetic fare for moderately-sized audiences at Tanglewood's second weekend of the Berkshire Music Festival. Total attendance was 18,679 Friday night through yesterday afternoon.

The curtailed Boston Symphony Orchestra of 50 players was conducted on Saturday night and yesterday afternoon by Erich Leinsdorf.

Piano soloists were Evelyne Crochet on Saturday night, and Claude Frank yesterday.

Little advance attention had been given to Joseph Silverstein's lengthy solo violin performance on Saturday in Serenade No. 7 in D major, "Hatfner," K.250. The concert master received tremendous response.

All of Saturday night's program, and yesterday's "Divertimento in D major," K.205, was some of Mozart's best entertainment music, written by the mile for sheer pleasure or to make a quick profit.

Musicianship Displayed

Miss Crochet disclosed her thorough musicianship in Piano Concerto No. 18 in B flat, K.456. A highly attractive feature, sharply contrasted by yesterday's pianist, was Miss Crochet's confining all flossiness to Mozart's music, and not to the method of presenting it.

She covered a wide range of dynamics without exaggeration at either end. Leinsdorf helped immensely by allowing nothing to obscure the keyboard role.

Consequently, the concerto remained the happy affair that it is. Nothing was done to fatten it with intrigue.

Some of Miss Crochet's speeds were slightly rushed and her technique was not spotless. These were slight deterrents to an otherwise musicianly performance.

Fussy Fanciwork

Saturday night's March No. 3 in C major, K.408, gave an impression of stateliness in spite of its fussy fanciwork. Actually, thi slittle-known piece is close to Mozart's operatic style.

Long-winded as it gets, the "Haffner" Serenade was played with such simplicity of style and melodic delight that it survived the patience of most listeners.

Silverstein contributed a warmly-toned, adroit account of the solo portion which has the dimension of a full-fledged concerto. Even through its tiresome repetitions, the orchestra seemed obsessed with the music's beauty of language and consummate grace.

The Divertimento introduction, as played yesterday afternoon, was some of the weekend's most vibrant sound. Leinsdorf skillfully wove it into the body of the work. The minutes had genteel mien and were held to the role of light, uninvolved dances. The trio of the second minuet was particularly well-played by horns and bassoon.

Expressive conversation was heard in the slow movement. The full-speed finale had unexpected turns, all easily negotiated.

Frank is one of the most demonstrative pianists on the platform. He even finds it necessary to "silently" play along with the orchestral portions.

He has a good technique and sound musical impulses. Unfortunately, they suffer the consequences of visual window-dressing of the "gingerbread" type.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 SUN. 122,607

JUL 9 1967

At Tanglewood, the week's events include three at the Tanglewood Theatre, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday at 8 p.m. Tuesday, soprano Phyllis Curtin will offer a recital at the second chamber music concert of the season. On Wednesday, guest conductor Jorge Mester, who appeared with the Boston Symphony last weekend, will conduct the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra. Thursday's event will be a composer's forum open to Friends of Music.

This afternoon at 2:30, Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the BSO in three Mozart works, his Divertimento, K. 205, Piano Concerto ,K 491, and his Symphony No. 40. Claude Frank, whose association with the BSO and Tanglewood dates back some years, will be soloist in the concerto.

Next weekend's Tanglewood schedule will be highlighted by the performance of Bach's B Minor Mass Saturday at 8 p.m. with Helen Boatwright, Beverly Wolff, Florence Kopleff, Gene Bullard and Tom Krause as soloists with the Tanglewood Choir and Berkshire Chorus.

On Friday, the regular prelude concert at 7 p.m. will feature organist E. Power Biggs in music by J. S .Bach. Biggs will be followed at 9 p.m. by the BSO under guest conductor Antonio Janigro who will double as soloist in Vivaldi's Cello Concerto .Also on the program: Vivaldi concertos for flute, bassoon and piccolo, performed by members of the orchestra; and three other Vivaldi orchestral works.

Winding up a full weekend will be Sunday's 2:30 p.m. concert with Leinsdorf leading the orchestra in Bach's Suite No. 3, Wedding Cantata, Violin Concerto in A Minor and Cantata No. 174.

At the nearby Berkshire Music Barn at Lenox, Mass., folk singer Judy Collins appears at 8:30 tonight while Dave Brubeck and company will perform there next Saturday at 3:30 p.m.

At the Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn. ,the regular 3 p.m. Saturday concert this week will feature violinist Mona Schoen as soloist with the Berkshire Strng Quartet.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 537,050

JUL 23 1967 New England

How Could It Happen?

Out-of-Tune Nightmare at Tanglewood

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

When Claude Frank played Mozart's C minor Piano Concerto with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony two weeks ago at Tanglewood, piano and orchestra were so out of tune with each other that the performance was a nightmare, one produced by a first-rate pianist at a good instrument and one of the world's great orchestras under a conductor with a reputation as a taskmaster in the cause of clean playing.

How could it happen?

Granted that the weather was the hot and extremely humid sort that causes intonation troubles and that conditions were therefore difficult, other questions remain:

Why was the piano tuned to a pitch lower than the Boston Symphony's, that being an unusually high one?

Why did the orchestra not tune to the piano's A between the Divertimento that began the program and the Concerto?

Why, once the performance had begun, did the wind players, whose discrepancy with the piano was particulary embarrassing, not adjust their pitch?

Why was no attempt made to adjust the tuning after the first movement?

Why, for that matter, was the performance sounding as it did, allowed to go on even to the end of the first movement?

The heat-humidity problem is not new, least of all to the Boston Symphony, which has been giving outdoor concerts Summers at Tanglewood since 1940. Nor was it a rare, almost forgotten problem that suddenly reappeared that Sunday afternoon, for the same thing, I was told, happened the previous evening in Evelyn Crochet's performance of the B flat Concerto, K.456, and with less painful results only because there is a less elaborate piano-wind interplay in that work than in the exceptionally richly scored C minor.

Perhaps the spoiled performance of the C minor Concerto is just to be regarded as a technical accident to be regretted and forgotten. I think not, though, and the memory of the disaster, and the fear of what it means, continues to nag. Most of all, my mind keeps coming back to wondering about Claude Frank's and Erich Leinsdorf's roles in it.

Both heard what was happening and both suffered, or so we must assume. Both, we know, chose to ignore what they heard. One can speculate about what kept them from stopping a performance that must have pained them—the soloist's reluctance to make a gesture that might be interpreted as disrespectful to the orchestra whose guest, in a manner of speaking, he was, and to its conductor; the conductor's feeling that in a concerto it was not up to him to make such a decision and such a move; the desire to maintain normal concert decorum, coupled with the tradition of professionalism that says the show must go on.

But what kind of professionalism is it that commits the show, by making it go on, to being a bad show? And a bad show is what we got, a travesty of something important that the people involved were equipped to do well.

The point is, surely, that Frank and

STEINBERG Continued on Page A-25

★ STEINBERG

Continued from Page A-21

Leinsdorf were there to play Mozart as well as possible, and that any decisions about the performance should have been made with that aim in view and no other. Whatever decisions made them persist with the sour twanging and squealing were essentially irrelevant, and that is what makes the event distressing to have witnessed and to think about. That the two musicians involved are among the most thoughtful and in earnest about their work makes for more discomfort, not less.

Already too much of what makes up the musical climate in which we live is nonmusical. Commercial interests are involved, and so is an energetic public relations industry. Most of the writing from which the public gets some of its ideas about music is ignorant, thus necessarily irrelevent also.

Think, too, of the stultifying ritual of the concert hall, where snobbery, boredom and indifference, bad manners, noise, the lazy, deadly, repetitious reportory, make war, effective war, on musical values.

Arturo Benedetti Michelangeli is regarded as a nuisance and a crank because he gives a hard time to the people responsible for providing him with an excellent piano in impeccable playing condition. He does, however, get just such a piano, and that is more to the point than the comfort of managers and tuners.

It's own excellence is the only justification for an artistic act, and it is though music were destroyed a little each time a musician allows himself to be deflected from the search for that excellence. That is why I am sorry that Frank and Leinsdorf did not stop on that afternoon as though to say, "This is not what we stand for."

GAZETTE (e)
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 94,350

JUL 8 1967 New England Newsclip

Second Weekend at Tanglewood

Mozart Works Are Featured

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — For the Berkshire Festival's second weekend at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony ensemble has been reduced to about 45 players, for three concerts of music by Mozart.

Next week, the same personnel will offer music of Bach and Vivaldi.

Last night, before the concert in the big music shed, a bonus weekend prelude featured Evelyne Crochet, pianist, in Mozart's Fantasy in C minor, K.475, the Sonata in D major, K.311, and Sonata in A minor, K.310. Miss Crochet, heard often at Boston and Tanglewood, will be soloist tonight with the orchestra in the Piano Concerto No. 18 in B flat, K.456, in the 8 p.m. concert.

Gazette Review

Claude Frank, a Boston favorite, heard last night in the Piano Concerto in D minor, No. 20, K.466, will again appear with the orchestra Sunday in the 2:30 concert, playing the Piano Concerto No. 24 in C minor, K.491.

Berkshire Alumnus

Last night's conductor was Jorge Mester, 32-year-old Berkshire Music Center alumnus, recently appointed conductor of the Louisville Symphony Orchestra. The concerts tonight and tomorrow will be conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

Miss Crochet's playing was projected to the big shed and surrounding lawns by the use of a small auxiliary shell. She chose for her sensitive fingers music stressing Mozart's moods even more than his technical prowess.

Peaks in Cadenzas

Frank's part in the concerto, reaching its individual peak in the cadenzas added by Beethoven, was more impressive than the orchestra's playing, though the latter was consistently efficient and warm. This pianist has a pleasing range of dynamics and a delightful sense of phrasing.

Mester's conducting of Symphony No. 33, in B flat major, K.319, was energetic and discerning, though not inspired. The spontaneous joy and familiar beauties of the "Haffner" Symphony No. 35 in D major, K.385, ended the evening graciously.

In between was a worthily conceived performance of the Adagio and Fugue for Strings, K.546.

TELEGRAM (m)
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 62,350

JUL 10 1967 New England Newsclip

Music: Berkshire Festival Features Mozart

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Mozart's music was magnetic fare for moderately-sized audiences at Tanglewood's second weekend of the Berkshire Music Festival. Total attendance was 18,679 Friday night through yesterday afternoon.

The curtailed Boston Symphony Orchestra of 50 players was conducted on Saturday night and yesterday afternoon by Erich Leinsdorf.

Piano soloists were Evelyne Crochet on Saturday night, and Claude Frank yesterday.

Little advance attention had been given to Joseph Silverstein's lengthy solo violin performance on Saturday in Serenade No. 7 in D major, "Hatfner," K.250. The concert master received tremendous response.

All of Saturday night's program, and yesterday's "Divertimento in D major," K.205, was some of Mozart's best entertainment music, written by the mile for sheer pleasure or to make a quick profit.

Musicianship Displayed

Miss Crochet disclosed her thorough musicianship in Piano Concerto No. 18 in B flat, K.456. A highly attractive feature, sharply contrasted by yesterday's pianist, was Miss Crochet's confining all flossiness to Mozart's music, and not to the method of presenting it.

She covered a wide range of dynamics without exaggeration at either end. Leinsdorf helped immensely by allowing nothing to obscure the keyboard role.

Consequently, the concerto remained the happy affair that it is. Nothing was done to fatten it with intrigue.

Some of Miss Crochet's speeds were slightly rushed and her technique was not spotless. These were slight deterrents to an otherwise musicianly performance.

Fussy Fanciwork

Saturday night's March No. 3 in C major, K.408, gave an impression of stateliness in spite of its fussy fanciwork. Actually, thi slittle-known piece is close to Mozart's operatic style.

Long-winded as it gets, the "Haffner" Serenade was played with such simplicity of style and melodic delight that it survived the patience of most listeners.

Silverstein contributed a warmly-toned, adroit account of the solo portion which has the dimension of a full-fledged concerto. Even through its tiresome repetitions, the orchestra seemed obsessed with the music's beauty of language and consummate grace.

The Divertimento introduction, as played yesterday afternoon, was some of the weekend's most vibrant sound. Leinsdorf skillfully wove it into the body of the work. The minutes had genteel mien and were held to the role of light, uninvolved dances. The trio of the second minuet was particularly well-played by horns and bassoon.

Expressive conversation was heard in the slow movement. The full-speed finale had unexpected turns, all easily negotiated.

Frank is one of the most demonstrative pianists on the platform. He even finds it necessary to "silently" play along with the orchestral portions.

He has a good technique and sound musical impulses. Unfortunately, they suffer the consequences of visual window-dressing of the "gingerbread" type.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 SUN. 122,607

JUL 9 1967

At Tanglewood, the week's events include three at the Tanglewood Theatre, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday at 8 p.m. Tuesday, soprano Phyllis Curtin will offer a recital at the second chamber music concert of the season. On Wednesday, guest conductor Jorge Mester, who appeared with the Boston Symphony last weekend, will conduct the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra. Thursday's event will be a composer's forum open to Friends of Music.

This afternoon at 2:30, Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the BSO in three Mozart works, his Divertimento, K. 205, Piano Concerto ,K 491, and his Symphony No. 40. Claude Frank, whose association with the BSO and Tanglewood dates back some years, will be soloist in the concerto.

Next weekend's Tanglewood schedule will be highlighted by the performance of Bach's B Minor Mass Saturday at 8 p.m. with Helen Boatwright, Beverly Wolff, Florence Kopleff, Gene Bullard and Tom Krause as soloists with the Tanglewood Choir and Berkshire Chorus.

On Friday, the regular prelude concert at 7 p.m. will feature organist E. Power Biggs in music by J. S .Bach. Biggs will be followed at 9 p.m. by the BSO under guest conductor Antonio Janigro who will double as soloist in Vivaldi's Cello Concerto .Also on the program: Vivaldi concertos for flute, bassoon and piccolo, performed by members of the orchestra; and three other Vivaldi orchestral works.

Winding up a full weekend will be Sunday's 2:30 p.m. concert with Leinsdorf leading the orchestra in Bach's Suite No. 3, Wedding Cantata, Violin Concerto in A Minor and Cantata No. 174.

At the nearby Berkshire Music Barn at Lenox, Mass., folk singer Judy Collins appears at 8:30 tonight while Dave Brubeck and company will perform there next Saturday at 3:30 p.m.

At the Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn. ,the regular 3 p.m. Saturday concert this week will feature violinist Mona Schoen as soloist with the Berkshire Strng Quartet.

18

THIRD WEEK - JULY 14, 15 & 16

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350
JUL 8 1967
New England Newsclip

Regional Roundup

Two Bach Concerts, Vivaldi Program Next at Tanglewood

Next weekend's concerts at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire festival at Tanglewood in Lenox will consist of an all-Vivaldi concert on Friday night under direction of guest conductor Antonio Janigro and two Bach concerts next Saturday and Sunday conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, the orchestra's music direct—

Janigro also will be soloist at Friday's concert in Vivaldi's Cello Concerto in D. He has invited several members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be soloists including Doriot Dwyer, principal flute, in a Vivaldi flute concerto and Sherman Walt, principal bassoon, performing the Bassoon Concerto in D minor, Lois Schaefer will play Vivaldi's Concerto for Piccolo in C minor. Janigro also will conduct performances of the Sinfonia in C; Concerto, "Alla Rustica" and the Concerto Grosso in A.

Weekend Prelude

Friday's concert will begin at 9 and be preceded by the weekend prelude in the music shed at 7. E. Power Biggs will perform organ music by Johann Sebastian Bach at the prelude concert.

At next Saturday's concert Erich Leinsdorf will conduct Bach's B minor Mass with Helen Boatwright, Beverly Wolff, Florence Kopleff, Gene Bullard and Tom Krause as soloists. The chorus will be the Tanglewood Choir and the newly latter group is made up of singers from the Berkshire region and has been trained through the winter by Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The night concert begins at 8. Saturday morning the regular open rehearsal will take place in the music shed at 10.30.

Sunday, July 16, at 2.30 Leinsdorf will conduct a program of four works of Bach beginning with the Suite No. 3 followed by the Wedding Cantata with Helen Boatwright as soloist. Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, will be heard in the Violin Concert in A minor, and the concert will conclude with the Cantata No. 174 with soloists Miss Wolff Bullard and Krause.

Open to Friends

Phyllis Curtin, soprano, will give a recital at this Tuesday chamber music concert. Miss Curtin serves on the Berkshire Music Center faculty and has been heard in many previous Tanglewood concerts. The proceeds of the chamber music concerts are for the benefit of the center.

Three events this week are open to the Friends of Music at Tanglewood. Last weekend's festival guest conductor Jorg Mester will conduct the second Berkshire Music Center Orchestra concert this Wednesday, also at 8. The traditional Sunday morning Berkshire Music Center chamber music concert will be given at 10 in the theater.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SARATOGA SARATOGIAN
Monday, July 10, 1967

Tanglewood Offers Vivaldi, Bach Music This Weekend

N.E.

TANGLEWOOD, Mass.—This weekend's concerts at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will consist of an all Vivaldi concert on Friday night (July 14) under the direction of guest conductor Antonio Janigro and two Bach concerts Saturday and Sunday (July 15 and 16) conducted by the Orchestra's Music Director Erich Leinsdorf.

Janigro will also be soloist at Friday's concert in Vivaldis Concerto in D.

Friday's concert will begin at 9 p.m. and be preceded by the Weekend Prelude in the Music Shed at 7 p.m. E. Power Biggs will perform organ music by Johann Sebastian Bach at the Prelude concert.

At Saturday's Berkshire Festival concert Erich Leinsdorf will conduct Bach's B minor Mass with Helen Boatwright, Beverly Wolff, Florence Kopleff, Gene Bullard, and Tom Krause as soloists. The concert begins at 8 p.m. Saturday morning the regular Open Rehearsal will take place in the Music Shed at 10:30.

Sunday afternoon at 2:30 Leinsdorf will conduct a program of four works of Bach beginning with the Suite No. 3 followed by the Wedding Cantata with Helen Boatwright as soloist.

GREENVILLE, N. Y.
LOCAL
W. 500
JUL 12 1967

This Week At Tanglewood

This weekend's concerts at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will consist of an all Validi concert on Friday evening (July 14) under the direction of guest conductor Antonio Janigro and two Bach concerts Saturday and Sunday (July 15) and 16) conducted by the Orchestra's Music Director Erich Leindorf.

Mr. Janigro will also be soloist at Friday's concert in Vivaldi's Cello Concerto in D. He has invited several members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be soloists including Principal Basson, performing the Bassoon Concerto in D minor, Lois Schaefer will play Vivaldi's Concerto for Piccolo in C. minor.

Friday's concert will begin at 9:00 p. m. and be preceded by the Weekend Prelude in the Music Shed at 7:00 p. m. E. Power Biggs will perform organ music by Johann Sebastian Bach at the Prelude concert.

At Saturday's concert Erich Leinsdorf will conduct Bach's B minor Mass with Helen Boatwright, Beverly Wolff, Florence Kopleff Gene Bullard, and Tom Krause as soloists. The Chorus will be the Tanglewood Choir and the newly formed Berkshire Chorus. The latter group is made up of singers from the Berkshire region and has been trained through the winter by Charles Wilson, Assistant Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The evening concert begins at 8:00 p. m. Saturday morning the regular Open Rehearsal will take place in the Music Shed at 10:30.

Sunday afternoon at 2:30 Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct a program of 4 works of Bach beginning with the Suite No. 3 followed by the Wedding Cantata with Helen Boatwright as soloist. Joseph Silverstein, Concertmaster of the Orchestra will be heard in the Violin Concerto in A minor, and the concert will conclude with the Cantata No. 174 with soloist Beverly Wolff Gene Bullard and Tom Krause.

THE TIMES RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 41,720
JUL 8 1967

Tanglewood All-Vivaldi Program Set

Next weekend the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., will be an all-Vivaldi concert Friday night under the direction of guest conductor Antonio Janigro and two Bach concerts Saturday and Sunday.

Janigro will be the soloist in Friday's Vivaldi's Cello Concerto in D. He will conduct the Sinfonia in C; Concerto, "Alla Rustica," and the Concerto Grosso in A.

Erich Leinsdorf, the orchestra's music director, will conduct Bach's B Minor Mass Saturday with Helen Boatwright, Beverly Wolff, Florence Kopleff, Gene Bullard and Tom Krause as soloists.

Sunday afternoon, July 16, at 2:30 Leinsdorf will conduct four Bach works including Suite No. 3 and the Wedding Cantata with Helen Boatwright as soloist.

Tomorrow at 2:30 the Tanglewood Concert will have Leinsdorf conducting music by Mozart. The program will be Divertimento, K.205 and Mozart's Piano Concerto, K.491, with Claude Frank as soloist.

Tomorrow's concert will conclude with Mozart's Symphony No. 40.

SUNDAY NEWS
NEW YORK'S PICTURE NEWSPAPER
SUN. 3,070,836
JUL 9 1967

Tanglewood Guest

Antonio Janigro will be the guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday evening at the Berkshire Festival, Lenox, Mass. Janigro will lead an all-Vivaldi concert. Music director Erich Leinsdorf will be back on the podium for Saturday's and next Sunday's concerts.

Schenectady Union-Star
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 30,615
JUL 11 1967

Vivaldi Is Spotlighted At Tanglewood Show

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present an all-Vivaldi concert Friday at 9 p.m. at the Berkshire Music Festival, Tanglewood, and Bach concerts Saturday at 8 p.m. and Sunday at 2:30 p.m.

Antonio Janigro will be the guest conductor for the Friday program which will include flute, bassoon and piccolo concertos with members of the orchestra as soloists. Also on the program will be "Sinfonia in C," the "All Rustica" concerto and the "Concerto Grosso in A."

The conductor Saturday night will be Erich Leinsdorf. The work to be played is the "B Minor Mass" with Helen Boatwright, Beverly Wolff, Florence Kopleff, Gene Bullard and Tom Krause as soloists. The chorus will be the Tanglewood Choir and the newly formed Berkshire Chorus.

The Friday concert will be preceded by the Weekend Prelude at 7 p.m. with E. Power Biggs performing Bach organ music.

Leinsdorf also will conduct the Sunday afternoon program which will include "Suite No. 3," "Wedding Cantata" with Helen Boatwright as soloist, "Violin Concerto in A Minor" with Joseph Silverstein as soloist and "Cantata No. 174" with soloists Beverly Wolff, Gene Bullard and Tom Krause.

There will be an open rehearsal of the orchestra Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

Another program this week is a recital tonight by Phyllis Curtin, soprano, as part of the festival's chamber music series.

SUNDAY HERALD
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 300,250
JUL 9 1967
New England Newsclip

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Janigro to Be Guest Conductor, Soloist

ANTONIO JANIGRO

FLORENCE KOPLEFF

Next weekend's concerts at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will consist of an all-Vivaldi concert on Friday evening under the direction of guest conductor Antonio Janigro, and two Bach concerts Saturday and next Sunday conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

Mr. Janigro will also be soloist at Friday's concert in Vivaldi's Cello Concerto in D. He has invited several members of the orchestra to be soloists including Doriot Anthony Dwyer in a Vivaldi Flute Concerto, Sherman Walt performing the Bassoon Concerto in D minor and Lois Schaefer in Vivaldi's Concerto for Piccolo in C minor. Mr. Janigro also will conduct performances of the Sinfonia in C; Concerto, "Alla Rustica"; and the Concerto Grosso in A.

Friday's concert will begin at 9:00 p.m. and be preceded by the Weekend Prelude in the Music Shed at 7:00 p.m. E. Power Biggs will perform organ music by Bach.

SATURDAY Erich Leinsdorf will conduct Bach's B minor Mass with Helen Boatwright, Beverly Wolff, Florence Kopleff, Gene Bullard, and Tom Krause as soloists. The chorus will be the Tanglewood Choir and the newly formed Berkshire Chorus, trained by Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the orchestra. The evening concert begins at 8:00. Saturday morning the regular open rehearsal will take place in the Music Shed at 10:30.

Sunday afternoon at 2:30 Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct four works of Bach beginning with the Suite No. 3 and the Wedding Cantata with Helen Boatwright as soloist. Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, will be heard in the Violin Concerto in A minor, and the concert will conclude with the Cantata No. 174 with soloists Beverly Wolff, Gene Bullard, and Tom Krause.

BEE
NEWTOWN, CONN.
WEEKLY CIRC. 7,900
JUL 14 1967
New England Newsclip

Sunday, July 16, at 2:30 pm the Boston Symphony Orchestra program features a program of music by J. S. Bach. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Suite No. 3, the Wedding Cantata with Helen Boatwright as soloist The Violin Concerto in A minor with Joseph Silverstein as soloist; and the Cantata No. 174 with Beverly Wolff, Gene Bullard, Tom Krause and the Tanglewood Choir at Berkshire Music Festival, Lenox, Mass.

Bee Ads Bring Prompt Results

Herald American
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
S. 133,303
JUL 9 1967

At Tanglewood

Helen Boatwright soloist

Syracuse soprano Helen Boatwright will solo twice with the Boston Symphony Orchestra this coming weekend in all-Bach concerts at the Berkshire Music Festival, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Mrs. Boatwright will sing first at 8 p.m. Saturday in a concert conducted by Erich Leinsdorf. Along with Beverly Wolff, Florence Kopleff, Gene Bullard and Tom Krause, she will solo for Bach's B Minor Mass.

Assisting in the performance will be the Tanglewood Choir and the newly-formed Berkshire Chorus, which is comprised of singers from the area who have been trained through the winter by Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the orchestra.

The open rehearsal for this performance begins at 10:30 a.m. Saturday in the music shed.

The following day, Mrs. Boatwright solos on "Wedding Canata" in the second all-Bach concert at 2:30 p.m. in the shed.

Again conducted by Leinsdorf, the concert will also feature Suite No. 3; Violin Concerto in A Minor with Joseph Silverstein, the orchestra's concertmaster, as soloist, and Cantata No. 174 with soloists Wolff, Bullard and Krause.

Antonio Janigro will also be soloist as well as conductor at Friday's concert in Vivaldi's Cello Concerto in D. He has invited several members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be soloists including principal flute Doriot Anthony Dwyer in a Vivaldi Flute Concerto and Sherman Walt, principal bassoon, performing the Bassoon Concerto in D minor, Lois Schaefer will play Vivaldi's Concerto for Piccolo in C minor. Janigro also will conduct performances of the Sinfonia in C; Concerto, "Alla Rustica;" and the Concerto Grosso in A.

Friday's concert will begin at 9 p.m. preceded by the Weekend Prelude in the music shed at 7. E. Power Biggs will perform organ music by Johann Sebastian Bach at the prelude concert.

HELEN BOATWRIGHT

Phyllis Curtin, soprano, will give a recital at Tuesday's Berkshire Festival Chamber Music Concert. Miss Curtin serves on the Berkshire Music Center faculty and has been heard in many Tanglewood concerts. The proceeds of the chamber music concerts are for benefit of the Music Center.

Three events this week are open to the friends of music at Tanglewood. Last weekend's Festival guest conductor Jorge Mester will conduct the second Music Center Orchestra concert at 8 Wednesday evening, and there will be a composers forum also at 8 on Wednesday evening. The traditonal Sunday morning Berkshire Music Center Chamber Music Concert will be given at 10 in the Tanglewood Theater.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 537,050
JUL 16 1967
New England Newsclip

Music This Week

TODAY—Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting an all-Bach program: Suite No. 3, Wedding Cantata (soprano Helen Boatwright), Violin Concerto in A minor (Joseph Silverstein), Cantata No. 174 (mezzo-soprano Beverly Wolff, tenor Gene Bullard, bariton Tom Krause, Tanglewood Choir). Tanglewood Shed, Lenox, at 2:30.

—Dartmouth Symphony Orchestra. Britten's Serenade for Tenor, Horn and Strings (Robert Jones), premiere of Baird's Four Novelettes, Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4 (Anthony di Bonaventura) and Stravinsky's Canon on a Russian Popular Tune and Symphony in Three Movements. Spaulding Auditorium Hanover, N.H., at 8:30.

MONDAY—Jaime Laredo, violin, and Ruth Laredo, piano. Bartok's Sonata No. 2, Kirchner's Sonata Concertante and Beethoven's "Kreutzer." Sanders Theater, Cambridge, at 8:30.

Keyboard music of J.S. Bach and Francois Couperin, performed by John Gibbons, harpsichord, and Jerry Brainerd, organ. King's Chapel at 9 p.m.

TUESDAY — Zimbler Sinfonietta. Tanglewood Theater, Lenox, at 8:30.

WEDNESDAY — Dartmouth chamber music. Schumann's Liederkreis (soprano Evelyn Mandac), Ravel's Violin and Cello Sonata (Stuart Canin, Paul Olefsky), Henze's In Memoriam "Die Weisse Rose," Cantata "Whispers from Heavenly Death (tenor Michael Best) and Apollo et Hyazinthus (mezzo-soprano Gwendolyn Killebrew). Spaulding Auditorium, Hanover, N.H., at 8:30.

FRIDAY — Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting Mendelssohn's "A Midsummer Night's Dream" Overture, Schuller Diptych, Bartok's Concerto for two Pianos and Percussion and Poulenc's Concerto for Two Pianos (Eden and Tamir) and Strauss' Till Eulenspiegel. Tanglewood Shed, Lenox, at 9, preceded at 7 by the Weekend Prelude of partsongs sung by the Berkshire Boychoir.

SATURDAY—Boston Symphony, Seiji Ozawa conducting Mendelssohn's Hebrides Overture, Takemitsu's Requiem for Strings, Ligeti's Atmospheres and Berlioz's Symphonie Fantastique. Tanglewood Shed, Lenox, at 8, preceded at 10:30 a.m. by an open rehearsal of the weekend's programs.

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350
JUL 15 1967
New England Newsclip

6152 at Tanglewood For Vivaldi Concert

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — There was a steady, heavy rain when 6152 Vivaldi lovers moved through the gates at Tanglewood Friday night to hear guest-conductor Antonio Janigro lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Vivaldi program.

Served Him Well

It turned out to be a good night for the music of the red-haired genius of 18th-Century Italy. Janigro served him well. He is the founder and conductor of the world-famed chamber orchestra, I Solisti Di Zagreb, and has become much admired for his view of baroque music.

Friday, with Boston's big-chamber-sized orchestra (35 to 45), the sound was not only rigorously paced and rhythmically controlled but also it was warmly shaped dynamically and tonally.

It was, to say it concisely, pleasantly and warmly round as well as safely square.

Response for Piccolo

The soloists were Janigro, the conductor, Concerto for Cello, Op. 3, No. 9, Doriot, Anthony Dwyer; Concerto for Flute in G Major, Sherman Walt; Concerto for Bassoon, F. VIII, No. 6, Ralph Gomberg; Concerto for Oboe, F. VII, No. 1, and Lois Schaeffer, concerto for Piccolo, F. VI, No. 4.

The audience gave the biggest response to the piccolo, and, in truth, the gleaming, glistening little whistle was played with great skill.

But, over the long haul, the music for flute and oboe, probably would wear most comfortably. The first movement of the oboe concert, especially, was full of entertaining surprises.

Like Happy Bird

And the flute concerto was like a happy bird . . . darting and fluttering and soaring and floating.

The cello concerto, surprisingly, the least satisfying . . . surprisingly because Janigro is a first-class cellist. The reason probably could be traced to the fact that Janigro gave up the podium for the soloist's chair and let the orchestra shift for itself.

The flute concerto, which followed, under Janigro's direction from the podium seemed so much more secure and dynamically impressive, that the cello concerto in retrospect seemed almost drab.

Non-Solo Works

The three non-solo works were the Sinfonia No. 1 in C Major, Concerto in G Major ("Alla Rustica") and Concerto Grosso in A Major, F.XI, No. 4.

Each was finely balanced, pulsing, almost hypnotic demonstration of first class baroque.

There was a drizzle when E. Power Biggs started off the weekend at 7 with three Bach organ pieces. They were the "Concerto in A Minor after Antonio Vivaldi," the "Toccata in F Major" and the famous "Passacaglia and Fugue in C Minor."

Drizzle No Damper

The drizzle didn't diminish the usual prelude-program audience of about 1500, nor did the excess humidity seem to throw off the pitch of the Tanglewood organ (built into the shed when it was erected in 1938).

The organ sounded (in the upper registers) clear and lean . . . an appropriate sound for Bach.

Biggs presented a not unexpected, somewhat uninspired performance of three of Bach's more interesting organ pieces.

Best Known

The Passacaglia is, perhaps, the best known. It's strong point is a gradual, cumulative build-up of great blocks of sound. Its impact lies in the slow massive crescendo, so it tends to be more impressive in a confined space than it did Friday in the vast open-sided shed.

The tocatta's strong point lies in its contrapuntal complexity. Biggs fluffed the very difficult technical demands only a couple of times.

The concerto was distinguished by a lovely, plaintive middle movement.

Bach's Mass Tonight

Tonight, the Tanglewood Choir, the Berkshire Chorus and five vocal soloists will join the Orchestra and Erich Leinsdorf to perform one of the world's transcendental musical compositions . . . Bach's B Minor Mass.

TRANSCRIPT (e)
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
CIRC. 13,350
JUL 14 1967
New England Newsclip

Music by Vivaldi, Bach at Tanglewood

This weekend's concerts at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood (Lenox, Massachusetts) will consist of an all Vivaldi concert on Friday evening (July 14) under the direction of guest conductor Antonio Janigro and two Bach concerts Saturday and Sunday (July 15 and 16) conducted by the Orchestra's Music Director Erich Leinsdorf.

Mr. Janigro will also be soloist at Friday's concert in Vivaldi's Cello Concerto in D. He has invited several members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be soloists including Principal Flute Doriot Anthony Dwyer in a Vivaldi Flute Concerto and Sherman Walt, Principal Bassoon, performing the Bassoon Concerto in D minor. Lois Schaefer will play Vivaldi's Concerto for Piccolo in C minor. Mr. Janigro also will conduct performances of the Sinfonia in C; Concerto, "Alla Rustica;" and the Concerto Grosso in A.

Friday's concert will begin at 9 p.m. and be preceded by the Weekend Prelude in the Music Shed at 7 p.m. E. Power Biggs will perform organ music by Johann Sebastian Bach at the Prelude concert.

ANTONIO JANIGRO

At Saturday's Berkshire Festival concert Erich Leinsdorf will conduct Bach's B minor Mass with Helen Boatwright, Beverly Wolff, Florence Kopleff, Gene Bullard, and Tom Krause as soloists. The Chorus will be the Tanglewood Choir and the newly formed Berkshire Chorus. The latter group is made up of singers from the Berkshire region and has been trained through the winter by Charles Wilson, Assistant Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The evening concert begins at 8 p.m. Saturday morning the regular Open Rehearsal will take place in the Music Shed at 10.30.

BEVERLY WOLFF

Sunday afternoon at 2.30 Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct a program of four works of Bach beginning with the Suite No. 3 followed by the Wedding Cantata with Helen Boatwright as soloist. Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the orchestra will be heard in the Violin Concerto in A minor, and the concert will conclude with the Cantata No. 174 with soloists Beverly Wolff, Gene Bullard, and Tom Krause.

The Berkshire Festival Chamber Music concert on Tuesday evening (July 18, 8 p.m.) will feature the Zimbler Sinfonietta. The program will consist of works by Corelli, Barber, Tansman and Vivaldi. This concert is the third chamber concert in a series of six.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to three events at Tanglewood next week. Paul Callaway, organist-choirmaster of the Washington Cathedral, will conduct the Tanglewood Choir on Wednesday evening (July 19. 8 p.m.). On Thursday evening (July 20, 8 p.m.) there will be a concert of Baroque music, the second in a series of four under the general direction of Igor Kipnis.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900
JUL 15 1967
New England Newsclip

New for Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE PROGRAM last night at Tanglewood for the first concert of the third Berkshire Festival weekend was unique in several respects. It introduced a newcomer to the podium; one of the most renowned cellists of the day, Antonio Janigro, best known in this country as the director of the Soloists of Zagreb; and the program was devoted solely to a composer who had not been represented hitherto in Shed concerts, the Venetian contemporary of Bach and Handel, Antonio Vivaldi.

(The concert attendance was 6,152, largest for a Friday night since the season opened.)

Vivaldi was a prolific composer and the catalogue of his works includes ample shelves of solos for instruments not ordinarily heard in that role. Last night, in addition to his cello concerto in D, there were concertos for piccolo, flute, oboe and bassoon, respectively, and the soloists were the first-chair performers of the orchestra sections, Lois Schaefer, Doriot Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg and Sherman Walt.

Vivaldi's contemporaries all had great respect for him. Handel travelled to Venice to benefit from his counsel and Bach, from a distance, stole, appropriated and plain plagiarized from the bast output of his Italian colleague as often as he could.

* * *

VIVALDI was a violinist and apparently his own ability fortified him in his writing for strings. He would call some of his works for small orchestras a Sinfonia or a Concerto Grosso. There was great difficulty in distinguishing between the names various composers applied to suites of several contrasting movements. Mozart, in a later generation, would call some of his work in that form a serenade and, if performed outdoors, a cassation. Then there were concertantes and symphonies. When Bach dedicated his six works in this form to the Margrave of Brandenburg, he had contracted diabetes so he called them concertos, having been ordered to give up suites.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SYRACUSE HERALD JOURNAL
Friday, July 14, 1967

Soprano at third festival

A third music festival has obtained Helen Boatwright for a concert.

Mrs. Boatwright sings Monday at 8:30 p.m. in Hawkins Hall, Plattsburgh, for Festival Day of the Adirondack and Champlain Music Festival.

The Syracuse soprano will have concluded two appearances this weekend at the Berkshire Music Festival in Lenox, Mass., with the Boston Symphony Orchestra when she goes to the New York state event.

Her program for Monday's concert will be comprised of music by Handell, Pergolesi, Scarlatti, Schubert, Bizet, Debussy, Thompson and Barber.

Next month, the singer will appear with the Philadelphia Orchestra at the Saratoga Performing Arts Center.

SUNDAY JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
CIRC. 209,250
JUL 9 1967
New England Newsclip

HELEN BOATRIGHT will be the soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood on Saturday night.

20

TELEGRAM (m)
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 62,350
JUL 17 1967
New England Newsclip

Music: Bach-Vivaldi Weekend at Lenox

LENOX — Musically and in attendance, the Bach-Vivaldi weekend of the Berkshire Music Festival was a fine success.

Tanglewood concerts on Friday and Saturday nights, Saturday morning's open rehearsal, and yesterday attracted 21,971 persons.

This attests to the enduring popularity of Baroque music since ther were no noted soloists. The reduced Boston Symphony Orchestra of 50 players, conducted Saturday night and yesterday by Erich Leinsdorf, was in keeping with the needs of the music, but could hardly be considered a box-office asset.

Most memorable performance of the weekend was Bach's B minor Mass on Saturday night. It has devotional significance and musical magnificence.

There were 75 mixed voices of the Tanglewood Choir and Berkshire Chorus, splendidly prepared by Charles Wilson who also played the chamber organ.

Leinsdorf was thereby able to attain his objectives, placing equal stress on marvelous architecture and lavish distribution of reverent and grandiose materials.

Broad, profound choruses, such as the Kyrie, Cum sancto Spiritu and Et expecto had smooth texture through which dramatic tension penetrated.

Excerpts of quiet nobility were murals of rich tonal coloration. Even the five-voiced treatment of the Kyrie sounded methodically easy.

Vocal and instrumental soloists were generally less satisfactory.

Mezzo soprano Betty Allen substituted on short notice for Beverly Wolff who was indisposed. There was little trace of unease in her Laudamus Te. Her voice has good substance, but a bit thick in low range and lacking in facility.

Gene Bullard, tenor, had a pleasing lyricism, marred in spots by stridency. His best results were in the Benedictus.

Helen Boatwright, soprano, demonstrated a certain flair, but a shallow tone and vague pronunciation of the Latin.

In contrast was contralto Florence Kopleff's composed, opulent, cultured voice and easy projection. She sang as if it was the easiest of all things to do.

Bass Tom Krause hasn't a big enough voice to bring true dramatic import to the Bach work. Nor was he helped by the poorly played horn solo of Charles Yancich, substituting f or James Stagliano.

As an ensemble, the orchestra was splendid.

Yesterday afternoon's Bach concert had two highlights. These were the orchestra in Suite No. 3 in D major, and concert master Joseph Silverstein's performance of Violin Concerto No. 1 in A minor.

The rest was more historically interesting than tonally inviting. It consisted of the "Wedding Cantata, Vanish, Winter Shadows," sung by Miss Boatwright, and Cantata 174, "I Love the Highest with my Whole mind." The latter had the Tanglewood Chorus of 35 mixed voices, and soloists Betty Allen, Bullard and Krause.

Leinsdorf and the orchestra gave the Suite sweep and stateliness. High trumpets came through ringingly, tonally enriched by the harpsichord, played by Igor Kipnis. The famous "Air" was impressivly intoned by strings with a soft carpet of sound beneath.

Miss Boatwright's tone was generally pleasing in "Wedding Cantata," and she displayed a flexible coloratura. In spots, she was breathless and produced weak low tones.

Silverstein played the violin concerto with vigorous sweeps of the bow. His diction was perfectly clear and his tone was warm and expressive.

Soloists for Cantata 174 made much the same impressions that they had in the B minor Mass.

Herald American
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
S. 133,303
JUL 16 1967

Boatwright is glittering

By EARL GEORGE

Whatever was damp in Western Massachusetts yesterday, and plenty was, it certainly didn't include the spirits of either audience or performers at the Tanglewood Music Shed.

The music was the Bach B minor Mass. The performers Erich Leinsdorf, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Tanglewood Chorus, and a group of soloists that added a crowning touch to a performance that was already regal in its authority.

No soloist glittered with more distinction than Syracuse's Helen Boatwright. Bach's masterpiece may offer no solo soprano aria, but Mrs. Boatwright's work in the duets consistently made things pretty hard on the competition.

And distinguished competition it was — mezzo Betty Allen, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor Gene Bullard, and bass Tom Krause. Miss Kopleff was particularly effective in the Agnus Dei, despite a placidity of manner that belied the intensity with which she sings.

Bullard, with a virtuoso assist from concertmaster Joseph Silverstein, made a strong impression in the Benedictus. Krause's work suffered the fate of the whole movement which, in matters of ensemble, was a little shaggy around the edges.

Ensemble, in fact, especially in the orchestra, was not what marks the evening. This was a performance of total sweep more than detail. Leinsdorf made it quite clear what he was up to in the opening Kyrie: When the music was slow, it was very, very slow — and when it was fast it was torrid.

The chorus, trained by the orchestra's assistant conductor, Charles Wilson, who also presided at the portable baroque organ, sang with verve and precision. It suffered only from occasional attacks of extreme vibrato someplace around the region of the second soprano. But these, fortunately, were not chronic.

Instrumental soloists play a big part in this music, and those who played their parts with particular felicity included flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer and oboe d'amorist Laurence Thorstenberg.

The audience was large, enthusiastic, and safe from rain.

Today, Mrs. Boatwright will have a whole show to herself — the Bach Wedding Cantata. Anyone who heard her tonight will agree that she deserved it.

HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE (e)
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
CIRC. 14,250
JUL 18 1967
New England Newsclip

Concerts Are Excellent As Tanglewood Attendance Is Reduced By Weather

The Berkshire Festival's third weekend of concerts started off with the Prelude recital Friday evening, by E. Power Biggs, attended, in spite of the heavy rain by a sizeable group of organ devotees, who heard Biggs, on the Tanglewood instrument, give his all to Bach's Concerto in Aminor, after Antonio Vivaldi, (forecasting 9:00 program) Toccata in Fmajor, and the stirring Passacaglia and Fugue in Cminor.

New to the Tanglewood audience of 6152 (largest Friday attendance so far) was Antonio Janigro, guest conductor for the first time, in a program of Vivaldi firsts. Janigro is better known here as director of the Soloists of Zagreb, world famous for its rendition of baroque music, and as an exceptionally fine cellist.

After a rather hesitatingly played Cmajor Sinfonia (the musicians and Janigro seemed to be getting acquainted with each other) Mr. Janigro directed and played a cello concerto in Dmajor, which didn't fare much better because of the dual role, perhaps, or because the music itself is rather repetitious and undecided. Mr. Janigro's artistry is unquestioned and his technical skill obvious. Perhaps most unusual in the whole program, and one appealing to the audience was the Concerto for Piccolo, played unerringly by Lois Schaefer. Other concertos, also played by first desk artists, Doriot Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, Sherman Walt, included those for flute, oboe, bassoon, each definitely attuned to the particular instrument, in varying degrees of interest, all with the charm of the period. Igor Kipnis was most commendable at the harpsichord.

Saturday evening saw 6367 Bach advocates converge on the Big Shed to hear his famous Mass in Bminor, not often performed in one program. Florence Kopleff's contralto, breathfree and sustaining the inherent long lines, was the most effectively, particularly in the Qui Sedes, with Laurence Thorstenberg, oboe e'amore solo.

Mr. Leinsdorf directed with his usual close attention to musical detail, the nucleus and outer group of musicians, the well-trained chorus (by Charles Wilson) in quite good balance and excellent tone, dynamically and quality-wise, and the soloists, whom he allowed to seek out their own cues for the most part. But verve was lacking, there wasn't the springiness in the Gloria and the Hossana one expects from Bach's music. (We remember the Smith and Wesleyan choruses giving almost too much spirit to their performance a few years ago, but a refreshing overabundance).

Betty Allen replaced soprano Beverly Wolff at very short notice, and gave very creditable support to Helen Boatwright in the Christe Eleison, the chorus not faring quite as well in the Kyrie. She was heard again with Silverstein as soloist in the Laudamus te and the wonderful celli accompaniment.

Possessor of a superb voice, and the ability to use it tastefully, although because of Bach's demanding writing for all the vocal parts, it was strained in the upper register at times. Helen Boatwright was not matched well with tenor Gene Bullard in the Domine Deus, whose voice is not particularly robust, in fact, is rather tightly confined, carries very little, but is true in definition.

Baritone Tom Krause, no newcomer to Tanglewood, has a warm quality in his musically exact tones; resonance was not great in the Quoniam tuam, and the horn solo (also a replacement by Charles Yanicichi) and woods rather insecure. With the Et in spiritum sanctum, however, Mr. Krause took on more stature, in fact the whole was beautifully coordinated, bassoon, oboi d'amore, organ.

Another high point was the Et in unum dominum duet by Kopleff and Boatwright, and again Kopleff's Agnus Dei aria, movingly portrayed by all concerned (strings). Kopleff, it seemed, with her gorgeously fluid tones, inspired the performers perhaps more than Leinsdorf, who, as is well known, had no mean task in molding the participants in this mighty choral work. If pure emotional excitement was lacking, it was still a performance of great worth. The audience was greatly appreciative.

Rains continuing to pour down on Sunday, kept attendance to 5595, for another Bach program, which included the third Suite in Dmajor, and its greatly popularized Air for the Gstring (no one takes it quite as slowly as Munch), Boatwright as soloist in the "Wedding" Cantata, Vanish, Winter Shadows, beautifully proposed. For the second half, Joseph Silverstein, Concertmaster, as usual sweetly toned, (he is inclined to use too much vibrato sometimes, destroying the intonation) in the Aminor Concerto, No. 1, was followed by a first performance of the Cantata 174, "Ich liebe den Hochsten von ganzem Gemute," stirringly portrayed, with Betty Allen, contralto, Gene Bullard, and Tom Krause, the Tanglewood choir, Charles Wilson, organ, and Igor Kipnis, harpsichord.

PATRIOT-LEDGER (e)
QUINCY, MASS.
CIRC. 58,900
JUL 18 1967
New England Newsclip

Postscripts On Berkshires' Bach

By Peter M. Knapp

LENOX — The weekend at Tanglewood belonged to Johann Sebastian Bach, but for the weather they should have played Handel's Water Music.

Enough moisture has been dumped on the Berkshires in the last few days to last a season. Even the junior monsoon, however, failed to deter the determined Bachophiles from thronging Saturday night's performance of Bach's Mass in b minor. The 7,367 who came heard a magnificently-conceived version by the Boston Symphony, the Tangelewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus, and five vocal soloists directed by Erich Leinsdorf.

Like the Passions, the Bach Mass is a complex and monumental undertaking into which each individual contribution must fit at the moment of performance. Yet if anyone made a decisive contribution to this production, it was Assistant Conductor Charles Wilson, who prepared the choral parts to the point where the singers were able to respond to Leinsdorf's conception of the emotional content of the score and not merely attend to literal execution of it.

The soloists may gain their moments of attention, but the B Minor Mass is first and foremost a choral work. It was good to see that the usual mob scene of Tangelewood choruses was cut down to about 75 voices. With Wilson's coaching, the result was superior articulation, fugues in which the interwoven lines could be clearly heard, a general tidiness, and flexibility. Moreover, the chorus sang with genuine spirit closely fashioned to the demands of the text.

Conducting With Care

With the chorus responding so well, Leinsdorf was able to shape a performance of majestic scope, clarity of detail and cumulative strength. It was a reading in which control and careful modeling of individual sections won out over sheer dramatics and overpowering sound. The fugal sections were permitted to unfold at their own pace and accrue their own structural power.

The orchestra, too, played incisively. One recalls the strong instrumental pulse of the "Osanna" choruses, the splendor of the high Bach trumpets (Armando Ghitalla, Andre Come, Roger Voisin), the sonority of the woodwinds in the orchestral prelude. There were also expert obbligato solos, notably by flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Laurence Thorstenberg and Hugh Matheny on the oboi d'amore, and in the "Benedictus" by Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein.

Of the vocal soloists, contralto Florence Kopleff towered over her colleagues in ease of delivery, sense of style, and commitment to musical interpretation of the text. Her "Agnus Dei" aria, the most exalted of the score, was eloquently and naturally sung.

Bass Tom Krause made little impression in the "Quoniam," taken at such a fast clip by Leinsdorf that the aria and the marvelous obbligato Bach wrote for two bassoons and solo horn became nearly unintelligible. Krause was better in "Et in Spiritum sanctum," though his voice lacks much cutting power.

Tenor Gene Bullard displayed a clean, uncluttered, pleasant tone that worked well in the "Benedictus," though he pressed somewhat in reaching for the upper notes. Mezzo Betty Allen, substituting for the indisposed Beverly Wolff, has a voice basically too thick and heavy to be suited for the florid demands of Bach.

In her duet with soprano Helen Boatwright, the voices were gratingly mismatched; a far better blend came in Miss Boatwright's duet with Bullard in "Domine Deus" in which the soprano did her best singing. Elsewhere, she was subject to vocal and technical limitations. Most annoying were her tendency to run out of breath in crucial places and her whooping attacks that often landed off pitch.

Sunday afternoon continued the Symphony's winning ways with Bach. Though the skies showed signs of clearing by concert time, the morning downpour kept the crowd to 5,595.

Despite the continuous damp weather, the musicians managed a bright-sounding Suite No. 3 in D. The beloved air was played with lustrous tone by the strings, and Leinsdorf made it flow like cream, though the introduction to the overture seemed faster than desirable.

For the other instrumental work, Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein soloed in the Violin Concerto No. 1 in a minor. It was a soft, sweet-toned performance which might have had more punch but had the virtues of smoothness, imaginative phrasing and delicious song in the slow movement.

Two cantatas rounded out the afternoon. Soprano Helen Boatwright sang beautifully in the "Wedding" Cantata, "Weichet nur, betruebte Schatten" ("Vanish, Winter Shadows"), No. 202. Cantata 174, "Ich liebe den Hoechsten von ganzem Gemuete" had contralto Betty Allen, tenor Gene Bullard and bass Tom Krause as soloists, and the Tanglewood Choir for the closing chorale.

In her solo cantata, Miss Boatwright was a far superior singer than during the previous evening, and she rippled through the florid passages, managed the awkward chromatics of the first aria, and generally used her small, bright-toned soprano with distinction. She had good diction, too, as well as a charming variety of expression in the gay aria, "Sich ueben im Lieben."

The closing cantata, prefaced by a reworking of the first movement of the Brandenburg Concerto No. 3, had less interesting vocal contributions, though the singing was competent enough.

This Bach weekend began, fittingly enough, with a program of music by Antonio Vivaldi on a rainy Friday evening. The Venetian composer's music was greatly admired by Bach, a rapport that resulted in the several Bach transcriptions of Vivaldi compositions.

Despite the poor weather, 6,152 turned out for the delightful concert conducted by Antino Janigro, making his Tanglewood debut. Janigro has a reputation as a Vivaldi specialist through the vigorous interpretations of his chamber group, I Solisti di Zagreb, of which he is founder and conductor. He also is a cellist of considerable expertise, as demonstrated in his playing of the Vivaldi Cello Concerto in D, Opus 3, No. 9.

Though the Boston Symphony only rarely gets a chance to play Vivaldi and has not had the time to develop the absolute affinity of Vivaldi ensemble work that groups like Janigro's acquire, its musicans can cope with any music and any style. The Bostonians followed Janigro's flowing and expansive direction creditably and gained in ensemble spirit as the evening progressed.

Solo Standout

While Vivaldi held the stage alone as a composer, there was a parade of soloists from the orchestra in a sampling of some of the hundreds of solo concerti the fecund mind of Vivaldi produced: Doriot Anthony Dwyer in the Flute Concerto in G; Sherman Walt (with an impressive new moustache) in an e minor Bassoon Concerto; Ralph Gomberg in a d minor Oboe Concerto; Lois Schaefer in a Piccolo Concerto in C.

All of these soloists displayed virtuosic dexterity and mastery of their instruments. The audience seemed to grow more enthusiastic with each soloist. Miss Schaefer, especially was well received. She turned her shrill-toned instrument into agile, amusing and appealing figurations and happy bird-like chirps.

Janigro bowed through his concerto contribution with stylistic assurance and a light, always firm tone. Without his direction, however, the accompaniment became lifeless.

Besides the solo concerti, the program included the Sinfonia No. 1 in C, the "Alla Rustica" Concerto in G, and the familiar Concerto Grosso in A.

ANTONIO JANIGRO
. . . two jobs at Tanglewood

SUNDAY TELEGRAM
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 107,550
JUL 16 1967
New England Newsclip

Piccolo Concerto Gains Praise

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — The biggest hit of the Berkshire Music Festival's third weekend opening concert on Friday night was made by Lois Schaefer playing Vivaldi's Concerto in C major for Piccolo.

One might have expected the outstanding event to be the Tanglewood debut of Antonio Janigro conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Hearing a full-fledged concerto for piccolo and orchestra is a once-in-a-lifetime experience for most persons.

It was intriguing to hear the pure, piping sounds Miss Schaefer produced with her tiny instrument in long, note-paced, speedy phrases. She was marvelous as technician and interpreter.

Not that the ensemble could have drowned her out if it had tried. The men gave the piccolo part complete exposure. The soloist negotiated trills, runs and wide intervals at breakneck speed. In the slow movement Miss Schaefer's tone was in rich string harmonics.

Friday night's all-Vivaldi program historically coincided with the weekend's remaining Bach programs. Harpsichord was used to further authenticity. Eight duplicative Vivaldi works engaged five soloists in concertos. Besides Miss Schaefer, produced with her tiny instrument in long, note-paced, speedy phrases. She was marvelous as technician and interpreter.

Complete Exposure

Not that the ensemble could have drowned her out if it had tried. The men gave the piccolo part complete exposure. The soloist negotiated trills, runs and wide intervals at breakneck speed. In the slow movement Miss Schaefer's tone was in rich string harmonics.

Friday night's all-Vivaldi program historically coincided with the weekend's remaining Bach programs. Harpsichord was used to further authenticity. Eight duplicative Valvaldi works engaged five soloists in concertos. Besides Miss Schaefer, they were Janigro in a cello concerto; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Sherman Walt bassoon and Ralph Gomberg oboe. All but Janigro are members of the Boston Symphony.

This has been a weekend for baroque connoisseurs and enthusiasts.

Janigro is presumably versed in the chamber music idioms having been conductor, for the past 14 years, of I Solisti Di Zagreb from Yugoslavia.

'Alla Rustica'

He conducted the 50-member orchestra in Sinfonia No. 1 in C major; "Alla Rustica" Concerto in G major, and Concerto Grosso in A major. His style had definition and was utilitarian. While he expended plenty of energy, what came through were generalizations of accents, shadings, balances, and dynamics.

Janigro is a better conductor than cellist. He played the cello concerto with his back to the orchestra which exacted a toll in phrasing. His tone was warm.

In the G major flute concerto, Mrs. Dwyer demonstrated agile passagework, strong phrasing, and stylistic insight. She was admirably assisted in the slow movement by Jules Eskin. During the applause, Mrs. Dwyer took on the conductor's responsibility by calling on Eskin for a well-merited bow.

Walt's technique was reliable in the E minor bassoon concerto. While the instrument may have seemed drab, it blended well with the ensemble.

Gomberg eliminated superfluous nasal quality from his oboe in the D minor concerto. What remained was a clear, vibrant sound. Phrasing was adroit, without volume intrusion from the orchestra.

Janigro's part in all this was not particularly impressive.

There's a vast difference between using a baton with dominating purpose or just shaking a stick with style.

E. Power Biggs played bach organ music for Friday night's weekend prelude.

Concerto in A minor (after Vivaldi) lacked vitality because of static tonal coloration and some inaccuracy. Toccata in F major had going power, good pedal work, and instrumental variety.

SYRACUSE
Herald Journal
D. 133,303
JUL 17 1967

Tanglewood offering

Boatwright shines in Bach wedding cantata

By EARL GEORGE
Herald-Journal Music Critic

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass. — The all-Bach program that closed a weekend of Baroque music at the Berkshire Music Center was in many ways the best of the series, if only in matters of variety. Friday night's program was all-Vivaldi, and that, mostly concertos. Saturday saw the Bach B minor Mass, which, while it certainly is varied within itself, is still, after all, always the same piece. But yesterday's Tanglewood audience, while not the largest of the weekend (the weather was still threatening) had the advantage of hearing a program that was distinguished not only by the range of its content; but by the consistently high level of its performance as well.

It opened with the Suite in D major, No. 3, and Erich Leinsdorf led the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a way that brought out every expressive detail of the music's imposing architecture.

The real treat of the afternoon, though, was what followed. It was the second of Bach's "wedding" cantatas, set for soprano solo, oboe, strings and harpsichord. The piece itself is a real beauty, especially its poignantly pastoral opening aria. But it was a case where the beauty of the music had almost to compete with the loveliness of its performance. Helen Boatwright was the soloist, and it's hard to know what deserves the most praise — the astonishing purity and quality of her sound, or the sense — and sensibility — that she brought to the music through the charm of the manner with which she projected it. Even someone who had never heard Bach, or a word of German, would have been won over. Certainly the Tanglewood audience was, as were also, Leinsdorf and the instrumental soloists, oboist Ralph Gomberg, and violinist Joseph Silverstein, who after a few bows, joined the audience in its approbation.

But Silverstein could also shine. Which he most certainly did immediately after intermission, when he himself became protagonist in the A minor Violin Concerto. The Bach concertos are modest in both their dimensions and pretensions. It takes an artist of great control and subtlety to bring out the best in every phrase, and to balance the carefully weighed periods of this music into an exciting rhetoric. Well, that's just the kind of artist Silverstein is. And that's what he did.

The program closed with the Cantata No. 174, which opens with Bach's re-orchestration of the first movement of his third Brandenburg Concerto. The re-scoring includes some hunting-horns, but since the orchestra's first-horn player was indisposed this weekend, it was thought better to perform it just with strings. This, plus the fact that the requirements of the cantata made Bach transpose the well-known piece a whole-step down from its original key, made the whole thing a strange, if interesting experience.

The brief series of arias and recitative was sung by soprano Betty Allen, substituting, as she had done in the B minor mass, for Beverly Wolff, tenor Gene Bullard, and bass Tom Krause. All acquitted themselves admirably, as did the Tanglewood chorus and everyone else under Leinsdorf's knowing direction.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900
JUL 17 1967
New England Newsclip

21

Music Reviews

Baroque Weekend at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

TWO BACH programs preceded by a Friday evening of Vivaldi was the menu for the third Berkshire Festival weekend at Tanglewood. Saturday evening and yesterday afternoon Erich Leinsdorf resumed his regular post as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra after having yielded the baton Friday evening to a first-time guest and renowned cello soloist, Antonio Janigro.

Janigro played Vivaldi for his entire program and he made it lively and sparkling. After an opening Sinfonia came the cello concerto in D which the soloist played with vibrancy and vigor, dispensing with a conductor but supplying, from his soloist's chair, ample direction and signals to the accompanying string sections, who responded with mildly sluggish obedience.

* * *

VIVALDI, a contemporary of Bach and Handel, was a prolific composer and while the agility and animation of his music were faithfully conveyed there is a similarity in pattern and form of all eight works played that evening, whether instrumental solos or concerted numbers, and the composer's harmonic limits are not venturesome.

Concertos, in addition to that for the cello, were played by Doriot Dwyer, flute, Sherman Walt, bassoon, and Ralph Gomberg, oboe, all with the superior artistry and competence for which they are known. But the hit of the evening was the concerto for piccolo in C Minor, played by Lois Schaefer. This is my first experience in hearing this instrument in this capacity, (except for its chance in "The Stars and Stripes Forever"), and Miss Schaefer's agility and clear, liquid tone, instead of the shrill piercing quality most often heard from this instrument, delighted and astonished the audience into a remarkable spontaneous explosion of approval.

Helen Boatwright

* * *

SATURDAY EVENING Leinsdorf led an impressive B Minor mass. The immense work is fittingly performed in a concert hall, and with applause, but it had the qualities and dimensions of the architecture of a Gothic cathedral.

And as a stone edifice it stands, defying time and elements with certain details becoming more noticeable and beautiful with age. Bach's choice of registers and of accompanying instruments, above or below his melodic inspiration and harmonic expressiveness, become more visible and valid on each rehearing.

The Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus, prepared by Charles Wilson, gave instant reflection of Leinsdorf's demands. Such instances as the deeply impressive "Qui Tollis" in the Gloria and the "Et Incarnatus Est" of the Credo, both sung with skeletal instrumental support, were awesome and inspiring and the more animated and swifter-moving episodes were sung with effulgence.

* * *

THE VOCAL SOLOISTS were notably happy choices, all contributing substantially in their various allotments to the general excellence of the evening. Helen Boatwright, soprano, Betty Allen, a last-minute substitute for indisposed mezzo-soprano Beverly Wolff, Florence Kopleff, contralto, Gene Bullard, tenor, and Tom Krause, bass, made up the roster.

Miss Allen is a former student at the Berkshire Music Center. Her career, launched at Tanglewood, has brought her merited and continuing admiration and respect in wide musical areas.

The weather was far from ideal for this weekend of concerts but the attendance gave scant evidence that many had denied themselves the pleasure of a Tanglewood program. Friday night, in spite of rain, had the highest attendance for a first-night of any weekend this season. The figure was 6,152. Saturday night was even better, 7,367 and yesterday, after the heavy morning rain there still was an audience of 5,595.

* * *

THE SECOND Bach program yesterday afternoon offered the Suite No. 3, the A Minor violin concerto, and two cantatas, in which three of the soloists of the previous evening participated. The "Wedding" cantata (No. 202) "Vanish, Winter Shadows" for soprano, was sung by Miss Boatwright aided by numerous and varied instrumental soloists from the orchestra, Ralph Gomberg matched the quality of his oboe tone with the enchanting spirit of Miss Boatwright's voice with outstanding artistry.

* * *

THE CANTATA (No. 174) "Ich liebe den Hochsten von ganzem Gemute" is a short and tight little masterpiece utilizing as an overture an arrangement by Bach of his own G Major Brandenburg concerto and then alloting the contralto, Miss Allen, an expressive aria and the tenor, Gene Bullard, a recitative, all followed by a vigorous aria for bass, sung by Tom Krause. The finale is a chorale of unusually effective character which was sung by the Tanglewood Choir.

The A Minor violin concerto was played by concertmaster Joseph Silverstein with extreme ease and remarkably even quality.

NEWS (e)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 98,600
JUL 17 1967
New England Newsclip

B.S.O. Presents Bach at Tanglewood

By ARTHUR T. ANDREWES

Dull skies and a persistent drizzle failed to dissuade a crowd of 5595 Bach lovers from attending the Boston Symphony Orchestra performance of four works by the Thuringian composer at Tanglewood yesterday.

Erich Leinsdorf conducted orchestral combinations of various size and content depending upon the nature of the work being presented. For the most part, a small chamber orchestra with less than two dozen instruments was utilized.

In Suite Number Three in D Major, Leinsdorf used a full orchestra with imposing majesty. In the manner of a royal procession, the music presents a criteria of dignity upon which the entire work is contrasted. The light, sensitive themes are progressed by the delicate hapsichord voice in the second movement.

The dance themes that make up the remainder of the Suite are incomparable in their vivacious activity. The spirit and magnificent welling forth of this piece makes it an appropriate curtain-raiser.

Helen Boatwright sang the "Wedding" Cantata (Vanish, winter shadows.) with an elegant, although sometimes heavy, treatment. I believe that this particular work, while necessitating a strength and vitality, contains certain portions that should be handled with feminine grace. Even with Germanic diction, the words do mean something.

Her tonal quality and control were as they should be for a soprano of her high professional and artistic standing. If there was any problem, it was in interpretation and not in vocal quality.

The accompanying instruments such as oboe, violin, cello, bassoon, and strings were handled in the traditionally fine manner of the Boston Symphony virtuosos.

Without a doubt, the high caliber of musician found in that particular ensemble was emphasized by the performance of first violinist Joseph Silverstein. As soloist in Bach's Violin Concerto Number One in A Minor, Silverstein turned in a choice piece of musicianship and artistry.

The few violin works of this proportion that Bach wrote are not easily performed to perfection. Bach was a violinist and wrote to please his own abilities and sense of creative values.

In the second and third movements, Silverstein advances a personal involvement with the music. Moving smoothly in the Andante there was an emotional quality that did not exceed the bounds of sensitivity.

Rather, the assertion of a willing strength by the soloist came in the final movement, bringing the soloist and blunted orchestra into a satisfying finish.

The final selection of the program was the Canta Number 74 in which orchestra, solo voices and chorus were involved in a short but interesting composition.

Contralto Betty Allen substituted for the ailing Beverly Wolf and did a fairly good job of it considering the short notice of the performance. There was not enough music among the soloists to determine whether the work really displayed their best talents. I think not.

The chorus, prepared by Charles Wilson performed extremely well and sounded like a single voice. The small orchestra arrangement was almost too strong for the soloists. Actually the piece was less than the usual Tanglewood presentation both as a selection and as a work by which any artist should be judged.

However, I will concede that German vocal compositions are difficult. Furthermore, anyone who sings this type of music should be praised for their tenacity and daring spirit.

22

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350
JUL 17 1967
New England Newsclip

At Tanglewood

Sensitivity Is Keynoted In Stirring Bach Concert

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX—How anyone could retain a belief that Bach was nothing more than a mechanical technician after hearing the program at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon is beyond understanding.

Four Examples

There were at least four periods during the course of the concert when the composer's emotional sensitivity was expressed effectively.

The first, as might be expected, came during the opening suite No. 3 for orchestra, it was the air known the world over as "Air for the G String."

The piece was conceived in an inspired moment, and although a bit of shine in the string tone may have be2en takn off the inspiration by the high humidity, it floated beautifully and serenely across the lawns.

Happy Tumblers

The second came during the opening aria of the "Wedding" cantata for soprano of No. 202, "Weichet Nur, Betrube Schatten."

Helen Boatwright was the soloist, and the air was accompanied by oboeist Ralph Gomberg. It was a personal, intimate expression of great feeling.

The third came during the same cantata, the aria which starts "Sich Upen Im Leiben."

Miss Boatwright was again a companied by Gomberg plu Sherman Walt's bassoon, and th trio danced nimbly and joyousl like a team of happy tumbler leaping and rolling.

Oom-Pah-Pah

The fourth followed intermis sion. It was the middle move ment of the violin Concerto No 1, in a minor, with Joseph Silverstein as soloist.

Silverstein's gentle treatmen of the bow has always drawn a sweet tone from his violin. It is a tone highly appropriate to 18th Century music and lately, as demonstrated last week when he played the solo part in the "Haffner Serenade," it has been enhanced by a wider range of expression.

There was, to be sure, an occasional appearance of an old-fashioned German-band oom-pah-pah rhythm, as in the first gavotte in the suite but there is a minimum of it in the cantatas and concertos.

Solo Voices

One of the best aspects of Bach's cantatas is the lively interest attracted by the chamber-sized accompaniment for the solo voices.

Almost always its consists of contrapuntal melodies of importance equal to the solo voice. All are closely woven.

During the "Wedding" cantata the violin and the cello, as well as aforementioned oboe and bassoon, were assigned arias with the soprano.

Giant Cathedral

And during Cantata No. 174, a couple of oboes and the cello joined Betty Allen, conralto, during an aria. Gene Bullard, tenor, and Tom Krause, bass also soloists in the cantata were accompanied by strings.

The Tanglewood Choir ended Cantata 174 and concert with a stately chorale. Its 37 voices, many of them professional soloists, sounded like a much larger group. It was a fittingly impressive finish . . . like a recessional in a giant cathedral.

Attendance was 5595. The weeknd total was 21,971.

19th-20th Century

Next weekend's programs will be a mixture of 19th and 20th Century. Friday night Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir will be soloists for Poulenc's Concerto for Two Pianos; Saturday night Seiji Ozawa will be guest conductor for a program that will include Berlioz "Symphonie Fantastique," Sunday afternoon Eden and Tamir will play Mendelssohn's Concerto for Two Pianos in E major.

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,100
JUL 17 1967
New England Newsclip

Week-end of Bach Done to Stagnation

By KAREN MONSON
Contributing Critic

LENOX — The week-end, the third of Tanglewood's 1967 season, featured the combined choruses, the Chamber Orchestra, and soloists in works by J. S. Bach and Vivaldi. Perhaps it was the cold, rainy weather which took the edge off the excitement of most of the performances. Or, at least, one would like to blame it on the weather and not on the basic musical confusion and apathy regarding Baroque performance which were so often suggested and occasionally were clearly evident.

The principal event of the week-end was the performance on Saturday evening of Bach's B-Minor Mass, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf. This magnificent creation contains some of Bach's most inspired music and some of his most intricate vocal work—and is terribly difficult to present with any real success. Unfortunately, though his timing and pacing were exceptionally fine, Mr. Leinsdorf's interpretation lacked both the emotional force and the rhythmic swing which are needed to give the listener a powerful. unified experience. The net effect was one of a series of small parts, without any substantial connection. And not all of these parts were performed well.

Soloists Helen Boatwright, soprano, and Florence Kopleff, contralto, were outstanding. Both have beautiful, pure voices and sing apparently without effort. Their duet work was superb. Gene Bullard, tenor, and Tom Krause, bass, were much less impressive; the same can be said of Betty Allen, who, at the last moment, stood in for Beverly Wolff.

The Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus, though excellently trained by Charles Wilson, only once or twice really let loose; the rest of the time both the sound and the spirit were stifled. But it was clearly the orchestra which was responsible for the stagnancy of the performance, and at Sunday afternoon's all-Bach program it became only too evident where the problem lies.

The opening work on this final concert of the week-end was Bach's Suite No. 3 in D-Major. Here, and also in subsequent numbers, Mr. Leinsdorf encouraged the orchestra to make the most of the horizontal, melodic lines; in fact, to make the lines longer and smoother than they in fact are. After the first few seconds, the placid, remote sound became too detached and without nuance, especially without energy, though it rarely lacked precision.

This criticism also applies to Joseph Silverstein's performance of Bach's A-Minor Violin Concerto, though Mr. Silverstein's tone is so beautiful and he plays with such grace that some of the problems were overcome.

Mrs. Boatwright's performance of the "Wedding" Cantata was one of the high spots of the week-end. As in Saturday evening's concert, her voice was pure and agile, and her manner wonderfully gracious. The arias with Ralph Gomberg, oboe, and Mr. Silverstein, violin, were beautiful. In fact, Mr. Silverstein's most impressive playing during the week-end was in the arias which called for solo violin. His tone and musicianship were always perfect complements to the voices.

Friday night, Antonio Janigro made his first appearance at Tanglewood, starring both as a conductor and a 'cellist. His all-Vivaldi program consisted of five concerti, two concerti grossi and one sinfoni—an awful lot of Vivaldi for one evening, especially since only rarely was there a movement with spark and vitality. The last movement of the Concerto "Alla Rustica" and some spots in the A-Major Concerto Grosso were instances of notable vigor. And Sherman Walt's performance of the E-Minor Bassoon Concerto was superb.

But it was never clear exactly what Mr. Janigro wanted from the orchestra. What he got was a sound without excitement, and a plodding rhythm without grace. But, as was indicated by his own performance of the 'Cello Concerto in D-Major he personally hears and feels much more emotion and vitality in the music. His solo lines were richly endowed with elegant nuances, but he never got this kind of motion and charm from the orchestra.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 SUN. 122,607
JUL 17 1967

Weather Doesn't Dampen Bach In Tanglewood Concert Series

By JOAN SIMMONS
Times-Union Music Critic

Although the weather dampened the grounds at Tanglewood this weekend it did not hinder the enthusiasm of fairly good sized audience which turned out for a "Bach" weekend.

On both Friday and Saturday evenings well over 6,000 attended the concerts. The shelter seats only 6,000, with several hundred remaining on the lawn throughout.

Bach dominated the program from beginning to end with only the main concert Friday evening turned over to the music of Vivaldi. This weekend was the second of two devoted to works demanding a chamber sized orchestra.

Not always the most popular concerts of the season in terms of numbers, the sowing for the Bach concerts was good considering the less than favorable weather.

Organist E. Power Biggs opened the weekend with the Weekend relude Friday evening playing Bach's "Concerto in A Minor," "Toccata in F Major" and "Passacaglia and Fugue in C. Minor." He was followed by Antonio Janigro conducting the orchestra in a program of seven Vivaldi concerti and his "Sinfonia No. 1 in C Major." It was the first time that any of these works had been performed at the Berkshire Music Festival.

Saturday evening Erich Leinsdorf conducted the orchestra and soloists in a powerful performance of Bach's Mass in B Minor, certainly one of the more spectacular concerts of the season.

The concert marked the first appearance of the newly formed Berkshire Chorus in the series, hoining the regular Tanglewood Chorus, both prepared by Charles Wilson. Their voices carried clearly an dprecisely well out over the lawn, an advantage that was not shared with some of the vocal soloists.

Soprano Helen Boatwright was notable in several duets, sharing the honors with contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor Gene BULLARD AND mezzo-soprano Bett Allen substituting for ailing Beverly Wolff. ass Tom Krause was particularly notable in his aria in the Credo.

The work also featured a number of instrumental soloists, the most outstanding of whom were Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute, and violinist Joseph Silverstein, the BSO's concert master.

Superbly Presented

Among the greatest of Bach's compositions, the Mass in B Minor is an example of German polyphonic music at its most elaborate. As a whole it was superbly presented Saturday evening in a style generally associated with the Boston Symphony, as one of the major orchestras that has learned that the music of the Baorque period is played to best advantage by a limited orchestra of thetype for which it was written.

Leinsdorf again conducted an all-Bach concert on Sunday afternoon comprised of the Suite No. 3 in D Major for Orchestra, the "Wedding" Cantata for Soprano, No. 202, with Helen Boatwright, the Violin Concerto No. 1 in A Minor with Joseph Silverstein and the Cantata 174 with Betty Allen, Gene Bullard, Tom Krause and the Tanglewood Choir.

Next weekend the orchestra will be back to full strength for a series concentrating on works of the 19th and early 20th Centuries. Sejii Ozawa will be guest conductor on Saturday evening.

SUNDAY REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 115,050
JUL 16 1967
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Tunes Bach's Mass to Composer's Intent

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX—Bach's Mass in B Minor is a giant work of art, but it is best presented with an attempt to simulate the modest means at Bach's disposal.

Modest

Such was the case Saturday night at Tanglewood. Erich Leinsdorf used modest forces and a modest manner.

The chorus numbered about 75, large by Bach's standards, but small for the giant 6000-seat shed at Tanglewood.

The orchestra had about 35 strings three high baroqu trumpets, about eight woodwind players (there was some switching from oboe d'amore to oboe) timpani, and portative, baroque organ (noack).

Unlike Handel

There were no great resounding choral shouts as might be heard from 300 voices singing Hallelujah at Christmas time.

One of the results of the modest approach was an increased enjoyment of the solo and duet vocal arias. The plan calls for the voices to be accompanied by equally important contrapuntal melodies played by one or two woodwinds with an underlying bass continuo played by single cello (sometimes boosted by double bass) and organ.

One of the most impressive of these chamber-sized combinations was the "Domine Deus" duet during the "Gloria" sung by Helen Boatwright, soprano, and Gene Bullard, tenor, accompanied by solo flute Doriot Anthony Dwyer.

Another was the "Qui Sedes" aria sung by Florence Kopleff, contralto, accompanied by solo oboe d'amore (Laurence Thorstenberg).

There were others (an aria by Tom Krause, bass, with solo French horn and two bassoons) an aria by Betty Allen, mezzo-soprano, with solo violin.

Soggy, as Weather

Most of the choruses were characterized by stateliness and graceful, flowing continuity rather than precision, which was surprising. A little more crispness, to counteract the soggy weather and inject sparkle into the music, would have been welcome.

One of the mysteries of this great work is how it achieves unity and continuity under the circumstances of its creation.

Bach wrote the first two sections (Kyrie and Gloria) in 1733 for the Prince of Saxony. The other three (Credo, Sanctus, Agnus Dei) were composed apparently as separate works over the next five years and were performed separately under Bach's direction.

The whole work apparently was intended for performance in concert form as an oratorio, as it was Saturday at Tanglewood (its two-and-a-half hours are too much for a church service), and as far as is known, the five sections were never conducted as a unit by Bach.

Extra 30 Minutes

Saturday's performance was trimmed (probably by eliminating a few repeats) to about two hours, which, with intermission, held the 7367 listeners about a half hour longer than the usual two-hour concert length.

All things considered, it was worth it. The B Minor Mass has a cumulative power that is far greater than the impact of any single piece of it.

Everyone ought to hear the whole of it at one sitting at least once. The last time it was heard in this neighborhood was in 1964 when the Smith College and Wesleyan College Glee Clubs split it in half and did the two sections in two concerts.

There were, it must be admitted, a few soft spots Saturday . . . obscured diction, blurred choral passages and a couple of places where the timing was mismatched.

But there were, also, many more passages of great beauty.

22

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350
JUL 17 1967
New England Newsclip

At Tanglewood

Sensitivity Is Keynoted In Stirring Bach Concert

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX—How anyone could retain a belief that Bach was nothing more than a mechanical technician after hearing the program at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon is beyond understanding.

Four Examples

There were at least four periods during the course of the concert when the composer's emotional sensitivity was expressed effectively.

The first, as might be expected, came during the opening suite No. 3 for orchestra, it was the air known the world over as "Air for the G String."

The piece was conceived in an inspired moment, and although a bit of shine in the string tone may have be2en takn off the inspiration by the high humidity, it floated beautifully and serenely across the lawns.

Happy Tumblers

The second came during the opening aria of the "Wedding" cantata for soprano of No. 202, "Weichet Nur, Betrube Schatten."

Helen Boatwright was the soloist, and the air was accompanied by oboeist Ralph Gomberg. It was a personal, intimate expression of great feeling.

The third came during the same cantata, the aria which starts "Sich Upen Im Leiben."

Miss Boatwright was again accompanied by Gomberg plus Sherman Walt's bassoon, and the trio danced nimbly and joyously like a team of happy tumblers leaping and rolling.

Oom-Pah-Pah

The fourth followed intermission. It was the middle movement of the violin Concerto No. 1, in a minor, with Joseph Silverstein as soloist.

Silverstein's gentle treatment of the bow has always drawn a sweet tone from his violin. It is a tone highly appropriate to 18th Century music and lately, as demonstrated last week when he played the solo part in the "Haffner Serenade," it has been enhanced by a wider range of expression.

There was, to be sure, an occasional appearance of an old-fashioned German-band oom-pah-pah rhythm, as in the first gavotte in the suite but there is a minimum of it in the cantatas and concertos.

Solo Voices

One of the best aspects of Bach's cantatas is the lively interest attracted by the chamber-sized accompaniment for the solo voices.

Almost always its consists of contrapuntal melodies of importance equal to the solo voice. All are closely woven.

During the "Wedding" cantata the violin and the cello, as well as aforementioned oboe and bassoon, were assigned arias with the soprano.

Giant Cathedral

And during Cantata No. 174, a couple of oboes and the cello joined Betty Allen, conralto, during an aria. Gene Bullard, tenor, and Tom Krause, bass also soloists in the cantata were accompanied by strings.

The Tanglewood Choir ended Cantata 174 and concert with a stately chorale. Its 37 voices, many of them professional soloists, sounded like a much larger group. It was a fittingly impressive finish . . . like a recessional in a giant cathedral.

Attendance was 5595. The weeknd total was 21,971.

19th-20th Century

Next weekend's programs will be a mixture of 19th and 20th Century. Friday night Bracha. Eden and Alexander Tamir will be soloists for Poulenc's Concerto for Two Pianos; Saturday night Seiji Ozawa will be guest conductor for a program that will include Berlioz "Symphonie Fantastique," Sunday afternoon Eden and Tamir will play Mendelssohn's Concerto for Two Pianos in E major.

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 221,100
JUL 17 1967
New England Newsclip

Week-end of Bach Done to Stagnation

By KAREN MONSON
Contributing Critic

LENOX — The week-end, the third of Tanglewood's 1967 season, featured the combined choruses, the Chamber Orchestra, and soloists in works by J. S. Bach and Vivaldi. Perhaps it was the cold, rainy weather which took the edge off the excitement of most of the performances. Or, at least, one would like to blame it on the weather and not on the basic musical confusion and apathy regarding Baroque performance which were so often suggested and occasionally were clearly evident.

The principal event of the week-end was the performance on Saturday evening of Bach's B-Minor Mass, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf. This magnificent creation contains some of Bach's most inspired music and some of his most intricate vocal work—and is terribly difficult to present with any real success. Unfortunately, though his timing and pacing were exceptionally fine, Mr. Leinsdorf's interpretation lacked both the emotional force and the rhythmic swing which are needed to give the listener a powerful. unified experience. The net effect was one of a series of small parts, without any substantial connection. And not all of these parts were performed well.

Soloists Helen Boatwright, soprano, and Florence Kopleff, contralto, were outstanding. Both have beautiful, pure voices and sing apparently without effort. Their duet work was superb. Gene Bullard, tenor, and Tom Krause, bass, were much less impressive; the same can be said of Betty Allen, who, at the last moment, stood in for Beverly Wolff.

The Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus, though excellently trained by Charles Wilson, only once or twice really let loose; the rest of the time both the sound and the spirit were stifled. But it was clearly the orchestra which was responsible for the stagnancy of the performance, and at Sunday afternoon's all-Bach program it became only too evident where the problem lies.

The opening work on this final concert of the week-end was Bach's Suite No. 3 in D-Major. Here, and also in subsequent numbers, Mr. Leinsdorf encouraged the orchestra to make the most of the horizontal, melodic lines; in fact, to make the lines longer and smoother than they in fact are. After the first few seconds, the placid, remote sound became too detached and without nuance, especially without energy, though it rarely lacked precision.

This criticism also applies to Joseph Silverstein's performance of Bach's A-Minor Violin Concerto, though Mr. Silverstein's tone is so beautiful and he plays with such grace that some of the problems were overcome.

Mrs. Boatwright's performance of the "Wedding" Cantata was one of the high spots of the week-end. As in Saturday evening's concert, her voice was pure and agile, and her manner wonderfully gracious. The arias with Ralph Gomberg, oboe, and Mr. Silverstein, violin, were beautiful. In fact, Mr. Silverstein's most impressive playing during the week-end was in the arias which called for solo violin. His tone and musicianship were always perfect complements to the voices.

Friday night, Antonio Janigro made his first appearance at Tanglewood, starring both as a conductor and a 'cellist. His all-Vivaldi program consisted of five concerti, two concerti grossi and one sinfoni—an awful lot of Vivaldi for one evening, especially since only rarely was there a movement with spark and vitality. The last movement of the Concerto "Alla Rustica" and some spots in the A-Major Concerto Grosso were instances of notable vigor. And Sherman Walt's performance of the E-Minor Bassoon Concerto was superb.

But it was never clear exactly what Mr. Janigro wanted from the orchestra. What he got was a sound without excitement, and a plodding rhythm without grace. But, as was indicated by his own performance of the 'Cello Concerto in D-Major he personally hears and feels much more emotion and vitality in the music. His solo lines were richly endowed with elegant nuances, but he never got this kind of motion and charm from the orchestra.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 SUN. 122,607
JUL 17 1967

Weather Doesn't Dampen Bach In Tanglewood Concert Series

By JOAN SIMMONS
Times-Union Music Critic

Although the weather dampened the grounds at Tanglewood this weekend it did not hinder the enthusiasm of fairly good sized audience which turned out for a "Bach" weekend.

On both Friday and Saturday evenings well over 6,000 attended the concerts. The shelter seats only 6,000, with several hundred remaining on the lawn throughout.

Bach dominated the program from beginning to end with only the main concert Friday evening turned over to the music of Vivaldi. This weekend was the second of two devoted to works demanding a chamber sized orchestra.

Not always the most popular concerts of the season in terms of numbers, the sowing for the Bach concerts was good considering the less than favorable weather.

Organist E. Power Biggs opened the weekend with the Weekend relude Friday evening playing Bach's "Concerto in A Minor," "Toccata in F Major" and "Passacaglia and Fugue in C. Minor." He was followed by Antonio Janigro conducting the orchestra in a program of seven Vivaldi concerti and his "Sinfonia No. 1 in C Major." It was the first time that any of these works had been performed at the Berkshire Music Festival.

Saturday evening Erich Leinsdorf conducted the orchestra and soloists in a powerful performance of Bach's Mass in B Minor, certainly one of the more spectacular concerts of the season.

The concert marked the first appearance of the newly formed Berkshire Chorus in the series, hoining the regular Tanglewood Chorus, both prepared by Charles Wilson. Their voices carried clearly an dprecisely well out over the lawn, an advantage that was not shared with some of the vocal soloists.

Soprano Helen Boatwright was notable in several duets, sharing the honors with contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor Gene BULLARD AND mezzo-soprano Bett Allen substituting for ailing Beverly Wolff. ass Tom Krause was particularly notable in his aria in the Credo.

The work also featured a number of instrumental soloists, the most outstanding of whom were Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute, and violinist Joseph Silverstein, the BSO's concert master.

Superbly Presented

Among the greatest of Bach's compositions, the Mass in B Minor is an example of German polyphonic music at its most elaborate. As a whole it was superbly presented Saturday evening in a style generally associated with the Boston Symphony, as one of the major orchestras that has learned that the music of the Baorque period is played to best advantage by a limited orchestra of thetype for which it was written.

Leinsdorf again conducted an all-Bach concert on Sunday afternoon comprised of the Suite No. 3 in D Major for Orchestra, the "Wedding" Cantata for Soprano, No. 202, with Helen Boatwright, the Violin Concerto No. 1 in A Minor with Joseph Silverstein and the Cantata 174 with Betty Allen, Gene Bullard, Tom Krause and the Tanglewood Choir.

Next weekend the orchestra will be back to full strength for a series concentrating on works of the 19th and early 20th Centuries. Sejii Ozawa will be guest conductor on Saturday evening.

SUNDAY REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIR. 115,050
JUL 16 1967
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Tunes Bach's Mass to Composer's Intent

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX—Bach's Mass in B Minor is a giant work of art, but it is best presented with an attempt to simulate the modest means at Bach's disposal.

Modest

Such was the case Saturday night at Tanglewood. Erich Leinsdorf used modest forces and a modest manner.

The chorus numbered about 75, large by Bach's standards, but small for the giant 6000-seat shed at Tanglewood.

The orchestra had about 35 strings three high baroqu trumpets, about eight woodwind players (there was some switching from oboe d'amore to oboe) timpani, and portative, baroque organ (noack).

Unlike Handel

There were no great resounding choral shouts as might be heard from 300 voices singing Hallelujah at Christmas time.

One of the results of the modest approach was an increased enjoyment of the solo and duet vocal arias. The plan calls for the voices to be accompanied by equally important contrapuntal melodies played by one or two woodwinds with an underlying bass continuo played by single cello (sometimes boosted by double bass) and organ.

One of the most impressive of these chamber-sized combinations was the "Domine Deus" duet during the "Gloria" sung by Helen Boatwright, soprano, and Gene Bullard, tenor, accompanied by solo flute Doriot Anthony Dwyer.

Another was the "Qui Sedes" aria sung by Florence Kopleff, contralto, accompanied by solo oboe d'amore (Laurence Thorstenberg).

There were others (an aria by Tom Krause, bass, with solo French horn and two bassoons) an aria by Betty Allen, mezzo soprano, with solo violin.

Soggy, as Weather

Most of the choruses were characterized by stateliness and graceful, flowing continuity rather than precision, which was surprising. A little more crispness, to counteract the soggy weather and inject sparkle into the music, would have been welcome.

One of the mysteries of this great work is how it achieves unity and continuity under the circumstances of its creation.

Bach wrote the first two sections (Kyrie and Gloria) in 1733 for the Prince of Saxony. The other three (Credo, Sanctus, Agnus Dei) were composed apparently as separate works over the next five years and were performed separately under Bach's direction.

The whole work apparently was intended for performance in concert form as an oratorio, as it was Saturday at Tanglewood (its two-and-a-half hours are too much for a church service), and as far as is known, the five sections were never conducted as a unit by Bach.

Extra 30 Minutes

Saturday's performance was trimmed (probably by eliminating a few repeats) to about two hours, which, with intermission, held the 7367 listeners about a half hour longer than the usual two hour concert length.

All things considered, it was worth it. The B Minor Mass has a cumulative power that is far greater than the impact of any single piece of it.

Everyone ought to hear the whole of it at one sitting at least once. The last time it was heard in this neighborhood was in 1964 when the Smith College and Wesleyan College Glee Clubs split it in half and did the two sections in two concerts.

There were, it must be admitted, a few soft spots Saturday . . . obscured diction, blurred choral passages and a couple of places where the timing was mismatched.

But there were, also, many more passages of great beauty.

Tanglewood In Review:

Saturday Program

By PHILIP TREGGOR

Warm, soggy weather did not deter a large audience from attending a performance of Bach's Mass in B minor at Tanglewood, Saturday evening.

Eric Leinsdorf conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a 70-voice chorus which had been prepared by Chorusmaster Charles Wilson. Soloists were Helen Boatwright, soprano; Betty Allen, mezzo-soprano; Florence Kopleiff, contralto; Gene Bullard, tenor; and Tom Krause, bass.

Saturday night's performance was a fine example of what not to do with Bach's great mass. It is positively wrong to pitch a relatively small chorus against a full, virtuoso symphony orchestra. A step in the right direction would have been that of giving half of the orchestra a night-off.

* * *

Whenever the tessitura was low, the vocal line would disappear and it was quite impossible to hear the inner parts. One knew they existed only because they were doubled instrumentally. To match the big orchestra, the chorus should have numbered 200. As things turned out, we heard an orchestral mass with choral obbligato.

Soloists for the evening were good, although I did not feel that Betty Allen was in her best of voice. Vocal honors went to Florence Kopleiff for her effortless singing of the difficult arioso, "Qui sedes." Helen Boatwright, a singer with considerable experience in oratorio, did a solid, musical job in three duets.

The tenor and bass singers were both young. In spite of his youth, Tom Krauss has had quite a little experience in both opera and recording. He has a fine, strong voice to justify it. Tenor, Gene Bullard makes a good sound with his voice in the middle range, but strains and sings slightly under pitch in the extreme upper.

Fortunately, Mr. Leinsdorf used a greatly reduced orchestra to accompany the soloists. The same sized orchestra would have been ideal for the chorus accompaniments.

* * *

The continuo part was played on a small chamber organ made by Fritz Noack. This gentle speaking instrument, played by Charles Wilson, served to give some slight flavor of performance. This aspect was aided by the use of three Bach trumpets in D which were played by Armando Ghitalla, Andre Come and Roger Voisin.

When I had read the announcement of the Bach Mass being presented at Tanglewood, I had looked forward to a big production. While this is not the way I prefer to hear the work, I had thought that the bigness might be novel, perhaps exciting. It was disappointing to find that the production was neither big, nor small and authentic. It lay somewhere in between and was not successful at all.

For the Orchestral Suite No. 3 (the one with the beloved "Air for the G String") he used a slightly reduced ensemble. And (particularly in the melting performance of the "Air"). The fast movements were exquisitely poised and the playing exhibited the Boston strings and trumpets at their impeccable best.

* * *

Bach's "Wedding" Cantata (No. 202) is one of those works that is known almost alone by reputation, rather than by performance. Sunday it served as a vehicle for Helen Boatwright, a soprano whose specialty is baroque music and who will be remembered for her appearances at the Norfolk Shed concerts.

And I must admit that Mrs. Boatwright brought more verve and feeling, as well as her accustomed musicianship, to this cantata. Her last florid aria ("Sich uben in Lieben") went particularly well.

* * *

The obligatti assistance of concertmaster Joseph Silverstein, oboist Ralph Gomberg, cellist Jules Eskin, and harpsichordist Igor Kipnis was an invaluable asset.

Silverstein returned after intermission for the Violin Concerto in A Minor and gave a technically fluent account of himself. There were a few moments in the solo passages when the violin tone lacked weight but otherwise the violinist gave an admirable account of himself. Good orchestral man that he is, he played right along in the tuttis.

For his final offering Leinsdorf chose the unfamiliar Cantata No. 174 ("Ich liebe den Hochstein von Ganzem Gemute"), a work that affords the alto, tenor, and bass one solo apiece. A rather extended Sinfonia opens the cantata.

* * *

Hartford's own Betty Allen substituted at the last minute for an indisposed Beverly Wolff and, despite her initial nervousness, revealed a voice of warmth and amplitude. Tom Krause's manly, basso was used with authority and Gene Bullard was the excellent tenor soloist.

Although the sun came out shortly after the concert began, the rain that preceded the event no doubt discouraged all but the most devoted Bachians. Some 5500 persons were in attendance Sunday afternoon.

TIMES (e)
HARTFORD, CONN.
CIRC. 133,800

JUL 17 1967

New England Newsclip

Sunday Program

By GEORGE W. STOWE.

Sunday afternoon Erich Leinsdorf celebrated the genius of Bach in a program neatly balanced between the familair and the unfamiliar. And it proved one of the most satisfying Bach concerts

SUNDAY REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 115,950

JUL 16 1967

New England Newsclip

Berkshire Festival of Music Will Feature Mendelssohn's Work

SEIJI OZAWA

EDEN AND TAMIR

LILIAN KALLIR

Music of Mendelssohn and several modern composers will highlight the fourth week of Berkshire Festival programs. On Friday evening, 9 p. m., Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will have the duo-piano team, Eden and Tamir as his guest soloists.

Two Piano Concert

They will perform the Poulenc Concerto for Two Pianos and the Bartok Concerto for Two Pianos and Percussion with the Orchestra. The program will also include Mendelssohn's, "Midsummer Night's Dream Overture," Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel," and Gunther Schuller's "Diptych."

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the Weekend Prelude at 7 p. m. The newly formed Berkshire Boys Choir will present a program of Partsongs.

On Saturday evening at 8 p. m. Seiji Ozawa, music director of the Toronto Symphony and the Ravinia Festival and a 1960 graduate of the Berkshire Music Center, will make his fourth guest appearance at Tanglewood in as many years.

Conduct Program

He will conduct a program consisting of Mendelssohn's Hebrides Overture, Takemitsu's Requiem for Strings, Ligeti's Atmospheres and Berlioz' Symphonie Fantastique.

Lilian Kallir, a frequent soloist at the Berkshire Festival, will make her first of two appearances at the Berkshire Festival on Sunday afternoon the 23, at 2.30 p. m. She will perform the Mendelssohn Piano Concerto in G minor with the Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. Lleinsdorf will also conduct the Schumann Symphony No. 1, excerpts from Ber's Wozzeck and the Stravinsky Firebird Suite.

The Berkshire Festival Chamber Music concert on Tuesday evening, 8 p. m., will feature the Zimbler Sinfonietta. The program will consist of works by Corelli, Barber, Tansman and Vivaldi. This concert is the third chamber concert in a series of six.

Other Works

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players (July 25), Roman Totenberg and Igor Kipnis (Aug. 1) and the Columbia University Group for Contemporary Music (Aug. 15) will present the balance of the programs.

The regular Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday at 10.30 a. m.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to three events at Tanglewood next week. Paul Callaway, organist and choirmaster of the Washington Cathedral, will conduct the Tanglewood Choir on Wednesday evening at 8 p. m. On Thursday evening at 8 p. m. there will be a concert of Baroque music, the second in a series of four under the general direction of Igor Kipnis. The traditional Sunday morning chamber music concert will be at 10 a. m. on the 23d.

Provide Audience

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are those who make voluntary contributions to aid in reducing the Center's deficit. In addition to providing funds for the Music Center, the Friends also provide an audience for the young musicians in keeping with the Center's basic philosophy of training performers through performance.

This afternoon's Boston Symphony Orchestra program at 2.30 p. m. features a program of music by J. S. Bach. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Suite No. 3, the Wedding Cantata (with Helen Boatwright as soloist), the Violin Concerto in A minor (with Joseph Silverstein as soloist), and the Cantata No. 174 (with Beverly Wolff, Gene Bullard, Tom Krause and the Tanglewood Choir).

STAR
WINCHESTER, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 5,450

JUL 20 1967

New England Newsclip

WGBH Broadcasts From Tanglewood

In its third week of live broadcasts from Tanglewood, WGBH-FM will broadcast a program of Baroque music at 8 p.m. tonight, and on Friday another concert by the Boston Symphony starting at 9 p.m. with Erich Leinsdorf conducting a program including Bartok's Concerto for Two Pianos and Percussion and Poulenc's Concerto for Two Pianos with the duo pianists Eden and Tamir as soloists.

The week concludes Saturday, July 22 at 8 p.m. when Seiji Ozawa conducts Mendelssohn's Hebrides Overture, Requiem for Strings by Takemitsu, Atmospheres by Legeti and the Fantastic Symphony of Berlioz.

All concerts will be heard live from the Berkshire Festival in Lenox.

PRESS (e)
BRISTOL, CONN.
CIRC. 15,900

JUL 15 1967

New England Newsclip

Mendelssohn Is Featured In Berkshire Festival Programs

Music of Mendelssohn and several modern composers will highlight the fourth week of Berkshire Festival programs. On Friday evening at 9, Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will have the duo-piano team Eden & Tamir as his guest soloists. They will perform the Poulenc Concerto for Two Pianos and the Bartok Concerto for Two Pianos and Percussion with the Orchestra. The program will also include Mendelssohn's Midsummer Night's Dream Overture, Strauss' Till Eulenspiegel, and Gunther Schuller's Diptych.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the Weekend Prelude. The newly formed Berkshire Boys Choir will present a program of Partsongs.

On Saturday evening, July 22, at 8 Seiji Ozawa, Music Director of the Toronto Symphony and the Ravinia Festival and a 1960 gradaute of the Berkshire Music Center, will make his fourth guest appearance at Tanglewood in as many years. He will conduct a program consisting of Mendelssohn's Hebrides Overture, Takemitsu's Requiem for Strings, Ligeti's Atmosperes and Berlioz' Symphonie Fantastique.

Lilian Kallir, a frequent soloist at the Berkshire Festival, will make her first of two appearances at the Berkshire Festival on Sunday afternoon, July 23, at 2:30. She will perform the Mendelssohn Piano Concerto in G minor with the Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. Mr. Leinsdorf will also conduct the Schumann Symphony No. 1, excerpts from Berg's Wozzeck and the Stravinsky Firebird Suite.

The Berkshire Festival Chamber Music concert on Tuesday evening, at 8 will feature the Zimbler Sinfonietta. The program will consist of works by Corelli, Barber, Tansman and Vivaldi. This concert is the third chamber concert in a series of six.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players, July 25, Roman Totenberg and Igor Kipnis, August 1, and the Columbia University Group for Contemporary Music August 15 will present the balance of the programs.

The regular Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday July 22 at 10:30 a.m.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to three events at Tanglewood next week. Paul Callaway, organist and choirmaster of the Washington Cathedral, will conduct the Tanglewood Choir on Wednesday evening at 8. On Thursday evening at 8 there will be a concert of Baroque music, the second in a series of four under the general direction of Igor Kipnis. The traditional Sunday morning chamber music concert will be at 10 on July 23.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are those who make voluntary contributions to aid in reducing the Center's deficit. In addition to providing funds for the Music Center, the Friends also provide an audience for the young musicians in keeping with the Center's basic philosophy of training performers through performance.

Information on all Tanglewood events may be obtained by writing Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240 (Telephone: (413) 637-1600).

Tomorrow afternoon's Boston Symphony Orchestra program at 2:30 features a program of music by J. S. Bach. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Suite No. 3, the Wedding Cantata with Helen Boatwright as soloist, the Violin Concerto in A minor with Joseph Silverstein as soloist, and the Cantata No. 174 with Beverly Wolff, Gene Bullard, Tom Krause and the Tanglewood Choir.

NEWS (E)
FRAMINGHAM, MASS.
CIRC. 18,650

JUL 21 1967

New England Newsclip

Music of Mendelssohn At Berkshire Festival

LENOX — Music of Mendelssohn and several modern composers will highlight the fourth week of the Berkshire Festival programs. Tonight at 9 o'clock Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will have the duo-piano team Eden and Tamir as his guest soloists. They will perform the Poulenc Concerto for Two Pianos and the Bartok Concerto for Two Pianos and Percussion with the Orchestra. The program will also include Mendelssohn's Midsummer Night's Dream Overture, Strauss' Till Eulenspiegel and Gunther Schuller's Diptych.

The evening concert will be preceded by the Weekend Prelude at 7 o'clock. The newly formed Berkshire Boys Choir will present a program of Partsongs.

Saturday evening at 8 o'clock Seija Ozawa, music director of the Toronto Symphony and the Ravinia Festival and a 1960 graduate of the Berkshire Music Center will make his fourth guest appearance at Tanglewood in many years. He will conduct a program consisting of Mendelssohn's Hebrides Overture, Takemitsu's Requiem for Strings, Ligeti's Symphonie Fantastique.

Lilian Kallir, a frequent soloist at the Berkshire Festival will make her first of two appearances at the Berkshire Festival Sunday afternoon, July 23 at 2:30 o'clock. She will perform the Mendelssohn Piano Concerto in G minor with the Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. Mr. Leinsdorf will also conduct the Schumann Symphony No. 1, excerpts from Bergs' Wozzeck and the Stravinsky Firebird Suite.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are those who make voluntary contributions to aid in reducing the Center's deficit. In addition to providing funds for the Music Center, the Friends also provide an audience for the young musicians in keeping with the Center's basic philosophy of training performers through performance.

24

Herald American
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
S. 133,303
JUL 16 1967

Festival opens fourth week

Music of Mendelssohn and several modern composers will highlight the fourth week of Berkshire Festival programs. On Friday evening at 9 p.m. Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will have the duo-piano team Eden and Tamir as his guest soloists.

They will perform the Poulenc Concerto for Two Pianos and the Bartok Concerto for Two Pianos and Percussion with the Orchestra. The program will also include Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream Overture," Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel," and Gunther Schuller's "Diptych."

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the Weekend Prelude at 7 p.m. The newly formed Berkshire Boys Choir will present a program of partsongs.

On Saturday evening at 8, Seiji Ozawa, music director of the Toronto Symphony and the Ravinia Festival and a 1960 graduate of the Berkshire Music Center, will make his fourth guest appearance at Tanglewood in as many years. He will conduct a program consisting of Mendelssohn's "Hebrides Overture," Takemitsu's "Requiem for Strings," Ligeti's "Atmospheres" and Berlioz' "Symphonie Fantastique."

Lilian Kallir, a frequent soloist at the Berkshire Festival, will make her first of two appearances at the Berkshire Festival on Sunday afternoon at 2:30. She will perform the Mendelssohn Piano Concerto in G minor with the Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. Leinsdorf will also conduct the Schumann Symphone No. 1, excerpts from Berg's "Wozzeck" and the Stravinsky "Firebird Suite."

The Berkshire Festival Chamber Music concert on Tuesday evening at 8 will feature the Zimbler Sinfonietta. The program will consist of works by Corelli, Barber, Tansman and Vivaldi. This concert is the third chamber concert in a series of six.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players will appear July 25, Roman Totenberg and Igor Kipnis, Aug. 1 and the Columbia University Group for Contemporary Music, Aug. 15, will present the balance of the program.

The regular open rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension fund will be held Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to three events at Tanglewood next week. Paul Callaway, organist and choirmaster of the Washington Cathedral, will conduct the Tanglewood Choir Wednesday evening at 8. On Thursday evening, also at 8, there will be a concert of Baroque music, the second in a series of four under the general direction of Igor Kipnis.

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 50,766
JUL 22 1967

Seiji Ozawa to Appear At Tanglewood Tonight

Seiji Ozawa, music director of the Toronto Symphony, will appear at 8 tonight, as guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

* * *

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct tomorrow's program at 2:30 p.m.

Ozawa, a 1960 graduate of the Berkshire Music Center, will make his fourth guest appearance at Tanglewood in as many years as conductor of the Boston Symphony. His program will include Mendelssohn's "Hebrides Overture", Takemitsu's "Requiem for Strings," Ligeti's "Atmospheres" and the Berlioz "Symphonie Fantastique."

* * *

Lilian Kallir will make the first of two appearances at this season's Berkshire Festival Sunday afternoon program. She will perform the Medelssohn "Piano Concerto in G minor" with the Boston Symphony under Leinsdorf. Leinsdorf will also conduct the Schumann "Symphony number 1," excerpts from Berg's "Wozzeck" and the Stravinsky "Firebird Suite."

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350
JUL 15 1967
New England Newspaper

Mendelssohn, Modern Works Next Week at Tanglewood

Music of Mendelssohn and several modern composers will highlight the fourth week of Berkshire Festival programs at Tanglewood in Lenox. Friday at 9 Erich Leinsdorf, music director of Boston Symphony Orchestra, will have the duo-piano team Eden and Tamir as his guest soloists.

They will perform the Poulenc Concerto for Two Pianos and the Bartok Concerto for Two Pianos and Percussion with the orchestra. The program will also include Mendelssohn's Midsummer Night's Dream Overture, Strauss' Till Eulenspiegel, and Gunther Schuller's Diptych.

Partsongs Program

The Friday night concert will be preceded by the weekend prelude at 7. The newly formed Berkshire Boys Choir will present a program of partsongs.

Next night at 8 Seiji Ozawa, music director of the Toronto Symphony and the Ravinia Festival and a 1960 graduate of the Berkshire Music Center, will make his fourth guest appearance at Tanglewood in as many years. He will conduct a program consisting of Mendelssohn's Hebrides Overture, Takemitsu's Requiem for Strings, Ligeti's Atmospheres and Berlioz' Symphonie Fantastique.

Lilian Kallir, a frequent soloist at the Berkshire Festival, will make her first two appearances at the festival Sunday, July 23, at 2.30. She will perform the Mendelssohn Piano Concerto in G minor with the Boston Symphony, Leinsdorf conducting. Leinsdorf will also conduct the Schumann Symphony No. 1, excerpts from Berg's Wozzeck and the Stravinsky Firebird Suite.

Chamber Concerts

The chamber music concert this Tuesday night at 8 will feature the Zimbler Sinfonietta. The program will consist of works by Corelli, Barber, Tansman and Vivaldi. This concert is the third chamber concert in a series of six. The Boston Symphony Chamber Players, July 25; Roman Totenberg and Igor Kipnis, Aug. 1, and the Columbia University Group for Contemporary Music, Aug. 15, will present the balance of the programs.

The regular open rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension fund will be held next Saturday at 10.30.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to three events at Tanglewood next week. Paul Callaway, organist and choirmaster of the Washington Cathedral, will conduct the Tanglewood Choir Wednesday night at 8. Thursday night at 8 there will be a concert of Baroque music, the second in a series of four under the general direction of Igor Kipnis. The Sunday morning chamber music concert will be at 10, July 23.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are those who make voluntary contributions to aid in reducing the center's deficit. In addition to providing funds for the music center, the Friends also provide an audience for the young musicians in keeping with the center's basic philosophy of training performers through performance.

Information on all Tanglewood events may be obtained by writing the ticket office at Tanglewood in Lenox.

This Sunday at 2.30 the orchestra program features music of J. S. Bach. Leinsdorf will conduct Suite No. 3, the Wedding Cantata (with Helen Boatwright as soloist), the Violin Concerto in A minor (with Joseph Silverstein as soloist), and the Cantanta No. 174 (with Beverly Wolff, Gene Bullard, Tom Krause and the Tanglewood Choir).

SUNDAY HERALD
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 300,250
JUL 16 1967
New England Newspaper

The Week at Tanglewood

Seiji Ozawa Returns For Berkshire Event

Music of Mendelssohn and several modern composers will highlight the fourth week of Berkshire Festival programs. Friday evening at 9 Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will have the duo-piano team Eden & Tamir as his guest soloists.

They will perform the Poulenc Concerto for Two Pianos and the Bartok Concerto for Two Pianos and Percussion with the Orchestra. The program will also include Mendelssohn's Midsummer Night's Dream Overture, Strauss' Til Eulenspiegel, and Gunther Schulled's Diptych.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the Weekend Prelude at 7. The newly formed Berkshire Boys Choir will present a program of Partsongs.

SATURDAY evening at 8 Seiji Ozawa, music director of the Toronto Symphony and the Ravinia Festival and a 1960 graduate of the Berkshire Music Center, will make his fourth guest appearance at Tanglewood. He will conduct a program consisting of Mendelssohn's Hebrides Overture, Takemitsu's Requiem for Strings, Ligeti's Atmospheres and Berlioz' Symphonie Fantastique.

Lilian Kallir, a frequent soloist at the Berkshire Festival, will make her first of two appearances at the Berkshire Festival next Sunday afternoon. She will perform the Mendelssohn Piano Concerto in G minor with the Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. Mr. Leinsdorf will also conduct the Schumann Symphony No. 1, excerpts from Berg's Wozzeck and the Stravinsky Firebird Suite.

The Berkshire Festival Chamber Music concert Tuesday evening at 8 will feature the Zimbler Sinfonietta. The program will consist of works by Corelli, Barber, Tansman and Vivaldi. This concert is the third chamber concert.

SEIJI OZAWA

HERALD TRAVELER (M)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 240,000
JUL 21 1967

Israeli Piano Duo On Tanglewood Bill

For Sunday's concert at 2:30 p.m. the Israeli duo-pianists Eden and Tamir will perform Mendelssohn's Concerto for Two Pianos in E Major.

The duo-piano team will also be heard with Erich Leinsdorf conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight at 9:00 p.m. The program for Sunday afternoon will also include Stravinsky's Firebird Suite and the Schumann Symphony No. 1.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SARATOGA SARATOGIAN
Friday, July 21, 1967

Pianists Replace Singer For Tanglewood Concert

TANGLEWOOD — No one is expected to stand in the path of motherhood, last of all the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Pianist Lilian Kallir (Mrs. Claude Frank) recently gave birth to a daughter, Pamela, some two weeks later than was anticipated. Had the young lady arrived on time, Miss Kallir would have been able to perform with the orchestra as scheduled on July 23. Miss Kallir has bowed to her daughter's and her doctor's insistence that she not resume the rigors of performing for a few more weeks.

For Sunday's (July 23, 2:30 p.m.) concert, the Israeli duo-pianists Eden and Tamir will perform Mendelssohn's Concerto for Two Pianos in E Major. The duo-piano team will also be heard with Erich Leinsdorf conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday evening, July 21 (9 p.m.).

The program for Sunday afternoon, July 23, will also include Stravinsky's Firebird Suite and the Schumann Symphony No. 1.

FOURTH WEEK - JULY 21, 22 + 23

25

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900
JUL 24 1967
New England Newscip

Music Theatre

Music Review

Weekend Concerts at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

When the young Japanese student Seiji Ozawa received the Koussevitzky Memorial Scholarship, as the most outstanding conductor at the Berkshire Music Center in 1960, he had heard the Berlioz Fantastique Symphony played in the Shed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra only a few days before. It was conducted by Charles Munch. It was one of the five times Munch played the symphony during his 13-year incumbency. Saturday night in the central program of the three-concert weekend, Ozawa, who occupied the podium for his fourth consecutive guest appearance, carried on the tradition and emulated the vibrant spirit he had first heard in the symphony.

* * *

OZAWA'S program began with an ingratiating performance of the Mendelssohn "Hebrides" overture and included two controversial contemporary short works. One by a fellow Japanese was a remarkably sensitive Requiem for strings. The composer, Toru Takemitsu, is thoroughly immersed in Western music but there is a deeply felt lament conveyed by his groupings of instruments and their employment in unusual timbres. A short agitated protest interrupts the otherwise consistently lugubrious tenor of the music.

Seiji Ozawa

"Atmospheres" of Gyorgy Ligeti, Hungarian-born composer, is at the other end of the spectrum from a construction standpoint and has a greater affinity with the "Diptych" of Gunther Schuller, which Erich Leinsdorf played on his Friday night program. Both these compositions are from this decade and seem to search for musical texture rather than theme and development. The Ligeti stresses string tone; the Schuller, wind instruments. In fact, this latter work was originally for a quintet of brass solo instruments to be played with band. The composer made an orchestral version which Leinsdorf used Friday.

Eden and Tamir

* * *

THE SOLOISTS, from the orchestra, in the Schuller were Armando Ghitalla and Roger Voisin, trumpets; James Stagliano, horn; William Gibson, trombone, and Chester Schmitz, tuba. They were seated in a crescent facing the conductor and deployed their mutes at frequent intervals—a practice made more noticeable by the device the tuba used that resembled a huge stove-pipe or witch's hat.

Friday and yesterday the two-piano team of Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir appeared in examples of the limited repertory for their combination. The Bartok concerto for two pianos and percussion is also an expansion by the composer to include orchestra. It becomes vastly involved and intricate and the soloists are required to expend more vigor and vitality than the team exhibited Friday. They were better suited to the Poulenc D Minor Concerto for the same soloists and orchestra, for here the music is both popular and common. Eden and Tamir were invited to make a last-minute substitution for Lilian Kallir who had been announced to play a Mendelssohn piano concerto. She was indisposed and, in her place, the same composer's two-piano E Major Concerto was played. This was done well but, as music, it is remarkably only because it was written when Mendelssohn was but 14. When one thinks that the mature Beethoven by this time (1823) had written all his piano sonatas and more than a decade previously had finished his last piano concerto, it becomes obvious that this Mendelssohn belongs on a girls' boarding school graduation program.

THIS juxtaposition is emphasized by the fact that the Berlioz symphony, which Ozawa conducted, followed Beethoven's ninth by only seven years.

Leinsdorf's Symphony No. 1 of Schumann was done with authority and affection. The climaxes were emphasized by effects the composer may not have visualized but the tempos were gratifying, especially the finale, and the larghetto exposed the Boston tone at its loveliest.

The suite from Stravinsky's ballet "The Firebird" was given a virtuoso performance by Leinsdorf. He went farther in dramatic expression and was more graphic in rhetorical details than the composer, then 84, when I heard him conduct it last year. But composers are notably not the best interpreters of their own music.

SUNDAY TELEGRAM
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 107,550
JUL 23 1967
New England Newscip

Music: Poulenc Concerto Highlights Festival

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Writer

LENOX — The full Boston Symphony Orchestra of 103 players was on stage in the Tanglewood music shed Friday night to begin the fourth weekend of the Berkshire Music Festival.

Half of the orchestra was in Boston for the previous two weeks playing the Esplanade Concerts under Arthur Fiedler. The Tanglewood segment performed baroque programs for reduced orchestra.

Friday night's program, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, was widely separated in merit. Highpoints were Bartok and Poulenc Concertos for two pianos and orchestra, with Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir as soloists.

Lowpoint was Gunther Schuller's "Diptych for Brass Quintet and Orchestra."

Radiant Sound

Balance of the orchestral program was the overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream" by Mendelssohn, and Richard Strauss' symphonic poem, "Till Eulenspiegel."

The Poulenc Concerto had some of the most radiant sound so far in this festival. Soloists went the speed limit in the swift movements, without losing clarity or neglecting poetry. A nursery tune, set in piano and shimmering strings, made a beautiful thing of the slow movement.

Bartok's concerto was vividly developed as a work of fast-changing ideas, marvelous keyboard writing with added sheen from percussion. The five percussionists took bows along with the piano soloists.

There wasn't a dull moment in the Bartok. It was al there — conjuring atmosphere brooding, rebellious slow movement, and dazzling sound pat terns.

Leinsdorf maintained an exciting relationship between orchestra and brilliant pianists. Although the soloists used their scores for both concertos, communication was not dampened.

We haven't heard such two-piano playing at Tanglewood since the days of Luboshutz and Nemenoff.

The following solists for Schuller's "Diptych" deserve commendation for meritorious action in line of duty: Armando Ghitalla and Roger Voisin, trumpets; James Stagliano, horn; William Gibson, trombone; Chester Schmitz, tuba.

What we heard were eerie, grating sounds in free-lance style. Melody was piecemeal. Among the splashes of noise were tart brass ejaculations. The real thunder that coincided with the performance wasn't alien to the cause. Mixed into all this were spontaneous-sounding rhythms and chattering solos.

The composer came onstage to acknowledge applause.

Strings were in fine form for the Mendelssohn overture. In spots, the work was unecessarily blatant, but a beautiful tone was produced in stretches of fragile matter.

"Till" was a harvest of finely-voiced solos in woodwinds and horns. Leinsdorf gave a realistic account of Till's pathetic and roguish traits.

Weekend prelude featured the Berkshire Boy Choir (including 17 men), directed by George Guest, with George Lamphere as organ and piano accompanist.

The group consists of summer residents in the area who are using the facilities of the Stockbridge School. Although it is adequately supplied with adult voices for balance, the group's mainstay is its treble section.

Mendelssohn's "Hear My Prayer—O for the Wings of a Dove" lacked vitality. Charles Nicholson, age 12, from London, Ontario, Canada, was an admirable soprano solist.

Settings by Stravinsky for "Hail Mary" and "The Lord's Prayer" had abundant fervor and held to pitch without accompaniment.

Poulenc's "Litanies" was also trustworthy in pitch despite muddy organ harmonies. A set of French folksongs by the same composer distinguished vitality from sentiment but were faultily pronounced.

GAZETTE (e)
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 94,350
JUL 24 1967
New England Newscip

Tanglewood's Fourth Weekend Threaded With Mendelssohn

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — The fourth weekend at Tanglewood, with the full Boston Symphony Orchestra, had a strand of Mendelssohn running through it, but went also into very modern channels.

The Friday and Sunday concerts, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, featured music for two pianos by Bartok, Poulenc and Mendelssohn, the soloists being Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir.

The all-orchestral offerings on Saturday drew 7,306 in spite of uncertain weather, the center of excitement being 32-year-old Seiji Ozawa, making his fourth annual appearance at Tanglewood. The plaudits at the end of the evening were truly frenzied. This small-framed, large-spirited man has all the elements of a great conductor.

Standard Fare

His Mendelssohn Overture, "The Hebrides" "(Fingal's Cave") was evidence that he can present standard fare in the best manner. The sounds of sea and birds were charming.

Gazette Review

From this Ozawa leaped without seeming loss of logic, to two modernities, Takemitsu's "Requiem for String Orchestra" and Ligeti's "Atmospheres." The Requiem, episodic but not fragmentary, came back to its essentially peaceful main theme from numerous moments of tension. The work had appealing solos for concert master Joseph Silverstein and first viola Burton Fine.

The Hungarian Legeti has concocted sounds one would never expect from the combinations of instruments producing them. The results are fascinating, ranging from luscious colors to outright drollery. Very modern and very adroit.

Tanglewood Favorite

It is hard to recall as gripping a rendition of Berlioz's "Fantastic Symphony" as Ozawa produced. This Tanglewood favorite among symphonies reached heights of expressiveness which not only stressed variety of dynamics and masterful control of orchestral technique, but painted the continual struggle between sentiment and passion. The early pages of the waltz were delicious. Even the long "Scene in the Meadows" did not lose sustained interest.

The striking "March to the Scaffold" and weird "Witches' Sabbath" reached climaxes which roused the audience to high excitement

26

HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE (e)
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
CIRC. 14,250

JUL 26 1967

New England Newscltp

Leinsdorf Interpretations Praised At Tanglewood

The fourth weekend of the Berkshire Festival At Tanglewood in Lenox brought three programs of equal interest, but varying results. Attendance at Friday's concert was under 6,000, probably due again to heavy showers, which held off from Prelude time to the end of the formal concert in the Shed. Thunder rumbled softly, but in tune, through past of the evening.

Leinsdorf opened the 9 o'clock program with that delightful Mendelssohn's Overture to "Midsummer Night's Dream," composed at first as a piano duet, and performed by the composer and his sister in 1826. It and the final number, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel" were directed and performed with the most musically satisfactory moments of the evening, Leinsdorf making the most of the overture's thematic material and its development, the romantic mood and youthful exuberance, controlled and compact nonetheless.

Strauss' Rondo, Till's Merry Pranks, never fails to catch and hold one's interest, and Leinsdorf was at his most clear; no phrase escaped his puppetlike control, no bit of color went pale for lack of notice or demand; it was a classic reading and deserved the round of undiminished applause from the cheering audience.

In between, we heard for the first time at Tanglewood Gunther Schuller's "Diptych for Brass Quintet and Orchestra," a well-formed piece, the orchestra used percussively almost entirely, punctuated by a few escaped melodic phrases from the quintet, which were answered by the orchestra in quite different statements. Not unpleasant, the whole seemed quite unprepossessing.

A duo-piano team, Israeli artists Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir themselves at Tanglewood initially, gave the audience their first hearing there of Bartok's Concerto for Two Pianos and Percussion. Technically able, and playing the right kind of pianos (although they may be lesser models of their make) the two pianists did not quite bring off the incisive and dynamic qualities of the piece; there was no lack of control, rather too much of it, Leinsdorf pulling on the reins from his position in front of the two pianos (a new departure and good thought), the pianists giving their all, but not enough.

After intermission, Eden and Tamir were heard to better advantage in Poulenc's Concerto in Dminor for Two Pianos and Orchestra. Poulenc is French to the core, employs all the popular harmonies, which are unquestionably his nostalgic and bittersweet; pokes fun when the music gets too impassioned. It didn't have the uplift Poulenc needs to get across, but the sweet serenity was there, not the gentle humor.

An alumnus of the Berkshire School of Music at Tanglewood, Seiji Ozawa has had only goodwill from the first moment he conducted the Boston Symphony three years ago. His humble but direct manner, purposeful seriousness to every musical detail; his habit of enforcing the orchestra to stand for the initial applause, and share it with him afterwards, (although often the men will applaud themselves rather than accept any) his elegant and courtly mien, with hint of a humorous twinkle, all add up to an exciting evening of music. His first introduction to Tanglewood audiences was through Mendelssohn, so he began Saturday's concert with a vivid and insinuating reading of The Hebrides Overture (Fingal's Cave).

Two contemporary pieces followed, firsts at Tanglewood; Takemitsu's Requiem for String Orchestra, a structurally sound employment of the string choirs, building to an elegaic finish. Completely unlike this almost classic form, was the Atmospheres by Hungarian composer Gyorgy Ligeti. As far out as it is possible to get with all the instruments, completely textural, free harmonics everywhere, in the strings and winds, glissandos, concerted harmonies, much of these freely deployed until a signal from the conductor cut them short; sheets of sound produced by blowing through the wind instruments without pitch; a fascinating accumulation of sounds completed with wire brushes softly stroking piano strings, it could be heard again and again without displeasure, and eerie enchantment.

Only for the Ligeti did Ozawa use a score. Not even Berlioz' episodic Fantastic Symphony needed to be read. And a magnificent interpretation, sparked by Munch it seemed, (who reigned supreme with Berlioz) was brought forth in all its tonal and orchestral daring (for 1830). We left after the sixth recall; so moved was my companion that he shouted "Ole (ay)" over and over without a moment's hesitation. It's a recording well known to him; as he said, a lengthy one, but one couldn't bear to miss a note or nuance of this performance. Ozawa has the faculty for underlining every least phrase, allowing the leading development to flow almost unaided. We still see de Sabata's spiritual reflection in this young conductor, deeply dedicated to the music and it alone.

Sunday's concert heard Eden and Tamir substituting for Lillian Kallir who was to play Mendelssohn's piano concerto; instead they chose his Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra, written when the composer was 14. Schumann's first symphony opened the concert, pleasingly interpreted by Leinsdorf, especially the finale, with the BSO at its most vibrant. Again that clarity to every musical detail Leinsdorf invokes was given to Stravinsky's Firebird Suite, closing the weekend's concerts.

Mde. R. R.

TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM (e)
HOLYOKE, MASS.
CIRC. 26,950

JUL 24 1967

New England Newscltp

Berkshire Festival Concerts Draw 23,000 To Tanglewood

The past hot, hazy weekend drew 23,000 people to Tanglewood at Lenox for the Berkshire Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon. The special attraction was the appearance of Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir, pianists, on Friday and Sunday.

Friday night's concert had, as usual, the smallest audience, 5,660, but it was one that appreciated a diverting double program. The "weekend prelude," presented at seven o'clock, was a delightful performance by the new Berkshire Boy Choir. This is a summer choir organized at the Stockbridge School, drawing 55 choristers from the leading boy choirs in the country, and including many well-known soloists. Their music is of unbelievable purity.

The Boston Symphony concert, directed by Erich Leinsdorf, offered a program devoted to colorful music by composers of different eras but a curiously similar willingness to entertain. Mendelssohn and Schuller are hardly a pair, and yet attention to tonal effects has come down from one to the other.

Bit Of Loveliness

Midsummmer Night's Dream overture opened the program, a traditional bit of loveliness to hear on a Berskhire evening presented with the usual Boston taste. Then came Gunther Schuller's Diptych for Brass Quintet and Orchestra, an exciting pattern of contrasts in tone and tempo that kept flirting with jazz but did not break away from the formal mass of the orchestra. This piece was first performed only two years ago. The young composer was on hand Friday night to take bows.

A more familiar flamboyance was presented in Bartok's Concerto for Two Pianos and Percussion, with Eden and Tamir and the two pianos, and conductor Leinsdorf holding all kinds of instrumental exhibitions together. This is an arduous assignment for the pianists, but it is fun for everyone else, especially an audience that likes a good thumping beat.

After intermission the two pianists reappeared with the orchestra to play Poulenc's beautiful Concerto in D Minor, which gave them a more favorable frame for their fine interpretive talent. It is a lively and graceful composition and it was played that way.

The mood of the evening — substantial but not too serious — continued with the final Til Eulenspiegel by Richard Strauss. This is a Boston Symphony classic, which Leinsdorf and the orchestra slipped into with what appeared to be pleasure and comfort. Like all symphonic pieces with memorable horn passages, it sounds wonderful outdoors.

It rained during the concert, but only those few on the lawn noticed it.

Saturday night Seiji Ozawa, director of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra, led the Boston Symphony in another program rich with romanticism: Mendelssohn's haunting Fingal's Cave, two modern works, Requiem for String Orchestra by Takemitsu and Atmospheres by Ligeti, and Berlioz' Symphonie Fantastique. The contrast between the seemingly formless modern works and the two old favorites was sharp.

Concerto in E Major

Leinsdorf returned to the podium for Sunday afternoon's concert, and Eden and Tamir returned too, to play more Mendelssohn, this time the Concerto in E major, which the composer wrote at the age of 14. There was no harsh modern stuff to get used to on Sunday, but instead the great First Symphony of Schumann, and the thrilling Firebird Suite by Stravinsky. Those who shudder in bewilderment at today's music might, however, recall that the Firebird was a shocker in its day.

Next weekend Brahms' Liebeslieder Waltzes are on the program for the Friday evening prelude, to be followed by the Boston Symphony under the direction of guest conductor Rafale Kubelik, performing Haydn's Symphony No. 102, Double Concerto by Martinu, and Symphony in D Minor by Cesar Vranck. On Saturday night Kubelik will conduct Smetana's Moldau, Elgar's violin concerto Schmuel Ashkenasi as soloist, and Symphony No. 4 by Brahms..

Sunday afternoon Leinsdorf will conduct and the program will include Six Pieces by Weborn, Symphony No. 9 by Schubert, and the Grieg Piano Concerto with Van Cliburn as soloist. The famous pianist is sure to draw crowds to the Tanglewood lawns on that day.

By A. B. M.

TIMES (E)
HARTFORD, CONN.
CIRC. 133,800

JUL 24 1967

New England Newscltp

Tanglewood in Review: Ozawa is Evening Guest Conductor

By GEORGE W. STOWE

Seiji Ozawa, the young Japanese conductor who will lead the Boston Symphony in its Hartford visit next season, was the guest with that organization Saturday night at Tanglewood.

And his program was strongly oriented toward the 20th Century in its choice of Takemitsu's "Requiem for String Orchestra" and Gyorgy Ligeti's "Atmospheres," something that attracted many not normally seen at Tanglewood's more conventional programs. Works by Mendelssohn and Berlioz filled out the evening's musical agenda.

* * *

Takemitsu, who is on the staff of Tokyo's 20th Century Music Institute and a composer of electronic music, resorts to the traditional string contingent in this somber and acridly chromatic Requiem (which, incidentally, has no liturgical connotations). It was movingly performed by the Bostonians.

In Ligeti's "Atmospheres" the work (in the composer's own words) attempts to "supersede the structural approach to music." Using conventional instrumentation (the full orchestra in this case) he has created something very close to electronic music. Eerie string effects, whirring sounds and a wide dynamic palette, made for a fascinating sonic creation.

Needless to say, there were some excited "bravos" from the avant-gardists and less enthusiasm from the great rank and file of concertgoers.

* * *

Berlioz' Symphome Fastastique was the featured work on Saturday night's program. After the many years of Charles Munch's tenure with the orchestra the players must have been able to play it with their eyes closed.

While the French conductor of the Boston Symphony was at his best with Berlioz, the same could hardly be said of Mr. Ozawa, particularly in the first movement. The exaggerated dynamics and the striving for dramatic effects destroyed the continuity of the music. Even the waltz theme of the second movement did not have its usual ingratiation.

* * *

The March to the Gallows and the Witches Sabbath were much more to Ozawa's temperament and he gave them what a friend of mine called the "wow" treatment. It aroused a storm of enthusiasm and almost everyone seemed to be happy with the results.

For his opening work the Japanese conductor, who is now sporting long hair and sideburns, chose Mendelssohn's "Fingal's Cave" Overture. Some 7,300 persons turned out for the concert, which was only momentarily interrupted by rain.

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350

JUL 22 1967

New England Newscltp

Boston Symphony Offers Condiments

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — The full Boston Symphony Orchestra returned to Tanglewood Friday night with a full bag of colorful trickery. Nearly every available orchestral flavor was offered to 5660 listeners.

There was sweetness from Mendelssohn and Poulenc, pickles from Gunther Schuller, salt and spice from Bartok and nuts and raisins from Richard Strauss.

What Wasn't

Missing were meat and potatoes. But it was fun . . . mostly.

Mendelssohn, Schuller and Bartok were paraded (in that order) before intermission, and of the three it was Bartok's Concerto for Two Pianos and Percussion which offered the most substance.

Most of the concerto's interest lies in its wealth of percussive acrobatics, but Leinsdorf's deliberate pace seemed to take some of the exuberance out of it.

All the sonic splendor was there, but the core of unbuttoned youthful liveliness was lacking. Leinsdorf played it safely.

Safety First

It needed a touch of recklessness — a dangerous artistic commodity almost never displayed by Boston's conductor. He is not one to loosen his tie and jump into the music with both feet.

Th Poulenc Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra, which followed intermission with the same soloists Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir, is a much lesser work, but it fared somewhat better . . . perhaps because of its well-ordered simplicity.

With Mendelssohn's overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream," which opened the program, it constituted the most orthodox, least disturbing music on the program. The middle movement is bland, the last bouncy and entertaining.

Crass Brass

Most caustic (also acid) piece of the evening was Schuller's brassy, contrasty, crashing, avant garde "Diptych" for Brass Quintet and Orchestra." Its controlled chaos was interesting for a while . . . but not long.

Best known piece of the evening was Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks." It was, also, probably the most satisfying.

Leinsdorf was in full control of its happy themes and sudden tangents, and although under the best of presentations it might not surpass Bartok's Concerto in breadth and depth, it certainly equalled it in craftsmanship and entertainment Friday night.

The prelude program, which started the weekend's concerts at 7, was presented by the newly organized Berkshire Boy Choir based at the Stockbridge School.

It is made up of something over 50 boy choristers from all over the country plus adult professional singers who gather for a summer of intensive training in accordance with the ancient choir-school tradition.

There were 52 on stage Friday evening, 17 adult voices, 35 treble (20 soprano, 15 alto.) They sang 11 works (one by Mendelssohn, two by Stravinsky, a medley of litanies and three chansons by Poulenc and four Slovak folk songs by Bartok.

Their approach to the music under the direction of George Guest was easy and gentle with emphasis directed toward grace of movement and beauty of tone. Dynamics were subdued but expressive, and precision was clean but not biting.

Charles Nicholson, 12, of London, Ont., Canada, was soloist for Mendelssohn's "Hear My Prayer." He sang with a clear, bell-like, pure tone without vibrato.

Also of special interest were Stravinsky's classic "Pater Noster," a chant-like a capella piece, and Poulenc's "Litanies," a dry mildly dissonant work of simple power.

Tonight Seiji Ozawa, music director of the Toronto Symphony and a 1960 graduate of the Berkshire Music Center, will be guest conductor of a program including music by Mendelssohn, Takemitsu, Ligeti and Berlioz.

26

HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE (e)
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
CIRC. 14,250
JUL 26 1967
New England Newschp

Leinsdorf Interpretations Praised At Tanglewood

The fourth weekend of the Berkshire Festival At Tanglewood in Lenox brought three programs of equal interest, but varying results. Attendance at Friday's concert was under 6,000, probably due again to heavy showers, which held off from Prelude time to the end of the formal concert in the Shed. Thunder rumbled softly, but in tune, through past of the evening.

Leinsdorf opened the 9 o'clock program with that delightful Mendelssohn's Overture to "Midsummer Night's Dream," composed at first as a piano duet, and performed by the composer and his sister in 1826. It and the final number, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel" were directed and performed with the most musically satisfactory moments of the evening, Leinsdorf making the most of the overture's thematic material and its development, the romantic mood and youthful exuberance, controlled and compact nonetheless.

Strauss' Rondo, Till's Merry Pranks, never fails to catch and hold one's interest, and Leinsdorf was at his most clear; no phrase escaped his puppetlike control, no bit of color went pale for lack of notice or demand; it was a classic reading and deserved the round of undiminished applause from the cheering audience.

In between, we heard for the first time at Tanglewood Gunther Schuller's "Diptych for Brass Quintet and Orchestra," a well-formed piece, the orchestra used percussively almost entirely, punctuated by a few escaped melodic phrases from the quintet, which were answered by the orchestra in quite different statements. Not unpleasant, the whole seemed quite unprepossessing.

A duo-piano team, Israeli artists Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir themselves at Tanglewood initially, gave the audience their first hearing there of Bartok's Concerto for Two Pianos and Percussion. Technically able, and playing the right kind of pianos (although they may be lesser models of their make) the two pianists did not quite bring off the incisive and dynamic qualities of the piece; there was no lack of control, rather too much of it, Leinsdorf pulling on the reins from his position in front of the two pianos (a new departure and good thought), the pianists giving their all, but not enough.

After intermission, Eden and Tamir were heard to better advantage in Poulenc's Concerto in Dminor for Two Pianos and Orchestra. Poulenc is French to the core, employs all the popular harmonies, which are unquestionably his nostalgic and bittersweet; pokes fun when the music gets too impassioned. It didn't have the uplift Poulenc needs to get across, but the sweet serenity was there, not the gentle humor.

An alumnus of the Berkshire School of Music at Tanglewood, Seiji Ozawa has had only goodwill from the first moment he conducted the Boston Symphony three years ago. His humble but direct manner, purposeful seriousness to every musical detail; his habit of enforcing the orchestra to stand for the initial applause, and share it with him afterwards, (although often the men will applaud themselves rather than accept and his elegant and courtly mien, with hint of a humorous twinkle, all add up to an exciting evening of music. His first introduction to Tanglewood audiences was through Mendelssohn, so he began Saturday's concert with a vivid and insinuating reading of The Hebrides Overture (Fingal's Cave).

Two contemporary pieces followed, firsts at Tanglewood; Takemitsu's Requiem for String Orchestra, a structurally sound employment of the string choirs, building to an elegaic finish. Completely unlike this almost classic form, was the Atmospheres by Hungarian composer Gyorgy Ligeti. As far out as it is possible to get with all the instruments, completely textural, free harmonics everywhere, in the strings and winds, glissandos, concerted harmonies, much of these freely deployed until a signal from the conductor cut them short; sheets of sound produced by blowing through the wind instruments without pitch; a fascinating accumulation of sounds completed with wire brushes softly stroking piano strings, it could be heard again and again without displeasure, and eerie enchantment.

Only for the Ligeti did Ozawa use a score. Not even Berlioz' episodic Fantastic Symphony needed to be read. And a magnificent interpretation, sparked by Munch it seemed, (who reigned supreme with Berlioz) was brought forth in all its tonal and orchestral daring (for 1830). We left after the sixth recall; so moved was my companion that he shouted "Ole (ay)" over and over without a moment's hesitation. It's a recording well known to him; as he said, a lengthy one, but one couldn't bear to miss a note or nuance of this performance. Ozawa has the faculty for underlining every least phrase, allowing the leading development to flow almost unaided. We still see de Sabata's spiritual reflection in this young conductor, deeply dedicated to the music and it alone.

Sunday's concert heard Eden and Tamir substituting for Lillian Kallir who was to play Mendelssohn's piano concerto; instead they chose his Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra, written when the composer was 14. Schumann's first symphony opened the concert, pleasingly interpreted by Leinsdorf, especially the finale, with the BSO at its most vibrant. Again that clarity to every musical detail Leinsdorf invokes was given to Stravinsky's Firebird Suite, closing the weekend's concerts.

M. B. R.

TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM (e)
HOLYOKE, MASS.
CIRC. 26,000
JUL 24 1967
New England Newschp

Berkshire Festival Concerts Draw 23,000 To Tanglewood

The past hot, hazy weekend drew 23,000 people to Tanglewood at Lenox for the Berkshire Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon. The special attraction was the appearance of Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir, pianists, on Friday and Sunday.

Friday night's concert had, as usual, the smallest audience, 5,660, but it was one that appreciated a diverting double program. The "weekend prelude," presented at seven o'clock, was a delightful performance by the new Berkshire Boy Choir. This is a summer choir organized at the Stockbridge School, drawing 55 choristers from the leading boy choirs in the country, and including many well-known soloists. Their music is of unbelievable purity.

The Boston Symphony concert, directed by Erich Leinsdorf, offered a program devoted to colorful music by composers of different eras but a curiously similar willingness to entertain. Mendelssohn and Schuller are hardly a pair, and yet attention to tonal effects has come down from one to the other.

Bit Of Loveliness

Midsummmer Night's Dream overture opened the program, a traditional bit of loveliness to hear on a Berskhire evening presented with the usual Boston taste. Then came Gunther Schuller's Diptych for Brass Quintet and Orchestra, an exciting pattern of contrasts in tone and tempo that kept flirting with jazz but did not break away from the formal mass of the orchestra. This piece was first performed only two years ago. The young composer was on hand Friday night to take bows.

A more familiar flamboyance was presented in Bartok's Concerto for Two Pianos and Percussion, with Eden and Tamir and the two pianos, and conductor Leinsdorf holding all kinds of instrumental exhibitions together. This is an arduous assignment for the pianists, but it is fun for everyone else, especially an audience that likes a good thumping beat.

After intermission the two pianists reappeared with the orchestra to play Poulenc's beautiful Concerto in D Minor, which gave them a more favorable frame for their fine interpretive talent. It is a lively and graceful composition and it was played that way.

The mood of the evening — substantial but not too serious — continued with the final Til Eulenspiegel by Richard Strauss. This is a Boston Symphony classic, which Leinsdorf and the orchestra slipped into with what appeared to be pleasure and comfort. Like all symphonic pieces with memorable horn passages, it sounds wonderful outdoors.

It rained during the concert, but only those few on the lawn noticed it.

Saturday night Seiji Ozawa, director of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra, led the Boston Symphony in another program rich with romanticism: Mendelssohn's haunting Fingal's Cave, two modern works, Requiem for String Orchestra by Takemitsu and Atmospheres by Ligeti, and Berlioz' Symphonie Fantastique. The contrast between the seemingly formless modern works and the two old favorites was sharp.

Concerto in E Major

Leinsdorf returned to the podium for Sunday afternoon's concert, and Eden and Tamir returned too, to play more Mendelssohn, this time the Concerto in E major, which the composer wrote at the age of 14. There was no harsh modern stuff to get used to on Sunday, but instead the great First Symphony of Schumann, and the thrilling Firebird Suite by Stravinsky. Those who shudder in bewilderment at today's music might, however, recall that the Firebird was a shocker in its day.

Next weekend Brahms' Liebeslieder Waltzes are on the program for the Friday evening prelude, to be followed by the Boston Symphony under the direction of guest conductor Rafale Kubelik, performing Haydn's Symphony No. 102, Double Concerto by Martinu, and Symphony in D Minor by Cesar Vranck. On Saturday night Kubelik will conduct Smetana's Moldau, Elgar's violin concerto Schmuel Ashkenasi as soloist, and Symphony No. 4 by Brahms.

Sunday afternoon Leinsdorf will conduct and the program will include Six Pieces by Weborn, Symphony No. 9 by Schubert, and the Grieg Piano Concerto with Van Cliburn as soloist. The famous pianist is sure to draw crowds to the Tanglewood lawns on that day.

By A. B. M.

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350
JUL 22 1967
New England Newschp

Boston Symphony Offers Condiments

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — The full Boston Symphony Orchestra returned to Tanglewood Friday night with a full bag of colorful trickery. Nearly every available orchestral flavor was offered to 5660 listeners.

There was sweetness from Mendelssohn and Poulenc, pickles from Gunther Schuller, salt and spice from Bartok and nuts and raisins from Richard Strauss.

What Wasn't

Missing were meat and potatoes. But it was fun . . . mostly.

Mendelssohn, Schuller and Bartok were paraded (in that order) before intermission, and of the three it was Bartok's Concerto for Two Pianos and Percussion which offered the most substance.

Most of the concerto's interest lies in its wealth of percussive acrobatics, but Leinsdorf's deliberate pace seemed to take some of the exuberance out of it.

All the sonic splendor was there, but the core of unbuttoned youthful liveliness was lacking. Leinsdorf played it safely.

Safety First

It needed a touch of recklessness — a dangerous artistic commodity almost never displayed by Boston's conductor. He is not one to loosen his tie and jump into the music with both feet.

Th Poulenc Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra, which followed intermission with the same soloists Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir, is a much lesser work, but it fared somewhat better . . . perhaps because of its well-ordered simplicity.

With Mendelssohn's overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream," which opened the program, it constituted the most orthodox, least disturbing music on the program. The middle movement is bland, the last bouncy and entertaining.

Crass Brass

Most caustic (also acid) piece of the evening was Schuller's brassy, contrasty, crashing, avant garde "Diptych" for Brass Quintet and Orchestra." Its controlled chaos was interesting for a while . . . but not long.

Best known piece of the evening was Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks." It was, also, probably the most satisfying.

Leinsdorf was in full control of its happy themes and sudden tangents, and although under the best of presentations it might not surpass Bartok's Concerto in breadth and depth, it certainly equalled it in craftsmanship and entertainment Friday night.

The prelude program, which started the weekend's concerts at 7, was presented by the newly organized Berkshire Boy Choir based at the Stockbridge School.

It is made up of something over 50 boy choristers from all over the country plus adult professional singers who gather for a summer of intensive training in accordance with the ancient choir-school tradition.

There were 52 on stage Friday evening, 17 adult voices, 35 treble (20 soprano, 15 alto.) They sang 11 works (one by Mendelssohn, two by Stravinsky, a medley of litanies and three chansons by Poulenc and four Slovak folk songs by Bartok.

Their approach to the music under the direction of George Guest was easy and gentle with emphasis directed toward grace of movement and beauty of tone. Dynamics were subdued but expressive, and precision was clean but not biting.

Charles Nicholson, 12, of London, Ont., Canada, was soloist for Mendelssohn's "Hear My Prayer." He sang with a clear, bell-like, pure tone without vibrato.

Also of special interest were Stravinsky's classic "Pater Noster," a chant-like a capella piece, and Poulenc's "Litanies," a dry mildly dissonant work of simple power.

Tonight Seiji Ozawa, music director of the Toronto Symphony and a 1960 graduate of the Berkshire Music Center, will be guest conductor of a program including music by Mendelssohn, Takemitsu, Ligeti and Berlioz.

TIMES (E)
HARTFORD, CONN.
CIRC. 133,800
JUL 24 1967
New England Newschp

Tanglewood in Review: Ozawa is Evening Guest Conductor

By GEORGE W. STOWE

Seiji Ozawa, the young Japanese conductor who will lead the Boston Symphony in its Hartford visit next season, was the guest with that organization Saturday night at Tanglewood.

And his program was strongly oriented toward the 20th Century in its choice of Takemitsu's "Requiem for String Orchestra" and Gyorgy Ligeti's "Atmospheres," something that attracted many not normally seen at Tanglewood's more conventional programs. Works by Mendelssohn and Berlioz filled out the evening's musical agenda.

* * *

Takemitsu, who is on the staff of Tokyo's 20th Century Music Institute and a composer of electronic music, resorts to the traditional string contingent in this somber and acridly chromatic Requiem (which, incidentally, has no liturgical connotations). It was movingly performed by the Bostonians.

In Ligeti's "Atmospheres" the work (in the composer's own words) attempts to "supersede the structural approach to music." Using conventional instrumentation (the full orchestra in this case) he has created something very close to electronic music. Eerie string effects, whirring sounds and a wide dynamic palette, made for a fascinating sonic creation.

Needless to say, there were some excited "bravos" from the avant-gardists and less enthusiasm from the great rank and file of concertgoers.

* * *

Berlioz' Symphome Fastastique was the featured work on Saturday night's program. After the many years of Charles Munch's tenure with the orchestra the players must have been able to play it with their eyes closed.

While the French conductor of the Boston Symphony was at his best with Berlioz, the same could hardly be said of Mr. Ozawa, particularly in the first movement. The exaggerated dynamics and the striving for dramatic effects destroyed the continuity of the music. Even the waltz theme of the second movement did not have its usual ingratiation.

* * *

The March to the Gallows and the Witches Sabbath were much more to Ozawa's temperament and he gave them what a friend of mine called the "wow" treatment. It aroused a storm of enthusiasm and almost everyone seemed to be happy with the results.

For his opening work the Japanese conductor, who is now sporting long hair and sideburns, chose Mendelssohn's "Fingal's Cave" Overture. Some 7,300 persons turned out for the concert, which was only momentarily interrupted by rain.

Schenectady Gazette. July 24 67

Boston Symphony Orchestra Performs Little-Known Works

By D. E. RITZ

The byways of musical experience are met with much more frequently in this mid-20th century than in many past eras and last Saturday evening we traveled to Tanglewood to hear two works that fall into this category. They were played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa conducting.

* * *

The works are the Toru Takemitsu' "Requiem for String Orchestra" and Gyorgy Ligeti's "Atmospheres," both receiving their first performance at the Festival Concerts.

The program also included the ever familiar, ever beautiful overture, "The Hebrides" (Fingal's Cave), opus 26 of Mendelssohn and the Hector Berlioz "Symphonie Fantastique, opus 14 a."

The Takemitsu 10-minute "Requiem" is in one movement and has a quite eastern approach to the subject of string melody. The work includes two first viola solo and one solo passage by the concertmaster. Sometimes without what seemed to us neither rhyme nor reason, there appeared a harmonic, seemingly quite out of place. The work is pervaded by the mysticism which marks Eastern thought and which leaves the Western listener somewhat in a daze.

* * *

The American premiere of the Japanese composer's work was presented in 1963 at Ravinia under Ozawa's direction. Dating from 1957, the "Requiem for Spring Orchestra" first established Takemitsu's reputation as one of Japan's outstanding young composers. Takemitsu is a staff member of Tokyo's Twentieth Century Music Institute and a member of the Experimental Studio and we do not doubt that the Japanese find it quite as unusual as we do.

Ligeti's "Atmospheres" employs the resources of the entire orchestra and left this member of the audience completely astounded.

The Hungarian-born Ligeti worked for several years in the Electronic Music Studio of the West German Radio in Cologne. "Atmospheres" was commissioned in 1961 by the Southwest German Radio and given its first performance during the same year.

Of himself, the composer says, "My personal development began with serial music, but today I have passed beyond serialism." In "Atmospheres" he has attempted to "Establish a new textural concept of music. In this there are no 'events,' but only 'states,' no contours or forms, but instead an uninhabited, imaginary musical space. Tone color is liberated from form to become an independent musical entity."

The work seemed to us to include electronic devices used so skillfully that one was never quite sure whether it was an unusual orchestral instrumental tone metamorphosis alone or in combination with an electronic effect. There were buzzing effects, muted brass, queer string tones and totally astounding results. To say that we and many others were puzzled, is putting it mildly.

Both works were enthusiastically received by the 7,306 attending the Shed performance.

Experiment is the order of the day in music, dance, art form and expression. It is a period of trying out new ways, new thought. "Where is it leading?" Is it a dead end in itself or is it possibly leading to "fresh fields." Only time will tell but until then many of us will enjoy the byways as well as the highways of music.

* * *

Seiji Ozawa does not rely solely on his skill at interpretation of new works but brings to older numbers of the orchestral repertoire a fresh approach and a musical imagery that sheds new light on their meanings.

On Saturday night he presented the Mendelssohn's overture, completed in 1830; and the Berlioz' symphony, written the same year, giving both works with a vitality and warmth that made them glow in new color.

One luxuriated in the tone color of the "Fingal's Cave" music and felt anew the genius of Mendelssohn in capturing the "greener roar of the waters" and the cavern known as Fingal's Cave at the island of Staffa, one of the Hebrides group. As played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Saturday under Ozawa, the work affected us even more strongly than it did on our first hearing of many years ago.

The "Fantastic Symphony," one of two works written by Berlioz under his own title of "Episode in the Life of an Artist" is frequently met with on symphonic programs. The other part of the Opus 14 work is titled "The Return to Life" and is described as a "lyric monodrama." We have never heard it performed and are wondering why?

The "Symphonie Fantastique" is in five sections titled "Reveries, Passions," "A Ball," "Scene in the Meadows," "March to the Scaffold" and "Dream of a Witches' Sabbath."

It is strikingly pictorial music and under Ozawa's direction was given most sensitive interpretation. The "Ball Scene" has lovely harp and string sequences and delightful rhythms. The "Scene in the Meadows" was taken at a slower tempo than one usually hears, bringing its phrases a new and different emphasis. But it was the "March to the Scaffold" and the concluding "Witches' Sabbath" music that left one breathless from its passion. In the last movement the gong tones actually hurt one's eardrums and one wondered how the drum heads stood up under such vigorous onslaught.

At the close of the concert the audience bubbled over with enthusiasm. The lights were turned on the conductor and the performers were repeatedly applauded.

Attendance figures, available at the close of the program, included 941 for the Tuesday night chamber music in the Theater; 2,889 at the open Saturday morning rehearsal; 5,660 for the Friday program led by Erich Leinsdorf; as well as the 7,306 attending Saturday night. The weekend concluded yesterday afternoon with a program conducted by Erich Leinsdorf and featuring the Mendelssohn "Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra in E major." The program also include the Schumann' "Symphony number 1" and "The Stravinsky Suite from the Ballet," "L'Jiseau de feu."

SUNDAY REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 115,950

JUL 23 1967 New England Newscltp

'New Wave' Makes Ozawa's Wading at Tanglewood Tough

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — Another mixture of freely romantic and severely contemporary music made up the program Saturday night at Tanglewood.

Ozawa Conducting

The Boston Symphony Orchestr a was being conducted by Seiji Ozawa, the youthful Japanese director of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra.

Before intermission, there was Mendelssohn's "Hebrides" Overture, Takemitsu's "Requiem for String Orchestra" and Ligeti's "Atmospheres."

After intermission there was Berlioz' "Symphonie Fantastique," one of the most popular of symphonies.

No Beginning, No End

"Atmospheres" was, by far, the most startling...but not because there were any jolts in it. It consisted almost entirely of very long, densely chromatic chords which had no definable beginning or ending.

They oozed into space, from groaning rumble to shrill squeak.

A hint of the sound may be imagined by picturing the two men standing at the topless piano. One gently struck clusters of strings with padded mallets. The other stroked them with a jazz drummer's wire brushes.

It was interesting, but, as the composer is quoted as saying in the program notes... "Atmospheres presumably occupies an extreme position, which possibly may be interrupted as a dead end."

The Requiem

Takemitsu's "Requiem" also was characterized by vague outlines and a semi-static motion, but it was less deliberately and self-consciously "atmospheric" and more impressionistic, like "Afternoon of a Faun."

The opening and closing works were traditional, the Mendelssohn played with tidy, cohesive propulsion, the Berlioz with episodic emphasis on phrasing and a loss of continuity and unity.

It was, in a word, loose.

Of course the giant "Symphonie Fantastique" cannot be tossed aside with a word, nor can the conductor be ignored.

Ozawa is a slight, wiry, boyish conductor with lots of zip and zazz. This was his fourth visit to Tanglewood, and in the past he has pushed the music forward with relentless vigor.

The opening overture showed some of this and perhaps the motionless avant garde works in the middle slowed him, because by the time the orchestra had wallowed through them and the audience (7306) had sauntered through intermission, his momentum had faltered.

The "Symphonie Fantastique" moved the deliberation when it should have taken off and flown—and it flew gently when it should have soared.

There was some pickup in the pace toward the finish, but Ozawa wasn't up to his usual snuff Saturday.

Today Leinsdorf will return to conduct Schumann's First Symphony, Mendelssohn's Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra (E Major) and Stravinsky's "Firebird" Suite.

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,100

JUL 24 1967 New England Newscltp

27

Ozawa Wins Ovation With Berlioz Work

By MARGO MILLER
Globe Critic

LENOX — The young Japanese conductor Seiji Ozawa captured Tanglewood Saturday night. The public gave him an ovation and six or seven curtain calls. Boston Symphony players stamped their feet, applauded and then, refusing to rise, made him take a solo bow.

This was occasioned by a performance of the Berlioz Symphonie Fantastique. Ozawa's music making is clear, clean and has superb taste.

Unlike Erich Leinsdorf (in other works) he can linger without stopping dead. Unlike Charles Munch, who often conducted the Fantastique, Ozawa can make the music move without frenzy. Ozawa digs the romantic.

Berlioz was writing about an artist's life. Order and inspiration are its two poles. The Fantastique is a music wanting to be normal.

Its various forms are quite orthodox, but each start — reverie, waltz, pastorale, march — becomes fevered and changed, as though a demonaic hand put his on the creator's.

This was a remarkably pictorial Fantastique in the musical sense. Ozawa senses how Berlioz sets up the artist's battles with form and fantasy. One heard the colors, felt the pulse. It was intelligent, heartfelt and dramatic, and the orchestra, which up to this point in the Tanglewood season has sounded as soggy as the weather, played beautifully.

Ozawa's other coup of the program was selling Gyorgy Ligeti's "Atmospheres" to the audience. They were charmed, though by what they weren't sure. Ligeti writes "white" music by the yard. It has a tinselly sound, is made of the musical equivalent of striped cellophane, being horizontal streamers of sound for each orchestral choir. Fourteen minutes of whole cloth.

The other contemporary piece was Toru Takemitsu's "Requiem for String Orchestra." This is broad elegaic music with a few harmonic flourishes and enough serialism to say that the composer, in 1957, had looked on Vienna and found it good.

Mendelssohn has come up on each Tanglewood program this week end. Ozawa's choice was "Hebrides" overture to which he gave a lovely performance.

Sunday afternoon Leinsdorf had the Israeli duo piano team of Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir to do the E Major Concerto. This, a work of Mendelssohn's 14th year, is agreeable but not much more, and the Tanglewood interpreters went at it in a solemn way.

Eden and Tamir also played Friday evening. To the Bartok piano and percussion concerto, a repeat from the Boston Symphony's winter season, they added the Poulenc Concerto in D. Poulenc's fun eludes them.

TELEGRAM (m)
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 62,350

JUL 24 1967 New England Newscltp

Music: Ozawa and Leinsdorf Conduct at Festival

LENOX — A contrasted study in podium styles was given by Seiji Ozawa and Erich Leinsdorf at the final two concerts of the Berkshire Music Festival's fourth weekend.

Concerts on Friday and Saturday nights, yesterday afternoon, and the open rehearsal on Saturday morning had combined attendance of 23,277.

The corresponding weekend of concerts last summer attracted 37,224 persons to Tanglewood.

Comparison in conductors wasn't all in favor of Leinsdorf, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's regular director, at yesterday afternoon's program.

No more thrilling performance has been heard at Tanglewood of Stravinsky's "Firebird" Suite. Leinsdorf and the orchestra were quite marvelous.

Workmanlike Style

He doled out every cue with practical, workmanlike gestures, totally devoid of theatrical extras. Geyser-like passages of the introduction gleamed. The "Berceuse" was a thing of poignant beauty.

Kastchei's "Infernal Dance" was some of the most ordained chaos we have heard from this orchestra. Everything went just right, even the gentle, threatening horn solo that ushers in the finale.

It grew to huge swells of sound that must have been heard in nearby Stockbridge.

Except for superficial interest, little was accomplished by including Mendelssohn's Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra in E Major on yesterday's program. It is understandably a neglected work.

Pianists Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir saw to it that there wasn't a cross note in the three movements. It's loaded with runs, octaves and other technical devices, gleefully jotted down by Mendelssohn when he was 14. The pianists played it with respect and the orchestra followed suit.

Jubilant Symphony

After a robust start, Schumann's First Symphony pursued a jubilant course. Leinsdorf kept it throbbing. Solos came through well except for gravelly horns. Strings glowed with warmth in the slow movement, and Leinsdorf brought the work to an epic close in stages.

Saturday night, Ozawa made his fourth guest appearance at Tanglewood in as many years. He's regular conductor of the Toronto Symphony.

The young Japanese conductor's program was replete with pitfalls. In spite of its conjuring title, at least two movements of Berlioz' "Fantastic Symphony" lapsed into the tedious. They were "Reveries" and "Scene in the Meadows."

Mendelssohn's "Hebrides" Overture had its moments of vitality, but generally struck the mark of an old chestnut. At best it was a conservative, compact performance.

Risky Program

The rest of Ozawa's program was downright risky. These were two contemporary works — Requiem for String Orchestra by the contemporary Japanese composer Toru Takemitsu, and "Atmospheres" by the Hungarian Gyorgy Ligeti.

While Takemitsu's Requiem is far ahead of tradition, it has the power of suggestion through clear melodic paths, concordance, and freedom of action.

Ligeti's piece was nothing more than a disorganized series of sound effects.

Such might be heard at the end of a tunnel, when steel sheets are dropped, near an aviary, in movies about outer space, in insect sounds, and from brushed piano strings.

There wasn't a blast in the piece, nor a conventional sound.

The orchestra paid Ozawa the courtesy of diligent effort, although some of the men couldn't suppress an occasional smile.

R.M.

28

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 192,400

JUL 24 1967

New England Newsclip

Ozawa on podium at Tanglewood

By Clifford Barnes

Lenox, Mass.

Guest conductors with a symphony orchestra face the awesome task of winning over a group of professional musicians, usually for one concert only, in order to match the standard set by the permanent conductor. Chances of falling below are high. The possibility of rising above it is quite small.

A rare bird who succeeded in the latter category is a mini-sized bundle of energy from Japan, Seiji Ozawa. He walked away with Saturday evening's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood. Yet in his Japanese-humble way, he gave full credit to the instrumentalists and acknowledged the applause standing in their midst—not on the podium.

When music director Erich Leinsdorf returned to his usual position on Sunday afternoon, the orchestra returned to its usual status—a routinely fine concert, for which every Boston music lover can be grateful. Everything was in the right place, but the excitement of the night before was missing. Four successive seasons of Ozawa-san at Tanglewood rate a fifth, sixth, and seventh, as well as an appearance during the regular season in Boston.

Wholehearted response

Not that all of the programing was responsible. Mendelssohn's "Fingal's Cave" Overture and the Berlioz Symphonie "Fantastique" are common items in any good orchestra's repertoire. But this 32-year-old sharp-dresser was never content to let the music sound ordinary. There was total involvement. Every part of his body communicated.

The result was a wonderfully warm sound from the orchestra. Precision was evident. Mr. Ozawa means what he says, and he gets it wholeheartedly. The most interesting part of his conducting is an expressive left hand. It almost never follows the right-hand beat pattern, but can say more with economy of means than can be seen on most podiums in this country.

The Berlioz was marked by careful attention to detail. An oboe was off stage in echo-duet with the English horn during the third movement. Interesting countermelodies were brought out in the waltz that added greatly to the usual imagery of the music. The chimes in the last movement seemed too loud at first. But when two tubas began intoning the Dies Irae, the volume level made sense.

There was applause after each movement. The whole symphony built to such a climax, the audience was cheering at the conclusion. The applause at the end of the first half of the concert was a little more reserved, but the reason was a piece of superimpressionism, "Atmosphères," by György Ligeti. Here the test of the conductor was to bring the piece off at all—in spite of muffled smiles by the musicians themselves, and an occasional shake of the head by a first-chair man who missed a note or two.

Seiji Ozawa

Atmospheric sounds

The composer's tone poem evokes "uninhabited, imaginary musical space," through extremely clever musical devices. None of those electronic sounds. Two drummers stroked the strings of a piano with brushes usually applied to snare drums and cymbals. The brass section blowing air through their mouthpieceless instruments depicted the winds of outerspace. Pitches seemed to move up and beyond the range of the human ear.

Although it was written in 1961, "Atmospheres" is infinitely more forward-looking than the Requiem for String Orchestra, composed in 1957 by Toru Takemitsu, the work that came first on the program. Mr. Takemitsu is considered by some to be the most talented young composer in Japan today. His Requiem doesn't say anything that hasn't been said as well by Schoenberg, Barber, and others since the turn of the century. In any case, the conductor's emotional involvement was complete, including audible deep breathing.

ARTS
ENTERTAINMENT

Duo pianists

Sunday's concert opened with Schumann's "Spring" Symphony. Mr. Leinsdorf's balletic body movements aided in calling forth a lively reading of the score. Mr. Ozawa's more modern frug might have given it a little more zip. The cello section played a lovely solo passage in the Larghetto. The woodwinds had some very fine moments in the finale.

Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir returned to their two keyboards for Mendelssohn's Concerto for two pianos and orchestra in E major. (They had played the Poulenc Concerto for two pianos Friday night). The work was composed three years before the popular "Midsummer Night's Dream" Overture, also written for two pianos in its original version.

The youthful modulations and overuse of scale-runs and arpeggios dull the first impression of this little-known concerto. The finale contains the best writing for two pianos and the surrounding orchestral web. Eden and Tamir make a fine team, but he has the more dynamic piano tone of the pair.

Mr. Leinsdorf selected excerpts from the ballet score of Stravinsky's "Firebird" to close the program. He included part of the score that needs dancing and stage action to sustain full attention by the listener, just as he has done with Prokofiev's "Romeo and Juliet." It turns out to be a questionable service to the concertgoer.

The "Ronde des princesses" and the "Berceuse" were the most captivating moments, due to the effective solo work of Ralph Gomberg, oboe, and Sherman Walt, bassoon.

JOURNAL
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,500

JUL 27 1967

New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Weekend and Music Barn

TANGLEWOOD, FRIDAY
By A. C. S.

The Berkshire Boy Choir, under the expert direction of George Guest, provided a brilliant prelude to the weekend of concerts at Tangelwood. The group is excellent in every detail: balanced choral sound, effective solo singing, good diction, and above all, musical taste. They will be singing at St. John's Church in Salisbury on Sunday, July 30, and those able to attend are assured a rewarding experience.

The Boston Symphony concert opened and closed with familiar works: Mendelssohn's Overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream" and Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks by Richard Strauss. Both received loving attention and clarity of detail which is the hallmark of Erich Leinsdorf at his best.

Three relatively contemporary works comprised the remainder of the program. Diptych for Brass Quintet and Orchestra by Gunther Schuller explores testures, timbres and rhythms. The Bartok Concerto for Two Pianos and Percussion and the Poulenc Concerto in D minor for Two Pianos and Orchestra featured the team of Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir as soloists. They seem to have technical facility and balanced tone, but they failed to communicate the bite and sparkle needed in these works.

TANGLEWOOD, SATURDAY
By A. C. S.

The return of Seiji Ozawa for the fourth season as guest conductor at Tanglewood can properly be called triumphant. He led a most interesting program consisting of two old favorites and two very modern works. Mendelssohn's "Hebrides" Overture was relaxed, spacious, and very romantic. Berlioz' Symphonie Fantasique provided a large canvas and a wide range of colors and effects to be manipulated. The "Scene in the Meadows" was beautifully phrased and paced, and the "Dream of the Witches' Sabbath" was a veritable nightmare. At the close, even the orchestra, which had done all the work, was moved to cheer the conductor.

A Requiem for String Orchestra by Toru Takemitsu was the first contemporary work. Mr. Ozawa introduced it to this country four years ago and obviously has an affinity for it. Despite any harmonic complexities, it is easy to listen to and, with lengthy phrases broken by sighs of silence, aptly follows its title. Atmospheres by the Hungarian composer Ligeti, is a fascinating aural excursion, a journey in sound to worlds unknown. The transfer of what could have been an electronic score to an orchestral one is brilliant, successful, and satisfying.

TANGLEWOOD, SUNDAY
By E. M.

The high points of Sunday afternoon's concert by Mr. Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra were two instrumental showpieces: Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B-flat major and suite from Stravinsky's ballet The Fire-Bird.

The Schumann begins in high tension, and the orchestra set the tone immediately. The full-bodied vivacity and rushing confidence of the first movement slackened not a bit; Mr. Leinsdorf "played" the orchestra as if it were an organ; the counterpoint between strings and full orchestra was especially true. The melodious, introspective opening of the second movement led quickly to the strong string and brass choirs, and although there was a sense of the oboes being overwhelmed in the final movement, the orchestra worked smoothly toward the spectacular conclusion.

The Fire-Bird was a triumph of control and pyrotecnics. Outstanding were the shimmering flute passages in the Supplications; the lovely, familiar oboe air and muted strings of the Ronde des princesses; and the dissonant brass choirs, thunderclaps, and virtuoso trumpets of the Danse infernale — a true "sonic spectacular." The great progressively augmented brass repetitions and clear, glorious emotions of the Finale brought the audience to its feet with calls for Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra.

MUSIC BARN
By S. H. B.

The ability to walk onto a bare stage with only a voice and an instrument, and be able to immediately gather an audience into complete rapport is no mean feat, requiring great personality, and one which many talented performers cannot do. Pete Seeger can, and in that respect much resembles the ministrels of old who were the forerunners of the folk singers of today.

Last Saturday afternoon at the Berkshire Music Barn we saw this happen again when Seeger arrived on stage with the microphones not turned on. Not a bit phased, he said "come on, let's all sing," and swung into Tom Dooley to audience cheers.

His program was in reality a protest one. Starting with posting two signs, "Chicken Little was right," he used his numbers to trace the answers people have devised for solving the world's problems through the generations, refusing to accept a "falling sky"; but he sang also of those who do accept, look for escape in death, dope and damnation, since we will all die eventually, anyway, rather than to fight. And always ran the thread that life is worth living, so live it in truth and honesty and not give up.

In developing his theme that there is really no good and evil, but just foolishness, he quoted Carl Sandburg, who unknown to us all, had just died, as saying that there should be an eleventh commandment, "Thou shalt not commit nimcompoopery'!"

The program dragged only at the start of the second half, when Seeger introduced a young British singer, Bob Davenport, who sang some British-type folk songs which, although he had a good true tenor voice, somehow didn't get across to the audience, and Seeger gnally had to rescue him and pull the audience back from their restlessness into the palm of his hand once again.

Pete Seeger has been around quite a while, but it is ever a thrill to watch a master who loses little with familiarity.

28

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 192,400

JUL 24 1967

New England Newsclip

Ozawa on podium at Tanglewood

By Clifford Barnes

Lenox, Mass.

Guest conductors with a symphony orchestra face the awesome task of winning over a group of professional musicians, usually for one concert only, in order to match the standard set by the permanent conductor. Chances of falling below are high. The possibility of rising above it is quite small.

A rare bird who succeeded in the latter category is a mini-sized bundle of energy from Japan, Seiji Ozawa. He walked away with Saturday evening's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood. Yet in his Japanese-humble way, he gave full credit to the instrumentalists and acknowledged the applause standing in their midst—not on the podium.

When music director Erich Leinsdorf returned to his usual position on Sunday afternoon, the orchestra returned to its usual status—a routinely fine concert, for which every Boston music lover can be grateful. Everything was in the right place, but the excitement of the night before was missing. Four successive seasons of Ozawa-san at Tanglewood rate a fifth, sixth, and seventh, as well as an appearance during the regular season in Boston.

Seiji Ozawa

ARTS
ENTERTAINMENT

Wholehearted response

Not that all of the programing was responsible. Mendelssohn's "Fingal's Cave" Overture and the Berlioz Symphonie "Fantastique" are common items in any good orchestra's repertoire. But this 32-year-old sharp-dresser was never content to let the music sound ordinary. There was total involvement. Every part of his body communicated.

The result was a wonderfully warm sound from the orchestra. Precision was evident. Mr. Ozawa means what he says, and he gets it wholeheartedly. The most interesting part of his conducting is an expressive left hand. It almost never follows the right-hand beat pattern, but can say more with economy of means than can be seen on most podiums in this country.

The Berlioz was marked by careful attention to detail. An oboe was off stage in echo-duet with the English horn during the third movement. Interesting countermelodies were brought out in the waltz that added greatly to the usual imagery of the music. The chimes in the last movement seemed too loud at first. But when two tubas began intoning the Dies Irae, the volume level made sense.

There was applause after each movement. The whole symphony built to such a climax, the audience was cheering at the conclusion. The applause at the end of the first half of the concert was a little more reserved, but the reason was a piece of super-impressionism, "Atmosphères," by György Ligeti. Here the test of the conductor was to bring the piece off at all—in spite of muffled smiles by the musicians themselves, and an occasional shake of the head by a first-chair man who missed a note or two.

Atmospheric sounds

The composer's tone poem evokes "uninhabited, imaginary musical space," through extremely clever musical devices. None of those electronic sounds. Two drummers stroked the strings of a piano with brushes usually applied to snare drums and cymbals. The brass section blowing air through their mouthpieceless instruments depicted the winds of outerspace. Pitches seemed to move up and beyond the range of the human ear.

Although it was written in 1961, "Atmospheres" is infinitely more forward-looking than the Requiem for String Orchestra, composed in 1957 by Toru Takemitsu, the work that came first on the program. Mr. Takemitsu is considered by some to be the most talented young composer in Japan today. His Requiem doesn't say anything that hasn't been said as well by Schoenberg, Barber, and others since the turn of the century. In any case, the conductor's emotional involvement was complete, including audible deep breathing.

Duo pianists

Sunday's concert opened with Schumann's "Spring" Symphony. Mr. Leinsdorf's balletic body movements aided in calling forth a lively reading of the score. Mr. Ozawa's more modern frug might have given it a little more zip. The cello section played a lovely solo passage in the Larghetto. The woodwinds had some very fine moments in the finale.

Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir returned to their two keyboards for Mendelssohn's Concerto for two pianos and orchestra in E major. (They had played the Poulenc Concerto for two pianos Friday night). The work was composed three years before the popular "Midsummer Night's Dream" Overture, also written for two pianos in its original version.

The youthful modulations and overuse of scale-runs and arpeggios dull the first impression of this little-known concerto. The finale contains the best writing for two pianos and the surrounding orchestral web. Eden and Tamir make a fine team, but he has the more dynamic piano tone of the pair.

Mr. Leinsdorf selected excerpts from the ballet score of Stravinsky's "Firebird" to close the program. He included part of the score that needs dancing and stage action to sustain full attention by the listener, just as he has done with Prokofiev's "Romeo and Juliet." It turns out to be a questionable service to the concertgoer.

The "Ronde des princesses" and the "Berceuse" were the most captivating moments, due to the effective solo work of Ralph Gomberg, oboe, and Sherman Walt, bassoon.

JOURNAL
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,500

JUL 27 1967

New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Weekend and Music Barn

TANGLEWOOD, FRIDAY
By A. C. S.

The Berkshire Boy Choir, under the expert direction of George Guest, provided a brilliant prelude to the weekend of concerts at Tanglewood. The group is excellent in every detail: balanced choral sound, effective solo singing, good diction, and above all, musical taste. They will be singing at St. John's Church in Salisbury on Sunday, July 30, and those able to attend are assured a rewarding experience.

The Boston Symphony concert opened and closed with familiar works: Mendelssohn's Overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream" and Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks by Richard Strauss. Both received loving attention and clarity of detail which is the hallmark of Erich Leinsdorf at his best.

Three relatively contemporary works comprised the remainder of the program. Diptych for Brass Quintet and Orchestra by Gunther Schuller explores testures, timbres and rhythms. The Bartok Concerto for Two Pianos and Percussion and the Poulenc Concerto in D minor for Two Pianos and Orchestra featured the team of Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir as soloists. They seem to have technical facility and balanced tone, but they failed to communicate the bite and sparkle needed in these works.

TANGLEWOOD, SATURDAY
By A. C. S.

The return of Seiji Ozawa for the fourth season as guest conductor at Tanglewood can properly be called triumphant. He led a most interesting program consisting of two old favorites and two very modern works. Mendelssohn's "Hebrides" Overture was relaxed, spacious, and very romantic. Berlioz' Symphonie Fantasique provided a large canvas and a wide range of colors and effects to be manipulated. The "Scene in the Meadows" was beautifully phrased and paced, and the "Dream of the Witches' Sabbath" was a veritable nightmare. At the close, even the orchestra, which had done all the work, was moved to cheer the conductor.

A Requiem for String Orchestra by Toru Takemitsu was the first contemporary work. Mr. Ozawa introduced it to this country four years ago and obviously has an affinity for it. Despite any harmonic complexities, it is easy to listen to and, with lengthy phrases broken by sighs of silence, aptly follows its title. Atmospheres by the Hungarian composer Ligeti, is a fascinating aural excursion, a journey in sound to worlds unknown. The transfer of what could have been an electronic score to an orchestral one is brilliant, successful, and satisfying.

TANGLEWOOD, SUNDAY
By E. M.

The high points of Sunday afternoon's concert by Mr. Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra were two instrumental showpieces: Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B-flat major and suite from Stravinsky's ballet The Fire-Bird.

The Schumann begins in high tension, and the orchestra set the tone immediately. The full-bodied vivacity and rushing confidence of the first movement slackened not a bit; Mr. Leinsdorf "played" the orchestra as if it were an organ; the counterpoint between strings and full orchestra was especially true. The melodious, introspective opening of the second movement led quickly to the strong string and brass choirs, and although there was a sense of the oboes being overwhelmed in the final movement, the orchestra worked smoothly toward the spectacular conclusion.

The Fire-Bird was a triumph of control and pyrotecnics. Outstanding were the shimmering flute passages in the Supplications; the lovely, familiar oboe air and muted strings of the Ronde des princesses; and the dissonant brass choirs, thunderclaps, and virtuoso trumpets of the Danse infernale — a true "sonic spectacular." The great progressively augmented brass repetitions and clear, glorious emotions of the Finale brought the audience to its feet with calls for Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra.

MUSIC BARN
By S. H. B.

The ability to walk onto a bare stage with only a voice and an instrument, and be able to immediately gather an audience into complete rapport is no mean feat, requiring great personality, and one which many talented performers cannot do. Pete Seeger can, and in that respect much resembles the ministrels of old who were the forerunners of the folk singers of today.

Last Saturday afternoon at the Berkshire Music Barn we saw this happen again when Seeger arrived on stage with the microphones not turned on. Not a bit phased, he said "come on, let's all sing," and swung into Tom Dooley to audience cheers.

His program was in reality a protest one. Starting with posting two signs, "Chicken Little was right," he used his numbers to trace the answers people have devised for solving the world's problems through the generations, refusing to accept a "falling sky"; but he sang also of those who do accept, look for escape in death, dope and damnation, since we will all die eventually, anyway, rather than to fight. And always ran the thread that life is worth living, so live it in truth and honesty and not give up.

In developing his theme that there is really no good and evil, but just foolishness, he quoted Carl Sandburg, who unknown to us all, had just died, as saying that there should be an eleventh commandment, "Thou shalt not commit nimcompoopery"!"

The program dragged only at the start of the second half, when Seeger introduced a young British singer, Bob Davenport, who sang some British-type folk songs which, although he had a good true tenor voice, somehow didn't get across to the audience, and Seeger gnally had to rescue him and pull the audience back from their restlessness into the palm of his hand once again.

Pete Seeger has been around quite a while, but it is ever a thrill to watch a master who loses little with familiarity.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 SUN. 122,607

JUL 24 1967

Weather Curtails Attendance Over Weekend at Tanglewood

By ROBERT J. BARBER

Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, reached the season's half-way mark over the weekend plagued by bad weather and a drop in attendance.

But a spokesman said, with four weeks to go there is still time to catch up with last year's record. He said advance ticket sales are only slightly behind last year's and the scheduled performance next weekend of pianist Van Cliburn is expected to bring in thousands more — weather permitting.

It was a weekend of romantic and modern music under the direction of Seiji Ozawa Saturday evening and Erich Leinsdorf Friday, and Sunday afternoon.

Saturday evening, with a crowded Shed and packed lawn, a sudden rain squall sent the outsiders running for cover just as the youthful Ozawa began conducting Berlioz' "Symphonie Fantastique."

The 32-year-old guest conductor, back at Tanglewood for his fourth successive year and where he received the Koussevitzky Memorial Scholarship in 1960, Ozawa is now music director of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra and the Ravinia Festival in Chicago.

Ozawa opened the Saturday night program with Mendelssohn's ouverture to "Fingal's Cave," a program piece designed to describe the master's impressions of the great caves in Scotland It was during this visit also that he began outlining his "Scottish Symphony."

The most startling performance for the weekend was Gyorgy Ligeti's "Atmospheres." It was commissioned in 1961 by the Southwest German Radio and was given its first performance that same year.

Its worth seems doubtful. Ligeti says he was attempting to establish a new textural concept of music. "In this kind of music," he says, "there are no 'events,' but only 'states,' no contours or forms but instead, an uninhibited imaginary musical space."

"Fantastic Symphony" on the other hand oozed color and depth and it's not difficult to see why, even though it startled Berlioz' contemporaries, it has continued to be so popular.

There have been perhaps a half dozen composers who have upset custom, discovered fresh territory where others have feared to tread. Berlioz was one of those.

Sunday afternoon, Leinsdorf conducted Schumann's Symphony No 1 in B flat major; Mendelssohn's Concerto for Two Pianos in E major; and Stravinsky's Suite from the Ballet, "L'Oiseau de feu."

Again, it was an afternoon of the romantic and the modern with Stravinsk's suite from the "Fire Bird" standing out among the older compositions.

Composed in 1910, the wor was dedicated to Rimsky-K sakoff, son of the composer, a it was from the original work that Leinsdorf drew upon for Sunday's performance.

Next weekend at Tanglewood, Van Cliburn will climax the festival's fifth weeek with a performance of Grieg's Piano Concerto. Friday, the orchestra will perform Franck's Symphony in D minor and Saturday, Brahms' Symphony No. 4.

NEWS (e)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 98,600

JUL 24 1967

New England Newspapers

Tanglewood Critique

Soloists Hampered By Mediocre Music

By ARTHUR T. ANDREWES

The midway point in the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood was marked yesterday afternoon with two works that rocked the audience and a third that was as innocuous as the others were brilliant.

It is not often that soloists are saddled with a work that does little to exhibit their virtuosity to a willing audience. The Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra by Felix Mendelssohn did not present an adequate platform from which to display properly the artistry of pianists Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir.

Perhaps the frequency of solo play was the reason for the choice in this matter. Perhaps the fine nuances escaped all but those directly involved. The composition, written by Mendelssohn when he was only 14, has moments of grandeur. However even those moments fade into an inoffensive mediocrity that the combined efforts of the two soloists, Erich Leinsdorf, and the entire Boston Symphony could not overcome.

This cannot cancel or deny the creative ability of the soloists. In their particular chores, made more difficult by music that had little emotional contour, the presence of artistic maturity was undeniable.

The opening selection was the kind of bright, multi-colored composition that unites an audience with a bond of mutual excitement. Symphony Number One in B Flat Major by Robert Schumann can be enjoyed by everyone. No one is too unsophisticated nor too learned to appreciate at least one movement from this kaleidoscopic symphony.

After the nearly noncommittal middle piece by Mendelssohn, the audience was primed for what was to come. The placid atmosphere left by the concerto was the best possible setting for a full appreciation of the Firebird Suite by Igor Stravinsky.

The opening measures did not intrude upon the afternoon quiet. Slowly but surely the music that forms the foundation for one of the world's greatest ballets began to penetrate and envelope the audience.

As mysteriously dark as it is brilliantly demonstrative, the Stravinsky piece finds a place in everyone listening. While there were times when Leinsdorf seemed deliberately to slow down the music to a painfully slow pace, it might well have been his sense of theatrical contrast that guided this decision.

The section preceding the "Infernal Dance of Katchei's Demons" seemed almost too slow until compared to the frightening roar of the section that follows.

Leinsdorf appeared to enjoy the conducting of this last portion of the program as he fairly leaped, coaxed, gyrated and danced according to the wild and surging force of the music.

The audience responded with a standing ovation well spiced with cheers, bravos, and applause for the man and the orchestra that makes Tanglewood what it is today.

Forms in the Shed

A man arrives early for the Sunday afternoon concert at Tanglewood. He sits alone. The great quiet is reflected by row upon row of unoccupied chairs. His wandering eyes conceive geometric figures from the common things about him. Only the sounds of birds, heralding the concert to come, distract him from his reverie.

Photos by Arthur T. Andrewes

As his eyes wander upward, toward the source of the sound, the massive structure above him takes on the identity of a fantastic geometric maze. Steel girders and metal plates form a multitude of shapes and forms limited in number by the length and breadth of the viewer's imagination.

Tanglewood combines the nature of man with the man in nature in order to establish a better setting for the appreciation of good music. Only in a place such as Tanglewood can the mind wander freely, enjoying the talents of man and God on a patch of land that represents artistic freedom and dignity.

Whenever surrounded by a legacy of creative freedom, man should allow himself to enjoy the powers of imagination and creative pleasure that are as rightfully his as life itself.

ATA

The Knickerbocker News  Albany, uly . ,1967 12A

At the Concert

Conductor Ozawa, Man of Wide Talent

By DUANE LaFLECHE

SIJI OZAWA, the young Japanese conductor, was four quite different people Saturday night at Tanglewood.

First the calligrapher. This in Mendelssohn's overture "The Hebrides." Here he conducted in brush strokes, using the calligraphy of his countrymen to reproduce the musical portrait Mendelssohn had painted. One wished, at the end, that Mr. Ozawa had chosen to call Eveertt Firth, the orchestra's typmanist, to the podium to share the applause. As a master of the kettledrums Mr. Firth has few peers.

The second Mr. Ozawa was the synthesist, one who puts together, as a chemist puts together. He compounded the carefully measured ingredients that his contemporary, the Japanese composer Toru Tekemitsu, had measured out for his "Requiem for String Orchestra." All measurements were exact. All ingredients carefully selected. One must not blame the conductor that the requiem proved, at its end, to be a requiem for nobody.

THE THIRD Mr. Ozawa, in contrast to the second, was not a chemist but an alchemist, a space age chemist.

He performed his magic in presenting "Atmospheres," a work written a half dozen years ago by the Hungarian composer Gyorgy Ligeti. Here Mr. Ozawa was spiriting forth from the orchestra those space age sounds woven together from conventional instruments used often in unconventional ways. The composer speaks of "Atmospheres" as creating "an uninhabitated, imaginary musical space."

There could not have been many in the audience who could discern just how those new but immensely musical sounds were being treated—except for the closing notes. Then, over a grand piano with the top removed, stood two of the percussionists of the orchestra. With whisks they stroked the exposed strings. So it ended, although few in the audience knew it was ended. It would be good to hear "Atmospheres" again.

AND THEN the fourth Mr. Ozawa. The businessman—with a large business to attend to, a romantic business with a bit of the baroque to it. A business that had to be run with a cool effi-efficiency and a daring spirit. So, to his role of Japanese businessman, Mr. Ozawa added the fire of the samurai (an element American businessmen encounter often, but ever with surprise, in their suave Japanese counterparts).

The occasion for this Mr. Ozawa was Berlioz' "Symphonie Fantastique." Mr. Ozawa was the businessman even as he recreated the reveries and even as he made the waltz the most waltz-able of waltzes. But it was with a samurai's sword that he beheaded the hero.

All 7,300 present liked the way he did it.

DUE IN AT SARATOGA CENTER—Seiji Ozawa, who conducted at Tanglewood over the weekend, will conduct the Philadlphia Orchestra Aug. 18 at the Saratoga Performing Arts Center

30

Waterbury Republican

Tanglewood Turns To Fantasy

July 25 '67

Saturday evening, at Tanglewood was marked by a plunge into descriptive fantasy. The program was a varied one, and the orchestra, under guest conductor Seiju Ozawa, performed two works that had never been heard at the Berkshire Festival before.

Ozawa, 32-year-old music director of the Toronto Symphony, and a former student of the Berkshire Music Center where he won the Koussevitzky Memorial Scholarship in conducting, returned to the Tanglewood stage for the fourth consecutive year. He conducted brilliantly, performing Mendelssohn's Overture "The Hebrides" (Fingal's Cave Op. 26), the Takemitsu Requiem for String Orchestra, Ligeti's Atmospheres, and Berlioz' Symphonie Fantastique, before an enthusiastic audience of 7,306.

Mendelssohn's Overture is a portrayal of the foaming sea and strange coverns of the Hebrides and the tonal colors are mysterious and tempestuous.

The Takemitsu Requiem for String Orchestra, performed at Tanglewood for the first time, is a 10-minute elegy for strings rather than a requiem in the liturgical sense. It is an experiment in one movement for conventional instruments by a contemporary Japanese composer who has written electronic music for tape recorder as well. Ozawa gave this work its American premier in 1957, and performed it again Saturday evening at Tanglewood.

"Atmospheres" by Gyorgy Ligeti is also an experiment in tone color. It is a somewhat strange (the pianist plays the strings inside the piano, not the keys, the cellos play harmonics much of the time, the tuba is often muffled) rendition of the breaths of the air and atmospheric sounds. There is a certain tenseness and excitement to this work which is achieved by effects that simulate the sounds and senses of the air and the atmosphere surrounding us.

The highlight of the evening was Ozawa's dynamic conducting of Berlioz' Symphonie Fantastique. The symphony is really a story, the dream of a musician about his love, and the creation of fantasies and hallucinations concerning this love. There is an idee fixe, or a theme which recurs in each of the five movements, in varying forms. Throughout Dreams and Passions, The Ball, Scenes in the Country, The March of the Gallows, and Dream of the Witches Sabbath, each a different scene corresponding to a single movement, Ozawa was in perfect control of the orchestra. His conducting was deliberate and masterful, and the orchestra responded with remarkable shadings and subtleties of tone. There is a studied juxtaposition of pastorale lightness and airiness contrasted with the heavy, ominous sounds of doom and despair in this symphony, and Ozawa achieved an absolute perfection in his interpretation.

This was a thrilling performance, and one will not easily forget the effect that the orchestra achieved, even an orchestra as uniformly accomplished as the Boston under Leinsdorf. The rapport and brilliance demonstrated by both orchestra and conductor was astonishing, evidenced by the tremendous applause and response on the part of the audience, who recalled Ozawa again and again.

The weekend at Tanglewood promises to be one of the most exciting weekends of the Festival. Friday's Prelude concert at 7 p.m. will be devoted to Brahms "Liebeslieder Waltzes, with Claude Frank at the piano accompanying some of the Berkshire Music School vocalists. The major concert at 9 p.m. will feature Rafael Kubelik, guest conductor for both Friday and Saturday evenings. Friday's program will be Hydn's Symphony No. 102, Martinu's "Double Concerto" and Cesar Franck's "Symphony in D Minor."

Saturday evening's program, which starts at 8 p.m., will present the renowned Israeli violinist, Shmuel Askenasi, playing Elgar's Violin Concerto, Smetana's Moldau and Brahms Symphony No. 4. Sunday afternoon at 2:30, Erich Leinsdorf returns to the podium conducting Webern's Six Pieces, Op. 6, Schubert's Symphony No. 9 and the usual excitement always heralded at Tanglewood when Van Cliburn returns to the Tanglewood stage to play Grieg's Piano Concerto.

"SCM"

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350

JUL 24 1967 New England Newsclip

At Tanglewood

Mendelssohn Outpaced By Eden-Tamir Ability

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir returned to the Tanglewood stage for a two-piano concerto Sunday afternoon, but the biggest and best music came before and after them.

Froth and Fluff

It wasn't their fault. Their piano playing was fair enough . . . agile and entertaining, in fact. It was the piece they played that was inconsequential.

Mendelssohn wrote it when he was 14 years old, and, of course, it is a fine piece for a kid to write, but it is, after all, only froth and fluff.

It was the E Major Concerto, one of two he wrote for two pianos and orchestra. The first and third movements are all runs and arpeggios and lightweight filigree and decoration.

Middle Worthwhile

The middle movement offers some sweet, romantic melodies and makes the piece worth the time.

Erich Leinsdorf and the orchestra offered only one work before intermission . . . Schumann's First Symphony. It is a happy symphony. The composer was happy when he wrote it, and the 7422 listeners Sunday afternoon were happy when they heard it.

It has some pleasantly flowing melodies and some nicely dramatic, stentorian gestures (a la Beethoven) to open the first, third and fourth movements and to wind up the whole piece.

Clean Performance

It has been a popular, standard work many years. Leinsdorf gave it a well-ordered, clean, cohesive and well-paced performance. Schumann lovers should have liked it.

The big piece of the day, though, came last. It was an everchanging, kaleidoscopic, brightly as well as softly colorful suite of seven sections drawn by Leinsdorf from Stravinsky's "Firebird" ballet.

He directed the complicated score from memory and kept its varying parts together with deft skill.

Piece of Wit

It is a piece of wit and entertainment rather than emotional depth and it was securely successful Sunday.

The weekend's attendance was 23,277.

Tuesday night, the Boston Symphony Chamber players will perform in the Tanglewood theater at 8.

Friday, the weekend prelude concert at 7 in the shed will present Claude Frank and Lilian Kallir, pianists, and eight singers with Brahms' "Liebeslieder" waltzes.

Kubelik to Conduct

The 9 p. m. concert will be conducted by Rafael Kubelik, whose program will include Haydn's Symphony No. 102 Martinu's "Double Concerto" and Franck's Symphony in D Minor.

Saturday, Kubelik will conduct Smetana's "Moldau," Elgar's Violin Concerto with Shmuel Ashkenasi as soloist and Brahms' Symphony No. 4.

Sunday afternoon Leinsdorf will conduct Webern's "Six Pieces" (Op. 6), Schubert's Symphony No. 9 and Grieg's Piano Concerto with Van Cliburn as soloist.

JOURNAL
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,500

JUL 27 1967 New England Newsclip

VAN CLIBURN . . . who will be soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf Music Director conducting, at Tanglewood on Sunday afternoon, July 30 at 2:30 p.m. Mr. Cliburn will perform the Grieg Piano Concerto with the Orchestra. The balance of the program will consist of the Schubert Symphony No. 6 and Six Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 6, by Webern.

GUEST CONDUCTOR AT TANGLEWOOD

Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has ~~invited~~ Rafael Kubelik to share the conducting honors for the fifth week of Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood. Mr. Kubelik will conduct the Orchestra on Friday evening (July 28, 8 p.m.). Shmuel Ashkenasi will be soloist with Mr. Kubelik on Saturday evening, and on Sunday afternoon (July 30, 2:30 p.m.) Van Cliburn will be soloist.

On Friday evening (July 28, 9:00 p.m.) Rafael Kubelik will conduct the Haydn Symphony No. 102, Franck's Symphony in D minor and the Martinu Double Concerto. Charles Wilson, Assistant Conductor of the Boston Symphony, will be piano soloist.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the now Traditional Weekend Prelude (July 28, 7 p.m.) Claude Frank and Lilian Kallir with singers drawn from the Berkshire Music Center will present the Brahms Liebeslieder Waltzes.

Rafael Kubelik will be guest conductor with the Boston Symphony again on Saturday evening (July 29, 8 p.m.) when he will have Shmuel Ashkenasi as soloist. Mr. Ashkenasi will perform the Elgar Violin Concerto with the Orchestra. The balance of the program will consist of Smetana's Moldau and Brahms' Symphony No. 4.

Van Cliburn will be soloist with the Boston Symphony, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, on Sunday afternoon (July 30, 2:30 p.m.) and will perform the Grieg Piano Concerto with the Orchestra. Mr. Leinsdorf will also conduct Six Pieces for Orchestra by Webern and Schubert's Symphony No. 9

The regular Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday (July 29) at 10:30 a.m.

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 50,766

JUL 25 1967 Bigfellow

Kubelik Guest Conductor At Tanglewood Concert

Rafael Kubelik will appear as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for its concerts Friday and Saturday evenings with Erich Leinsdorf conducting the Sunday afternoon concert at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

* * *

Kubelik will conduct the Friday 9 p.m. concert which will feature the Haydn "Symphony Number 102," the Frank "Symphony in D Minor" and the Martinu, "Double Concerto." Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony, will be the piano soloist for the Martinu.

The Weekend Prelude, Friday at 7 p.m. will feature Claude Frank and Lilian Kallir, pianists with the singers from the Berkshire Music Center in the Brahms' "Liebeslieder Waltzes." Kubelik will have Shmuel Ashkenasi as soloist in the Elgar "Violin Concerto With Orchestra" Saturday at 8 p.m. The program will conclude with Smetana's "Moldau" and the Brahms' "Symphony number 4."

Van Cliburn will be the soloist for the Sunday 2:30 p.m. program playing the Grieg "Piano Concerto" with the orchestra. Leinsdorf will also conduct "Six Pieces for Orchestra" by Webern and the Schubert "Symphony number 9."

The regular open rehearsal of the orchestra will be held Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

Information on all Tanglewood events may be obtained by writing Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240.

RAFAEL KUBELIK
Two Day Appearance

COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Tuesday, July 25, 1967

BERKSHIRE COURIER
GT. BARRINGTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,400

0-47

JUL 27 1967 New England Newsclip

Rafael Kubelik Van Cliburn At Tanglewood

LENOX—Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has invited Rafael Kubelik and Van Cliburn to share the honors for the fifth week of Berkshire Festival concerts.

Kubelik will conduct the orchestra tomorrow evening. Shmuel Ashkenasi will be soloist with Kubelik Saturday evening and Cliburn will be soloist with Leinsdorf and the Symphony Sunday afternoon at 2:30.

Tomorrow evening at 9, Kubelik will conduct the Haydn Symphony No. 102, Franck's Symphony in D minor and the Martinu Double Concerto. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony, will be piano soloist for the Martinu concerto.

The concert will be preceded by the now traditional weekend prelude at 7. Claude Frank and Lilian Kallir, with singers drawn from the Berkshire Music Center, will present the Brahms Liebeslieder Waltzes.

Kubelik will be guest conductor with the Symphony again Saturday evening at 8, when he will have Ashkenasi as soloist. Ashkenasi will perform the Elgar Violin Concerto with the orchestra. The balance of the program will consist of Smetana's Moldau and Brahms' Symphony No. 4.

Sunday afternoon, Cliburn will perform the Grieg Piano Concerto with the orchestra. Leinsdorf will also conduct Six Pieces for Orchestra by Webern and Schubert's Symphony No. 9.

The Berkshire Festival chamber music concert Tuesday evening will be presented by the Boston Symphony Chamber Players. This is their second concert in the chamber music series. The program will feature works by Beethoven, Dohanyi, Fine and Faure.

The regular open rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension fund will be held on Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

30

Waterbury Republican

Tanglewood Turns To Fantasy

July 27 '67

Saturday evening, at Tanglewood was marked by a plunge into descriptive fantasy. The program was a varied one, and the orchestra, under guest conductor Seiju Ozawa, performed two works that had never been heard at the Berkshire Festival before.

Ozawa, 32-year-old music director of the Toronto Symphony, and a former student of the Berkshire Music Center where he won the Koussevitzky Memorial Scholarship in conducting, returned to the Tanglewood stage for the fourth consecutive year. He conducted brilliantly, performing Mendelssohn's Overture "The Hebrides" (Fingal's Cave Op. 26), the Takemitsu Requiem for String Orchestra, Ligeti's Atmospheres, and Berlioz' Symphonie Fantastique, before an enthusiastic audience of 7,306.

Mendelssohn's Overture is a portrayal of the foaming sea and strange coverns of the Hebrides and the tonal colors are mysterious and tempestuous.

The Takemitsu Requiem for String Orchestra, performed at Tanglewood for the first time, is a 10-minute elegy for strings rather than a requiem in the liturgical sense. It is an experiment in one movement for conventional instruments by a contemporary Japanese composer who has written electronic music for tape recorder as well. Ozawa gave this work its American premier in 1957, and performed it again Saturday evening at Tanglewood.

"Atmospheres" by Gyorgy Ligeti is also an experiment in tone color. It is a somewhat strange (the pianist plays the strings inside the piano, not the keys, the cellos pla harmonics much of the time, the tuba is often muffled) rendition of the breaths of the air and atmospheric sounds. There is a certain tenseness and excitement to this work which is achieved by effects that simulate the sounds and senses of the air and the atmosphere surrounding us.

The highlight of the evening was Ozawa's dynamic conducting of Berlioz' Symphonie Fantastique. The symphony is really a story, the dream of a musician about his love, and the creation of fantasies and hallucinations concerning this love. There is an idee fixe, or a theme which recurs in each of the five movements, in varying forms. Throughout Dreams and Passions, The Ball, Scenes in the Country, The March of the Gallows, and Dream of the Witches Sabbath, each a different scene corresponding to a single movement, Ozawa was in perfect control of the orchestra. His conducting was deliberate and masterful, and the orchestra responded with remarkable shadings and subtleties of tone. There is a studied juxtaposition of pastorale lightness and airiness contrasted with the heavy, ominous sounds of doom and despair in this symphony, and Ozawa achieved an absolute perfection in his interpretation.

This was a thrilling performance, and one will not easily forget the effect that the orchestra achieved, even an orchestra as uniformly accomplished as the Boston under Leinsdorf. The rapport and brilliance demonstrated by both orchestra and conductor was astonishing, evidenced by the tremendous applause and response on the part of the audience, who recalled Ozawa again and again.

The weekend at Tanglewood promises to be one of the most exciting weekends of the Festival. Friday's Prelude concert at 7 p.m. will be devoted to Brahms "Liebeslieder Waltzes, with Claude Frank at the piano accompanying some of the Berkshire Music School vocalists. The major concert at 9 p.m. will feature Rafael Kubelik, guest conductor for both Friday and Saturday evenings. Friday's program will be Hydn's Symphony No. 102, Martinu's "Double Concerto" and Cesar Franck's "Symphony in D Minor."

Saturday evening's program, which starts at 8 p.m., will present the renowned Israeli violinist, Shmuel Askenasi, playing Elgar's Violin Concerto, Smetana's Moldau and Brahms Symphony No. 4. Sunday afternoon at 2:30, Erich Leinsdorf returns to the podium conducting Webern's Six Pieces, Op. 6, Schubert's Symphony No. 9 and the usual excitement always heralded at Tanglewood when Van Cliburn returns to the Tanglewood stage to play Grieg's Piano Concerto.

"SCM"

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350

JUL 24 1967

New England Newsclip

At Tanglewood

Mendelssohn Outpaced By Eden-Tamir Ability

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir returned to the Tanglewood stage for a two-piano concerto Sunday afternoon, but the biggest and best music came before and after them.

Froth and Fluff

It wasn't their fault. Their piano playing was fair enough . . . agile and entertaining, in fact. It was the piece they played that was inconsequential.

Mendelssohn wrote it when he was 14 years old, and, of course, it is a fine piece for a kid to write, but it is, after all, only froth and fluff.

It was the E Major Concerto, one of two he wrote for two pianos and orchestra. The first and third movements are all runs and arpeggios and lightweight filigree and decoration.

Middle Worthwhile

The middle movement offers some sweet, romantic melodies and makes the piece worth the time.

Erich Leinsdorf and the orchestra offered only one work before intermission . . . Schumann's First Symphony. It is a happy symphony. The composer was happy when he wrote it, and the 7422 listeners Sunday afternoon were happy when they heard it.

It has some pleasantly flowing melodies and some nicely dramatic, stentorian gestures (a la Beethoven) to open the first, third and fourth movements and to wind up the whole piece.

Clean Performance

It has been a popular, standard work many years. Leinsdorf gave it a well-ordered, clean, cohesive and well-paced performance. Schumann lovers should have liked it.

The big piece of the day, though, came last. It was an everchanging, kaleidoscopic, brightly as well as softly colorful suite of seven sections drawn by Leinsdorf from Stravinsky's "Firebird" ballet.

He directed the complicated score from memory and kept its varying parts together with deft skill.

Piece of Wit

It is a piece of wit and entertainment rather than emotional depth and it was securely successful Sunday.

The weekend's attendance was 23,277.

Tuesday night, the Boston Symphony Chamber players will perform in the Tanglewood theater at 8.

Friday, the weekend prelude concert at 7 in the shed will present Claude Frank and Lilian Kallir, pianists, and eight singers with Brahms' "Liebeslieder" waltzes.

Kubelik to Conduct

The 9 p. m. concert will be conducted by Rafael Kubelik, whose program will include Haydn's Symphony No. 102, Martinu's "Double Concerto" and Franck's Symphony in D Minor.

Saturday, Kubelik will conduct Smetana's "Moldau," Elgar's Violin Concerto with Shmuel Ashkenasi as soloist and Brahms' Symphony No. 4.

Sunday afternoon Leinsdorf will conduct Webern's "Six Pieces" (Op. 6), Schubert's Symphony No. 9 and Grieg's Piano Concerto with Van Cliburn as soloist.

JOURNAL
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,500

JUL 27 1967

New England Newsclip

VAN CLIBURN . . . who will be soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf Music Director conducting, at Tanglewood on Sunday afternoon, July 30 at 2:30 p.m. Mr. Cliburn will perform the Grieg Piano Concerto with the Orchestra. The balance of the program will consist of the Schubert Symphony No. 6 and Six Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 6, by Webern.

GUEST CONDUCTOR AT TANGLEWOOD

Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has ~~invited~~ Rafael Kubelik to share the conducting honors for the fifth week of Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood. Mr. Kubelik will conduct the Orchestra on Friday evening (July 28, 8 p.m.). Shmuel Ashkenasi will be soloist with Mr. Kubelik on Saturday evening, and on Sunday afternoon (July 30, 2:30 p.m.) Van Cliburn will be soloist.

On Friday evening (July 28, 9:00 p.m.) Rafael Kubelik will conduct the Haydn Symphony No. 102, Franck's Symphony in D minor and the Martinu Double Concerto. Charles Wilson, Assistant Conductor of the Boston Symphony, will be piano soloist.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the now Traditional Weekend Prelude (July 28, 7 p.m.) Claude Frank and Lilian Kallir with singers drawn from the Berkshire Music Center will present the Brahms Liebeslieder Waltzes.

Rafael Kubelik will be guest conductor with the Boston Symphony again on Saturday evening (July 29, 8 p.m.) when he will have Shmuel Ashkenasi as soloist. Mr. Ashkenasi will perform the Elgar Violin Concerto with the Orchestra. The balance of the program will consist of Smetana's Moldau and Brahms' Symphony No. 4.

Van Cliburn will be soloist with the Boston Symphony, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, on Sunday afternoon (July 30, 2:30 p.m.) and will perform the Grieg Piano Concerto with the Orchestra. Mr. Leinsdorf will also conduct Six Pieces for Orchestra by Webern and Schubert's Symphony No. 9

The regular Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday (July 29) at 10:30 a.m.

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 50,756

JUL 25 1967

Kubelik Guest Conductor At Tanglewood Concert

Rafael Kubelik will appear as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for its concerts Friday and Saturday evenings with Erich Leinsdorf conducting the Sunday afternoon concert at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

* * *

Kubelik will conduct the Friday 9 p.m. concert which will feature the Haydn "Symphony Number 102," the Frank "Symphony in D Minor" and the Martinu, "Double Concerto." Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony, will be the piano soloist for the Martinu.

The Weekend Prelude, Friday at 7 p.m. will feature Claude Frank and Lilian Kallir, pianists with the singers from the Berkshire Music Center in the Brahms' "Liebeslieder Waltzes." Kubelik will have Shmuel Ashkenasi as soloist in the Elgar "Violin Concerto With Orchestra" Saturday at 8 p.m. The program will conclude with Smetana's "Moldau" and the Brahms' "Symphony number 4."

Van Cliburn will be the soloist for the Sunday 2:30 p.m. program playing the Grieg "Piano Concerto" with the orchestra. Leinsdorf will also conduct "Six Pieces for Orchestra" by Webern and the Schubert "Symphony number 9."

The regular open rehearsal of the orchestra will be held Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

Information on all Tanglewood events may be obtained by writing Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240.

RAFAEL KUBELIK
Two Day Appearance

COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Thur., July 25, 1967

BERKSHIRE COURIER
GT. BARRINGTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,400

0.47

JUL 27 1967

New England Newsclip

~~stationed.~~

Rafael Kubelik Van Cliburn At Tanglewood

LENOX—Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has invited Rafael Kubelik and Van Cliburn to share the honors for the fifth week of Berkshire Festival concerts.

Kubelik will conduct the orchestra tomorrow evening. Shmuel Ashkenasi will be soloist with Kubelik Saturday evening and Cliburn will be soloist with Leinsdorf and the Symphony Sunday afternoon at 2:30.

Tomorrow evening at 9, Kubelik will conduct the Haydn Symphony No. 102, Franck's Symphony in D minor and the Martinu Double Concerto. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony, will be piano soloist for the Martinu concerto.

The concert will be preceded by the now traditional weekend prelude at 7. Claude Frank and Lilian Kallir, with singers drawn from the Berkshire Music Center, will present the Brahms Liebeslieder Waltzes.

Kubelik will be guest conductor with the Symphony again Saturday evening at 8, when he will have Ashkenasi as soloist. Ashkenasi will perform the Elgar Violin Concerto with the orchestra. The balance of the program will consist of Smetana's Moldau and Brahms' Symphony No. 4.

Sunday afternoon, Cliburn will perform the Grieg Piano Concerto with the orchestra. Leinsdorf will also conduct Six Pieces for Orchestra by Webern and Schubert's Symphony No. 9.

The Berkshire Festival chamber music concert Tuesday evening will be presented by the Boston Symphony Chamber Players. This is their second concert in the chamber music series. The program will feature works by Beethoven, Dohanyi, Fine and Faure.

The regular open rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension fund will be held on Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Albany, July 24, 1967

Van Cliburn To Be Heard Over WAMC

Van Cliburn, pianist, and Shmuel Ashkenasi, violinist, will be featured soloists with the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week as WAMC-FM, 90.3 mc., continues its live broadcasts from the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

* * *

The Boston Symphony Concerts will climax a week of music which begins at 9 p.m. tomorrow with a concert by the Boston Symphony Chamber Players.

Every performance at the 1967 Berkshire Music Festival is being broadcast by WAMC, the FM station of Albany Medical College.

BULLETIN
WILTON, CONN.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,250
JUL 26 1967
New England Newsclip

VAN CLIBURN will be the soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Sunday, July 30 at 2:30 p.m. at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Mr. Cliburn will perform the Grieg Piano Concerto with the orchestra, under the baton of Erich Leinsdorf.

RIDGEFIELD PRESS
RIDGEFIELD, CONN.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,450
JUL 27 1967
New England Newsclip

THE REDDING PILOT
RIDGEFIELD, CONN.
WEEKLY
JUL 26 1967
New England Newsclip

SUNDAY REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 115,950
JUL 23 1967
New England Newsclip

Van Cliburn Will Perform Grieg Concerto With Boston Symphony

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox—Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has invited Rafael Kubelik to share the conducting honors for the fifth week of Berkshire Festival concerts.

Ashkenasi Soloist

Kubelik will conduct the orchestra on Friday evening at 8 p.m. Shmuel Ashkenasi will be soloist with Kubelik on Saturday evening, and on Sunday afternoon, the 30th, at 2.30 p. m., Van Cliburn will be soloist with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony.

Cliburn will perform the Grieg Piano Concerto with the orchestra. Leinsdorf will also conduct Six Pieces for Orchestra by Webern and Schubert's Symphony No. 9.

Van Cliburn at the Piano

Chamber Players

The Berkshire Festival Chamber Music concert on Tuesday evening will be presented by the Boston Symphony Chamber Players. This is their second concert in the Chamber Music series. The program will feature works by Beethoven, Dohanyi, Fine and Faure.

On Friday evening at 9 p.m. Rafael Kubelik will conduct the Haydn Symphony No. 102, Franck's Symphony in D minor and the Martinu Double Concerto. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony, will be piano soloist for the Martinu concerto.

Weekend Prelude

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the now traditional Weekend Prelude at 7 p.m. Claude Frank and Lilian Kallir with singers drawn from the Berkshire Music Center will present the Brahms Liebeslieder Waltzes.

RAFAEL KUBELIK

Rafael Kubelik will be guest conductor with the Boston Symphony again on Saturday evening at 8 p.m. when he will have Shmuel Ashkenasi as soloist. Ashkenasi will perform the Elgar Violin Concerto with the orchestra. The balance of the program will consist of Smetana's Moldau and Brahms' Symphony No. 4.

Pension Fund Benefit

The regular Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday at 10.30 a.m.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to three events at Tanglewood next week. The Conducting Fellows of the Center will conduct the Music Center Orchestra on Wednesday evening at 8 p.m., and there will be concerts of chamber music on Thursday evening at 8 p.m. and Sunday morning at 10 a.m.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are those who make voluntary contributions to aid in reducing the Center's deficit. In addition to providing funds for the Music Center, the Friends also provide an audience for the young musicians in keeping with the Center's basic philosophy of training performers through performance.

The Knickerbocker News
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 55,425
JUL 25 1967

Tanglewood Soloists

Van Cliburn, pianist, and Shmuel Askenasi, violinist, will be featured soloists with the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week as SAMC-FM, 90.3 mc., continues its live broadcasts from the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

The Boston Symphony Concerts will climax a week of music which begins at 9 p.m. today with a concert by the Boston Symphony Chamber Players. The Berkshire Music Center Orchestra will perform Wednesday night at 9 and another program of chamber music will be heard Thursday at the same time.

Rafael Kubelik will be guest conductor of Friday night's Boston Symphony Orchestra concert in a program beginning at 9 p.m. The program consists of Haydn's Symphony No. 102, Double Concerto by Martinu and Franck's Symphony in D minor.

Saturday at 8 p.m., Kubelik will again conduct the orchestra in a program featuring Shmuel Ashkenasi as soloist in a performance of Elgar's Violin Concerto. Moldau by Smetana and Symphony No. 4 of Brahms will also be heard.

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct Sunday's concert, starting at 2:30 p.m., which will feature Van Cliburn in a performance of Grieg's Piano Concerto. Six Pieces, Op. 6 by Webern and Schubert's Symphony No. 9 also will be heard.

SUNDAY JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
CIRC. 200,250
JUL 23 1967
New England Newsclip

VIOLINIST Shmuel Ashkenasi will perform with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood on Saturday at 8 p.m. Rafael Kubelik will be guest conductor.

NEWS (e)
FRAMINGHAM, MASS.
CIRC. 15,900
JUL 18 1967
New England Newsclip

SHMUEL ASHKENASI will perform the Elgar Violin Concerto with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Saturday evening, July 29 at Tanglewood, Lenox. Rafael Kubelik will be guest conductor for this concert which gets underway at 8 p.m. The program will also include Smetana Moldau and the Brahms Symphony No. 4.

GAZETTE (e)
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 94,350
JUL 29 1967
New England Newsclip

First Berkshire Appearance

Kubelik Is Tanglewood Guest

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — The fifth weekend at Tanglewood, rich in unusual values, presents the famous Czech conductor, 53-year-old Rafael Kubelik, son of Jan, the celebrated violinist. Rafael, guest at Boston last winter, is making his first Berkshire appearance. Famous in Europe, he has been guest leader of many American orchestras. He is thoroughly admirable, as last night's concert demonstrated.

Gazette Review

His concert tonight at 8 offers Smetana's "The Moldau," the Brahms Fourth, and Shmuel Ashkenasi in the Elgar Violin Concerto.

Sunday at 2:30 Erich Leinsdorf pits Webern against Schubert, with predictable results, and has as an especial drawing - card Van Cliburn in the Grieg Piano Concerto.

Unfavorable Weather

Still fighting unfavorable weather, Tanglewood last night opened a treasure chest in the Weekend Prelude at 7 and main concert at 9. The early program afforded most of us the first complete hearing of the Brahms "Love-Song" Waltzes, not only the familiar original 18, Opus 52, but the 15 "new" ones in Opus 65. Different quartets were used for the two sets but all the delicious two-piano accompaniments were played by Claude Frank and Lillian Kallir.

The Haydn Symphony No. 102, a well-chosen score, gave Kubelik the chance to make the orchestra sing eloquently in the slow movments and go at dazzling speed in the finale.

Deep Feeling

This mellowness was followed by sharp focus, deep feeling and modern tricks in the Double Concerto of Martinu (also a Czech), with two string orchestras on opposite sides of the stage, linked by Charles Wilson's piano and Everett Firth's timpani. In this aggressive rather than discordant music, the composer seems completely engulfed in the tragedy of his fatherland.

Wilson, assistant conductor of the BSO, is a treasure, at home in any task.

The Franck Symphony in D minor was masterfully built up from broad and slow beginnings. The first and third movements had especially satisfying fullness in the brass choirs. The conductor's reading excited and uplifted. An exception in some respects was the second movement, where the score seemed less suited to the conductor's ideas, and a conspicuous brass blemish made a few subsequent phrases seem precarious and nervous.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUR.
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

GAZETTE
Aug 24 1967

Van Cliburn To Be Heard Over WAMC

Van Cliburn, pianist, and Shmuel Ashkenasi, violinist, will be featured soloists with the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week as WAMC-FM, 90.3 mc., continues its live broadcasts from the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

* * *

The Boston Symphony Concerts will climax a week of music which begins at 9 p.m. tomorrow with a concert by the Boston Symphony Chamber Players.

Every performance at the 1967 Berkshire Music Festival is being broadcast by WAMC, the FM station of Albany Medical College.

BULLETIN
WILTON, CONN.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,250
JUL 26 1967
New England Newsclip

VAN CLIBURN will be the soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Sunday, July 30 at 2:30 p.m. at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Mr. Cliburn will perform the Grieg Piano Concerto with the orchestra, under the baton of Erich Leinsdorf.

RIDGEFIELD PRESS
RIDGEFIELD, CONN.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,450
JUL 27 1967
New England Newsclip

THE REDDING PILOT
RIDGEFIELD, CONN.
WEEKLY
JUL 26 1967
New England Newsclip

SUNDAY REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 115,950
JUL 23 1967
New England Newsclip

Van Cliburn Will Perform Grieg Concerto With Boston Symphony

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox—Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has invited Rafael Kubelik to share the conducting honors for the fifth week of Berkshire Festival concerts.

Ashkenasi Soloist

Kubelik will conduct the orchestra on Friday evening at 8 p.m. Shmuel Ashkenasi will be soloist with Kubelik on Saturday evening, and on Sunday afternoon, the 30th, at 2.30 p. m., Van Cliburn will be soloist with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony.

Cliburn will perform the Grieg Piano Concerto with the orchestra. Leinsdorf will also conduct Six Pieces for Orchestra by Webern and Schubert's Symphony No. 9.

Van Cliburn at the Piano

Chamber Players

The Berkshire Festival Chamber Music concert on Tuesday evening will be presented by the Boston Symphony Chamber Players. This is their second concert in the Chamber Music series. The program will feature works by Beethoven, Dohanyi, Fine and Faure.

On Friday evening at 8 p.m. Rafael Kubelik will conduct the Haydn Symphony No. 102, Franck's Symphony in D minor and the Martinu Double Concerto. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony, will be piano soloist for the Martinu concerto.

Weekend Prelude

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the now traditional Weekend Prelude at 7 p.m. Claude Frank and Lilian Kallir with singers drawn from the Berkshire Music Center will present the Brahms Liebeslieder Waltzes.

RAFAEL KUBELIK

Rafael Kubelik will be guest conductor with the Boston Symphony again on Saturday evening at 8 p.m. when he will have Shmuel Ashkenasi as soloist. Ashkenasi will perform the Elgar Violin Concerto with the orchestra. The balance of the program will consist of Smetana's Moldau and Brahms' Symphony No. 4.

Pension Fund Benefit

The regular Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday at 10.30 a.m.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to three events at Tanglewood next week. The Conducting Fellows of the Center will conduct the Music Center Orchestra on Wednesday evening at 8 p.m., and there will be concerts of chamber music on Thursday evening at 8 p.m. and Sunday morning at 10 a.m.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are those who make voluntary contributions to aid in reducing the Center's deficit. In addition to providing funds for the Music Center, the Friends also provide an audience for the young musicians in keeping with the Center's basic philosophy of training performers through performance.

The Knickerbocker News
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 55,425
JUL 25 1967

Tanglewood Soloists

Van Cliburn, pianist, and Shmuel Askenasi, violinist, will be featured soloists with the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week as SAMC-FM, 90.3 mc., continues its live broadcasts from the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

The Boston Symphony Concerts will climax a week of music which begins at 9 p.m. today with a concert by the Boston Symphony Chamber Players. The Berkshire Music Center Orchestra will perform Wednesday night at 9 and another program of chamber music will be heard Thursday at the same time.

Rafael Kubelik will be guest conductor of Friday night's Boston Symphony Orchestra concert in a program beginning at 9 p.m. The program consists of Haydn's Symphony No. 102, Double Concerto by Martinu and Franck's Symphony in D minor.

Saturday at 8 p.m., Kubelik will again conduct the orchestra in a program featuring Shmuel Ashkenasi as soloist in a performance of Elgar's Violin Concerto. Moldau by Smetana and Symphony No. 4 of Brahms will also be heard.

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct Sunday's concert, starting at 2:30 p.m., which will feature Van Cliburn in a performance of Grieg's Piano Concerto. Six Pieces, Op. 6 by Webern and Schubert's Symphony No. 9 also will be heard.

SUNDAY JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
CIRC. 200,250
JUL 23 1967
New England Newsclip

VIOLINIST Shmuel Ashkenasi will perform with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood on Saturday at 8 p.m. Rafael Kubelik will be guest conductor.

NEWS (e)
FRAMINGHAM, MASS.
CIRC. 15,900
JUL 18 1967
New England Newsclip

SHMUEL ASHKENASI will perform the Elgar Violin Concerto with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Saturday evening, July 29 at Tanglewood, Lenox. Rafael Kubelik will be guest conductor for this concert which gets underway at 8 p.m. The program will also include Smetana Moldau and the Brahms Symphony No. 4.

GAZETTE (e)
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 94,350
JUL 29 1967
New England Newsclip

First Berkshire Appearance

Kubelik Is Tanglewood Guest

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — The fifth weekend at Tanglewood, rich in unusual values, presents the famous Czech conductor, 53-year-old Rafael Kubelik, son of Jan, the celebrated violinist. Rafael, guest at Boston last winter, is making his first Berkshire appearance. Famous in Europe, he has been guest leader of many American orchestras. He is thoroughly admirable, as last night's concert demonstrated.

Gazette Review

His concert tonight at 8 offers Smetana's "The Moldau," the Brahms Fourth, and Shmuel Ashkenasi in the Elgar Violin Concerto.

Sunday at 2:30 Erich Leinsdorf pits Webern against Schubert, with predictable results, and has as an especial drawing - card Van Cliburn in the Grieg Piano Concerto.

Unfavorable Weather

Still fighting unfavorable weather, Tanglewood last night opened a treasure chest in the Weekend Prelude at 7 and main concert at 9. The early program afforded most of us the first complete hearing of the Brahms "Love-Song" Waltzes, not only the familiar original 18, Opus 52, but the 15 "new" ones in Opus 65. Different quartets were used for the two sets but all the delicious two-piano accompaniments were played by Claude Frank and Lillian Kallir.

The Haydn Symphony No. 102, a well-chosen score, gave Kubelik the chance to make the orchestra sing eloquently in the slow movments and go at dazzling speed in the finale.

Deep Feeling

This mellowness was followed by sharp focus, deep feeling and modern tricks in the Double Concerto of Martinu (also a Czech), with two string orchestras on opposite sides of the stage, linked by Charles Wilson's piano and Everett Firth's timpani. In this aggressive rather than discordant music, the composer seems completely engulfed in the tragedy of his fatherland.

Wilson, assistant conductor of the BSO, is a treasure, at home in any task.

The Franck Symphony in D minor was masterfully built up from broad and slow beginnings. The first and third movements had especially satisfying fullness in the brass choirs. The conductor's reading excited and uplifted. An exception in some respects was the second movement, where the score seemed less suited to the conductor's ideas, and a conspicuous brass blemish made a few subsequent phrases seem precarious and nervous.

32

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SYRACUSE POST STANDARD
Sunday, July 23, 1967

Kubelik shares concert podium

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass. — Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will have Rafael Kubelik share the conducting honors for the fifth week of Berkshire Festival concerts.

Kubelik will conduct the Orchestra on Friday evening at 8. Shmuel Ashkenasi will be soloist with Kubelik on Saturday evening, and next Sunday afternoon at 2:30 Van Cliburn will be soloist with Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony.

On Friday evening at 9, Kubelik will conduct the Haydn Symphony No. 102, Franck's Symphony in D minor and the Martinu Double Concerto. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony, will be piano soloist for the Martinu concerto.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the now traditional weekend prelude at 7. Duo-pianists Eden and Jamir with singers drawn from the Berkshire Music Center will present the Brahms' Liebeslieder Waltzes.

Ashkenasi Soloist

Kubelik will be on the podium with the Boston Symphony again on Saturday evening at 8 when he will have Ashkenasi as soloist. Ashkenasi will perform the Elgar Violin Concerto with the Orchestra. The balance of the program will consist of Smetana's Moldau and Brahms' Symphony No. 4.

Van Cliburn will be soloist with the Boston Symphony, conducted by Leinsdorf, next Sunday afternoon at 2:30 and will perform the Grieg Piano Concerto with the Orchestra. Leinsdorf will also conduct "Six Pieces for Orchestra" by

RAFAEL KUBELIK

Webern and Schubert's Symphony No. 9.

The Berkshire Festival Chamber Music concert on Tuesday evening will be presented by the Boston Symphony Chamber Players. This is their second concert in the chamber music series. The program will feature works by Beethoven, Dohanyi, Fine and Faure.

The regular open rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to three events at Tanglewood three events at Tanglewood lows of the Center will conduct the Music Center Orchestra on Wednesday evening at 8, and there will be concerts of chamber music on Thursday evening at 8 and next Sunday morning at 10.

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350
JUL 22 1967
New England Newsclip

Regional Roundup

Leinsdorf Will Share Tanglewood Baton; Kubelik to Conduct

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has invited Rafael Kubelik to share the conducting for the fifth week of Berkshire Festival concerts.

Kubelik will conduct the orchestra Friday night. Shmuel Ashkenasi will be soloist when Kubelik conducts the following night. A week from Sunday at 2.30, Van Cliburn will be soloist with Erich Leinsdorf conducting.

Friday at 9

Friday night at 9, Rafael Kubelik will conduct the Haydn Symphony No. 102, Franck's Symphony in D minor and the Martinu Double Concerto. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony, will be piano soloist for the Martinu concerto.

The Friday concert will be preceded by the traditional weekend prelude by Claude Frank and Lilian Kallir, with singers drawn from the Berkshire Music Center, will present the Brahma liebeslieder waltzes.

Kubelik will conduct again Saturday at 8 when Ashkenasi will perform the Elgar Violin Concerto with the orchestra. The balance of the program will consist of Smetana's Moldau and Brahms' Symphony No. 4.

Van Cliburn will be soloist with the Boston Symphony, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, the following Sunday afternoon at 2.30. and will perform the Grieg Piano Concerto. Leinsdorf will also conduct Six Pieces for Orchestra by Webern and Schubert's Symphony No. 9.

Weekday Programs

The Berkshire Festival Chamber Music concert next Tuesday will be presented by the Boston Symphony Chamber Players. This is their second concert in the chamber music series. The program will feature works by Beethoven, Dohanyi, Fine and Faure.

The regular open rehearsal to benefit the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension fund will be held next Saturday at 10.30 a. m.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to three events at Tanglewood next week. The conducting fellows of the center will conduct the Music Center Orchestra Wednesday night at 8 and there will be chamber music concerts Thursday night at 8 and Sunday at 10 a. m.

* * *

SUNDAY REPUBLICAN
WATERBURY, CONN.
CIRC. 53,750
JUL 23 1967
New England Newsc

Kubelik To Conduct Tanglewood Concert

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass. — Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has invited Rafael Kubelik to share the conducting honors for the fifth week of Berkshire Festival concerts. Mr. Kubelik will conduct the Orchestra on Friday evening (July 28, 8 p. m.) Shmuel Ashkenasi will be soloist with Mr. Kubelik on Saturday evening and on Sunday afternoon (July 30, 2:30 p. m. Van Cliburn will be soloist with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony.

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350
JUL 21 1967
New England Newsclip

Pickets Plan to Greet Pianist at Tanglewood

The upcoming Van Cliburn concert at Tanglewood in Lenox has been slated out for a peaceful demonstration by an organization opposing U. S. policy in Vietnam.

The Berkshire Action Committee for Peace says between 10 and 20 placard carrying volunteers will be positioned at the five vehicle entrances to Tanglewood Sunday, July 30.

Demonstration organizer, Frederick Lord of Stockbridge, says it will take place before and possibly after the Cliburn program to "prick the consciences" of the anticipated large audience.

Lenox and Stockbridge police know about the demonstration; Tanglewood officials say they have no objection so long as it takes place outside the gates.

THE EVENING SUN
BALTIMORE, MD.
D. 206,715
JUL 20 1967

Tanglewood Concert

"An Evening at Tanglewood," a two-hour prime-time telecast of a summer evening concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, will be presented live and in color from Tanglewood, at Lenox, Mass., by the NBC Television Network on Thursday, August 17 (7.30-9.30 P.M.).

The concert, part of the annual Berkshire Festival, will feature as its guest soloist Itzhak Perlman, 22-year-old Israeli violin virtuoso who has been frequently compared to Jascha Heifetz as a youth. Perlman will play Saint-Saens's Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso. Also included in the program will be Mozart's Overture to the "Abduction from the Seraglio," Dvorak's Symphony Number 9 in E Minor ("From the New World"), and Tchaikovsky's "1812" Overture.

NBC News Reporter-at-Large Edwin Newman will serve as program host and narrator, and during the 20-minute intermission will interview some of the first chair players and guests at tt concert.

ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
NO TONAWANDA NEWS
Tuesday, July 25, 1967

Highlights On Radio

WEBR, 970, presents Martin Denny's experimentations using the instruments of the East to play melodies of the West on tonight's 11:10 "Nightwatch," program.

WBEN-FM, 102.5, broadcasts Erich Leinsdorf conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program which was recorded at the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood. The selections are the Overture to Weber's "Der Freischutz," Schumann's Introduction and Allegro Appassionato Concerto Piece for Piano and Orchestra, and also his Fantasy for Violin in C-Major, and Dvorak's Symphony No. 8 in G-Major, this evening at 7:30.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SARATOGA SARATOGIAN
Wednesday, July 26, 1967

Kubelik, Van Cliburn Slated at Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass.—Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has invited Rafael Kubelik to share the conducting honors for the fifth week of Berkshire Festival concerts. Kubelik will conduct the orchestra on Friday at 8 p.m. Samuel Ashkenasi will be soloist with Kubelik on Saturday evening, and on Sunday afternoon at 2:30 Van Cliburn will be soloist with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony.

On Friday evening (July 28, 9:00 p.m.) Rafael Kubelig will conduct the Haydn Symphony No. 102, Franck's Symphony in D minor and the Martinu Double Concerto. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony, will be piano soloist for the Martinu concerto.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the now traditional Weekend Prelude at 7 o'clock. Claude Frank and Lilian Kallir with singers drawn from the Berkshire Music Center will present the Brahms Liebeslieder Waltzes.

Rafael Kubelik will be guest conductor with the Boston Symphony again on Saturday evening at 8 o'clock when he will have Shmuel Ashkenasi as soloist. Ashkenasi will perform the Elgar Violin Concerto with the orchestra. The balance of the program will consist of Smetana's Moldau and Brahm's Symphony No. 4.

Van Cliburn will be soloist with the Boston Symphony, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, on Sunday afternoon and will perform the Grieg Piano Concerto with the orchestra. Leinsdorf will also conduct Six Pieces for Orchestra and Schubert's Symphony No. 9.

The Berkshire Festival Chamber Music concert on Tuesday evening was presented by the Boston Chamber Players. This was their second concert in the Chamber Music series. The program featured works by Beethoven, Dohanyi, Fine and Faure.

FIFTH WEEK - JULY 28, 29 + 30

33

SUNDAY TELEGRAM
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 107,550
JUL 30 1967
New England Newsclip

Kubelik Makes Debut At Lenox Festival

LENOX — The most compelling podium figure to appear so far at this summer's Berkshire Music Festival as guest conductor is Rafael Kubelik, who made his Tanglewood debut Friday night conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

It was the start of the festival's fifth weekend. Formerly with the Chicago Symphony, Kubelik has directed Munich's principal orchestra, the Bavarian Radio Orchestra, for the past six years.

Kubelik is of the old school (53 years of age), divorced from the flamboyance of podium gymnasts, virtuosos, and exponents of grandiose, stereotyped gestures.

Perfect Program

To make matters even better, Kubelik had just about a perfect program. It began with Haydn's Symphony in B Flat Major, No. 102 and ended with Symphony in D Minor by Franck.

Between these was Martinu's Double Concerto for two string orchestras, piano and timpani. The pianist was Charles Wilson, newly appointed assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony. The timpanist was Everett Firth.

Kubelik is an affable leader whose directions have grace and decision. The Boston Symphony does not respond the same to all conductors like an accelerator to any foot. The orchestra obviously strove to give Kubelik rich sound and total participation.

He Was Delighted

He was delighted and had the orchestra rise at every opportunity to share in the applause.

The Franck symphony was played for all it was worth. Kubelik gave it a philosophic reading, fully exposing its humanity, rebellion, sweetness and despair. Sound was vibrant, pitch accurate. In spite of a soggy, foggy night, the instruments were made to sound right—even the horns.

By the time the finale was reached, the symphony was already ablaze with drama and tension.

Kubelik's treatment of the Haydn symphony was just as sensitive. Tempos were conservative but alive and the music was joy-filled. Everything was sculptured from the score, down to the minutest detail.

The conductor wasted no energy on eye-attracting maneuvers. Cues preceded action and were delivered with simple movements. The slow movement had dignity instead of sentimentality.

Two string orchestras were equally represented on both sides of the conductor for the Martinu concerto. The pianist faced conductor and audience.

Here was music of unrelenting drive, filled with percussive effects, some tartness, and unabating interest.

Wilson gave an excellent account of the piano score which serves as a participant rather than leader. Firth didn't exaggerate his role but made the kettledrums an integral, vital part of the text.

Kubelik proved himself thoroughly versed in this idiom. The work was completed in 1938. Conducting from memory, nothing excaped his attention.

Weekend prelude featured two mixed vocal quartets of Berkshire Center students in the complete "Liebeslieder Waltzes," Opus 52 and Opus 65 by Brahms. They comprise 33 songs.

Most engaging aspect was two-piano backgrounds by Lilian Kallir and Claude Frank. They established moods, provided drive, and were largely responsible for contrasts between sentiment and vigor.

In both vocal units, ensemble results were better than solos. Thickness of quality was a hazard to clear German words, and soprano shrillness was a balance deterrent.

—R.M.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900
JUL 29 1967
New England Newsclip

Fifth Tanglewood Weekend Opened by Rafael Kubelik

Guest conductor Rafael Kubelik occupied the podium at Tanglewood last night, as he will again this evening. Kubelik, an experienced and highly regarded musician who once conducted the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, played one of the most beloved of Haydn's symphonies, the 102nd, the Double Concerto of Martinu (the composer was at one time a member of Berkshire Music Center composition faculty) and the Franck Symphony in D Minor. The piano soloist in the Martinu was Charles Wilson. Twenty-four concerts in eight weeks is a burden one conductor cannot easily bear, and so the practice of inviting guests to assume part of the responsibility serves to lighten the load for the musical director. It also allows the regular subscribers to observe a variety of techniques and a degree of novelty, but, more important, permits an extension of the repertoire. Every conductor has either his favorites or, to be more specific, a few items in his list of specialties which he can prepare with the minimum number of rehearsals a guest conductor is allowed.

Musical Jeux de Mots

Kubelik was director of the Chicago Symphony preceding the incumbency of Fritz Reiner. He is now in great demand in many European capitals.

No one of the three composers on last night's program has been represented on any other Tanglewood program this year. Indeed, the French compositions are mainly on the programs of the season's guest conductors. The Haydn symphony was one of those which Koussevitzky played often and its four movements are all virile and witty in character.

The Franck symphony is an inspired work and the composer has made the most out of his material. The piece is a wonderful exhibit of the possibilities of musical circumlocution and, if it had been a literary exercise, it would have shown how many ways the same thing can be said by the use of synonyms and unwitting jeux de mots.

HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE (e)
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
CIRC. 14,250
AUG 1 1967
New England Newsclip

Kubelik Directs Concerts For Tanglewood Weekend

The fourth guest conductor of the Berkshire Festival summer season at Lenox, Rafael Kubelik, Czech-born, directed the first two concerts of the fifth Tanglewood weekend. A relatively small group, 4,465, of intrepid music lovers attended both offerings, Friday's Prelude, at 7, devoted to the lilting and lush Liebeslieder Waltzes, Op. 52 and 65, with Claude Frank and Lilian Kallir (Frank's wife) as pianists. Soloists for the first, and more well-known include Melinea Kessler, Linden Maxwell, James Wagner, Donald Miller; for the second opus, Neva Pilgrim, Jane Struss, William Brown and Daniel Walsh.

Rain shouldn't dampen attendance for either ticket holders or lawn admittances. Benches are provided for the latter, inside the shed, when it rains, or even looks like it, affording comfort and protection.

Mr. Kubelik chose the Haydn Symphony, No. 102, in Bflat, for his opening number. It was the only symphony on the first program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on Oct. 22, 1811, and was repeated on the orchestra's 50th anniversary, Oct. 10, 1930, with Sir John Henscehl reurning to repeat his original program. Strong and humorous, it is one of Haydn's three greatest instrumental works.

Piano soloist in the Martinu Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani, was Charles Wilson. Born in Policka, Czechoslovakia, Martinu was forced to remain in Switzerland, (when his beloved republic was threatened, and eventually overthrown) where he and his wife had gone to visit, only shortly after an unforgettable Sokol Festival at Prague. During the war he worked on the double concerto, filling it with all his thoughts and longings for his endangered country, echoing the feelings and sufferings of all peoples far from their homeland, watching the catastrophe develop. Not only despair is heard, but revolt, courage, and unshakeable faith in the future, through sharp, dramatic shocks, by a current of unceasing tones, and a passionate melody claiming freedom.

Cesar Franck's soaring Symphony in D minor closed an inspired program; it is difficult to believe that there were listeners at the first performance of this work who scoffed at the composer for his daring, (using the English horn, for one) although disciplined, and fully exploiting the cyclical form; for his mysticism, and religiously devout exposition, in this enduring hymn of faith, that can't fail to move the most jaded appetite.

Saturday's attendance reach- 8,868, none of whom was disappointed at the fervent flow of Smetana's "The Moldau" (Vltava) as Kubelik directed its turnings and twistings, its gentle and sparkling waters, with the perception that only a native-born Czech can evince. For this, Kubelik used no score; it seemed as though every note, nuance, color and rhythm could not possibly be mislaid or glossed over; each mood was carefully set, the musical portrayal crystal clear, reaching finally a majestic outpouring, and subsequent release.

Of inordinate beauty was Shmuel Ashkenasi's playing in Elgar's Violin Concerto in B minor, Op. 61, which began with a lengthy introduction, a sustained horn tone providing the background for the soloist's entrance. Orchestra and violinist are interwoven richly, and subtly, and in Ashkenasi's hands one thinks of a spider's web, soft, strong, yet delicately connecting every strand without demarcation. No technicality seemed too demanding for the young artist; harmonics, double stops, leaping intervals, runs, silken smooth. A few misses simply added a human reference. Just before the final measures of the last movement, a string broke; at the proper moment, without interrupting, or losing a phrase, even with a certain rhythmic grace, Ashkenasi and the aware concertmaster, Silverstein, exchanged instruments. Somehow, it seemed to add to the audience's intensive applause. A first performance at the Festival concerts, this concerto's Finale, whose sectional themes recur in various orchestrations through all three movements, also incorporates a pizzicato tremelo in the Finale, with the string players drumming softly on the strings with their fingers, an exquisitely faint harmony, appropriately subdued, intriguing against the soloist's exposition.

Kubelik is a rangy, rather awkward figure, whose fee seem glued to the podium while the rest of him control and manipulates the incompara ble Boston Symphony players who certainly understand his curiously angular, and distinctive directions. Even at his most impassioned, there is a sense of calm, along with a certainty in musical thought. He doesn't startle one with far-out interpretations but, as in the first movement of the sweepingly majestic Brahms Fourth when he didn't obscure the music by hurried tempi, as Dr. Munch and others have done, one realized that this was a new departure, but plainly all right. Brahm's fertile phrases and agile developments were shown in stunningly clear color. That most beautifully harmonic Andante Moderato was and is a gem; the final passacaglia movement, in which Doriot Dwyer shone with an unusual warmth, was eloquent and restrained. Applause continued long after we left, thoroughly satisfied with a superbly chosen program.

The largest crowd this summer, 12,185, to be expected when pianist Van Cliburn is scheduled, heard a romantically introspective performance, unlike Cliburn's usual head tossing, "give - it - all - you've - got" showmanship, racing technique (except when specified), etc. A cool concerto (in both the mod and natural sense) with all the youthful vigor of the composer at 25, tingling Norwegian national tunes inherent, the pianist followed the composer's meaning, never too intense, taking the opening Allegro with very measured tempo, singing the infinitely lovely Adagio, and the following finale with its five themes, grand and flowing. Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra were in excellent form, as usual, never overreaching the concerto's tonal power.

The first half of the program was given to the original version of Webern's 1909 "Six Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 6," forerunner of the serialists, exquisitely formed, with muted tones, varied by nine different percussive instruments, rarefied music indeed! Schubert's posthumous C major Symphony was precisely shaped by Leinsdorf. For some reason, this summer's audiences have taken to applauding each symphonic movement, no great harm, but it does tend to break the concentration with too much letdown.

Kubelik Brings Atmosphere Of Germanic Tradition To Concert at Tanglewood

By R. C. HAMMERICH
The Union's Music Critic

LENOX—Rafael Kubelik, guest conductor, brought an atmosphere of Germanic tradition to Tanglewood Friday night . . . musical tradition that is.

He led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program that offered one of Haydn's London Symphonies (No. 102), Franck's D Minor Symphony and Bohuslav Martinu's "Double Concerto for two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani."

Most Interest

As might be expected, the double concerto offered the most interest. Haydn's style is well known, and Frank's symphony is popular enough to have become a war horse.

The Martinu piece was about 20 minutes long and was characterized by agitated, propulsive nervousness relieved now and then by passages of tranquility.

It was composed in 1938 and, like so many semidissonant, semicontemporary, atmospheric pieces, gains most of its considerable power from a cumulative buildup of rhythmic repetition and harmonic tension.

Skill Shown

Kubelik conducted it without score (as he did Haydn and Franck) and balanced the two orchestras with skill.

He is a large man with longish, frizzy hair above his ears and conducts with a kind of awkward, lumbering manner. There was no doubt Friday, though, that he knew what he was about.

He has been one of the world's leading conductors many years, first, in 1936, as leader of the Czech Philharmonic, and presently as leader of Munich's principal orchestra. From 1950 to 1953 he was conductor of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

He kept the Haydn and Franck symphonies tightly knit, carefully controlled, cohesive.

Warm and Pliant

He didn't keep the pedantry out of the minuet of the Haydn symphony, but he made the second movement warm and pliant and the last airy and delicate. And he let the Franck become dramatic, even grandoise, in appropriate places.

Early arrivals (later there were 4465) were blessed by some adept vocal ensemble work with Brahms "Liebeslieder" waltzes.

The waltzes are nice, pleasant sweet little love songs. There are 33 and they took some of the curse off the foggy mist which was falling on Tanglewood during the weekend prelude program which started at 7.

In Two Bunches

Brahms wrote the little songs in two bunches, the first (18) in 1869 when he was 36 and the second (15) five years later. They range from tranquil to lively, lyrical to joyous, poignant to whimsical.

They were written to be sung around the piano in the parlor. Friday, two vocal quartets (one for each group) from the Berkshire Music Center sang them, accompanied by Claude Frank and Lilian Kallir (who have also served as accompanists for a recording of the waltzes.

Both quartets worked with clean, clear coordination. The transparency of their vocal texture made the songs more interesting than they are when the interplay of parts is somewhat blurred in a chorus, as is the case in the recording.

Will Return Tonight

Tonight, Kubelik will return to conduct Smetana's "Moldau," Brahm's Symphony No. 4 and Elgar's Violin Concerto, Opus 61, with Shmuel Ashkenasi, soloist.

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350
JUL 29 1967
New England Newsclip

34

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,100

JUL 31 1967 New England Newsclip

Saturday Night at Tanglewood

Smetana's 'Moldau' and Brahms' 4th Superb but Ashkenazi Lags

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. Rafael Kubelik conducting Smetana's "The Moldau." Elgar's Violin Concerto with Shmuel Ashkenasi, soloist, and Brahms' Symphony No. 4. Saturday evening at Tanglewood.

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Music Critic

LENOX — I remember a time, 20 and more years ago, when Smetana's "Moldau" was an important and meaningful piece instead of just a very pretty one.

The political tragedy had, of course, something to do with it, but so did the music with its succession of ever so simple but wonderfully evocative pictures rising from and returning to the broad, songful river theme itself.

And at the end, when the woodwinds and brass spread the grand Vysehrad motive across all this, there was something to make one want to stand up and that gave me goosebumps every time.

Given the disadvantages that go with growing up and many other circumstances that include countless routine performances of "The Moldau," I had almost forgotten all this, but Saturday, as Rafael Kubelik began to conduct, I sat up, alert, and delighted by the springiness of the rhythm in the flute duet with plucked strings.

And the whole piece, as it went on, was given with a vitality, with an intensity of involvement — and the Boston Symphony really caught fire from its conductor—that all at once restored it to complete life.

It is a score written in blood, one would say from Kubelik's extraordinary conducting of it.

The Brahms Fourth, too, was given with an intensity that gave it something of the quality of a new piece. Kubelik had the orchestra play it with immense sonority, and his interpretation, with its bold articulations and accents, emphasized the drama in Brahms's irregular rhythms and phrasings.

In the first movement, this amounted to more vehemence than the music could take, and some of the playing was pretty reckless as well. In the later movements, especially in the Andante and the Scherzo, there was control as well as passion, the orchestra played superbly, and the performance, though not by any means subtle, carried great conviction and renewed one's sense of the E minor as a magnificent tragic symphony.

In the Violin Concerto, Kubelik proved himself a first-rate Elgarian—it would be exciting to hear him do the A flat Symphony some day. Shmuel Ashkenasi, though he is a very fine player, was a poor choice as soloist for it, though. It needs a violinist with an enormous tone, a grandly declamatory manner, and a sympathy for Elgar's very special world of inward-turned feeling.

Ashkenasi is a quietly persuasive, delicate player rather than an extraverted one. His tone is small, actually too small for him to be comfortably heard in the richly scored Elgar.

It is partly the instrument he plays: a string broke just before the end, and the last few pages which he played on concertmaster Silverstein's violin came through much more incisively.

If he had not this trouble with tone, Ashkenasi might turn out to have a feeling for the music, but as it was, the need to force often produced a kind of tremulous fussiness that was both alien and disagreeable.

From other points of view, notably that intonation, Ashkenasi's playing was excellent. The two enormous cuts made in the finale are, however, an inexcusable musical fault.

If Ashkenasi does not take the Elgar seriously enough to play it all, or if he fails to understand that he makes the finale ridiculous by reducing it to nothing but a cadenza with a crippled introduction and perfunctory coda, that is another reason he should leave it alone for now.

SPRINGFIELD HERALD, THURSDAY, AUGUST 3, 1967.

TANGLEWOOD

by DEAN RADIN

SATURDAY'S CONCERT DOUBLE-STARRED RAFAEL KUBELIK, GUEST CONDUCTOR, AND SHMUEL ASHKENASI, VIOLIN SOLIST.

Smetana's Musical Poem

Smetana's popular Symphonic Poem, "The Moldau" was performed first. Concerning the theme of his Symphonic Poem, Smetana wrote "two springs pour forth their streams in the shade of the Bohemian forest, the one warm and gushing, the other cold and tranquil. Their waves, joyfully flowing over their rocky beds, unite and sparkle in the morning sun." Mr. Kubelik conducted "The Moldau" as Smetana himself would have. "flowing through emerald meadows and lowlands where a wedding feast is being celebrated with song and dancing." A vibrant applause ended "The Moldau."

Mysterious Score Inscription

Second on the program was Elgar's Violin Concerto in B minor, Op. 61, performed for the first time at Tanglewood. Elgar dedicated the Violin Concerto to Fritz Kreisler, who gave the first performance in London on November 10, 1910. The score bears a mysterious inscription, "Herein lies enshrined the soul of . . . 1910." Sir Donald Tovey remarked that ". . . the soul of the music is musical, and we need no external program . . ." I agreed with Sir Donald after hearing soloist Shmuel Ashkenasi perform the Violin Concerto with broad singing melodies and richly colored cadenzas. Cries of "bravo, bravo!" echoed on the grounds and staccato camera flashes exploded (even though picture taking is not allowed in the Shed).

Shmuel Snaps String

After the Violin Concerto, I learned that while Mr. Ashkenasi was vigorously

Shmuel Ashkenasi

tearing through the last few lines, a string snapped on his violin. He deftly exchanged the violin with concertmaster Joseph Silverstein's, and continued his rip-roaring finale without missing a beat.

Born in 1941 in Tel-Aviv,

Rafael Kubelik

Shmuel Ashkenasi rose to the heights of the musical world when he won second prize in the Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow in 1962. He studied in Israel and later in the United States with Efrem Zimbalist at the Curtis Instiute in Philadelphia. This is Mr. Ashkenasi's second appearance at the Tanglewood concert.

Symphony No. 4 a Fist Fight?

After the intermission, the Boston Symphony Orchestra performed Brahms' Symphony No. 4, in E. minor, Op. 98. Eduard Hanslick, a music critic of the nineteenth century once remarked "The whole first movement gave me the impression of two people having a fist fight. "I waited anxiously to see if Hanslick's comment would be justified. (Having heard Brahms' Symphony No. 4 many times, I knew he had to be mistaken!) Well! Mr. Hanslick certainly didn't hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra when he harshly criticized Brahm's Symphony. The swinging melody was as far from a "fist fight" as ballet is to wrestling. The zephyr-like strains converged into triumphant, tympanic, and exhilerating climaxes.

Rafael Kubelik

Rafael Kubelik was born in Bychory, Czechoslovakia in 1914. As a boy he studied violin with his father, the celebrated violinist Jan Kubelik. From 1928 to 1934, he studied composition, violin, piano, and conducting at the Prague Conservatory. He was conductor of the Czechoslovakia Philharmonic Orchestra in Prague, and music director of the Opera House in Brno. He has appeared as guest conductor for orchestras throughout the world. Since 1961.

Special Performances

On Tuesday, August 8, at 8:00 p.m., the Boston Pops, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, will perform a special Gershwin program. Earl Wild will be the solo pianist. This is a Pension Fund Concert. Be sure to attend!

On Thursday, August 17, at 7:30 p.m., the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, will perform for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood-On-Parade. Each department of the Berkshire Music Center will perform. The program includes Mozart, Dvorak, Saint-Saens, and Tchaikovsky. A special firework display follows the concert.

12 CITIZEN HERALD Wednesday August 2, 1967

TANGLEWOOD IS PARADISE ENOW. . .

A loaf of bread, a jug of wine,
And thou, and music under stars
At Tanglewood. . .and Tanglewood
Were Paradise enow. . .

So might old Omar have written, had he been born in our time and spent unforgettable evenings, as many Wallkill Valley music lovers do, relaxed on lush, green lawns, under a sky full of brilliants at Tanglewood in the Berkshires of Massachusetts, a beguiling, two-hour drive from home.

Tanglewood is the summer residence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, one of the greatest voices in the world choir of music. The setting is an unique, open-sided music auditorium, called a shed. Here several thousand sit under cover. . .while many thousands more choose the luxury of grass and stars and the witchery of a summer night outdoors, to luxuriate in the eloquence of music such as not even the Gods heard on Olympus.

Saturday night was a marvelous one to be at Tanglewood, as several parties of Wallkill Valley patrons, discovered. It was warm and reasonably clear, and Tanglewood was as enchanting as the Vale of Diana.

The white-jacketed Boston was the glittering instrument to which the famed Czech conductor, Rafael Kubelik, addressed himself. He could not have chosen a more romantic introductory than the lilting, symphonic tone poem of his native land's mighty river, The Moldau, by Friedrich Smetana.

This is the orchestra story of the romantic course of the river, begun with a melodic theme, fragile as gossamer and haunting as a remembered love. High violins are the forest springs that bring forth their waters and trace a joyous course until the gathering forces of the entire string section create a forest brook that races on until the swelling orchestra sings the song of the great River Moldau, pouring through the valleys and becoming the mighty Moldau, beloved of the Queen City of Prague.

Purists who believe there are no strings in all the world but the Boston strings, reaffirmed their belief Saturday as the violins sang the song of the growing river against the sonorous complement of full orchestra. In the great climactic passages, the orchestra poured forth an immense organ sound, as exciting as anything in music, yet never overbearing in brass or percussion. This was a jewel of a waterscape.

Kubelik is not a graceful, suave conductor, but he needs none of those charms. He is a Trojan and evokes the sounds, feathers the pianissimi, hurls thunderbolts into the crescendi, to the delight of his auditors. He received standing ovations Saturday.

He followed the Smetana with Sir Edward Elgar's opulent yet infrequently heard Violin Concerto in B Minor, Opus 61. And he gave it a reading of ineffable beauty, with the 26-year-old violinist, Shmuel Ashkenasi, as soloist.

The opening melody, begun in the strings and embroidered gracefully by the orchestra, set a stage for Ashkenasi's virtuosity.

Interplay between soloist and orchestra was precise, exquisite, and the audience was enraptured through the Andante, than which man has created no more beautiful music.

In the final movement, the Allegro, the soloist reiterated and elaborated upon the earlier themes and the orchestra provided for a sustained passage, an unique background, a pizzicato tremolo in which the players drummed softly on the strings with their fingers to provide an exotic sensation in sound.

An unexpected and dramatic event occurred just before the Coda at the end of the Elgar. Instantly on finishing a tremendous passage, Ashkenazi, suddenly and without indication or signal, thrust his violin at the concertmaster, who accepted and swiftly handed his own violin to the soloist.

Ashkenazi completed the Elgar with the borrowed instrument, and there was no difference in the voice. Was it a broken string? Yet, the concertmaster completed the score, playing Ashkenazi's violin. Some who were close, felt it may have been the free flowing perspiration of Ashkenazi may have moistened his strings. It's one of those littler conversation pieces of mystery one takes home from Tanglewood.

The program was concluded with a tremendous reading of Brahms' Fourth Symphony. One of the composer's finest, this was read with discerning authority by Kubelik. He built up great climaxes in the first movement, sent his strings soaring elegantly through the second, had the orchestral voice rolling with eloquence in the third, and made the heavens resound with the sonorous might of horns and brass, woodwinds and strings, in the massive chordal passages with which Brams sent his symphony into immortality.

— RAYMOND J. DULYE.

SPRINGFIELD HERALD
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
BI-WEEKLY CIRC. 111,000

AUG 3 1967 New England Newsclip

34

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,100

JUL 31 1967

New England Newsclip

Saturday Night at Tanglewood

Smetana's 'Moldau' and Brahms' 4th Superb but Ashkenazi Lags

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. Rafael Kubelik conducting Smetana's "The Moldau." Elgar's Violin Concerto with Shmuel Ashkenasi, soloist, and Brahms' Symphony No. 4. Saturday evening at Tanglewood.

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Music Critic

LENOX — I remember a time, 20 and more years ago, when Smetana's "Moldau" was an important and meaningful piece instead of just a very pretty one.

The political tragedy had, of course, something to do with it, but so did the music with its succession of ever so simple but wonderfully evocative pictures rising from and returning to the broad, songful river theme itself.

And at the end, when the woodwinds and brass spread the grand Vysehrad motive across all this, there was something to make one want to stand up and that gave me goosebumps every time.

Given the disadvantages that go with growing up and many other circumstances that include countless routine performances of "The Moldau," I had almost forgotten all this, but Saturday, as Rafael Kubelik began to conduct, I sat up, alert, and delighted by the springiness of the rhythm in the flute duet with plucked strings.

And the whole piece, as it went on, was given with a vitality, with an intensity of involvement — and the Boston Symphony really caught fire from its conductor—that all at once restored it to complete life.

It is a score written in blood, one would say from Kubelik's extraordinary conducting of it.

The Brahms Fourth, too, was given with an intensity that gave it something of the quality of a new piece. Kubelik had the orchestra play it with immense sonority, and his interpretation, with its bold articulations and accents, emphasized the drama in Brahms's irregular rhythms and phrasings.

In the first movement, this amounted to more vehemence than the music could take, and some of the playing was pretty reckless as well. In the later movements, especially in the Andante and the Scherzo, there was control as well as passion, the orchestra played superbly, and the performance, though not by any means subtle, carried great conviction and renewed one's sense of the E minor as a magnificent tragic symphony.

In the Violin Concerto, Kubelik proved himself a first-rate Elgarian—it would be exciting to hear him do the A flat Symphony some day. Shmuel Ashkenasi, though he is a very fine player, was a poor choice as soloist for it, though. It needs a violinist with an enormous tone, a grandly declamatory manner, and a sympathy for Elgar's very special world of inward-turned feeling.

Ashkenasi is a quietly persuasive, delicate player rather than an extraverted one. His tone is small, actually too small for him to be comfortably heard in the richly scored Elgar.

It is partly the instrument he plays: a string broke just before the end, and the last few pages which he played on concertmaster Silverstein's violin came through much more incisively.

If he had not this trouble with tone, Ashkenasi might turn out to have a feeling for the music, but as it was, the need to force often produced a kind of tremulous fussiness that was both alien and disagreeable.

From other points of view, notably that intonation, Ashkenasi's playing was excellent. The two enormous cuts made in the finale are, however, an inexcusable musical fault.

If Ashkenasi does not take the Elgar seriously enough to play it all, or if he fails to understand that he makes the finale ridiculous by reducing it to nothing but a cadenza with a crippled introduction and perfunctory coda, that is another reason he should leave it alone for now.

SPRINGFIELD HERALD, THURSDAY, AUGUST 3, 1967

TANGLEWOOD

by DEAN RADIN

SATURDAY'S CONCERT DOUBLE-STARRED RAFAEL KUBELIK, GUEST CONDUCTOR, AND SHMUEL ASHKENASI, VIOLIN SOLIST.

Smetana's Musical Poem

Smetana's popular Symphonic Poem, "The Moldau" was performed first. Concerning the theme of his Symphonic Poem, Smetana wrote "two springs pour forth their streams in the shade of the Bohemian forest, the one warm and gushing, the other cold and tranquil. Their waves, joyfully flowing over their rocky beds, unite and sparkle in the morning sun." Mr. Kubelik conducted "The Moldau" as Smetana himself would have. "flowing through emerald meadows and lowlands where a wedding feast is being celebrated with song and dancing." A vibrant applause ended "The Moldau."

Mysterious Score Inscription

Second on the program was Elgar's Violin Concerto in B minor, Op. 61, performed for the first time at Tanglewood. Elgar dedicated the Violin Concerto to Fritz Kreisler, who gave the first performance in London on November 10, 1910. The score bears a mysterious inscription, "Herein lies enshrined the soul of . . ." 1910." Sir Donald Tovey remarked that ". . . the soul of the music is musical, and we need no external program . . . " I agreed with Sir Donald after hearing soloist Shmuel Ashkenasi perform the Violin Concerto with broad singing melodies and richly colored cadenzas. Cries of "bravo, bravo!" echoed on the grounds and staccato camera flashes exploded (even though picture taking is not allowed in the Shed).

Shmuel Snaps String

After the Violin Concerto, I learned that while Mr. Ashkenasi was vigorously

Shmuel Ashkenasi

tearing through the last few lines, a string snapped on his violin. He deftly exchanged the violin with concertmaster Joseph Silverstein's, and continued his rip-roaring finale without missing a beat.

Born in 1941 in Tel-Aviv,

Rafael Kubelik

Shmuel Ashkenasi rose to the heights of the musical world when he won second prize in the Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow in 1962. He studied in Israel and later in the United States with Efrem Zimbalist at the Curtis Instiute in Philadelphia. This is Mr. Ashkenasi's second appearance at the Tanglewood concert.

Symphony No. 4 a Fist Fight?

After the intermission, the Boston Symphony Orchestra performed Brahms' Symphony No. 4, in E. minor, Op. 98. Eduard Hanslick, a music critic of the nineteenth century once remarked "The whole first movement gave me the impression of two people having a fist fight. "I waited anxiously to see if Hanslick's comment would be justified. (Having heard Brahms' Symphony No. 4 many times, I knew he had to be mistaken!) Well! Mr. Hanslick certainly didn't hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra when he harshly criticized Brahm's Symphony. The swinging melody was as far from a "fist fight" as ballet is to wrestling. The zephyr-like strains converged into triumphant, tympanic, and exhilerating climaxes.

Rafael Kubelik

Rafael Kubelik was born in Bychory, Czechoslovakia in 1914. As a boy he studied violin with his father, the celebrated violinist Jan Kubelik. From 1928 to 1934, he studied composition, violin, piano, and conducting at the Prague Conservatory. He was conductor of the Czechoslovakia Philharmonic Orchestra in Prague, and music director of the Opera House in Brno. He has appeared as guest conductor for orchestras throughout the world. Since 1961.

Special Performances

On Tuesday, August 8, at 8:00 p.m., the Boston Pops, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, will perform a special Gershwin program. Earl Wild will be the solo pianist. This is a Pension Fund Concert. Be sure to attend!

On Thursday, August 17, at 7:30 p.m., the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, will perform for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood-On-Parade. Each department of the Berkshire Music Center will perform. The program includes Mozart, Dvorak, Saint-Saens, and Tchaikovsky. A special firework display follows the concert.

SPRINGFIELD HERALD
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
BI-WEEKLY CIRC. 111,000

AUG 3 1967

New England Newsclip

12 CITIZEN HERALD Wednesday August 2, 1967

TANGLEWOOD IS PARADISE ENOW. . .

A loaf of bread, a jug of wine,
And thou, and music under stars
At Tanglewood. . .and Tanglewood
Were Paradise enow. . .

So might old Omar have written, had he been born in our time and spent unforgettable evenings, as many Wallkill Valley music lovers do, relaxed on lush, green lawns, under a sky full of brilliants at Tanglewood in the Berkshires of Massachusetts, a beguiling, two-hour drive from home.

Tanglewood is the summer residence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, one of the greatest voices in the world choir of music. The setting is an unique, open-sided music auditorium, called a shed. Here several thousand sit under cover. . .while many thousands more choose the luxury of grass and stars and the witchery of a summer night outdoors, to luxuriate in the eloquence of music such as not even the Gods heard on Olympus.

Saturday night was a marvelous one to be at Tanglewood, as several parties of Wallkill Valley patrons, discovered. It was warm and reasonably clear, and Tanglewood was as enchanting as the Vale of Diana.

The white-jacketed Boston was the glittering instrument to which the famed Czech conductor, Rafael Kubelik, addressed himself. He could not have chosen a more romantic introductory than the lilting, symphonic tone poem of his native land's mighty river, The Moldau, by Friedrich Smetana.

This is the orchestra story of the romantic course of the river, begun with a melodic theme, fragile as gossamer and haunting as a remembered love. High violins are the forest springs that bring forth their waters and trace a joyous course until the gathering forces of the entire string section create a forest brook that races on until the swelling orchestra sings the song of the great River Moldau, pouring through the valleys and becoming the mighty Moldau, beloved of the Queen City of Prague.

Purists who believe there are no strings in all the world but the Boston strings, reaffirmed their belief Saturday as the violins sang the song of the growing river against the sonorous complement of full orchestra. In the great climactic passages, the orchestra poured forth an immense organ sound, as exciting as anything in music, yet never overbearing in brass or percussion. This was a jewel of a waterscape.

Kubelik is not a graceful, suave conductor, but he needs none of those charms. He is a Trojan and evokes the sounds, feathers the pianissimi, hurls thunderbolts into the crescendi, to the delight of his auditors. He received standing ovations Saturday.

He followed the Smetana with Sir Edward Elgar's opulent yet infrequently heard Violin Concerto in B Minor, Opus 61. And he gave it a reading of ineffable beauty, with the 26-year-old violinist, Shmuel Ashkenasi, as soloist.

The opening melody, begun in the strings and embroidered gracefully by the orchestra, set a stage for Ashkenasi's virtuosity.

Interplay between soloist and orchestra was precise, exquisite, and the audience was enraptured through the Andante, than which man has created no more beautiful music.

In the final movement, the Allegro, the soloist reiterated and elaborated upon the earlier themes and the orchestra provided for a sustained passage, an unique background, a pizzicato tremolo in which the players drummed softly on the strings with their fingers to provide an exotic sensation in sound.

An unexpected and dramatic event occurred just before the Coda at the end of the Elgar. Instantly on finishing a tremendous passage, Ashkenazi, suddenly and without indication or signal, thrust his violin at the concertmaster, who accepted and swiftly handed his own violin to the soloist.

Ashkenazi completed the Elgar with the borrowed instrument, and there was no difference in the voice. Was it a broken string? Yet, the concertmaster completed the score, playing Ashkenazi's violin. Some who were close, felt it may have been the free flowing perspiration of Ashkenazi may have moistened his strings. It's one of those littler conversation pieces of mystery one takes home from Tanglewood.

The program was concluded with a tremendous reading of Brahms' Fourth Symphony. One of the composer's finest, this was read with discerning authority by Kubelik. He built up great climaxes in the first movement, sent his strings soaring elegantly through the second, had the orchestral voice rolling with eloquence in the third, and made the heavens resound with the sonorous might of horns and brass, woodwinds and strings, in the massive chordal passages with which Brams sent his symphony into immortality.

— RAYMOND J. DULYE.

SUNDAY REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 115,950
JUL 30 1967
New England Newsclip

Violinist Ashkenasi Is Startling in Tanglewood Finish

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — Shmuel Ashkenasi came up with some brilliant bravura violin technique Saturday night during Elgar's violin concerto (op. 61) with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, but the move that made the audience really sit up happened only a handful of measures before the finish.

Swaps Instruments

He swapped violins with Joseph Silverstein, concert master, without missing a beat between notes in the midst of the busy, musically acrobatic finish. It was startling.

Up the then, under Rafael Kubelik's direction, the concerto had been somewhat predictable. It is one of the big, romantic concertos for violin and consequently calls for a huge helping of theatrical agility and technical facility.

Perhaps it was the acrobatics that broke the string on Ashkenasi's violin. Maybe the high humidity had something to do with it.

Humidity Telling

It is reasonably certain that the humidity affected the tone quality. It was dull, sort of soft and muffled. It was limp, like the air.

The humidity had nothing to do with Kubelik's generalship, however. That was subject to sporadic complaint. The tempos, for instance, were erratic.

Smetana's "Moldau," which opened the concert, was unflagging, cohesive, smoothly flowing like the broad river after which it is named. The momentum was steady and secure.

Sleepy Movement

The middle movement of Elgar's concerto was dead. Well, it was sleepy, anyway. The first and last movements were kept alive by Ashkenasi's vigorous violin, for which he received generous applause from the 8668 listeners.

The Brahms Symphony No. 4, which closed the program, also was marred by slow tempos.

There were powerfully effective passages, of course, but episodic phrasing damaged the continuity even more than the slowness. There were moments when the motion was halting, amost faltering. It was strange.

Needs to Move

The symphony often is referred to as being philosophical, and it does work well when it is taken at a thoughtful pace, but it needs to keep moving, and Kubelik often let the slow moments drag.

This afternoon there will be less opportunity for such mannerisms.

Van Cliburn will be on stage drawing great resounding chords from the piano during Grieg's conceeto, and the orchestra, under Leinsdorf's direction, will play Webern's "Six Pieces for Orchestra" and Schubert's Symphony in C Major (posthumous).

PRESS (e)
BRISTOL, CONN.
CIRC. 15,900
AUG 3 1967
New England Newsclip

Symphony In Top Form In Berkshire Festival Performance

The Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., continues to send glorious music in to the Berkshire Hills to the pleasure of tens of thousands of avid concert - goers.

The Boston Symphony, long a great institution sounded marvelously well this past Saturday evening under the direction of Rafael Kubelik, Czech conductor. Opening with Smetana's "The Moldau's," this lovely Czech Symphonic Poem seemed to have special feeling and was magnificently performed. Elgar's Violin Concerto in B Minor followed, played by the 26-year old Israeli violinist Ahmuel Ashkenasi. Mr. Ashkenasi is a fine violinist, but this reviewer found the Elgar a boring piece, endeavoring to be romantic but never quite making it. Brahms beautiful Symphony No. 4 in E. Minor concluded the evening. This is a wonderfully lyrical work, it should sing with a full voice and rich medodic intonations. Unfortunately it did not entirely succeed. It missed the depths of contrasts and the sharpness of counterpoint which are so inherent in the work. It was too all-of-a-piece to be as exciting as it should be.

Sunday afternoon, Erich Leinsdorf conducted in his usual crisp, exacting manner. The concert opened with Webern's Six Pieces for Orchestra Op. 6. It was good to hear the Boston play this modern work. "Melody through Color" reportedly was Webern's obsession. Of the same ilk as Shoenberg and Berg, these atonalists or serialists have earned a very definite place in the musical world and it is interesting to hear their work included in concerts of solid classicism.

Schubert's magnificent Symphone in C Major was next. This is a very proper, grand symphony, one of only two which Schubert wrote and which was discovered 11 years after the death of the composed. It is a wonderful work, and might have been performed with more excitement. The cadences were were pedantic and it seemed to lack depth.

Van Cliburn concluded the evening's concert with Grieg's Piano Concerto in A Minor. This is a very popular Concerto and Mr. Cliburn is a very popular pianist.

Several years ago, when this reviewer heard Van Cliburn for the first time, a very disappointed and critical review ensued. At that time, it semed that Cliburn had had too great a build - up to ever live up to. Possibly that review had been over - critical. But, as the Grieg unfolded it was plain that, while Cliburn has improved some, he is certainly still not a great pianist, nor a brilliant one. He is just a pianist. His tempo was slow and he worked his way through Grieg's lovely work in a manner reminiscent of the weather— sticky and humid. He works awfully hard, but what comes out of the piano just doesn't show all that effort. Unlike the weather, the audience's reaction was decidedly cool. One remark oberheard from the crowd was tha "perhaps Cliburn is just som monstrous joke passed off b the Russians!" Perhaps so.

Esther Watstein

REPUBLICAN (m)
WATERBURY, CONN.
CIRC. 26,100
AUG 1 1967
New England Newsclip

29,626 Hear Concerts At Tanglewood

Last weekend at Tanglewood in the Berkshires was one predominantly of lush romanticism, as a combined crowd of 29,626 gathered to hear guest Conductor Rafael Kubelik, one of the world's foremost orchestral colorists, Shmuel Ashkenasi, 26-year-old Israeli violinist, and Van Cliburn, pianist, wonderchild of the American concert stage, playing music of depth and brilliance by such composers as Brahms, Grieg and Elgar.

Saturday evening's concert conducted by Kubelik, began with Smetana's "The Moldau" (Vitava), Symphonic Poem, the intensely lyrical and often folksy statement of the composer's love for his homeland, Bohemia.

The Elgar Violin Concerto in B minor, Op. 61, followed, played most competently by Shmuel Ashkenasi. The significance of the Elgar Concerto lies primarily in its rich musical content, rather than in the production of anything resembling startling innovation. It is a completely romatic piece, though composed during a time (the first decade of the 20th Century when more exciting experimentation was occurring in the concert hall.

Ashkenasi is an extremely gifted musician. He won second prize in Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow, in 1962, (Van Cliburn became a national hero after winning first prize in 1958), and since has been performing with major orchestras throughout the United States and the rest of the world. This reviewer felt, however, that his tone was small, and slightly overshadowed by the sweeping proportions of the orchestra, although he performed with great technical facility.

A major fault of the Saturday evening concert would seem to be the unbridled volume of the orchestra especially of the blare of the brasses. Kubelik is a romantic conductor of the old school, more dependent upon the bombast and heavy-handedness than upon the intricacies of the music. His conducting seemed to have little subtlety, and as a result, the orchestra's performance seemed to lack sensitivity. The Brahms Symphony No. 4 was a perfect example of the whole evening's lack of orchestral contrast and control, and several times the glory of Brahms' music was allowed to deteriorate into noise. If Brahms is not well-conducted, the music can make one think that he is drowning in a musical swamp. Saturday's performance by Kubelik and the Boston came dangerously close.

Music Of Serialism.

Sunday afternoon's concert returned Leinsdorf to the podium, conducting Anton Webern's Six Pieces for Orchestra, a shining example of the music of serialism, and was very fascinating. Schubert's Symphony in C major (Posthumous) followed, and Grieg's Piano concerto in A minor, Op. 18 completed the second half of the concert.

The Schubert was a triumph for Leinsdorf and the Boston, who again proved that as a tightly knit and well-conducted group they are capable of absolute poetry. The orchestra was in fine form, responding beautifully to Leinsdorf's direction, and the result was spiritually uplifting and beautiful.

Van Cliburn's performance of the Grieg Concerto, part of his standard repetoire, was surprisingly lyrical. This reviewer has always found the technical brilliance of this young pianist quite dazzling, yet has often felt a lack of genuine musicianship. Sunday, however, Cliburn played with thoughtful musical sensitivity as well as technically accomplished. The playing of the orchestra and soloist were electrifying and exciting, as well as lyrical and the Grieg was the highlight of this most popular concert of the season, one that drew a record attendance of 12,185.

Next weekend will feature Beethoven and Brahms, with William Steinberg conducting Friday at 9 p.m. in an all Beethoven concert featuring Theodore Lettvin, pianist, in the Piano Concerto No. 3. A concert version of Beethoven's only opera, Fidelio, will be performed on Saturday at 8 p.m. Leinsdorf will conduct the original 1805 version of this opera with a splendid cast of soloists, accompanied by the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus. Sunday at 2:30 p.m. Leinsdorf will present an all Brahms Program with Joseph Silverstein, Concertmaster of the Boston, performing as soloist in Brahms' beautiful violin concerto. By way of reminder, there is the usual Boston Symphony Orchestra's Open Rehearsal on Saturday morning at Tanglewood, proceeds from the sale of tickets are contributed to the orchestra's Pension Fund.

The Berkshire Music Center also will present a chamber music concert in the Theatre at Tanglewood on Sunday at 10 a.m. which is free to the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, membership open to anyone wishing to contribute to this organization. There is also a scheduled chamber music concert this evening in the Theatre at Tanglewood, featuring the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music group with Roman Totenberg, violin and Igor Kipnis playing the harpsichord. This event starts at 8 p.m.

"SCM"

TELEGRAM (m)
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 62,350
JUL 31 1967
New England Newsclip

Music: 'Cliburn Weekend' At Tanglewood

LENOX — At Tanglewood the weekend just passed was known as "Van Cliburn Weekend." But the last two days' glory of the Berkshire Music Festival was shared by the young Israeli violinist Shmuel Ashkenasi.

Total attendance for the weekend, Friday night through yesterday afternoon, was 28,674.

Yesterday afternoon, 12,185 persons turned out to hear Cliburn. Last summer, his Tanglewood audience numbered 14,375.

Cliburn's reception after the Grieg Piano Concerto can't be called an ovation, but it was extremely hearty. The Boston Symphony Orchestra and conductor Erich Leinsdorf gave him admirable support.

The Concerto got off to a determined start, setting the pace for a sturdy, sensitive performance from all quarters.

Cliburn concerned himself exclusively with the concerto's musical rather than display potentials. Melody sang in every note. Technique was generally sufficient to attain objectives — even brilliant in spots.

Fire and fervor impregnated the slow movement. The finale was brilliant, although some intersections were not reached at precise moments by piano and orchestra.

As he progresses in his spectacular careeer, Cliburn remains devoid of mannerisms or machination. He is totally occupied with making his music.

Saturday night, Ashkenasi was soloist with the Boston Symphony and Rafael Kubelik in the Elgar Violin Concerto.

The conductor manifested the same craftsmanship that so distinguished Friday night's concert.

Ashkenasi proved himself an excellent musician, and fast-acting in an emergency. As he reached the final stretch of the final movement, the E string of his violin broke. With hardly the loss of a phrase, he swiftly exchanged fiddles with concertmaster Joseph Silverstein, and there was no interruption.

The 26-year-old violinist seemed ill at ease during the entire performance. Yet he had a firm bow arm and an agile left hand that is capable of pyrotechnics. His tone was not large but deeply rooted in warmth. There were stretches of faulty intonation, but by and large it was fine music making.

It's been 34 years since the Elgar Concerto has been played at a Boston Symphony concert. This is understandable. The work is a poor showcase for the soloist and orchestral music of secondary interest.

Kubelik and the orchestra gave Brahms' Fourth Symphony sweeping lines and soaring melody. All did not materialize in brass, but this was a small liability.

Scenes in Smetana's "Moldau" were neatly threaded, and the orchestra turned it into a brilliant tapestry of sounds.

R.M.

NEWS (e)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 98,600
JUL 31 1967
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Critique

The Hero Who Could Do No Wrong

By ARTHUR T. ANDREWES

A crowd of well over 12,000 enthusiastic patrons flocked to Tanglewood to hear the piano virtuosity of Van Cliburn, who could do no wrong with this particular gathering at the fifth Sunday afternoon concert of the Berkshire Music Festival series.

The audience bristled with excitement; misunderstood and responded poorly to the brilliance of Anton von Weber and applauded between each movement of the Schubert symphony. Rather than the usual crowd of devoted music followers, it was a mob of undisciplined people there to get a glimpse of their darling, Van Cliburn.

Erich Leinsdorf led the Boston Symphony Orchestra through the elegance and emotional strength of "Six Pieces for Orchestra" by the brilliant Austrian composer Anton von Webern.

Had Webern not met an untimely death in 1945, he might have left his secluded existence to become the unchallenged leader of the contemporary music revolution. Short as these works are, they have a fulfilling quality that challenges the effectiveness of many longer, more publicized pieces.

If the Van Cliburn selection was to be the main feature of the concert, it was certainly not so; in light of the performance of the Symphony in C Major by Franz Schubert.

The 135 years since the composing of this great symphony have not dimmed its beauty or lessened its exciting values. While the composers of today struggle to accomplish the unusual, the contemporary audiences find great delight in the creative products of men who worked and evolved artistic expression in the two centuries prior to our own.

This work draws the audience through a spectacular realm of musical experiences. At first majestic, then emotional, moving to peaks of excitement and valleys of spiritual mysticism the symphony develops an immense form and capacity to express untold feelings of the composer and listener alike.

Van Cliburn, having some difficulty in the opening movement of the Piano Concerto in A Minor by Grieg, settled down in the final two sections to prove his claim to the reputation he has internationally.

Selecting a disappointingly common crowd pleaser in the Greig work, Van Cliburn chose to concern himself with commercial acceptance rather than artistic challenge. The creative artist, particularly one of Van Cliburn's status must maintain an integrity that exceeds the pleasing of the idolizing public.

The concert piece is not a simple selection. The young man did perform with a fine appeal in the second and third sections. However, Van Cliburn is capable of far better performances and should have knowingly maintained the reputation of the festival at Tanglewood.

36

NEWBURGH, N. Y.
NEWS
D. 31,500

AUG 2 1967

Reviewer Finds Program Lacking

By BERNARD LOTH

TANGLEWOOD, Mass. —On Sunday The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf and Van Cliburn, pianist, were so well received by the audience, which very discourteously but so enthusiastically applauded at every opportunity and ended with a 10-minute ovation, that I almost wonder at my lack of enthusiasm about the performance.

The Shed at Tanglewood was accoustically beautiful, the grounds immaculate, the crowd enormous, probably well over 10,000, but the music was not of a quality worthy of such an outpouring of applause.

The program opened with a modern composition, "Six Pieces for Orchestra" Op. 6 by Anton Von Webern, a pupil of Schoenberg, who outdid his teacher in the strange atonal concept of "melody through color variety." The variety appeared to be principally in the nine percussion instruments added to the full orchestra, but where the melody is supposed to have been escaped me completely.

It sounded like an exercise in mathematics in which the comic-strip professor fills the blackboard with calculations and computations but comes out with the wrong answer. Here the answer, if any, remained mathematical and not musical. It had one redeeming feature, however, its brevity.

The orchestra then played Schubert's Symphony in C major with a rather uninspired reading by Mr. Leinsdorf, in which much of the beauty was lost because of over-strict time and over-loud playing.

The conductor finally managed to tone down the orchestral sound after the second movement, but during that movement with its lovely recurring theme there was disappointingly little preparation for that theme by diminuendo or ritardando thereby making everything equally unimportant.

In the third movement, a sort of fast Viennese waltz in 6/8 time, the conducter looked ready to take off for a flying waltz around the auditorium. In fact Mr. Leinsdorf's posturings were very distracting, at times grotesque and especially odd when his motions failed to elicit the response obviously signalled. However, the 3rd and 4th movements were quite lovely despite the lack of nuance to be found in the Schubert to raise it above the mundane.

After the intermission a rather unassuming young man with close-cropped light bushy hair and towering head and shoulders above the conductor strolled over to the piano and, after quite a wait for the audience to quiet down, proceeded to play the over-familiar and quite hackneyed Grieg Piano Concerto in A minor Op. 16.

Mr. Cliburn certainly plays beautifully for as young a man as he is, but the Grieg is hardly a test for judging how fine a pianist he is. It will be surprising if he is nearly as good as his publicity, but I hope for a better opportunty to form an opinion this Friday at Saratoga where he will play Brahms.

In the Grieg, however, his large hands and strong long fingers encountered no difficulty in the octaves, runs and very fast passages, and he showed a very good grasp of the style and content of the piece. Mr. Leinsdorf held the orchestra in check a bit too much and was thrown off on a few entrances by the soloist's sudden liberties in tempo at bad moments.

The Boston Symphony is, of course, one of the outstanding orchestras of the world, but it left something to be desired on Sunday.

PRESS
THOMPSONVILLE, CONN.
CIRC. 7,450

JUL 20 1967 New England Newsclip

YWCA Sponsors Tanglewood Trip

The YWCA of the Hartford Region, Inc. will sponsor a trip to the Tanglewood Music Festival in Lenox, Mass. on July 30.

The group will attend the Sunday afternoon concert which will consist of Webern's Six Pieces, Opus 9; Schubert's Symphony No. 9 (Unfinished) and Grieg's Piano Concerto No. 1. The concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be conducted by Erich Leinsdorf. Guest pianist will be Van Cliburn.

Thompsonville and Enfield women — and their husbands — are invited to join the party, which leaves by chartered bus at noon from the YWCA central headquarters, 262 Ann Street, Hartford. Participants are urged to take a picnic lunch and eat it on the Tanglewood grounds.

Following the afternoon concert, the group will stop at the Blackberry River Inn for dinner, and then return to Hartford around 8 p.m.

Cost of the day's outing, including transportation, concert ticket and dinner, is $14. Those who are not YWCA members will be asked to join.

Reservations and additional information may be obtained by calling the YWCA at 525-1163.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Monday, July 31, 1967

Van Cliburn Receives Ovation at Tanglewood

By ROBERT BARBER

Van Cliburn, the phenom who in his early 20s took Russia by storm, and later the United States with his genius at the piano, did the same thing Sunday afternoon at Tanglewood.

But there was a difference. More than 12,000 people turned out to hear the young fluffy-haired master play Greig's Piano Concerto in A-Minor.

He played it well, but why he close that particular number remains a mystery. Any moment, those listening expected a soft, velvety voice to announce "Last time, Mary was saying to Bill. It's about time John's other wife." . . .

The outstanding number of the afternoon was Schubert's Symphony in C-Major and that's hardly what the huge crowd came to hear.

VAN CLIBURN

Under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, the Boston Symphony Orchestra was its usual perfection.

Last season, Cliburn drew 14,000 people to the Berkshire festival and more at Saratoga, where he is scheduled to appear later this week.

Those unfamiliar with Grieg would recognize the music because most of the soap operas have used the main theme on radio and television for years.

Cliburn's selection, therefore, disappointed many, but parts of the concerto, not so familiar, again proved he is indeed a splendid pianist.

His youth and vigor have splendi dpianist.

stunned box-office people since he intrigued Russia in 1959, and other than the familiar portions of the concerto, Cliburn's choice couldn't have been better. Grieg composed the concerto when he was in his 20s — as is Cilbrun — and he composed it wihle he was on his honeymoon.

Cliburn captured the bold and sweeping rhythm and folk-like melody. He even managed to catch the nationalistic flavor Grieg was adjusting to at the time.

Aside from the soap-opera implications of the concerto, it carries with it the exhilarating mountain air of Norway and the pungent aromas of that country's great pine forests.

The huge crowd kept Cliburn bowing for ten minutes after he had finished, and he was obviously delighted with the reception.

He may have felt something like Franz Liszt when he first heard it and promptly fell in love with the composition.

The threatening weather may have kept the crowd down, but at the shed the sun was shining and the temperature was in the 90s.

Besides Schubert and Grieg, Leinsdorf conducted the orchestra in Webern's Six Pieecs for Orchestra, which delighted the audience.

Next Friday, William Steinberg will conduct the orchestra in an all Beethoven concert including Number Eight; Piano Concerto Number Three with Theodore Lettvin and Symphony Number Five.

Saturday, Leinsdorf will again take the baton for Beethoven's Opera "Fidelio" and on Sunday an all Brahms program will include "Academic Festival Overture;" Symphony Number Three and the Violin Concerto with Joseph Silverstein.

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350

JUL 31 1967 New England Newsclip

At Tanglewood

Nimble Van Cliburn Departs From Typical Concert Form

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — Well, Van Cliburn has been here, and the season at Tanglewood for his fans has ended. For the rest of us there are nine more concerts, including a couple of big ones . . . like Beethoven's "Fidelio" and Verdi's "Requiem."

Romantic Exercise

He played for 12,185 listeners Grieg's pro-piano Concerto in A Minor, Op. 16, a highly romantic exercise in digital dexterity which has a few nice sections . . . nice enough to justify paying attention.

The middle movement is pleasant, and there is a section in the middle of the final movement which also is nice. And there are a couple of exciting moments when the orchestra and the pianist and conductor swap sudden full chords and quick, gleaming silences.

Surprisingly, Cliburn's interest in the proceedings didn't seem to be strong. I had a strong feeling that his vaunted affinity for the big, grand manner was lacking. He reached up to it a bit during the cadenza of the first movement, but otherwise he seemed to be softening and rhapsodizing the music's usual expansiveness.

Finish Is Quiet

The middle movement, consequently, was intimate, introspective, gentle. It was much more convincing than the bravura of the first and third movements.

It may be that his fans sensed the softening also, even though they applauded between every movement (as they did for the four-movement Schubert symphony which preceded intermission). There were no shouts of approval at the finish either, which was a surprise.

But I don't wish to downgrade the performance too much. It was a romantic showpiece with some of the showiness taken from it, and those sections which have solid musical worth beyond showiness were performed beautifully.

It just wasn't typical Van Cliburn.

Orchestra Superb

But those Cliburn fans who paid attention to the orchestra before intermission heard superb performances of Webern's "Six Pieces for Orchestra" and Schubert's Symphony in C. Major.

Both works are considerably more important and durable, musically, than the Grieg concerto because they have music in them and provide more points of interest in repeated hearings.

The Schubert symphony, well known, was big and powerful where it needed to be as in the finale and gay and charming to a degree far beyond what might be reasonably expected from a composer who was ill and poverty stricken.

Leinsdorf's Best

This is the sort of music Leinsdorf does best, I think. He made the beautiful melodies sway pliantly, kept the phrases well defined, tied the parts into structural unity and kept the package moving with infectious momentum.

It is true, also, that a case could be built to contend that Webern's "Six Pieces" was the most important work on the program. To be sure, it is probably the most influential. Webern's instrumental inventions of 60 years ago are the well-spring from which most of contemporary serialism comes.

The "Six Pieces," as such, already are 20th-century classics and they sound better to me every time I hear them.

Lace-Like Sounds

They require the whole orchestra, but most of the time only a handful of players are at work and the sounds they make are among the most beautifully delicate in the orchestral spectrum.

Sunday afternoon under Leinsdorf's direction, they were as fragile as a spider's web or a soap bubble . . . too elusive to touch. They were, in a word, wondrous.

The weekend's attendance was 26,674, the largest weekend so far this season.

Next weekend the schedule calls for William Steinberg to guest conduct an all-Beethoven program Friday night, for Leinsdorf to lead a concert version of the 1805 score, the first of Beethoven's "Fidelio," Saturday night and for Leinsdorf to lead an all-Brahms program Sunday afternoon.

Virtuosi In Vacillation

By Peter M. Knapp

LENOX — Van Cliburn, dean of the pink-cheeked American hussars who rode into Moscow and made off with Tschaikovsky competition acclaim, still is big box-office.

His appearance Sunday at Tanglewood with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Erich Leinsdorf attracted 12,185 on a sultry afternoon. Also in evidence were some Anti-Vietnam war pickets. Outside the east gate, a small group carried signs advising, "Make Music, Not War."

Cliburn's performance of the Grieg Piano Concerto in A minor, however, turned out to be ho-hum. It lacked much continuity, seemed awkward at times, sloppy at others. The erstwhile war horse of piano concertos — it hasn't been in circulation much lately — finally finished a tired nag.

Spots Without Sun

At times Cliburn did illuminate the proceedings with his gift for lyric cantabile, and there were flashes of his big, sturdy technique. But he frankly seemed out of touch with the Grieg score, despite the rubber-necking and the cheers of the audience.

What really was in tune was Franz Schubert's Symphony in C major. Leinsdorf and his shirt-sleeved musicians gave it a reading that by turns was gracious, soothingly lyric and triumphant. This came after Anton Webern's pace-setting Six Pieces for Orchestra, written 48 years ago but still bearing the imprint of musical daring. It's a long trip from the Schoenbergian "row" of Webern to Schubert's C major.

Webern's piquant orchestral effects stretch instrumental resources. While the odd sonorities of themselves create a remarkable atmosphere, there is also the severe discipline of the score and its brevity to admire.

After this challenge to the ears from Webern (a comparison with the Grieg concerto would be devastating), Schubert's sunny symphony invites relaxation. It speaks a lovely melodic language, and its scoring is mellifluous. A perfect symphony for a sunny summer afternoon, and in a performance by the Bostonians that let all its joyous qualities bloom.

Czech Night

Saturday night's conductor was Rafael Kubelik, who led the Bostonians during the winter season in Symphony Hall and made his Tanglewood debut this weekend. Kubelik is music director of the Bavarian Radio Orchestra in Munich and has guest conducted many of the world's great orchestras.

On a steamy evening, the Czech-born maestro won his audience of 8,668 with a splendid reading of "The Moldau" tone peom by his fellow countryman, Bedrich Smetana. Although this is among the most familiar of Bohemian compositions, Kubelik made it sound refreshingly different.

He has an impressive way of handling rhythms, and of giving phrases life and impulse. Variously-weighted accentings help provide the pulse — very effectively used in the main theme. Kubelik is also fond of crescendo-decrescendo swells in phrases, which give them an added surge. In Kubelik's interpretation, Smetana's depiction of the river Moldau thus had buoyancy and a sense of motion that unmistakeably evoked flowing water.

Another of Kubelik's characteristics is his varying orchestral sound. The delicacy of the strings in Smetana's majestic "Moldau" theme, or the vivid colors of the stormy section were good examples.

Sir Edward Elgar's Violin Concerto in B minor came out of Boston Symphony retirement in a passionate performance by the Israeli violinist Shmel Ashkenasi. The concerto hasn't been played by the orchestra for 33 years.

It is a long work, difficult to sustain at its level of emotion and poetry. In portions of the finale, the accompaniment began to droop.

But not Ashkenasi, who played magnificently and with complete commitment. He is not a "big" player in terms of overwhelming the stage with robust tone and eloquent flourishes — so much the better for his playing of the Elgar concerto. Rather, he concentrated on musical finesse, on expression.

One Man's Kudos

His playing of the andante movement was poetic and moving. Equally noble was his rhapsodic treatment of the long monologue the soloist has in the last movement, with Elgar's eerie accompaniment of strummed strings. Throughout, Ashkenasi's tone was husky and light — not a soaring "open" sound, but rather throaty and throbbing with vibrato.

Toward the last few pages, the soloist snapped a string. But he missed nothing, quickly switched instruments with concertmaster Joseph Silverstein during a break in the solo part, and finished on top of the score.

After this, Brahms Symphony No. 4 was an anti-climax. Here, Kubelik's desire to shape certain phrases his own way and to firmly place accents resulted in a certain fragmentation of the first movement. Instead of a continuous line, there were a series of episodic periods of increasing tension and relaxation. The scherzo had real rhythmic muscle and the slow movement its moments of rich Brahmsian sound.

VAN CLIBURN
. . . Tanglewood tangle

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 SUN. 122,607

JUL 30 1967

What's Happening in the Arts

AT THE THEATERS

The hit comedy "Luv" will be given its third and final presentation in the area this week with the Mickey Rooney production scheduled to open at the Colonie Summer Theater Tuesday. Dorothy Loudon and Ronnie Graham are the co-stars in the play about the eternal triangle.

At Williamstown Tuesday, an exclusive release makes it possible for the group to present Lillian Hellman's "The Little Foxes." This play is due to open the 1967 season of New York's Lincoln Center Repertory Theater.

Pirandello will be given another airing Tuesday when the Woodstock Playhouse offers "Six Characters In Search of an Author." This is the centenial year of the playwright's birth.

Meanwhile at the Berkshire Theater Festival, the new Lewis John Carlino play, "The Exercise," opens for its second week Tuesday. This production stars Anne Jackson and Lou Antonio in the two-character play.

Wednesday marks the opening of the third play on the Albany Arena Theater's schedule. This production is George Bernard Shaw's first play, "Widower's Houses," and will be directed by James M. Leonard.

A musical, "School for Husbands" opens a two-week run at the Cooperstown Playhouse Tuesday. This is one of four musicals to be done by the theater in its eight-play season.

IN MUSIC

The New York City Ballet concludes it second season at the Saratoga Performing Arts Center tonight at 8:30 with a program composed of "La Somnambula," "Episodes," "Tarantella" and "Raymonda Variations." On Monday evening the SPAC chamber music series will feature the Berkshire Boys Choir in a special free concert at the Casino in Congress Park.

The second half of the 1967 season begins on Thursday evening when the Philadelphia Orchestra under conductor Eugene Ormandy returns to its permanent summer home. Pianist Van Cliburn, fresh from this afternoon's Tanglewood concert, will be guest solist for the opening concert play Rachmaninoff's Concerto No. 2. Also on the program are Bach's Tocatta and Fuge in D minor and Sibelius' Symphony No. 2 in D major.

Van Cliburn will also be soloist on Friday evening playing Brahms' Concerto No. 2 in B flat major for Piano and Orchestra. Stanislaw Skrowaczewski will conduct this all-Brahms program including his "Tragic Overture" and Symphony No. 3 in F major. Charles Munch will conduct the orchestra on Saturday evening in Berlioz' Symphonie Fantastique, Ravel's Suite No. 2 from "Daphne and Chloe" and Ravel's Concerto in G major for Piano and Orchestra. Niocle Henriot-Scheitzer will be soloist.

All programs begin at 8:30 p.m. Inside seats for the Van Cliburn performances are sold out but there is lawn space for all performances.

The Lake George Opera Company will premiere its production of Puccini's "Tosca" at the Queensbury High School in Glens Falls at 8:15 Thursday evening. It will be repeated Saturday. Their new production of Mozart's "The Marriage of Figaro" will be given in a student matinee at 2:15 on Monday. Verdi's "La Traviata" will be presented Tuesday evening.

The Berkshire String Quartet will perform this afternoon in the Maverick Concent Hall in Woodstock at 3:00. Tickets are sold at the door.

The Ninth Annual Festival of Baroque Music closes today at College Hall on the Skidmore campus in Saratoga. The Festival Chamber Orchestra will be conducted by August Wenzinger. Tickets are available at the door. Concert begins at 5:30 p.m.

The Beaux Arts Trio will be featured at the Boathouse on Schroon Lake by the Adirondack and Champlain Music Festival at 8:30 this evening.

Geraldine M. Wells will present an organ recital at 12:15 Friday in St. Peter's Episcopal Church. The public is invited.

Pianist Van Cliburn will close Tanglewood's fifth week of the season this afternoon with Grieg's Piano Concerto. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Cliburn's performance is expected to draw one of the biggest audiences of the season if the weather holds pleasant.

Next Friday at Tanglewood, William Steinberg will conduct the orchestra in an all-Beethoven program. It will include Symphony No. 8; Piano Concerto No. 3 with Theodore Lettvin; and Symphony No. 5. The program begins at 9 p.m. with a prelude at 7 p.m.

Saturday at 8 p.m., Leinsdorf again takes the baton for Beethoven's opera Fidelio featuring Tom Krause, baritone; George Shirley, tenor; Hanne-Lore Khuse, soprano; Mary Ellen Pracht, soprano; the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus.

Next Sunday, Leinsdorf will present an all-Brahms program including the Academic Festival Overture, Symphony No. 3 and the Violin Concerto featuring Joseph Silverstein.

Tuesday, the Berkshire Music Center Chamber Music Concert will feature Roman Totenburg, violinist and Igor Kipnis, harpsichord at 8 p.m. in the theatre. Thursday, a Friend's Event of Baroque Music is scheduled at the same time in the theatre.

Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival at Lee, Mass., opens its sixth week with Solveig Oestergaard and Niels Kehlet of the Royal Danish Ballet and Olatunji and Company, African dancers, musicians and singers.

The Danish couple will perform "Don Quixote" and "Flower Festival at Genzano," pas de deux.

The program will run Tuesday through Saturday with matinees Thursday, Friday and Saturday at 3 p.m. Evening performances begin at 8:40.

Today at 3:30 p.m. the Southern Vermont Art Center will present the Pacific String Trio and next Sunday, the Lake George Opera Co. will be there for a performance of "La Traviata."

Music Mountain at Falls River, Conn., will present Benny Goodman and his daughter in a program of chamber music next Saturday afternoon at 3.

BACK AT SPAC—Eugene Ormandy, who brings his Philadelphia Orchestra to the Saratoga Performing Arts Center Thursday night for the opening of its second season in its permanent summer home.

JOURNAL
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,500

AUG 3 1967

New England Newsclip

TANGLEWOOD, FRIDAY
By J. W. & E. G. D.

It was Czech night at Tanglewood on Friday. Rafael Kubelik, a native Czech, led the Boston Symphony elegantly and smoothly through a program which included Bohuslav Marinu's Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani a work celebrating the courage of the Czech people in the years just prior to the Second World War. Despite the distinctly 20th century harmonies, this work bears a marked resemblance to the Czech composer, Smetana, who lived a century earlier. The piano solo was well handled by Charles Wilson, recently appointed assistant conductor of the orchestra.

Kubelik's talents, however, do not end with his obvious sympathy with Czech compositions. He conducted the Haydn Symphony in B-flat major as if he were in an 18th century London recital hall rather than the vast reaches of the Music Shed. The Franck Symphony in D minor was directed with apparent recollection that Franck was primarily an organist. It had the legato touch of the expert and climaxes with the full-bodied tone of a great organ.

Unfortunately, we missed the weekend prelude due to the immoderate rains of the afternoon and early evening.

TANGLEWOOD, SATURDAY
By A. C. S.

Rafael Kubelik began his second concert as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony with a perennial favorite by his countryman, Smetana: the Symphonic Poem, The Moldau. It was a compassionate reading, rhythmic and flowing.

The second work was a resurrection of Elgar's Violin Concerto in B minor with Samuel Ashkenasi as soloist. Inclusion of this piece must have been a tongue-in-cheek acknowledgement of "high camp" which seems to be the vogue at the moment. Admittedly, it provides a showcase for the violinist, but as music it is an overblown compendium of every cliche of the late nineteenth century. As such, it was given a performance attentive to every detail of crescendo, diminuendo, and rubato. Both Ashkenasi and the orchestra worked diligently to make the most of the concerto and were warmly applauded at the close of each movement.

Brahms' Fourth Symphony started sluggishly but gained momentum as the work evolved. Mr. Kubelik has a very personal interpretation of this symphony regarding tempos and the highlighting of inner voices. One may not agree with all of it, but he made his views convincing.

TANGLEWOOD SUNDAY
By E. M.

Mr. Leinsdorf's Sunday concert was a survey of three major symphonic styles: the classically formal 18th-Century Schubert's C-Major, actually introduced in the 19th Century; the soaring romantic Grieg's Piano Concerto in A-Minor and the demanding, cerebral, 12-tone explorations of Webern's Six Pieces for Orchestra.

The short, introspective Webern set was over before the huge audience had settled, indeed, it never really settled! Notable were the haunting moods of the second and sixth pieces, with their amalgam of chimes, tympani, muted strings and oboe; and the shattering conclusion of the marcia funebre.

The Schubert is a strong conductor's symphony, and Mr. Leinsdorf was in fine form. High points here were the forceful trio of the Scherzo, when the symphony truly came to life; and the delicate fuguing and joyful bravura brass of the finale.

The audience, however, had come for Mr. Cliburn, even though too many came late and many others broke the continuity of the concerto with sustained applause after the first movement. The music sweeps in every direction, moved more by passion than plan, and Mr. Cliburn was at his exciting best in the emotional passages rather than the lyric interludes. His great solo in the opening Allegro and his intense feeling for the music throughout captured his audience as they came to be captured, and drew tumultuous cheers at the finale.

37

Virtuosi In Vacillation

By Peter M. Knapp

LENOX — Van Cliburn, dean of the pink-cheeked American hussars who rode into Moscow and made off with Tschaikovsky competition acclaim, still is big box-office.

His appearance Sunday at Tanglewood with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Erich Leinsdorf attracted 12,185 on a sultry afternoon. Also in evidence were some Anti-Vietnam war pickets. Outside the east gate, a small group carried signs advising, "Make Music, Not War."

Cliburn's performance of the Grieg Piano Concerto in A minor, however, turned out to be ho-hum. It lacked much continuity, seemed awkward at times, sloppy at others. The erstwhile war horse of piano concertos — it hasn't been in circulation much lately — finally finished a tired nag.

Spots Without Sun

At times Cliburn did illuminate the proceedings with his gift for lyric cantabile, and there were flashes of his big, sturdy technique. But he frankly seemed out of touch with the Grieg score, despite the rubber-necking and the cheers of the audience.

What really was in tune was Franz Schubert's Symphony in C major. Leinsdorf and his shirt-sleeved musicians gave it a reading that by turns was gracious, soothingly lyric and triumphant. This came after Anton Webern's pace-setting Six Pieces for Orchestra, written 48 years ago but still bearing the imprint of musical daring. It's a long trip from the Schoenbergian "row" of Webern to Schubert's C major.

Webern's piquant orchestral effects stretch instrumental resources. While the odd sonorities of themselves create a remarkable atmosphere, there is also the severe discipline of the score and its brevity to admire.

After this challenge to the ears from Webern (a comparison with the Grieg concerto would be devastating), Schubert's sunny symphony invites relaxation. It speaks a lovely melodic language, and its scoring is mellifluous. A perfect symphony for a sunny summer afternoon, and in a performance by the Bostonians that let all its joyous qualities bloom.

Czech Night

Saturday night's conductor was Rafael Kubelik, who led the Bostonians during the winter season in Symphony Hall and made his Tanglewood debut this weekend. Kubelik is music director of the Bavarian Radio Orchestra in Munich and has guest conducted many of the world's great orchestras.

On a steamy evening, the Czech-born maestro won his audience of 8,668 with a splendid reading of "The Moldau" tone peom by his fellow countryman, Bedrich Smetana. Although this is among the most familiar of Bohemian compositions, Kubelik made it sound refreshingly different.

He has an impressive way of handling rhythms, and of giving phrases life and impulse. Variously-weighted accentings help provide the pulse — very effectively used in the main theme. Kubelik is also fond of crescendo-decrescendo swells in phrases, which give them an added surge. In Kubelik's interpretation, Smetana's depiction of the river Moldau thus had buoyancy and a sense of motion that unmistakeably evoked flowing water.

Another of Kubelik's characteristics is his varying orchestral sound. The delicacy of the strings in Smetana's majestic "Moldau" theme, or the vivid colors of the stormy section were good examples.

Sir Edward Elgar's Violin Concerto in B minor came out of Boston Symphony retirement in a passionate performance by the Israeli violinist Shmel Ashkenasi. The concerto hasn't been played by the orchestra for 33 years.

It is a long work, difficult to sustain at its level of emotion and poetry. In portions of the finale, the accompaniment began to droop.

But not Ashkenasi, who played magnificently and with complete commitment. He is not a "big" player in terms of overwhelming the stage with robust tone and eloquent flourishes — so much the better for his playing of the Elgar concerto. Rather, he concentrated on musical finesse, on expression.

One Man's Kudos

His playing of the andante movement was poetic and moving. Equally noble was his rhapsodic treatment of the long monologue the soloist has in the last movement, with Elgar's eerie accompaniment of strummed strings. Throughout, Ashkenasi's tone was husky and light — not a soaring "open" sound, but rather throaty and throbbing with vibrato.

Toward the last few pages, the soloist snapped a string. But he missed nothing, quickly switched instruments with concertmaster Joseph Silverstein during a break in the solo part, and finished on top of the score.

After this, Brahms Symphony No. 4 was an anti-climax. Here, Kubelik's desire to shape certain phrases his own way and to firmly place accents resulted in a certain fragmentation of the first movement. Instead of a continuous line, there were a series of episodic periods of increasing tension and relaxation. The scherzo had real rhythmic muscle and the slow movement its moments of rich Brahmsian sound.

VAN CLIBURN
. . . Tanglewood tangle

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,618 SUN. 122,607

JUL 30 1967

What's Happening in the Arts

AT THE THEATERS

The hit comedy "Luv" will be given its third and final presentation in the area this week with the Mickey Rooney production scheduled to open at the Colonie Summer Theater Tuesday. Dorothy Loudon and Ronnie Graham are the co-stars in the play about the eternal triangle.

At Williamstown Tuesday, an exclusive release makes it possible for the group to present Lillian Hellman's "The Little Foxes." This play is due to open the 1967 season of New York's Lincoln Center Repertory Theater.

Pirandello will be given another airing Tuesday when the Woodstock Playhouse offers "Six Characters In Search of an Author." This is the centenial year of the playwright's birth.

Meanwhile at the Berkshire Theater Festival, the new Lewis John Carlino play, "The Exercise," opens for its second week Tuesday. This production stars Anne Jackson and Lou Antonio in the two-character play.

Wednesday marks the opening of the third play on the Albany Arena Theater's schedule. This production is George Bernard Shaw's first play, "Widower's Houses," and will be directed by James M. Leonard.

A musical, "School for Husbands" opens a two-week run at the Cooperstown Playhouse Tuesday. This is one of four musicals to be done by the theater in its eight-play season.

IN MUSIC

The New York City Ballet concludes it second season at the Saratoga Performing Arts Center tonight at 8:30 with a program composed of "La Sonnambula," "Episodes," "Tarantella" and "Raymonda Variations." On Monday evening the SPAC chamber music series will feature the Berkshire Boys Choir in a special free concert at the Casino in Congress Park.

The second half of the 1967 season begins on Thursday evening when the Philadelphia Orchestra under conductor Eugene Ormandy returns to its permanent summer home. Pianist Van Cliburn, fresh from this afternoon's Tanglewood concert, will be guest solist for the opening concert play Rachmaninoff's Concerto No. 2. Also on the program are Bach's Tocatta and Fuge in D minor and Sibelius' Symphony No. 2 in D major.

Van Cliburn will also be soloist on Friday evening playing Brahms' Concerto No. 2 in B flat major for Piano and Orchestra. Stanislaw Skrowaczewski will conduct this all-Brahms program including his "Tragic Overture" and Symphony No. 3 in F major. Charles Murch will conduct the orchestra on Saturday evening in Berlioz' Symphonie Fantastique, Ravel's Suite No. 2 from "Daphne and Chloe" and Ravel's Concerto in G major for Piano and Orchestra. Niocle Henriot-Scheitzer will be soloist.

All programs begin at 8:30 p.m. Inside seats for the Van Cliburn performances are sold out but there is lawn space for all performances.

BACK AT SPAC—Eugene Ormandy, who brings his Philadelphia Orchestra to the Saratoga Performing Arts Center Thursday night for the opening of its second season in its permanent summer home.

The Lake George Opera Company will premiere its production of Puccini's "Tosca" at the Queensbury High School in Glens Falls at 8:15 Thursday evening. It will be repeated Saturday. Their new production of Mozart's "The Marriage of Figaro" will be given in a student matinee at 2:15 on Monday. Verdi's "La Traviata" will be presented Tuesday evening.

The Berkshire String Quartet will perform this afternoon in the Maverick Concent Hall in Woodstock at 3:00. Tickets are sold at the door.

The Ninth Annual Festival of Baroque Music closes today at College Hall on the Skidmore campus in Saratoga. The Festival Chamber Orchestra will be conducted by August Wenzinger. Tickets are available at the door. Concert begins at 5:30 p.m.

The Beaux Arts Trio will be featured at the Boathouse on Schroon Lake by the Adirondack and Champlain Music Festival at 8:30 this evening.

Geraldine M. Wells will present an organ recital at 12:15 Friday in St. Peter's Episcopal Church. The public is invited.

Pianist Van Cliburn will close Tanglewood's fifth week of the season this afternoon with Grieg's Piano Concerto. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Cliburn's performance is expected to draw one of the biggest audiences of the season if the weather holds pleasant.

Next Friday at Tanglewood, William Steinberg will conduct the orchestra in an all-Beethoven program. It will include Symphony No. 8; Piano Concerto No. 3 with Theodore Lettvin; and Symphony No. 5. The program begins at 9 p.m. with a prelude at 7 p.m.

Saturday at 8 p.m., Leinsdorf again takes the baton for Beethoven's opera Fidelio featuring Tom Krause, baritone; George Shirley, tenor; Hanne-Lore Khuse, soprano; Mary Ellen Pracht, soprano; the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus.

Next Sunday, Leinsdorf will present an all-Brahms program including the Academic Festival Overture, Symphony No. 3 and the Violin Concerto featuring Joseph Silverstein.

Tuesday, the Berkshire Music Center Chamber Music Concert will feature Roman Totenburg, violinist and Igor Kipnis, harpsichord at 8 p.m. in the theatre. Thursday, a Friend's Event of Baroque Music is scheduled at the same time in the theatre.

Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival at Lee, Mass., opens its sixth week with Solveig Oestergaard and Niels Kehlet of the Royal Danish Ballet and Olatunji and Company, African dancers, musicians and singers.

The Danish couple will perform "Don Quixote" and "Flower Festival at Genzano," pas de deux.

The program will run Tuesday through Saturday with matinees Thursday, Friday and Saturday at 3 p.m. Evening performances begin at 8:40.

Today at 3:30 p.m. the Southern Vermont Art Center will present the Pacific String Trio and next Sunday, the Lake George Opera Co. will be there for a performance of "La Traviata."

Music Mountain at Falls River, Conn., will present Benny Goodman and his daughter in a program of chamber music next Saturday afternoon at 3.

JOURNAL
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,500

AUG 3 1967

New England Newsclip

TANGLEWOOD, FRIDAY
By J. W. & E. G. D.

It was Czech night at Tanglewood on Friday. Rafael Kubelik, a native Czech, led the Boston Symphony elegantly and smoothly through a program which included Bohuslav Marinu's Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani a work celebrating the courage of the Czech people in the years just prior to the Second World War. Despite the distinctly 20th century harmonies, this work bears a marked resemblance to the Czech composer, Smetana, who lived a century earlier. The piano solo was well handled by Charles Wilson, recently appointed assistant conductor of the orchestra.

Kubelik's talents, however, do not end with his obvious sympathy with Czech compositions. He conducted the Haydn Symphony in B-flat major as if he were in an 18th century London recital hall rather than the vast reaches of the Music Shed. The Franck Symphony in D minor was directed with apparent recollection that Franck was primarily an organist. It had the legato touch of the expert and climaxes with the full-bodied tone of a great organ.

Unfortunately, we missed the weekend prelude due to the immoderate rains of the afternoon and early evening.

TANGLEWOOD, SATURDAY
By A. C. S.

Rafael Kubelik began his second concert as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony with a perennial favorite by his countryman, Smetana: the Symphonic Poem, The Moldau. It was a compassionate reading, rhythmic and flowing.

The second work was a resurrection of Elgar's Violin Concerto in B minor with Samuel Ashkenasi as soloist. Inclusion of this piece must have been a tongue-in-cheek acknowledgement of "high camp" which seems to be the vogue at the moment. Admittedly, it provides a showcase for the violinist, but as music it is an overblown compendium of every cliche of the late nineteenth century. As such, it was given a performance attentive to every detail of crescendo, diminuendo, and rubato. Both Ashkenasi and the orchestra worked diligently to make the most of the concerto and were warmly applauded at the close of each movement.

Brahms' Fourth Symphony started sluggishly but gained momentum as the work evolved. Mr. Kubelik has a very personal interpretation of this symphony regarding tempos and the highlighting of inner voices. One may not agree with all of it, but he made his views convincing.

TANGLEWOOD SUNDAY
By E. M.

Mr. Leinsdorf's Sunday concert was a survey of three major symphonic styles: the classically formal 18th-Century Schubert's C-Major, actually introduced in the 19th Century; the soaring romantic Grieg's Piano Concerto in A-Minor and the demanding, cerebral, 12-tone explorations of Webern's Six Pieces for Orchestra.

The short, introspective Webern set was over before the huge audience had settled, indeed, it never really settled! Notable were the haunting moods of the second and sixth pieces, with their amalgam of chimes, tympani, muted strings and oboe; and the shattering conclusion of the marcia funebre.

The Schubert is a strong conductor's symphony, and Mr. Leinsdorf was in fine form. High points here were the forceful trio of the Scherzo, when the symphony truly came to life; and the delicate fuguing and joyful bravura brass of the finale.

The audience, however, had come for Mr. Cliburn, even though too many came late and many others broke the continuity of the concerto with sustained applause after the first movement. The music sweeps in every direction, moved more by passion than plan, and Mr. Cliburn was at his exciting best in the emotional passages rather than the lyric interludes. His great solo in the opening Allegro and his intense feeling for the music throughout captured his audience as they came to be captured, and drew tumultuous cheers at the finale.

38

NEWS (e)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 98,600

JUL 28 1967

New England Newsclip

Original Version of Beethoven's Fidelio

Next Week at Tanglewood

Three concerts of music by Beethoven and Brahms will be highlighted by a performance Saturday evening, Aug. 5, at 8 p.m., of the original 1805 version of Beethoven's Fidelio for the sixth week of Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood in Lenox.

The original version of the Fidelio has many distinct differences from the opera usually seen on the stage. The overture of the original version is the Overture we know today as the Leonore No. 2. The final scene is entirely different from the one we are familiar with, and throughout the work there are extensive changes. The original score is looked upon as vocally and musically more demanding than the later score which places greater emphasis on drama.

The soloists for the evening will be Hanne-Lore Kuhse, soprano; George Shirley, tenor; Tom Krause, baritone; Mary Ellen Pracht, soprano; Ara Berberian, bass; Nico Castel, tenor; and Harold Enns, baritone. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has prepared the combined forces of the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus for this performance.

On Friday evening, Aug. 4, at 9 p.m., William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra and principal guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Beethoven program. The program will consist of the Symphonies No. 8 and No. 5 and the Piano Concerto No. 3 for which Theodore Lettvin will be piano soloist.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude, a lieder recital by Hanne-Lore Kuhse, at 7 p.m.

The Sunday afternoon concert at 2:30 p.m., Aug. 6, will have a program of music by Brahms. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony in the Academic Festival Overture, the Symphony No. 3 and the Violin Concerto for which Joseph Silverstein will be soloist.

The Berkshire Festival Chamber Music Concert on Tuesday at 8 p.m. will feature Roman Totenberg, violin, and Igor Kipnis, harpsichord in recital.

The regular open rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held Aug. 5 at 10:30 a.m.

Information on all Tanglewood events may be obtained by writing Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, 01240.

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 50,766

JUL 31 1967

Beethoven and Brahms On Score at Tanglewood

Music of Beethoven and Brahms will be included in the three weekend programs of the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood Friday through Sunday.

* * *

Guest conductor William Steinberg will conduct the Friday 9 p.m. program and Erich Leinsdorf the Saturday 8 p.m. and Sunday 2:30 p.m. programs.

Steinburg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra and principal guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic, will conduct an all-Beethoven program. Included will be the Symphonies numbers 8 and 5 and the "Piano Concerto number 3" with Theodore Lettvin as soloist.

The traditional Weekend Prelude at 7 p.m. will feature a lieder recital by Hanne-Lore Kuhse.

The original 1805 version of Beethoven's "Fidelio" will be featured by Leinsdorf of Saturday evening. Soloists will be Miss Kuhse, soprano; George Shirley, tenor; Tom Krause, baritone; Mary Ellen Pracht, soprano; Ara Berberian, bass; Nico Castel, tenor; and Harold Enns, baritone. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has prepared the combined forces of the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus for the performance.

* * *

The original version of "Fidelio" has many differences from the opera usually seen on the stage. The overture of the original version is the overture we know today as the "Leonore number 2." The final scene is entirely different from the one we are familiar with and throughout the work there are extensive changes. The original score is looked upon as vocally and musically more demanding than the later score, which places greater emphasis on drama.

Leinsdorf will conduct the Sunday afternoon program featuring Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein as the soloist in the Brahms "Violin Concerto" and including the "Symphony number 3" and the "Academic Festival Overture."

* * *

The regular open rehearsal of the orchestra for the benefit of the Symphony's Pension Fund will be held in the Shed Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

Information and tickets for all Tanglewood events may be obtained by writing the Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., 01240.

SUNDAY REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 115,950

JUL 30 1967

New England Newsclip

Will Be Soloist

Theodore Lettvin will be soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, William Steinberg conducting for the Beethoven Piano Concerto No. 3. Mr. Steinberg will also conduct the orchestra in performances of the Beethoven Symphonies No. 5 and No. 8.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SARATOGA SARATOGIAN
Tuesday, August 1, 1967

1805 Version of Beethoven's Fidelio To Be Presented at Berkshire Festival

Three concerts of music by Beethoven and Brahms will be highlighted by a performance Saturday at 8 p.m. of the original 1805 version of Beethoven's Fidelio for the sixth week of Berkshire Festival concerts.

The original version of the Fidelio has many distinct differences from the opera usually seen on the stage. The overture of the original version is the Overture known today as the Leonore No. 2. The final scene is entirely different from the one present-day listeners are familiar with, and throughout the work there are extensive changes. The original score is looked upon as vocally and musically more demanding than the later score which places greater emphasis on drama.

Soloists

The soloists for the evening will be Hanne-Lore Kuhse, soprano; George Shirley, tenor; Tom Krause, baritone; Mary Ellen Pracht, soprano; Ara Berberian, bass; Nico Castel, tenor, and Harold Enns, baritone. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has prepared the combined forces of the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus for this performance.

On Friday at 9 p.m. William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra and principal guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Beethoven program. The program will consist of the Symphonies No. 8 and No. 5 and the Piano Concerto No. 3, for which Theodore Lettvin will be piano soloist.

Lieder Recital

The Friday concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude at 7 p.m., a lieder recital by Hanne-Lore Kuhse.

The Sunday afternoon concert at 2:30 will have a program of music by Brahms. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony in the Academic Festival Overture, the Symphony No. 3 and the Violin Concerto, for which Joseph Silverstein will be soloist.

The Berkshire Festival Chamber Music Concert on tonight 8 will feature Roman Totenberg, violin, and Igor Kipnis, harpsichord in recital.

The regular open rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM (e)
HOLYOKE, MASS.
CIRC. 26,950

JUL 29 1967

New England Newsclip

Beethoven, Brahms Works Featured At Tanglewood

Three concerts of music by Beethoven and Brahms will be highlighted by a performance Saturday evening, Aug. 5, of the original 1805 version of Beethoven's Fidelio for the sixth week of Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood.

The soloists for the evening will be Hanne-Lore Kuhse, soprano; George Shirley, tenor; Tom Krause, baritone; Mary Ellen Pracht, soprano; Ara Berberian, bass; Nico Castel, tenor; and Harold Enns, baritone. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has prepared the combined forces of the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus for this performance.

On Friday evening, Aug. 4, William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra and principal guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all Beethoven program. The program will consist of the Symphonies No. 8 and No. 5 and the Piano Concerto No. 3 for which Theodore Lettvin will he piano soloist.

The concert will be preceded by the traditional weekend prelude, a lieder recital by Hanne-Kuhse.

The Sunday afternoon concert, Aug. 6, will have a program of music by Brahms. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony in the Academic Festival Overture, the Symphony No. 3 and the Violin Concerto for which Joseph Silverstein will be soloist.

The Berkshire Festival chamber music concert on Tues. evening, Aug. 1, will feature Roman Totenberg, violin, and Igor Kipnis, harpsichord in recital.

The regular open rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to three events at Tanglewood next week. A concert and discussion of certain contemporary compositions will be the Composers' Forum on Wednesday evening . On Thursday evening, there will be a concert of Baroque music, the third in a series of four under the general direction of Igor Kipnis. The traditional Sunday morning Chamber Music concert will be on August 6.

This Sunday afternoon's Boston Symphony Orchestra program features Van Cliburn as soloist in the Grieg Piano Concerto. The program also includes Webern's Six Pieces, Op. 6, and Schubert's Symphony No. 9.

NEWS
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.
BI-WEEKLY CIRC. 1,150

AUG 3 1967

New England Newsclip

At Tanglewood

Three concerts of music by Beethoven and Brahms will be highlighted by a performance Saturday evening of the original 1805 version of Beethoven's Fidelio for the sixth week of Berkshire Festival concerts.

The soloists for the evening will be Hanne-Lore Kuhse, soprano; George Shirley, tenor; Tom Krause, baritone; Mary Ellen Pracht, soprano; Ara Berberian, bass; Nico Castel, tenor; and Harold Enns, baritone. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has prepared the combined forces of the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus for this performance.

On Friday evenii g William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra and principal guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all Beethoven program.

The Sunday afternoon concert will have a program of music by Brahms. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony

38

NEWS (e)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 98,600

JUL 28 1967 New England Newsclip

Original Version of Beethoven's Fidelio

Next Week at Tanglewood

Three concerts of music by Beethoven and Brahms will be highlighted by a performance Saturday evening, Aug. 5, at 8 p.m., of the original 1805 version of Beethoven's Fidelio for the sixth week of Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood in Lenox.

The original version of the Fidelio has many distinct differences from the opera usually seen on the stage. The overture of the original version is the Overture we know today as the Leonore No. 2. The final scene is entirely different from the one we are familiar with, and throughout the work there are extensive changes. The original score is looked upon as vocally and musically more demanding than the later score which places greater emphasis on drama.

The soloists for the evening will be Hanne-Lore Kuhse, soprano; George Shirley, tenor; Tom Krause, baritone; Mary Ellen Pracht, soprano; Ara Berberian, bass; Nico Castel, tenor; and Harold Enns, baritone. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has prepared the combined forces of the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus for this performance.

On Friday evening, Aug. 4, at 9 p.m., William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra and principal guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Beethoven program. The program will consist of the Symphonies No. 8 and No. 5 and the Piano Concerto No. 3 for which Theodore Lettvin will be piano soloist.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude, a lieder recital by Hanne-Lore Kuhse, at 7 p.m.

The Sunday afternoon concert at 2:30 p.m., Aug. 6, will have a program of music by Brahms. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony in the Academic Festival Overture, the Symphony No. 3 and the Violin Concerto for which Joseph Silverstein will be soloist.

The Berkshire Festival Chamber Music Concert on Tuesday at 8 p.m. will feature Roman Totenberg, violin, and Igor Kipnis, harpsichord in recital.

The regular open rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held Aug. 5 at 10:30 a.m.

Information on all Tanglewood events may be obtained by writing Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, 01240.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SARATOGA SARATOGIAN
Tuesday, August 1, 1967

1805 Version of Beethoven's Fidelio To Be Presented at Berkshire Festival

Three concerts of music by Beethoven and Brahms will be highlighted by a performance Saturday at 8 p.m. of the original 1805 version of Beethoven's Fidelio for the sixth week of Berkshire Festival concerts.

The original version of the Fidelio has many distinct differences from the opera usually seen on the stage. The overture of the original version is the Overture known today as the Leonore No. 2. The final scene is entirely different from the one present-day listeners are familiar with, and throughout the work there are extensive changes. The original score is looked upon as vocally and musically more demanding than the later score which places greater emphasis on drama.

Soloists

The soloists for the evening will be Hanne-Lore Kuhse, soprano; George Shirley, tenor; Tom Krause, baritone; Mary Ellen Pracht, soprano; Ara Berberian, bass; Nico Castel, tenor, and Harold Enns, baritone. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has prepared the combined forces of the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus for this performance.

On Friday at 9 p.m. William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra and principal guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Beethoven program. The program will consist of the Symphonies No. 8 and No. 5 and the Piano Concerto No. 3, for which Theodore Lettvin will be piano soloist.

Lieder Recital

The Friday concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude at 7 p.m., a lieder recital by Hanne-Lore Kuhse.

The Sunday afternoon concert at 2:30 will have a program of music by Brahms. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony in the Academic Festival Overture, the Symphony No. 3 and the Violin Concerto, for which Joseph Silverstein will be soloist.

The Berkshire Festival Chamber Music Concert on tonight 8 will feature Roman Totenberg, violin, and Igor Kipnis, harpsichord in recital.

The regular open rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

NEWS
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.
BI-WEEKLY CIRC. 1,150

AUG 3 1967 New England Newsclip

At Tanglewood

Three concerts of music by Beethoven and Brahms will be highlighted by a performance Saturday evening of the original 1805 version of Beethoven's Fidelio for the sixth week of Berkshire Festival concerts.

The soloists for the evening will be Hanne-Lore Kuhse, soprano; George Shirley, tenor; Tom Krause, baritone; Mary Ellen Pracht, soprano; Ara Berberian, bass; Nico Castel, tenor; and Harold Enns, baritone. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has prepared the combined forces of the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus for this performance.

On Friday evenii g William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra and principal guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all Beethoven program.

The Sunday afternoon concert will have a program of music by Brahms. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 50,766

JUL 31 1967

Beethoven and Brahms On Score at Tanglewood

Music of Beethoven and Brahms will be included in the three weekend programs of the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood Friday through Sunday.

* * *

Guest conductor William Steinberg will conduct the Friday 9 p.m. program and Erich Leinsdorf the Saturday 8 p.m. and Sunday 2:30 p.m. programs.

Steinburg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra and principal guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic, will conduct an all-Beethoven program. Included will be the Symphonies numbers 8 and 5 and the "Piano Concerto number 3" with Theodore Lettvin as soloist.

The traditional Weekend Prelude at 7 p.m. will feature a lieder recital by Hanne-Lore Kuhse.

The original 1805 version of Beethoven's "Fidelio" will be featured by Leinsdorf of Saturday evening. Soloists will be Miss Kuhse, soprano; George Shirley, tenor; Tom Krause, baritone; Mary Ellen Pracht, soprano; Ara Berberian, bass; Nico Castel, tenor; and Harold Enns, baritone. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has prepared the combined forces of the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus for the performance.

* * *

The original version of "Fidelio" has many differences from the opera usually seen on the stage. The overture of the original version is the overture we know today as the "Leonore number 2." The final scene is entirely different from the one we are familiar with and throughout the work there are extensive changes. The original score is looked upon as vocally and musically more demanding than the later score, which places greater emphasis on drama.

Leinsdorf will conduct the Sunday afternoon program featuring Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein as the soloist in the Brahms "Violin Concerto" and including the "Symphony number 3" and the "Academic Festival Overture."

* * *

The regular open rehearsal of the orchestra for the benefit of the Symphony's Pension Fund will be held in the Shed Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

Information and tickets for all Tanglewood events may be obtained by writing the Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., 01240.

SUNDAY REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 115,950

JUL 30 1967 New England Newsclip

Will Be Soloist

Theodore Lettvin will be soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, William Steinberg conducting for the Beethoven Piano Concerto No. 3. Mr. Steinberg will also conduct the orchestra in performances of the Beethoven Symphonies No. 5 and No. 8.

TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM (e)
HOLYOKE, MASS.
CIRC. 26,000

JUL 29 1967 New England Newsclip

Beethoven, Brahms Works Featured At Tanglewood

Three concerts of music by Beethoven and Brahms will be highlighted by a performance Saturday evening, Aug. 5, of the original 1805 version of Beethoven's Fidelio for the sixth week of Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood.

The soloists for the evening will be Hanne-Lore Kuhse, soprano; George Shirley, tenor; Tom Krause, baritone; Mary Ellen Pracht, soprano; Ara Berberian, bass; Nico Castel, tenor; and Harold Enns, baritone. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has prepared the combined forces of the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus for this performance.

On Friday evening, Aug. 4, William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra and principal guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all Beethoven program. The program will consist of the Symphonies No. 8 and No. 5 and the Piano Concerto No. 3 for which Theodore Lettvin will he piano soloist.

The concert will be preceded by the traditional weekend prelude, a lieder recital by Hanne-Kuhse.

The Sunday afternoon concert, Aug. 6, will have a program of music by Brahms. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony in the Academic Festival Overture, the Symphony No. 3 and the Violin Concerto for which Joseph Silverstein will be soloist.

The Berkshire Festival chamber music concert on Tues. evening, Aug. 1, will feature Roman Totenberg, violin, and Igor Kipnis, harpsichord in recital.

The regular open rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to three events at Tanglewood next week. A concert and discussion of certain contemporary compositions will be the Composers' Forum on Wednesday evening . On Thursday evening, there will be a concert of Baroque music, the third in a series of four under the general direction of Igor Kipnis. The traditional Sunday morning Chamber Music concert will be on August 6.

This Sunday afternoon's Boston Symphony Orchestra program features Van Cliburn as soloist in the Grieg Piano Concerto. The program also includes Webern's Six Pieces, Op. 6, and Schubert's Symphony No. 9.

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 26,000

JUL 27 1967 New England Newsclip

Beethoven Fidelio Featured Aug. 5 At Tanglewood

Three concerts of music by Beethoven and Brahms will be highlighted by a performance Saturday evening, Aug. 5, 8 p.m., of the original 1805 version of Beethoven's Fidelio for the sixth week of Berkshire Festival concerts.

THEODORE LETTVIN

Soloists will be Hanne-Lore Kuhse, soprano; George Shirley, tenor; Tom Krause, baritone; Mary Ellen Pracht, soprano; Ara Berberian, bass; Nico Castel, tenor; and Harold Enns, baritone. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has prepared the combined forces of the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus for this performance.

On Friday evening, Aug. 4, 9 p.m., William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, will conduct an all Beethoven program, consisting of the Symphonies No. 8 and No. 5 and the Piano Concerto No. 3, for which Theodore Lettvin will be soloist.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude, a lieder recital by Hanne-Lore Kuhse at 7 p.m.

The Sunday afternoon concert, Aug. 6, 2:30 p.m., will be a program of music by Brahms. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Academic Festival Overture, Symphony No. 3 and Violin Concerto, for which Joseph Silverstein will be soloist.

The Festival chamber music concert on Tuesday evening, Aug. 1, 8 p.m., will feature Roman Totenberg, violin and Igor Kipnis, harpsichord.

The regular open rehearsal for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held Saturday, Aug. 5, at 10:30 a.m.

This Sunday, July 30, 2:30 p.m., program features Van Cliburn as soloist in the Grieg Piano Concerto. Program also includes Webern's Six Pieces, Op. 6 and Schubert's Symphony No. 9.

Information on all Tanglewood events may be obtained by writing Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240 (Telephone: 413-637-1600)

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 537,050

JUL 30 1967 New England

Tanglewood Will Offer Original Beethoven Opera

The original version of Beethoven's only opera, Fidelio, will be given in concert performance, presumed to be the American premiere, at Tanglewood this Saturday evening at 8. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct, and the cast will include Hanne-Lore Kuhse, soprano, George Shirley, tenor. Tom Krause, baritone, Mary Ellen Pracht, soprano, and Ara Berberian, bass.

The orchestra will be the Boston Symphony, and the Tanglewood Choir and Berkshire Chorus have been prepared by Charles Wilson, the Symphony's assistant conductor.

The original Fidelio, which is vocally more demanding than the dramatically tighter version seen in theaters now, uses the Overture known as Leonore No. 2. There are distinct and striking differences throughout, and the final scene is entirely different.

Friday night's program at Tanglewood also will be an all-Beethoven one. William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony will conduct Symphonies No. 5 and 8, and Theodore Lettvin will be soloist in the Piano Concerto No. 3 in C minor.

The concert will be preceded at 7 by the week-end prelude, a Lieder recital by East German soprano Hanne-Lore Kuhse, the Leonore of the following evening's Fidelio performance.

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 6, at 2:30, Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony in a Brahms program, including the Academic Festival Overture, the Symphony No. 3, and the Violin Concerto, Joseph Silverstein, soloist.

This Tuesday evening at 8, Roman Totenberg, violin, and Igor Kipnis, harpsichord, will give a recital. ★

SUNDAY HERALD TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 310,000

JUL 30 1967 New England Newsclip

2 B's Featured At Tanglewood

LENOX — Three concerts here of music by Beethoven and Brahms will be highlighted by a performance Saturday at 8 p.m. of the original 1805 version of Beethoven's "Fidelio." They will be part of the sixth week of Berkshire Festival concerts.

Soloists will be Hanne-Lore Kuhse, soprano; George Shirley, tenor; Tom Krause, baritone; Mary Ellen Pracht, soprano Ara Berberian, bass; Nico Castel, tenor; and Harold Enns, baritone. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will direct the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus.

Friday at 9 p.m. William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in the Beethoven program, Symphonies No. 8 and No. 5 and Piano Concerto No. 3, for which Theodore Lettvin will be piano soloist.

The 7 o'clock Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude, a lieder recital by Hanne-Lore Kushe.

The concert next Sunday at 2:30 p.m. will have a program of music by Brahms. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony in the Academic Festival Overture, the Symphony No. 3 and the Violin Concerto for which Joseph Silverstein will be soloist.

The Berkshire Festival Chamber Music Concert on Tuesday evening at 8 will feature Roman Totenberg, violin, and Igor Kipnis, harpsichord, in recital.

The regular open rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

This afternoon's BSO program at 2:30 features Van Cliburn as soloist in the Grieg Piano Concerto. The program also includes Webern's Six Pieces, Op. 6, and Schubert's Symphony No. 9.

NEWS (E)
FRAMINGHAM, MASS.
CIRC. 18,650

JUL 29 1967 New England Newsclip

Beethoven and Brahms Highlights at Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox — Three concerts of music by Beethoven and Brahms will be highlighted by a performance Saturday evening, Aug. 5 at 8 o'clock of the original 1805 version of Beethoven's Fidelio for the sixth week of Berkshire Festival concerts.

The original version of the Fiedlio has many distinct differences from the oprea usually seen on the stage. The overture of the original version is the Overture we know today as the Leonore No. 2. The final scene is entirely different from the one we are familiar with, and throughout the work there are extensive changes. The original score is looked upon as vocally and musically more demanding than the later score which places greater emphasis on drama.

Soloists for the evening will be Hanne-Lore Kuhse, soprano, George Shirley, tenor, Tom Krause, baritone, Ellen Pracht, soprano, Ara Berberian, bass, Nico Castel, tenor and Harold Enns, baritone. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has prepared the combined forces of the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus for this performance.

At 9 o'clock Friday evening, Aug. 4, William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburg Symphony Orchestra and principal guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all Beethoven program. The program will consist of the Symphonies No. 8 and No. 5 and teh Piano Concerto No. 3 for which Theodore Lettvin will be piano soloist.

HAROLD ENNS, baritone will be one of the soloists at the Saturday evening, Aug. 5 concert of music by Beethoven and Brahms at the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude at 7 o'clock, a lieder recital by Hanne-Lore Kuhse.

The Sunday afternoon concert, Aug. 6 at 2:30 oclo'ck will have a program of music by Brahms. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Sumphony in the Academic Festival Overture, the Symphony No. 3 and the Violin Concerto for which Joseph Silverstein will be soloist.

The Sunday af ternoon's Boston Symphony Orchestra program at 2:30 featrues Van Cliburn as soloist in the Grieg Piano Concerto. The program also includes Webern's Six Pieces, Op. 6 and Schubert's Symphony No. 9.

SUNDAY REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 115,950

JUL 30 1967 New England Newsclip

Berkshire features 2 Bs

Three concerts of music by Beethoven and Brahms will be highlighted by a performance Saturday at 8 p.m. of the original 1805 version of Beethoven's "Fidelio" for the sixth week of Berkshire Festival concerts.

The original version of the "Fidelio" has many distinct differences from the opera usually seen on the stage. The overture of the original version is the Overture we know today as the "Leonore No. 2.a

ALBANY
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SYRACUSE HERALD AMERICAN
Sunday, July 30, 1967

The final scene is entirely different from the one most audiences are familiar with, and throughout the work there are extensive changes. The origianl score is looked upon as vocally and musically more demanding than the later score which places greater emphasis on drama.

The soloists for the evening will be Hanne-Lore Kuhse, soprano; George Shirley, tenor; Tom Krause, baritone; Mary Ellen Pracht, soprano; Ara Berberian, bass; Nico Castel, tenor; and Harold Enns, baritone. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has prepared the combined forces of the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus for this performance.

On Friday evening at 9, William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra and principal guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all Beethoven program. The program will consist of the Symphonies No. 8 and No. 5 and the Piano Concerto No. 3 for which Theodore Lettvin will be piano soloist.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude at 7 p.m., a lieder recital by Hanne-Lore Kuhse.

Next Sunday afternoon's concert at 2:30 will have a program of music by Brahms. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony in the Academic Festival Overture, the Symphony No. 3 and the Violin Concerto for which Joseph Silverstein will be soloist.

The Berkshire Festival Chamber Music Concert on Tuesday evening at 8 will feature Roman Totenberg, violin, and Igor Kipnis, harpsichord in recital.

THE SPRINGFIELD

Brahms at Tanglewood

ARA BERBERIAN

WILLIAM STEINBERG

HAROLD ENNS

Three concerts of music by Beethoven and Brahms will be highlighted by a performance Saturday evening at 8 p.m., of the original 1805 version of Beethoven's Fidelio for the sixth week of Berkshire Festival concerts.

Original Version

The original version of the Fidelio has many distinct differences from the opera usually seen on the stage. The overture of the original version is the Overture we know today as the Leonore No. 2. The final scene is entirely different from the one we are familiar with, and throughout the work there are extensive changes. The original score is looked upon as vocally and musically more demanding than the later score which places greater emphasis on drama.

The soloists for the evening will be Hanne-Lore Kuhse, soprano; George Shirley, tenor; Tom Krause, baritone; Mary Ellen Pracht, soprano; Ara Berberian, bass; Nico Castel, tenor; and Harold Enns, baritone. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has prepared the combined forces of the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus for this performance.

On Friday evening at 9 p.m., William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra and principal guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all Beethoven program. The program will consist of the Symphonies No. 8 and No. 5 and the Piano Concerto No. 3 for which Theodore Lettvin will be piano soloist.

Evening Concert

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude at 7 p. m., a lieder recital by Hanne-Lore Kuhse.

The Sunday afternoon concert, Aug. 6, at 2:30 p.m., will have a program of music by Brahms. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony in the Academic Festival Overture, the Symphony No. 3 and the Violin Concerto for which Joseph Silverstein will be soloist.

The Berkshire Festival Chamber Music Concert on Tuesday evening at 8 p.m., will feature Roman Totenberg, violin, and Igor Kipnis, harpsichord in recital.

The regular open rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

Three Events

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to three events at Tanglewood next week. A concert and discussion of certain contemporary compositions will be the Composers' Forum on Wednesday evening at 8 p.m. On Thursday evening at 8 p.m., there will be a concert of Baroque music, the third in a series of four under the general direction of Igor Kipnis. The traditional Sunday morning Chamber Music Concert will be held at 10 a.m. on Aug. 6.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are those who make voluntary contributions to aid in reducing the Center's deficit. In addition to providing funds for the Music Center, the Friends also provide an audience for the young musicians, in keeping with the Center's basic philosophy of training performers through performance.

This afternoon's Boston Symphony Orchestra program at 2:30 p.m., features Van Cliburn as soloist in the Grieg Piano Concerto. The program also includes Webern's Six Pieces, Op. 6, and Schubert's Symphony No. 9.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 537,050
JUL 30 1967
New England Newsclip

A Tanglewood First

The Original 'Fidelio'

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

"In short, I assure you, my dear Treitschke, this opera earns me the martyr's crown"—this is Beethoven in April, 1814, writing to the librettist and stage director of the Vienna Court Opera about "Fidelio." At the time, Beethoven, with Treitschke's help, was engaged in preparing a third version of "Fidelio," the one familiar on stage and on recordings today.

But the "Fidelio" of which Erich Leinsdorf will conduct a concert performance at Tanglewood Saturday evening is Beethoven's original one of 1805, a great work, a troublesome and not completely successful one, and, so far as is known, never before given in America.

In 1803 (the "Eroica" and Kreutzer Sonata year), Beethoven signed a contract to write an opera for the Theater an der Wien, whose manager was Emanuel Schikaneder, librettist of "The Magic Flute." By June, 1805, "Leonore" was completely sketched, and it was performed Nov. 20, retitled "Fidelio" against Beethoven's wishes, but to avoid confusion with Paer's opera "Leonora" on the same subject, which had been put on in Dresden a year earlier with great success.

The French occupation of Vienna had begun a week before the "Fidelio" premiere, and the audience was a small and unsympathetic one consisting mainly of French officers. Besides, the performance was bad, and after only two repetitions "Fidelio" was taken off.

STEINBERG
Continued on Page A-4

The Art World

Treitschke's sympathetic and intelligent collaboration, the third "Fidelio" came into being and was performed, and this time established in repertory, in May, 1814 (a year whose other major achievement is the E minor Piano Sonata, Op.90).

I can only list a few things to prepare the listener for some of the differences he will hear in the Tanglewood "Fidelio:"

The Overture is "Leonore" No. 2, followed by Marzelline's aria in a rather different version (there are four altogether), then by the duet with Jacquino. Rocco then joins them for a humorous Trio, and so the texture is built up systematically to the great canonic Quartet, which is, by the way, one of the very few things to survive virtually unaltered. "Fidelio" was originally in three acts, the first ending after the Leonore-Marzelline-Rocco Trio.

The Pizarro-Rocco duet is scene for Leonore and Florestan, whose "Namenlose Freude" duet (much longer, harder, and with brilliant ending) is preceded and prepared by an elaborate and beautiful conversation in recitative.

The finale underwent the most radical changes. In the orignal, it is set in the dungeon rather than out in the courtyard. Leonore and Florestan do not at first understand they are really saved, and their tragic dialogue at the beginning of the scene is one of the finest pages in the score. The great glory, though, is the "O Gott! o welch' ein Augenblick!" ensemble, which uses the same wonderful melody as the familiar version, one that goes back to a Cantata on the death of Emperior Joseph II that he wrote as a young man of 20 in Bonn, but expanding it here with immense breadth and at a terriffic emotional temperature.

If there were nothing else, those 96 measures are worth the trip down the turnpike.

FARMINGTON VALLEY HERALD
SIMSBURY, CONN.
WEEKLY CIRC. 4,400
JUL 27 1967
New England Newsclip

Varied Programs Await Music Buffs at Tanglewood

VALLEY — Three concerts of music by Beethoven and Brahms will be highlighted by a performance Aug. 5 at 8 p.m. of the original 1805 version of Beethoven's Fidelio for the sixth week of Berkshire Festival concerts.

The original version of the Fidelio has many distinct differences from the opera usually seen on the stage. The overture of the original version is the Overture we know today as the Lenore No. 2. The final scene is entirely different from the one we are familiar with, and throughout the work there are extensive changes.

Soloists will be Hanne-Lore Kuhse, soprano; George Shirley, tenor; Tom Krause, baritone; Mary Ellen Pracht, soprano; Ara Berberian, bass; Nico Castel, tenor; and Harold Enns, baritone. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has prepared the combined forces of the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus.

On Aug. 4 at 9 p.m. William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra and principal guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all Beethoven program. The program will consist of the Symphonies No. 8 and No. 5 and the Piano Concerto No. 3 for which Theodore Lettvin will be piano soloist.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional weekend prelude at 7, a lieder recital by Hanne-Lore Kuhse.

The Sunday concert at 2:30 p.m. will have a program of music by Brahms. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony in the Academic Festival Overture, the Symphony No. 3 and the Violin Concerto for which Joseph Silverstein will be soloist.

The Berkshire Festival Chamber Music Concert on Aug. 1, at 8 p.m. will feature Roman Totenberg, violin, and Igor Kipnis, harpsichord in recital.

The regular open rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Aug. 5 at 10:30 a.m.

A concert and discusion of certain contemporary compositions will be the Composers' Forum on Aug. 2, at 8 p.m. On Aug. 3 at 8 p.m. there will be a concert of Baroque music, the third in a series of four under the general direction of Igor Kipnis. The traditional Sunday morning Chamber Music Concert will be held at 10 a.m. on Aug. 6.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900
AUG 22 1967
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Homecoming For a Former Berkshirite

By MILDRED WALLACE

Miss Agatha Canfield has come home again—sort of.

Formerly of Sheffield and Canaan, Conn., she has been spending six weeks this summer as a scholarship student at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. In fact, she was offered a like scholarship in 1964 but was unable to accept it because of her commitments in the Virgin Islands, where she has now been living for nine years.

Wallace

Miss Agatha Canfield

She's been right in the thick of things since she arrived, not only taking two or three two-hour classes a day in analysis, composition, orchestra and choral work, but taking piano lessons and practicing piano as well. She's also had a lot of chorus practice too, because she was chosen to be a member of the Berkshire Chorus, to sing on two occasions with the Boston Symphony when Beethoven's "Fidelio" and Verdi's "Requiem" were presented.

Miss Canfield's interest in choral work is one of long standing. Nine years ago, when she first went to the Caribbean island of St. Thomas to live, she began teaching music at Charlotte Amalie High School there. During her three years at the high school, she helped students form their first glee club and also to put on their first musical productions. Later, teaching younger children at the Lutheran School, she put on a number of choral programs there, too.

Miss Canfield now heads the music committee of the newly formed St. Thomas Arts Council, which came into being last November. She and her committee were instrumental in forming a choral group, called the Caribbean Chorale, which was presented to the public for the first time at various functions during American-Danish Friendship Week in March, commemorating the 50th anniversary of the purchase of the Virgin Islands from Denmark by the United States. At that time, there were many visitors on hand from Denmark and from the United States.

The formation of the Caribbean Chorale was one of two aims of her music committee, she said, the second being to set up a chamber music group in the islands and also to bring established groups there to present chamber music concerts. She's been particularly interested in attending Tuesday night concerts of the Boston Symphony's Chamber Players whenever she could fit them into her busy schedule. She's also attended most of the weekend concerts by the full orchestra, too, because she hasn't wanted "to miss a single, wonderful minute" of the music.

Miss Canfield will be spending another week in the Berkshires after the close of the Tanglewood season to look up friends and relatives at leisure. She admits that she needs a bit of a rest, because she's had a busy, tiring schedule but it has nonetheless given her "one of the most enjoyable, satisfying summers" of her life.

When she arrives back in St. Thomas, she's going to "head right for the beach at Magens Bay," considered to be one of the 10 most beautiful beaches in the world, "and do nothing but read, soak up the sun and rest." Then she's going to turn her mind to chamber music groups.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
RAVENA NEWS HERALD
Friday, August 4, 1967

At Tanglewood

Mr. Lettvin will be the soloist at Tanglewood this Friday evening, playing Beethoven's Piano Concerto #3 with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

TRANSCRIPT (e)
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
CIRC. 13,350
AUG 4 1967
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood

All-Beethoven, Brahms, Gershwin Concerts

Three concerts of music by Beethoven and Brahms will be highlighted by a performance tomorrow evening of the original 1805 version of Beethoven's "Fidelio" during the sixth week of Berkshire Festival concerts.

The original version of "Fidelio" has many distinct differences from the opera usually seen on the stage. The overture of the original version is the overture we know today as the Lenore No. 2. The final scene is entirely different from the one we are familiar with, and throughout the work there are extensive changes. The original score is looked upon as vocally and musically more demanding than the later score which places greater emphasis on drama.

WILLIAM STEINBERG

The soloists for the evening will be Hanne-Lore Kuhse, soprano; George Shirley, tenor; Tom Krause, baritone; Mary Ellen Pracht, soprano; Ara Berberian, bass; Nico Castel, tenor; and Harold Enns, baritone. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has prepared combined forces of the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus for this performance.

Tonight William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra and principal guest conductor of the N. Y. Philharmonic, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all Beethoven program. The program will consist of the "Symphonies No. 8 and No. 5" and the "Piano Concerto No. 3" for which Theodore Lettvin will be piano soloist.

HANNE-LORE KUHSE

Tonight's concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude, a lieder recital by Hanne-Lore Kuhse.

The Sunday afternoon concert will have a program of music by Brahms. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony in the "Academic Festival Overture," "Symphony No. 3" and the "Violin Concerto" for which Joseph Silverstein will be soloist.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 537,050
30 1967
New England Newsclip

STEINBERG

(Continued from Page A3)

In December, Beethoven turned his mind to cuts and revisions after an evening at the Palais Lichowsky when the work was carefully gone through, Princess Lichnowsky playing the piano, Franz Clement, the first player of the Violin Concerto, sitting in a corner and accompanying everything on the violin from memory, with Roeckel, who was to be the Florestan of the second production, and stage director Meyer, doing all the singing.

In April, 1806 (the year of the Piano Concerto No. 4, the Violin Concerto, the Symphony No. 4 and the Rasumovsky Quartets), "Fidelio" was given in its second form, and failed again. Beethoven did not forget the work, and he seems always to have been determined to make it go, but eight years elapsed. With Treitschke's sympathetic and intelligent collaboration, the third "Fidelio" came into being and was performed, and this time established in repertory, in May, 1814 (a year whose other major achievement is the E minor Piano Sonata, Op.90).

I can only list a few things to prepare the listener for some of the differences he will hear in the Tanglewood "Fidelio:"

The Overture is "Leonore" No. 2, followed by Marzelline's aria in a rather different version (there are four altogether), then by the duet with Jacquino. Rocco then joins them for a humorous Trio, and so the texture is built up systematically to the great canonic Quartet, which is, by the way, one of the very few things to survive virtually unaltered. "Fidelio" was originally in three acts, the first ending after the Leonore-Marzelline-Rocco Trio.

The Pizarro-Rocco duet is followed by one for Leonore and Marzelline, a lovely piece with violin and cello obbligatos, but making an interruption dramatically impossible just there. Leonore's "Abscheulicher!" belongs to the 1814 "Fidelio:" Here we have a very beautiful recitative in a more pathetic style, "Ach, brich noch nicht, du mattes Herz!" followed a much longer and vocally astoundingly more brilliant and demanding version of the E major aria, "Komm, Hoffnung." The finale of the act is entirely different, consisting of an energetic aria for Pizarro with chorus.

In the next act, the second part of Florestan's aria is quite different, too, continuing in F minor and also in the pathetic manner. The great Quartet with the trumpet-call does not yet have the spoken interruption for Jacquino and Rocco, and it leads without formal full close into the stan, whose "Namenlose eude" scene for Leonore and Florestan, whose "Namenlose Freude" duet (much longer, harder, and with brilliant ending) is preceded and prepared by an elaborate and beautiful conversation in recitative.

The finale underwent the most radical changes. In the orignal, it is set in the dungeon rather than out in the courtyard. Leonore and Florestan do not at first understand they are really saved, and their tragic dialogue at the beginning of the scene is one of the finest pages in the score. The great glory, though, is the "O Gott! o welch' ein Augenblick!" ensemble, which uses the same wonderful melody as the familiar version, one that goes back to a Cantata on the death of Emperior Joseph II that he wrote as a young man of 20 in Bonn, but expanding it here with immense breadth and at a terriffic emotional temperature.

If there were nothing else, those 96 measures are worth the trip down the turnpike.

FARMINGTON VALLEY HERALD
SIMSBURY, CONN.
WEEKLY CIRC. 4,400
JUL 27 1967
New England Newsclip

Varied Programs Await Music Buffs at Tanglewood

VALLEY — Three concerts of music by Beethoven and Brahms will be highlighted by a performance Aug. 5 at 8 p.m. of the original 1805 version of Beethoven's Fidelio for the sixth week of Berkshire Festival concerts.

The original version of the Fidelio has many distinct differences from the opera usually seen on the stage. The overture of the original version is the Overture we know today as the Lenore No. 2. The final scene is entirely different from the one we are familiar with, and throughout the work there are extensive changes.

Soloists will be Hanne-Lore Kuhse, soprano; George Shirley, tenor; Tom Krause, baritone; Mary Ellen Pracht, soprano; Ara Berberian, bass; Nico Castel, tenor; and Harold Enns, baritone. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has prepared the combined forces of the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus.

On Aug. 4 at 9 p.m. William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra and principal guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all Beethoven program. The program will consist of the Symphonies No. 8 and No. 5 and the Piano Concerto No. 3 for which Theodore Lettvin will be piano soloist.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional weekend prelude at 7, a lieder recital by Hanne-Lore Kuhse.

The Sunday concert at 2:30 p.m. will have a program of music by Brahms. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony in the Academic Festival Overture, the Symphony No. 3 and the Violin Concerto for which Joseph Silverstein will be soloist.

The Berkshire Festival Chamber Music Concert on Aug. 1, at 8 p.m. will feature Roman Totenberg, violin, and Igor Kipnis, harpsichord in recital.

The regular open rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Aug. 5 at 10:30 a.m.

A concert and discusion of certain contemporary compositions will be the Composers' Forum on Aug. 2, at 8 p.m. On Aug. 3 at 8 p.m. there will be a concert of Baroque music, the third in a series of four under the general direction of Igor Kipnis. The traditional Sunday morning Chamber Music Concert will be held at 10 a.m. on Aug. 6.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900
AUG 22 1967
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Homecoming For a Former Berkshirite

By MILDRED WALLACE

Wallace

Miss Agatha Canfield

Miss Agatha Canfield has come home again—sort of.

Formerly of Sheffield and Canaan, Conn., she has been spending six weeks this summer as a scholarship student at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. In fact, she was offered a like scholarship in 1964 but was unable to accept it because of her commitments in the Virgin Islands, where she has now been living for nine years.

She's been right in the thick of things since she arrived, not only taking two or three two-hour classes a day in analysis, composition, orchestra and choral work, but taking piano lessons and practicing piano as well. She's also had a lot of chorus practice too, because she was chosen to be a member of the Berkshire Chorus, to sing on two occasions with the Boston Symphony when Beethoven's "Fidelio" and Verdi's "Requiem" were presented.

Miss Canfield's interest in choral work is one of long standing. Nine years ago, when she first went to the Caribbean island of St. Thomas to live, she began teaching music at Charlotte Amalie High School there. During her three years at the high school, she helped students form their first glee club and also to put on their first musical productions. Later, teaching younger children at the Lutheran School, she put on a number of choral programs there, too.

Miss Canfield now heads the music committee of the newly formed St. Thomas Arts Council, which came into being last November. She and her committee were instrumental in forming a choral group, called the Caribbean Chorale, which was presented to the public for the first time at various functions during American-Danish Friendship Week in March, commemorating the 50th anniversary of the purchase of the Virgin Islands from Denmark by the United States. At that time, there were many visitors on hand from Denmark and from the United States.

The formation of the Caribbean Chorale was one of two aims of her music committee, she said, the second being to set up a chamber music group in the islands and also to bring established groups there to present chamber music concerts. She's been particularly interested in attending Tuesday night concerts of the Boston Symphony's Chamber Players whenever she could fit them into her busy schedule. She's also attended most of the weekend concerts by the full orchestra, too, because she hasn't wanted "to miss a single, wonderful minute" of the music.

Miss Canfield will be spending another week in the Berkshires after the close of the Tanglewood season to look up friends and relatives at leisure. She admits that she needs a bit of a rest, because she's had a busy, tiring schedule but it has nonetheless given her "one of the most enjoyable, satisfying summers" of her life.

When she arrives back in St. Thomas, she's going to "head right for the beach at Magens Bay," considered to be one of the 10 most beautiful beaches in the world, "and do nothing but read, soak up the sun and rest." Then she's going to turn her mind to chamber music groups.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
RAVENA NEWS HERALD
Friday, August 4, 1967

At Tanglewood

Mr. Lettvin will be the soloist at Tanglewood this Friday evening, playing Beethoven's Piano Concerto #3 with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

TRANSCRIPT (e)
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
CIRC. 13,350
AUG 4 1967
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood

All-Beethoven, Brahms, Gershwin Concerts

Three concerts of music by Beethoven and Brahms will be highlighted by a performance tomorrow evening of the original 1805 version of Beethoven's "Fidelio" during the sixth week of Berkshire Festival concerts.

The original version of "Fidelio" has many distinct differences from the opera usually seen on the stage. The overture of the original version is the overture we know today as the Lenore No. 2. The final scene is entirely different from the one we are familiar with, and throughout the work there are extensive changes. The original score is looked upon as vocally and musically more demanding than the later score which places greater emphasis on drama.

WILLIAM STEINBERG

The soloists for the evening will be Hanne-Lore Kuhse, soprano; George Shirley, tenor; Tom Krause, baritone; Mary Ellen Pracht, soprano; Ara Berberian, bass; Nico Castel, tenor; and Harold Enns, baritone. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has prepared combined forces of the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus for this performance.

Tonight William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra and principal guest conductor of the N. Y. Philharmonic, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all Beethoven program. The program will consist of the "Symphonies No. 8 and No. 5" and the "Piano Concerto No. 3" for which Theodore Lettvin will be piano soloist.

HANNE-LORE KUHSE

Tonight's concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude, a lieder recital by Hanne-Lore Kuhse.

The Sunday afternoon concert will have a program of music by Brahms. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony in the "Academic Festival Overture," "Symphony No. 3" and the "Violin Concerto" for which Joseph Silverstein will be soloist.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 537,050
AUG 30 1967
New England Newsclip

STEINBERG

(Continued from Page A5)

In December, Beethoven turned his mind to cuts and revisions after an evening at the Palais Lichowsky when the work was carefully gone through, Princess Lichnowsky playing the piano, Franz Clement, the first player of the Violin Concerto, sitting in a corner and accompanying everything on the violin from memory, with Roeckel, who was to be the Florestan of the second production, and stage director Meyer, doing all the singing.

In April, 1806 (the year of the Piano Concerto No. 4, the Violin Concerto, the Symphony No. 4 and the Rasumovsky Quartets), "Fidelio" was given in its second form, and failed again. Beethoven did not forget the work, and he seems always to have been determined to make it go, but eight years elapsed. With Treitschke's sympathetic and intelligent collaboration, the third "Fidelio" came into being and was performed, and this time established in repertory, in May, 1814 (a year whose other major achievement is the E minor Piano Sonata, Op.90).

I can only list a few things to prepare the listener for some of the differences he will hear in the Tanglewood "Fidelio:"

The Overture is "Leonore" No. 2, followed by Marzelline's aria in a rather different version (there are four altogether), then by the duet with Jacquino. Rocco then joins them for a humorous Trio, and so the texture is built up systematically to the great canonic Quartet, which is, by the way, one of the very few things to survive virtually unaltered. "Fidelio" was originally in three acts, the first ending after the Leonore-Marzelline-Rocco Trio.

The Pizarro-Rocco duet is followed by one for Leonore and Marzelline, a lovely piece with violin and cello obbligatos, but making an interruption impossible just there. Leonore's "Abscheulicher!" belongs to the 1814 "Fidelio:" Here we have a very beautiful recitative in a more pathetic style, "Ach, brich noch nicht, du mattes Herz!" followed a much longer and vocally astoundingly more brilliant and demanding version of the E major aria, "Komm, Hoffnung." The finale of the act is entirely different, consisting of an energetic aria for Pizarro with chorus.

In the next act, the second part of Florestan's aria is quite different, too, continuing in F minor and also in the pathetic manner. The great Quartet with the trumpet-call does not yet have the spoken interruption for Jacquino and Rocco, and it leads without formal full close into the stan, whose "Namenlose eude" scene for Leonore and Florestan, whose "Namenlose Freude" duet (much longer, harder, and with brilliant ending) is preceded and prepared by an elaborate and beautiful conversation in recitative.

The finale underwent the most radical changes. In the orignal, it is set in the dungeon rather than out in the courtyard. Leonore and Florestan do not at first understand they are really saved, and their tragic dialogue at the beginning of the scene is one of the finest pages in the score. The great glory, though, is the "O Gott! o welch' ein Augenblick!" ensemble, which uses the same wonderful melody as the familiar version, one that goes back to a Cantata on the death of Emperior Joseph II that he wrote as a young man of 20 in Bonn, but expanding it here with immense breadth and at a terriffic emotional temperature.

If there were nothing else, those 96 measures are worth the trip down the turnpike.

FARMINGTON VALLEY HERALD
SIMSBURY, CONN.
WEEKLY CIRC. 4,400
JUL 27 1967
New England Newsclip

Varied Programs Await Music Buffs at Tanglewood

VALLEY — Three concerts of music by Beethoven and Brahms will be highlighted by a performance Aug. 5 at 8 p.m. of the original 1805 version of Beethoven's Fidelio for the sixth week of Berkshire Festival concerts.

The original version of the Fidelio has many distinct differences from the opera usually seen on the stage. The overture of the original version is the Overture we know today as the Lenore No. 2. The final scene is entirely different from the one we are familiar with, and throughout the work there are extensive changes.

Soloists will be Hanne-Lore Kuhse, soprano; George Shirley, tenor; Tom Krause, baritone; Mary Ellen Pracht, soprano; Ara Berberian, bass; Nico Castel, tenor; and Harold Enns, baritone. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has prepared the combined forces of the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus.

On Aug. 4 at 9 p.m. William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra and principal guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all Beethoven program. The program will consist of the Symphonies No. 8 and No. 5 and the Piano Concerto No. 3 for which Theodore Lettvin will be piano soloist.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional weekend prelude at 7, a lieder recital by Hanne-Lore Kuhse.

The Sunday concert at 2:30 p.m. will have a program of music by Brahms. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony in the Academic Festival Overture, the Symphony No. 3 and the Violin Concerto for which Joseph Silverstein will be soloist.

The Berkshire Festival Chamber Music Concert on Aug. 1, at 8 p.m. will feature Roman Totenberg, violin, and Igor Kipnis, harpsichord in recital.

The regular open rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Aug. 5 at 10:30 a.m.

A concert and discusion of certain contemporary compositions will be the Composers' Forum on Aug. 2, at 8 p.m. On Aug. 3 at 8 p.m. there will be a concert of Baroque music, the third in a series of four under the general direction of Igor Kipnis. The traditional Sunday morning Chamber Music Concert will be held at 10 a.m. on Aug. 6.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900
AUG 22 1967
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Homecoming For a Former Berkshirite

By MILDRED WALLACE

Miss Agatha Canfield has come home again—sort of.

Formerly of Sheffield and Canaan, Conn., she has been spending six weeks this summer as a scholarship student at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. In fact, she was offered a like scholarship in 1964 but was unable to accept it because of her commitments in the Virgin Islands, where she has now been living for nine years.

Wallace

Miss Agatha Canfield

She's been right in the thick of things since she arrived, not only taking two or three two-hour classes a day in analysis, composition, orchestra and choral work, but taking piano lessons and practicing piano as well. She's also had a lot of chorus practice too, because she was chosen to be a member of the Berkshire Chorus, to sing on two occasions with the Boston Symphony when Beethoven's "Fidelio" and Verdi's "Requiem" were presented.

Miss Canfield's interest in choral work is one of long standing. Nine years ago, when she first went to the Caribbean island of St. Thomas to live, she began teaching music at Charlotte Amalie High School there. During her three years at the high school, she helped students form their first glee club and also to put on their first musical productions. Later, teaching younger children at the Lutheran School, she put on a number of choral programs there, too.

Miss Canfield now heads the music committee of the newly formed St. Thomas Arts Council, which came into being last November. She and her committee were instrumental in forming a choral group, called the Caribbean Chorale, which was presented to the public for the first time at various functions during American-Danish Friendship Week in March, commemorating the 50th anniversary of the purchase of the Virgin Islands from Denmark by the United States. At that time, there were many visitors on hand from Denmark and from the United States.

The formation of the Caribbean Chorale was one of two aims of her music committee, she said, the second being to set up a chamber music group in the islands and also to bring established groups there to present chamber music concerts. She's been particularly interested in attending Tuesday night concerts of the Boston Symphony's Chamber Players whenever she could fit them into her busy schedule. She's also attended most of the weekend concerts by the full orchestra, too, because she hasn't wanted "to miss a single, wonderful minute" of the music.

Miss Canfield will be spending another week in the Berkshires after the close of the Tanglewood season to look up friends and relatives at leisure. She admits that she needs a bit of a rest, because she's had a busy, tiring schedule but it has nonetheless given her "one of the most enjoyable, satisfying summers" of her life.

When she arrives back in St. Thomas, she's going to "head right for the beach at Magens Bay," considered to be one of the 10 most beautiful beaches in the world, "and do nothing but read, soak up the sun and rest." Then she's going to turn her mind to chamber music groups.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
RAVENA NEWS HERALD
Friday, August 4, 1967

At Tanglewood

Mr. Lettvin will be the soloist at Tanglewood this Friday evening, playing Beethoven's Piano Concerto #3 with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. ne

TRANSCRIPT (e)
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
CIRC. 13,250
AUG 4 1967
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood

All-Beethoven, Brahms, Gershwin Concerts

Three concerts of music by Beethoven and Brahms will be highlighted by a performance tomorrow evening of the original 1805 version of Beethoven's "Fidelio" during the sixth week of Berkshire Festival concerts.

The original version of "Fidelio" has many distinct differences from the opera usually seen on the stage. The overture of the original version is the overture we know today as the Lenore No. 2. The final scene is entirely different from the one we are familiar with, and throughout the work there are extensive changes. The original score is looked upon as vocally and musically more demanding than the later score which places greater emphasis on drama.

WILLIAM STEINBERG

The soloists for the evening will be Hanne-Lore Kuhse, soprano; George Shirley, tenor; Tom Krause, baritone; Mary Ellen Pracht, soprano; Ara Berberian, bass; Nico Castel, tenor; and Harold Enns, baritone. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has prepared combined forces of the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus for this performance.

Tonight William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra and principal guest conductor of the N. Y. Philharmonic, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all Beethoven program. The program will consist of the "Symphonies No. 8 and No. 5" and the "Piano Concerto No. 3" for which Theodore Lettvin will be piano soloist.

HANNE-LORE KUHSE

Tonight's concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude, a lieder recital by Hanne-Lore Kuhse.

The Sunday afternoon concert will have a program of music by Brahms. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony in the "Academic Festival Overture," "Symphony No. 3" and the "Violin Concerto" for which Joseph Silverstein will be soloist.

SIXTH WEEK AUGUST 4-5-6

41

GAZETTE (e)
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 94,350
AUG 7 1967 New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Festival

Beethoven Concerto Is Given

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — The sixth Berkshire Festival weekend at Tanglewood had variable weather and attendance.

Friday's audience of 6,676 met with rain, and the lights in the big shed went out for a few seconds while the Boston Symphony Orchestra continued to play under the direction of William Steinberg, guest conductor from Pittsburgh. Theodore Lettvin was soloist in the Beethoven Piano Concerto No. 3, the program also including that composer's Eighth and Fifth Symphonies.

Sunday afternoon, partly

Gazette Review

cloudy skies did not deter 9,018 from hearing an all-Brahms concert, Erich Leinsdorf scheduling the "Academic Festival" Overture and Third Symphony, also the Violin Concerto in D major, with concert master Joseph Silverstein as soloist.

'Fidelio' Given

Saturday was pleasant until after the concert, and 8,135 came for Leinsdorf's presentation of the original 1805 version of Beethoven's only opera, "Fidelio." Nine soloists, a narrator, the Tanglewood Choir and Berkshire Chorus and the full orchestra — all had parts in a concert version, lasting for three hours with well-maintained interest. The staging was comparable to that used for last year's "Magic Flute" and the 1965 "Lohengrin."

Reverting to the original opera score, rather than that finally produced in 1814, brought added musical interest even if the stage adroitness was lessened. This did not matter in a concert version, and hte flow of Beethoven's original music was charming, though somewhat endless in the elaborate finale.

Leinsdorf's operatic experience shone throughout the evening. Orchids also to Charles Wilson and assistant M. Lewis Spratlan for choral preparation of the 32 men and the mixed group of 100; also Andrew Raeburn for stage direction and furnishing of the narrative text.

Ryder Is Good

Alfred Ryder, local narrator, exploited the melodramatic features of the plot to the hilt, and even played some of Act II for laughs. This is a dated thriller.

Of the singers, Hanne-Lore Kuhse, leading soprano of the Berlin State Opera, was magnificent as Leonore, the devoted wife. George Shirley's expressive and warm tenor was splendid in Act II as Florestan, the tortured prisoner-husband.

Ara Berberian's rich bass excelled in the role of Rocco, the jailer, and Mary Ellen Pracht's soprano was clear and true as daughter Marcelline. Tom Krause's baritone blustered wickedly as Don Pizzaro, the governor, and Nico Castel, Harold Ennis, William Brown and Charles Van Tassel had attractive lesser parts.

TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM (e)
HOLYOKE, MASS.
CIRC. 26,950
AUG 7 1967 New England Newsclip

Three Programs Of Masters Performed At Tanglewood

The great traditional masters of music provided three programs at Tanglewood in Lenox for the weekend concerts of the Berkshire Festival.

There were audiences upwards of 6,000 for each to applaud and cheer the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conductor Erich Leinsdorf, guest conductor William Steinberg, and various soloists.

The pace will quicken this week and next at Tanglewood with special annual programs added to the usual schedule. Tuesday night the Boston Pops will make its annual appearance with Arthur Fiedler in charge of an all-Gershwin program, with pianist Earl Wild as soloist. On Wednesday evening the Fifth Festival of Contemporary Music will open with a concert by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra. And next Thursday, Aug. 17, the annual Tanglewood Gala concert will take place.

Friday night there was excitement at Tanglewood when the lights went out during a performance of Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 3 by the orchestra and soloist Theodore Lettvin. Orchestra and pianist kept right on playing and were cheered when the piece was finished and the lights restored. William Steinberg was guest conductor for the program, which also included Beethoven's Fifth and Eighth symphonies.

The Friday night prelude was a song recital by Miss Hanne-Lore Kuhse, soprano, who sang 14 German lieder and won tumultuous applause from appreciative listeners. The weekend prelude is a popular Friday night feature. It starts at 7, and there is an hour's interlude between it and the orchestral concert at 9, allowing for picnicking or strolling around the grounds.

Saturday night, the Boston Symphony under Leinsdorf and the Tanglewood Choir and Berkshire Chorus, presented a splendid performance of Beethoven's opera "Fidelio", the first or the orignial version ever gvien in this country. Miss Kuhse was soprano soloist and Alfred Ryder the narrator. Other soloists were George Shirley, Tom Krause, Ara Berberian, Miss Mary Ellen Pracht, and Nice Castel.

On Sunday afternoon an all-Brahms program featured Joseph Silverstein in the Violin Concerto and also included the Third Symphony and the Academic Festival Overture.

Russian composers will take the limelight this coming weekend at the Berkshire Festival, but on Friday night soloist Itzhak Perlman will intervene with the Sibelius Violin Concerto. John Browning will give a piano recital at the evening prelude.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 25,900
AUG 5 1967 New England Newsclip

August 5, 1967

All-Beethoven Program Conducted by Steinberg

Tanglewood welcomed back a familiar guest conductor last night. William Steinberg, conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, directed an all-Beethoven program of two symphonies, the eighth and fifth, and the Third Piano Concerto, with Theodore Lettvin as soloist.

Steinberg is now considered one of the country's elder statesmen among conductors. His authority has earned him long and high esteem and among the standard pieces of the repertory in particular, he has few peers. So in the program to which he had assigned himself, he was very much on home territory. Furthermore, he is guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra as often as any other man in the select club. The results, therefore, were predictable.

Lettvin, too, is no stranger to this area, as he appeared in recital at the Pittsfield High School auditorium some years ago and played the Beethoven Second Concerto with BSO director Erich Leinsdorf at Tanglewood in 1965.

Everything Beethoven wrote appears, in perspective, to have been written within a very few compressed years, but the Third Concerto predates last night's two symphonies by some 5 and 15 years, respectively. It has seemed easy for some self-proclaimed musicologists to decide that the odd-numbered symphonies are the tragic or the emotional heavyweights and the even numbered ones the lighter and less demanding ones. This might hold true in these present cases.

A Musical Joke

The Eighth Symphony has a second movement, scherzando, which may have been a friendly jest aimed at one of the composer's friends, Johann Maelzel, who is credited with inventing the metronome, a mechanical device for ticking time at any tempo one might desire.

Incidentally, Maelzel came to America in 1817, where he passed the rest of his life and is remembered as a shrewd man of business with a strong propensity to overstep the rules and bounds of ethics at the slightest opportunity. Among his other inventions were some hearing devices for poor deaf Beethoven and in America a mechanical chess player which proved to be a complete hoax.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

Albany Knickerbocker News
Monday, August 7, 1967

Weekend of Brilliant Music---Berlioz to Ravel to Beethoven

At Saratoga

By R. E. KRIEGER

CHARLES MUNCH

NICOLE HENRIOT-SCHWEITZER

Even the Philadelphia Orchestra applauded, smiling with what could only be called deep affection and respect.

Charles Munch lumbered out on to the stage Saturday at the Saratoga Performing Arts Center, his white hair gleaming in the lights, craggy face smiling slightly, turned on the podium and got down to business.

WHAT emerged was an extraordinary performance of Hector Berlioz's "Fantastic Symphony' 'played with such perfection and attention to the intrinsic core of the work that the audience roared to its feet at its conclusion.

It was one of those evenings when conductor and orchestra were at their very best, performing as one even in the most intricate and astonishing rhythmic demands made by Berlioz.

From the Dreams and Passions movement, through The Ball, the Scene in the Meadows and then into the violent and immensely eciting Maxrch to the Scaffold and the Dream of the Witches Sabbath where everything but the kitchen sink is used by the percussion section there was not a flaw or a miscue.

THE WHOLE work was written in a frenzy of unrequited passion by Berlioz for an Irish actress, Henrietta Smithson, who finally ended up marrying the composer after a six-year courtship.

Alas, life does not always follow the dream, and the couple were wretchedly unhappy.

That anyone could follow the Fantastic Symphony seems impossible but pianist Nicole Henroit-Schweitzer did just that in a superb performance as soloist in the Ravel "Cencerto in G Major for Piano and Orchestra."

OBVIOUSLY at the top of her form she was note perfect and was especially effective in the brilliant cadenza within the first movement.

The evening ended with the charming Suite No. 2 from Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" and that, as all the rest was eminently satisfactory.

We can't remember when we have had a more gratifying evening from beginning to end.

DUE IN ALBANY — Pianist Theodore Lettvin, who was soloist with the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood over the weekend, will be performing with the Albany Symphony during tht upcoming season.

And at Tanglewood

By EDWARD FRENCH NE

THE SIXTH weekend of the Boston Symphony concerts at Tanglewood put the emphasis on Beethoven, Friday, bringing the "Symphony No. 8 in F Major," the "Concerto No. 3 in C Minor for Piano and Orchestra" and the most famous symphony of all, "Symphony No. 5 in C Minor."

The conductor was William Steinberg, one of the present day greats in the orchestral world and the soloist was the distinguished American pianist, Theodore Lettvin who is scheduled to appear with the Albany Symphony this coming season.

Let us say at once that the overall impression of this concert was controlled power, tempered with delicacy and flexibility. Mr. Steinberg wastes no time with unneccessary gestures, his movements being concise and to the point. His interest is in making great music, and that he did, to the immense enjoyment of the large and enthusiastic audience which practically filled the 6,000-seat music shed with the usual large number of geenral admission patrons on the lawn.

THE BEETHOVEN Eighth Symphony provided an interesting contrast to the larger Fifth Symphony in C minor with the orchestra responding to the conductor's every wish. This symphony and the concerto had the clarity and precision of chamber music but with all the force needed for projection in the huge Tanglewood shed.

The pianist, Theodore Lettvin proved to be another in the rapidly increasing number of first rank American pianists. First of all, he knows how to play to project in this huge shed. His technique in the demanding Beethoven work was impeccable, and his command of the Beethoven style was complete. A real spell was cast in the "Largo" and tremendous rhythmic vitality in the final rondo. During this movement a sudden electrical storm caused the lights to go out for a short time, but neither soloist nor orchestra missed a note, continuing as though nothing had happened. The ensemble throughout was well nigh perfect, both in precision and color.

The audience responded to al lthis with five curtain calls. Only turning on the house lights closed out the enthusiastic applause.

SATURDAY NIGHT the capacity audience heard a concert version of Beethoven's only opera, "Fidelio" i nthe original 1805 version. The reason for this choice rather than the later and final revised 1814 score which is generally used when producing the opera is best explained by quoting Mr. Leinsdorf himself.

"The more I study musical works which exist in more than one version, the more treasures I find in the original; and it is, I believe the purpose of a festival such as we give here at Tanglewood to present these treasures to the world."

The well prepared production brought seven leading operatic artists to the solo roles. These included George Shirley as Florestan, Hanne-Lore Kuhse as Leonore, Tom Krause as Don Parro, Ara Berberian as Rocca, Mary Ellen Pracht as Marcelline, Nico Castil as Jaquino and Harold Enns as Don Fernando.

ALL WERE IN good voice and contributed greatly to the festive nature of the production.

The narrator, Alfred Ryder kept the audience informed as to the action taking place during the three acts.

The solo arias, while demanding the utmost in vocal skill and interpretation are not nearly as grateful and ttrctive as the many ensembles which are the most melodious parts of the opera.

THE CONDUCTING of Mr. Leinsdorf, the work of the chorus and orchestra were superb, the off-stage trumpets being particularly effective. We can be grateful that Mr. Leinsdorf and the Berkshire Festival gave us this opportunity to hear this 1805 version of Fidelio under such favorable musical conditions. Our gratitude was demonstrated by the tremendous enthusiasm shown conductor, soloists, chorus and orchestra.

42

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350

AUG 5 1967 New England Newsclip

Lights Out in Lenox But BSO Plays On

By R. C. HAMMERICH
Union Music Critic

LENOX—All the lights went out in the great shed at Tanglewood Friday night for a heart-stopping moment . . . perhaps three seconds . . . but the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its visiting soloist, Theodore Lettvin, didn't miss a beat.

It seemed as if the sound began to churn around a bit and lose its clarity, but that is only a vague memory distended by emotional shock.

Near the End

The moment came a few bars near the finish of Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 3 and, of course, second thoughts were of the standby electricians backstage never very far from the switches that can turn on emergency generators.

Nevertheless, the moment was followed by applause and seconds later when the piece finished, a shout of joy . . . some of which must have been in approval of the music, for it was well played.

The cause, as might be expected, was an electrical storm which first made itself known with low thunderous rumbles during the concerto's lyrically warm and graceful second movement. The rain arrived then, too, and it fell heavily during intermission. There were 6676 in the audience (the shed has regular seats for a few less than 6000).

The Old School

William Steinberg, guest conductor, like Erich Leinsdorf, likes "to hear the right note played at the right time," which means that under their guidance the music of the Germanic composers of the 17th and 18th Centuries tends to sound almost solid as if it were carefully carved in dark walnut, velvety smooth and hand-burnished in gleaming oil.

It was like that Friday night in spite of the 100 per cent humidity. Steinberg led Leinsdorf's men through an all-Beethoven program which included Symphonies Nos. 5 and 8 as well as the aforementioned concerto.

Steinberg is music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra and regular guest on the podium with the New York Philharmonic.

He is a leader of the old school. He stood with feet firmly planted wide apart, arms and hands and head moving strongly and definitely without extraneous flurries. There was a feeling that the music could go nowhere but exactly where he intended it to go.

Beautifully Thrusting

As expected, he displayed his strong feeling for seamless continuity as well as Beethoven's liking for sudden, thrusting gestures, contrasting qualities difficult to control. Also as expected, he made them seem easy . . . also beautiful.

Lettvin's piano showed contrasts of a different nature. He played the first and third movements with an incisive manner and glittering, brilliant tone. The middle movement was quite different. It was (the piano) serene, slow and sensitive.

Lettvin's primary quality, however, was that of a cool, immaculate technician. Once he struck two notes when he should have sounded one and he had established such an aura of technical perfection, the bobble came as a shock.

The weekend prelude audience came up with shouts of approval, and lengthy applause, for the 14 German lieder by Schubert, Schumann, Brahms and Strauss presented between 7 and 8 by Miss Hanne-Lore Kuhse, soprano.

East Wind

Miss Kuhse has been the leading dramatic soprano at the (East) Berlin State Opera since 1963 and is known in Paris and Italy as well as throughout the Iron Curtain countries.

She performed with consummate skill and beauty Friday. Her technical facility was smooth and precise and her tonal characteristics changed according to the mood of the song.

Her range also was very wide, from deep, warm mezzo-soprano to high, brilliant dramatic soprano and she controlled her voice's placement with seeming ease.

Tonight she will sing the role of Leonore when the orchestra, the combined Berkshire Chorus and Tanglewood Choir and eight other soloists perform the first (1805) version of Beethoven's opera, "Fidelio".

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350

AUG 7 1967 New England Newsclip

Placid Brahms at Tanglewood

By R. C. HAMMERICH
Union Music Critic

LENOX — Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, made an apt choice when he asked his concertmaster, Joseph Silverstein to play the solo part for Brahms Violin Concerto (Op. 77) Sunday afternoon at Tanglewood.

Fine Weather

It was a benevolent afternoon for an all-Brahms concert, and 9018 customers strolled through the gates to enjoy it.

The weather was as benign as the music, and Silverstein's musical manner was appropriate.

He moved through the difficult technical demands of the piece with deceiving aplomb, and his characteristically gentle tone (and musical spirit) was entirely harmonious with the concerto, the atmosphere Leinsdorf had established with the preceding Third Symphony and "Academic Festival" Overture and the laziness of the warm afternoon.

The 3000 occupants of the lawns may have had the best of it. They could stretch out and accept the invitation of the music, all of it, to relax.

There was a bit of liveliness in the opening overture along with a touch of old-school, manly sentiment appropriate to the student drinking songs around which the overture is constructed, but a comforting placidity became the dominant mood of the afternoon.

Leinsdorf established it during the symphony by avoiding theatrical gestures (in the music) and by setting a leisurely pace to help make the mood expansive and bountiful.

There was another element in the air Sunday that seemed to help keep the music from becoming soggy. It was a noticeable diminishing of the recent level of humidity.

Whatever the reason, there was a cleanliness and tonal sheen in the sound that gave the musical texture a transparency that was especially helpful to the symphony. Its inner workings were all the more visible.

Attendance Down

The weekend's total attendance was 27,021, somewhat fewer than the preceding weekend, which was the largest of the season.

Next weekend the program will include Sibelius' Violin Concerto with Itzhak Perlman as soloist and music by Moussorgsky and Tchaikovsky with Leinsdorf as conductor Friday, three works by Glinka, Borodin and Tchaikovsky under William Steinberg's direction Saturday and John Browning as soloist for Prokofiev's Piano Concerto No. 1 and Rachmaninoff's "Paganini Rhapsody" with Leinsdorf as conductor Sunday.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 885,000 SUN. 1,500,000

AUG 7 1967

Music: 'Fidelio' in the Original Version

Beethoven Work Given for First Time in U.S.

Erich Leinsdorf Leads the Boston Symphony

By RAYMOND ERICSON
Special to The New York Times

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 6—The Berkshire Music Festival behaved like a festival last night and came up with something special—the original version of Beethoven's only opera, "Fidelio." As far as is known, it had not previously been performed in this country.

The final version, is familiar, of course, but its forerunner turned out to be interesting enough to raise the question of which version is superior.

"Fidelio" had its premiere in Vienna in 1805. Its failure at that time could be attributed to a poor performance and an audience largely made up of French occupation troops.

Beethoven revised it, chiefly by making cuts, for performances the following year. This apparently didn't help with the public. For the final version there was large-scale reworking of the original material and when it was produced in 1814 it became a popular success.

•

The obvious ways in which the opera was changed were the deletion of two set pieces from the first act and the revamping of the finales to the acts. Some of the arias and duets begin familiarly, but end differently.

In countless places there are small variations—elisions or extensions of phrases, a change in the melodic line, rescoring. In general, Beethoven tightened and condensed for the final version and made more interesting modulations in the harmonies. Everything he did is understandable and makes sense in musical terms. However, in dramatic terms the changes were not necessarily improvements.

The first part of the opera, in its original form, begins with set pieces for one, two, three and four voices in that order. The trio, eventually deleted, is for Marcelline, Jaquino and Rocco, and is delightful. There is another duet, also deleted later, for Marcelline and Leonore. It flows along in a beautiful, almost Mozartean style.

The way in which Beethoven originally let his finales run on has its compensations, too, since they are able to build more gradually and generate more excitement.

The great "Abscheulicher" recitative for Leonore is missing from the early version. Her music is more florid. An emphasis on lyricism, melodic richness and vocal resources pervades the opera, making it a rival in interest to the final version.

The performance was excellent. A major factor was the playing of the Boston Symphony. This kind of brilliant orchestral sound and technical accuracy is seldom encountered in the opera house. Erich Leinsdorf, whose idea it was to resurrect the original version, kept the singers and players under strict control, but he was not above whipping up an orchestral storm whenever suitable.

•

Leonore was sung by Hanne-Lore Kuhse, a soprano from East Germany, who made her American debut last spring in Philadelphia as Isolde. Singing under better circumstances here, she made a more favorable impression in the Beethoven opera than she had in the Wagner. She has a lovely voice, and she uses it sensitively, but she didn't have the technique to cope with all the florid passages; she omitted some, and her high notes were hard and shrill.

There were tasteful, well-sung performances from George Shirley as Florestan, Mary Ellen Pracht as Marcelline, Tom Krause as Pizarro, Ara Berberian as Rocco, Nico Castel as Jaquino and Harold Enns as Fernando.

HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE (e)
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
CIRC. 11,000

AUG 9 1967 New England Newsclip

Two Significant Events Presented At Tanglewood To Appreciative Audience

Two events of importance took place Saturday evening at Tanglewood. The first was what was most likely the first performance in this country of the original version of Beethoven's "Fidelio." The second was the presentation of the German soprano, Hanne-Lore Kuhse, in the role of Lenore, the central figure in the opera. Unfortunately, neither the opera nor the soprano were unqualified successes, and both for reasons that are inherent in the score that Erich Leinsdorf, music director, chose to exhume for the occasion.

Beethoven's only opera has always been a problematic affair. There are pages of glorious music, but there are also pages of second-class vocal writing, however cleverly arranged or developed. Even so, the great "Abscheulicher," the demoniacal ragings of Pizzaro, and almost the entire final act are splendid indeed, even if they do not reveal character (as do the arias in a Mozart opera for instance) and instead act as musical declamation, freezing the action in an attitude and substituting a generality for an individual.

That characteristic, which indicates the reason for Beethoven's ultimate failure with opera, did not change from the 1805 to the 1814 version of the work. What did change were the structure and even the substance of much of the vocal writing. Some numbers were added, and one was cut, and most of the rest of it was profoundly altered, alterations required by major revisions in the text. If Saturday night's production may be used as any measure, they were alterations for the better.

Consider Leonore's music as a case in point. This role is at best almost impossible to sing, not because of dramatic exigencies, but because of the vocal demands. In the first part of the opera, Leonore must make an effect (and make herself heard) employing a tessitura that is prevailingly low; and even in the great aria, she really does not rise above what would be comfortable for a mezzo-soprano with solid, blooming top notes. In the 1805 version, however, and in the duet with Florestan, Leonore is expected to carry a vocal line that stays in the stratosphere, and she must sustain the heights until the end of the opera.

It would be interesting to hear Miss Kuhse in the commonly performed version of the opera. As it was, she displayed a voice of some size and quality, even though one could not really say what the size and quality were, owing to the performing conditions in the shed (The singers were placed high on a platform behind the orchestra.) She obviously had some ideas of what the role was about, and endeavored to project a sense of the character, but she was lost in the ensembles early in the opera (she was doubtless saving herself for the aria), and the aria, in the earlier version, is quite awkward in its coloratura, so that again it is difficult to assess the singing per se. After that point, the voice seemed freer and fuller, and she certainly did not spare herself, especially in the Leonore-Florestan duet in the last act. From the point of view of the audience she was a triumph, for they were unstinting in their applause; even so, this critic would like to reserve judgment until he could hear her in an opera house and in music that is not so unvocal.

For the rest of the cast, the 1805 version also changed things a bit. Marcelline, for instance, was offered a duet with Fidelio (wisely cut in the later score), and Mary Ellen Pracht performed that as she did the rest of the role, with a generally pleasant voice which does not, unfortunately, really ring on top. Florestan became less important generally, and the 1805 writing made it possible for a lyric tenor like George Shirley (with a really handsome voice, dark, solid and rich) to cope with its demands. Least affected were Ara Berberian, a full-voiced Rocco, Nico Castel, an acceptable Jaquino and Tom Krause, who was overwhelmed by Pizarro's demanding music. Charles Van Tassel and William Brown were fine as the first and second prisoner, and the chorus work was always satisfying, sometimes brilliant.

Erich Leinsdorf conducted in leisurely fashion, and much of the drama inherent in the score was allowed to evaporate in the slowness of the approach. This was especially true of the overture, which emerged more Leinsdorf than Beethoven. The heavy, solemn approach simply increased the heaviness and the solemnity and submerged the lyricism of the piece, and much of the rest of it was simply too slow.

Of course, even the 1814 version of the opera has its failings and flaws, (and the popularity of the work has always depended upon the availability of first class singers who are able to cope with the various roles' heroic demands), but while presenting what is in essence the composer's first thoughts on the subject, thoughts that were later refined and reshaped, might be of interest to the musical historian, all it does is to show Beethoven (and various vocal artists), already struggling with an uncongenial form, in a more ungraceful guise.

B.D.

SUNDAY REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 115,950
AUG 6 _ 1967
New England Newsclip

'Fidelio' Is Musical First at Tanglewood

By R. C. HAMMERICH
(Republican Music Critic)

LENOX—There was a scattering of very special listeners at Tanglewood Saturday night to hear a concert version of Beethoven's opera "Fidelio."

They were special because they were musical experts attending a special occasion—the first performance in the Western Hemisphere, Boston Symphony Orchestra officials believe, of the original version of the opera.

Superb Music

The rest of the listeners were there because of the music and they should have been happy. It was superb.

High on a platform behind the chorus stood the soloists. They entered the tinted spotlights from the sides and from behind a center screen. They moved and gestured and made faces. They sang in German from memory.

At right behind a lecturn was the narrator, Alfred Ryder. Between numbers he explained the action. Leinsdorf kept the business moving briskly.

He allowed no time for applause, except once when he couldn't stop it. That was after Miss Hanne-Lore Kuhes sang Leonore's big aria, one of the most difficult in opera. She stopped the show.

Huge Undertaking

But let us face some facts:

There were nine soloists and a narrator, the combined Tanglewood Choir and Berkshire Chorus (about 85 voices) and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, all conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

The soloists were headed by George Shirley as Florestan the prisoner; Miss Hanne-Lore Kuhse as Leonore, his wife; Tom Krause as Don Pizzaro, governor of the prison; Ara Berberian as Rocco, chief warder; Miss Mary Ellen Pracht as Marcelline, his daughter; and Nico Castel as Jaquino, the turnkey.

The history is of more than casual interest. The first version (heard Saturday) was performed three times in 1805, the second four times in 1806 and the third, the well-known version, first in 1814.

Failure in 1805

It was a failure in 1805 and 1806, but it is difficult now to know why. The changes from 1806 to 1814, though many, were not radical. Most noticeable to those well acquainted with the 1814 version are the loss of three or four numbers, substitution, rearrangement and reworking of a few others and lengthening and shortening here and there. The music in all versions is still first-class Beethoven.

The story is deceptively simple. Florestan is a political prisoner of Don Pizarro. His wife, Leonore, disguises herself as a boy and goes to work in the prison under the name Fidelio in order to find a way to help her husband.

At the climax she does, at great risk, save her husband from death after weathering difficulties along the way. Among her troubles are her need to protect her disguise even though the prison warden's daughter falls in love with her, thinking she is Fidelio.

Also along the way there is some great music . . . especially during the vocal ensembles.

Miss Kuhse is well known in Europe, especially Eastern Europe, as a dramatic Leonore. She seemed subdued during the early scenes Saturday, but her big aria was spectacular.

Miss Pracht was a decorative as well as musically appealing Marcelline, and Berberian resented the most human character in the story, Rocco, with believable conviction.

Krause, too, was a strong villain, and George Shirley's death's door Forestan was memorable.

Fine Teamwork

It is the ensemble work, though, which can lift this opera out of the singspiel level, and the soloists blended with fine teamwork. The duets, trios and quartets follow one upon the other. Saturday they were uniformly pleasing.

There were 8135 in the audience. Many probably did not expect to be asked to stay past the usual Saturday windup time of 10.

At 10 the intermission was ending and there was another hour of fine music to go.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 SUN. 122,607
AUG 7 1967

Tanglewood Weekend Draws Good Crowds

By ROBERT BARBER

Tanglewood's Boston Symphony wound up its sixth weekend of concert Sunday afternoon with an all-Brahms program featuring the incomparable violinist, Joseph Silverstein, and the Concerto in D-major.

Like Beethoven—the featured composer at Friday night's concert—Brahms tried his hand at a violin concerto only once and the result, again like Beethoven, was full with symphonic interest and contained much of Brahms' best.

Also like Beethoven's concerto, it was avoided for years after it was composed because it is an immensely difficult piece for any violinist.

But Silverstein, who is concert master for the Boston Symphony and first violinist for the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, handled the concerto with the aplomb expected of a violinist who joined the great Boston Orchestra when he was only 23—the youngest member at the time.

Sunday's program also included Symphony No. 3 and the "Academic Festival" Overture, Op. 80, all under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf.

Despite generally threatening skies all weekend, there were 6,676 persons at Friday's program, 8,135 present Saturday and 9,018 Sunday afternoon.

Friday evening's Beethoven program included his ever-popular Fifth Symphony; the Eighth and his Piano Concerto No. 3 with soloist Theodore Letpvin. The program was under the direction of William Steinberg.

Leisndorf conducted the Saturday evening program — Beethoven's opera "Fidelio"—and it was well received despite the fact it is seldom heard.

Leinsdorf said of it: "The more I study musical works which exist in more than one version, the more treasures I find in the original. It is, I believe, the purpose of a festival such as we give here at Tanglewood to present these treasures to the world."

That's the way he presented it—featuring such great voices as George Shirley, Hanna-Lore Kuhse, Tom Krause, Ara Berberian and Nico Castel with the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus.

Attendance-wise, it was one of the best weekends the festival has had despite the facts that Saratoga Performing Arts opened Thursday night with the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, and that it rained both Friday and Saturday and threatened to all Sunday afternoon.

Tomorrow evening at eight, the Boston Pops will make its popular one-shot annual appearance at Tanglewood with an all-Gershwin program under the direction of Arthur Fiedler. Earl Wild will be the piano soloist.

Thursday evening, August 17, it's "Tanglewood on Parade," another program that usually is an immense success. It will feature Mozart, Vorak, Saint-Saens and Tchaikovsky under the baton of Leinsdorf. The program is for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center.

Next Friday, Leinsdorf will conduct Moussorgsky's "Khovanchina Prelude" Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6, and Sibelius, Violin Concerto.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900
AUG 3 _ 1967
New England Newsclip

SOLOISTS for the 1805 version of Beethoven's "Fidelio" rehearse with Erich Leinsdorf (2nd from right) who will conduct the opera at Tanglewood Saturday evening. From left: Harold Enns, George Shirley, Ara Berberian, Nico Castel, Hanne-Lore Kuhse, Leinsdorf, Mary Ellen Pracht.

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 192,400
AUG 8 1967
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood 'Fidelio' faithful to Beethoven's score

By Clifford Barnes

Lenox, Mass.

Erich Leinsdorf's forte is opera. It brings out his finest qualities because he puts his whole emotional self into the music. He worked hard Saturday night at Tanglewood, keeping a handkerchief on the music stand to wipe his brow during the pauses in Beethoven's "Fidelio." It was a personal triumph for him and for everyone involved in this Boston Symphony project.

This was perhaps the first performance in the Western Hemisphere of the original version of Beethoven's only opera. Musicologists and opera specialists reveled in the rare opportunity to hear the score prepared for Vienna in 1805. The vast majority of the audience could only be interested and aware through excellent, detailed program notes of what happened to bring about the 1814 version we know today.

Andrew Raeburn had prepared an English narration to replace the spoken dialogue of the original "singspiel" style, leaving only a small portion at the beginning of the third act. Alfred Ryder generally read it satisfactorily. But where the plot gets melodramatic, the audience chuckled and finally applauded the fact that conjugal love triumphs over all.

Kuhse show-stopper

The opera was presented in a semi-staged, concert version, with the soloists in formal evening attire on raised platforms at the back of the stage. Mr. Raeburn arranged some stage movement and "acting" to give a flowing continuity to the work. Best of all, Mr. Leinsdorf and Mr. Ryder conspired to pick up the narration immediately at the conclusion of each "number."

The audience succeeded twice in breaking in where Hanne-Lore Kuhse had really stopped the show. The prolonged applause after her big second-act aria was caused by a startling display of dramatic-coloratura soprano singing. When this East German star was joined by the American tenor George Shirley for the Leonore-Florestan duet in Act III, even Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra joined the listeners in an ovation. Beethoven was unmerciful in his demands for high B's and C's in the original.

The rest of the 1805 version is not significantly worth retaining except for casual interest. Still the cast did well by it. Mr. Shirley's aria at the beginning of Act III served as a warm-up for the rest of the proceedings. Tom Krause was properly villainous and autocratic as Don Pizarro.

Mary Ellen Pracht was the most attractive Marcelline within memory — both in voice and figure. Ara Berberian, Nico Castel, and Harold Enns brought to life the role of Rocco, Jaquino, and Don Fernando. The Tanglewood Choir and Berkshire Chorus supplied the choral work.

From the opening notes of the overture—"Leonore" No. 2 — until the last chord at 11 p.m., Mr. Leinsdorf communicated his drive and enthusiasm. The soloists, chorus, and orchestra responded.

The audience will remember.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900
AUG 11 1967
New England Newsclip

and Footnotes

BRUSHING UP: Movie star Anthony Perkins, in Great Barrington with 20th Century-Fox making a movie, caused The Eagle photographer a bit of amusement the other day in the new Bryant Manor Restaurant. The photographer with camera hurried in, was spotted by Perkins, and he at once cringed back into a corner to avoid being plagued to pose for a local picture. Brushing past, our man went to the kitchen, rounded up the chef and maitre d' and posed them in the dining room as an illustration for a coming Berkshire Week culinary story. Such a let-down . . . Angelo Balardini of the Highland Restaurant couldn't resist crowing a little about the lady tourist from Asheville, N.C., who stopped in and bought eight quarts of their spaghetti sauce to take home to put in the freezer. "Last year," says he, "she said she got six quarts. I guess she likes it." . . . A couple of days ago Jayson Katz, a partner in the S & J Variety Store, and a chance customer realized they'd met before. "Are you from Brooklyn?" asked the customer, but Jay is a Pittsfield native. Then both realized they'd served in the same company in 1951-1952 in the Korean War. The man was here visiting his daughter at Camp Lenore, Hinsdale, and by chance dropped in to buy something. But the most embarrassing part of it all, Jay can't for the life of him remember the chap's name! . . . Have you chanced to observe the wonderful solid brick and marble construction of the old Post Office building, revealed in its remodeling into a new city hall? It's an affront and a rebuke to present-day slapped-up cardboard and stapled-together jerry building methods. Maybe that's the reason some builders are anxious to have old landmarks leveled as fast as ever they can. They make them feel uneasy . . . Michael Steinberg, tart music critic for the Boston Globe, in his review of "Fidelio" given at Tanglewood took such a swipe at the narration "ludicrously spoken by some ham from a theatre in Stockbridge who was booed as he fully deserved." The "ham" was in fact veteran actor Alfred Ryder of the Berkshire Playhouse who did the best he could with the text as provided, according to folks who know about it. Nor does anyone at the performance recall a single boo, deserved or not.

LASSIE, the famous collie film and television star, was acquired by her now wealthy owner Rudd Weatherwax by default. Lassie's original owner brought her to Rudd to be broken of a habit of chasing cars. Later her owner phoned and told Rudd to keep her in payment of his bill.

ONE OF the most famous women in the nation just observed her 93rd birthday. On Aug. 5, 1876, the cornerstone of the Statue of Liberty at New York harbor's entrance was laid. She doesn't look her age.

RICHARD V. HAPPEL.

44

Herald Tues Aug 1 67

Beethoven Heard At Tanglewood

By GEORGE W. STOWE

Erich Leinsdorf has made opera in concert form a Tanglewood tradition in the last few years. Saturday night he presented the original (1805) version of Beethoven's "Fidelio" with an excellent cast of soloists, chorus, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Evidently Mr. Leinsdorf holds this version in high esteem. Certainly it differs notably from the final revision, not only in small changes throughout but in the final scene that is drastically changed. The vocal writing makes great demands on the principals, although not necessarily intensifying the inherent drama.

* * *

The Leonore Overture No. 2 (the prelude to the original version) set the mood for Leinsdorf and the orchestra brought invigorating force and high drama to its reading, genuine Beethovenate spirit.

In the role of Leonore was Hanne-Lore Kuhse, a leading soprano of the Berlin State Opera, who had made her American debut earlier this year. Short and stocky in appearance, she brought a rock-solid tone and technique to the role and enjoyed a prolonged ovation after her "Abscheulicher" aria, the first time the audience interrupted Saturday's performance.

* * *

George Shirley, who was acclaimed for his Tamino in last year's "Magic Flute," was the sensitive, moving Florestan.

And Tom Krause, who Don Pizarro is familiar to record collectors, was wholly authoritative as the arch-villain of the piece. His large and voluminous voice was one of the few that could compete with the full orchestra. Ara Berberian was generally admirable as Rocco, although I find his voice often lacks focus.

* * *

Mary Ellen Pracht was a charming Marcelline, proving once again that she must be a valuable member of any opera she graces. Nico Castel was the Jacquino and Harold Enns the Don Fernando. The Tanglewood Choir and Berkshire Chorus (which had been prepared by Charles Wilson) made an artistic contribution to the proceedings.

For this version Alfred Ryder was the narrator, bringing the whole production into proper focus for those who were unfamiliar with the German text used Saturday. Some 8100 persons attended the performance at Lenox, Mass.

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,100
AUG 7 1967
New England Newsclip

Beethoven's Original Fidelio Tanglewood Delight

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Music Critic

LENOX—An unforgettable evening: a great and vital work of Beethoven's, given only a handful of times ever, and probably not at all in America; an exciting performance generally, whose special glory was the portrayal of Leonore by the most wonderful new singer heard in this country since the debut of Nilsson.

The "Fidelio" of 1805, as performed Saturday night at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is flawed, and the revisions of 1814 that produced the work we see in the theater and hear on records today were necessary to have a tenable proposition for the modern theater. Also, the 1814 score contains many strokes of genius that enrich the work in ways that go far beyond questions of practicability: the prisoners' music at the end of Act I, the amazing cross-rhythms in the second finale, the spoken interruption of the trumpet quartet, almost all the changes in the role of Pizarro, the hallucinatory second part of Florestan's aria, are examples.

Almost every improvement in the 1814 "Fidelio" carries some loss also: the recitative in pathetic style, "Ach brich noch nicht, du mattes Herz!," before Leonore's aria; the long version of the Leonore-Florestan duet with Beethoven's original and far better melody (the later one being meanly cropped back to eliminate high notes), and also the elaborate recitative before it; many points in the second finale, for instance the agitated duet, "O Gott, nun ist's um uns gescheh'n," but especially the prayer, "O Gott! o welch' ein Augenblick!," which in its magnificently broad original form is the most exalted page in all the "Fidelio" scores.

Scale was the crucial issue in the revisions. The period of the original "Fidelio" is that of Beethoven's most expansive music, of such things as the first movement of the Violin Concerto and of the Quartet Op.59,1. Such breadth, which dominates the 1805 opera score as well, is difficult, even dangerous, in the theater, and so Beethoven eliminated not merely whole pieces—among them a lovely, though dramatically badly placed, duet for Leonore and Marzelline—but also many short bits, a page here, six bars compressed to two there, a single measure gone somewhere else. The most fascinating thing about that is that the pieces whose length, whose insistence on being "musical" rather than theatrical, makes them most problematic in the familiar "Fidelio," namely the two great Trios, are stronger and more convincing in their bigger original forms.

The point altogether is that while the later score may replace the earlier one in the practical life of our theaters, it does not render the original one obsolete or invalid. The 1805 "Fidelio" is a work of surging vitality with a life all its own, full of strokes whose loss cannot represent Beethoven's uncompromised artistic conviction, one of which the traditional estimate, based on inexperience with performance, must be revised, and one that we must know even as we have come to recognize that among the overtures we must know "Leonore 2" as well as "Leonore 3."

Hanne-Lore Kuhse, who sang Leonore, is an East German, probably in her middle 30's, who made her American debut in a "Tristan" performance in Philadelphia last season. A heavy woman, she could hardly make a convincing Fidelio on the stage. She has a dramatic gift: her performance was remarkable before she had sung a note, by virtue of her concentration and stillness as she stood waiting for her entrance in the quartet.

The ARTS

FIDELIO, Beethoven's opera in the original 3-act version of 1805, given in concert form at Tanglewood Saturday evening, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Tanglewood Choir and Berkshire Chorus prepared by Charles Wilson, and with the following cast:

Leonore ..... Hanne-Lore Kuhse
Florestan ..... George Shirley
Don Pizarro ..... Tom Krause
Rocco ..... Ara Berberian
Marzelline ..... Mary Ellen Pracht
Jaquino ..... Nico Castel
Don Fernando ..... Harold Enns
Prisoners
William Brown, Charles Van Tassel

Her voice is a rich, warm, evenly textured soprano of great amplitude. For splendor and radiance I have heard nothing to equal the 10 high B's and the two C's in the "O namen-, namenlose Freude!" duet.

As an interpreter, she gives everything words and music demand, everything they imply, and nothing in excess. Her work is as free of mannerism and of externally imposed dramatics as her voice is free of forcing and pushing. That makes her a great artist, and the operation of her exceptional word sense, of a remarkable, warm femininity, make her a great Leonore, by miles the greatest in my experience.

Her aria got Frau Kuhse an immense ovation, the duet an even bigger one, with Mr. Leinsdorf himself leading the applause. George Shirley contributed distinguished singing as Florestan, though his voice was still cold for his aria. Tom Krause was quite a good Pizarro, though he did not always have enough vocal impact. Ara Berberian, Nico Castel, Harold Enns and William Brown did singing that was in various ways good and interesting, but Mary Ellen Pracht's Marzelline was, for lack of diction, not satisfactory.

Erich Leinsdorf, except for a few under-characterized numbers early in the first act, led a strong and intelligent performance, one in which he had access to a certain emotional energy which, when it is in action, can make him a most gripping conductor. The Boston Symphony played beautifully, though there were some bad horn moments at the start of Leonore's aria. The Choral singing was very fine. The one really disturbing blot was in the narration put in place of the spoken dialogue of the original, the text itself being very well written by Andrew Raeburn, but ludicrously spoken by some ham from a theater in Stockbridge who was booed as he fully deserved.

TELEGRAM (m)
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 62,350
AUG 7 1967
New England Newsclip

Music: 'Fidelio' Performed At Tanglewood

LENOX — A conspicious asset to this summer's highly standard Tanglewood programs was the concert performance of Beethoven's only opera, "Fidelio," on Saturday night.

The Berkshire Music Festival's sixth week was attended by 28,023 persons.

The weekend's greatest acclaim, however, was given Joseph Silverstein yesterday afternoon for his performance of the Brahms Violin Concerto with the Boston Symphony conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

Several aspects of "Fidelio" made it significant. Leinsdorf conducted the original version, a special occasion. The second "Leonore" Overture was used, as Beethoven intended.

Trumpet Fanfares

The orchestra played so nobly that everything sounded important. Armando Ghitalla's off-stage trumpet fanfares were spotless. A chorus of 50 men from the Tanglewood Choir and Berkshire Chorus sang as an integral part of the whole rather than an exhibition unit.

Alfred Ryder was a marvelous narrator. The text by Andrew Raeburn kept the audience versed on story developments with pertinent information.

Perhaps even more exciting was Hanne-Lore Kuhse's debut with the Boston Symphony as Leonore. Leading soprano with the Berlin State Opera, Miss Kuhse has a figure of heroic proportions. She might be a mite ludicruous in a staged production, assuming the male role of Fidelio, as required by the story.

But there was everything magnificent about Miss Kuhse's singing. She has a voluptuous, powerful, expressive voice that brought the evening's first interruption for applause when she finished her big second act aria.

Fine Quality

Fine quality, clear diction and dramatic import marked Mary Ellen Pracht's work as Marcelline. George Shirley was eloquent as Florestan, the doomed political prisoner. Ara Berberian brought stature and a fine bass voice to Rocco, the jailer.

Special costuming was not used, and gestures were sparing Dramatic impressions came through. Characters appeared from behind panels on a staging above chorus and orchestra.

Above all, it was a triumph for Leinsdorf who held it together with hands of steel, and made it work.

Yesterday afternoon, Silverstein, Boston Symphony concert master, gave a musicanly account of the Brahms concerto. His tone was not large, but singing and sensitive. Technique was secure. Orchestra and conductor respected his solo status by adapting to his style and using moderate volume.

Conducted Without Score

Leinsdorf's confidence in Silverstein was such that he conducted without score, a rare occurrence.

"Academic Festival" Overture and Symphony No. 3 in F major completed yesterday's all-Brahms program.

The Overture was filled with nervous energy. Leinsdorf strung its college tunes in a neat, close-knit package. The closing "Gaudeamus Igitur" had sweep and sparkle.

Highlights of the Third Symphony were rhapsodic conversations between strings and winds, personal quality of the slow movement, dark-hued solemnity of the third, vigor with grandiosity in the finale.

R.M.

NEWS (e)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 98,500
AUG 7 1967
New England Newsclip

'Fidelio' Soloists Sing With Perfection

By ARTHUR T. ANDREWES

All operas should be presented on a stage with the appropriate costumes, settings, and theatrical effects. The burden of transcending the inadequacies of a cold stage is just too much for the average opera and the soloists singing the arias.

Thus it was on Saturday night that Tanglewood presented a performance of the original "Fidelio," Beethoven's only opera. Staged on elevated platforms above the audience, nine soloists performed with unquestionable perfecton the arias from the German language opera.

Competition from the narrating histrionics of Alfred Ryder and the wildly active conducting by the elevated Erich Leinsdorf prevented the true value of the vocal presentation and operatic continuity from reaching the level of a genuine stage presentation.

This was a historic event. It was the first time this original form of Fidelio had been performed in this country. It was a debut worthy of Tanglewood and the ingenuity of Erich Leinsdorf. The idea and reasons behind its public consumation were all admirable.

However, the organization should not have gone half heartedly into the effort. The orchestra should have assumed its proper location for an opera. In the pit. The stage should have been devoted to the development of a proper setting for such a milestone occasion. The melodramatic narrator should have been replaced by an expertly dramatic production. The idea was great but the execution was inadequate.

Success came through the emotionally charged delivery of the soloists portraying the roles in the opera. Delightfully invigorating performances came from the solo and duet accomplishments of tenor George Shirley and soprano Hanna-Lorre Kuhse, in the roles of Leonore and Florestan.

Both artists displayed clarity and discerning shading in every aria. Above all of the others their combined talents transcended poor atmosphere to establish a full character relationship. If a best of the night was to be selected, however, it would have to be Mr. Shirley.

Arriving with strong deliveries but with almost oratorical restraint were Ara Berberian as Rocco and Mary Ellen Pracht as his daughter. Under the circumstances both artists were above average under every criteria.

The first two thirds of the production worked slowly and the intermission proved to be almost necessary in face of the pondersome pace written into the work.

The final act of the opera moved with the speed of a well dispatched arrow as aria after aria of breath taking vocal presentation swept the entire program along with well defined exposition.

The entire program was far above the average for Tanglewood. Need for a fully developed opera department is accutely apparent. With all of the potentially spectacular material available and the presence of a totally adjustable staging facility the people who decide things at Tanglewood should turn their heads toward respectably produced opera rather than graphic arts, drama and dance.

44

Beethoven Heard At Tanglewood

By GEORGE W. STOWE

Erich Leinsdorf has made opera in concert form a Tanglewood tradition in the last few years. Saturday night he presented the original (1805) version of Beethoven's "Fidelio" with an excellent cast of soloists, chorus, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Evidently Mr. Leinsdorf holds this version in high esteem. Certainly it differs notably from the final revision, not only in small changes throughout but in the final scene that is drastically changed. The vocal writing makes great demands on the principals, although not necessarily intensifying the inherent drama.

* * *

The Leonore Overture No. 2 (the prelude to the original version) set the mood for Leinsdorf and the orchestra brought invigorating force and high drama to its reading, genuine Beethovenate spirit.

In the role of Leonore was Hanne-Lore Kuhse, a leading soprano of the Berlin State Opera, who had made her American debut earlier this year. Short and stocky in appearance, she brought a rock-solid tone and technique to the role and enjoyed a prolonged ovation after her "Abscheulicher" aria, the first time the audience interrupted Saturday's performance.

* * *

George Shirley, who was acclaimed for his Tamino in last year's "Magic Flute," was the sensitive, moving Florestan.

And Tom Krause, who Don Pizarro is familiar to record collectors, was wholly authoritative as the arch-villain of the piece. His large and voluminous voice was one of the few that could compete with the full orchestra. Ara Berberian was generally admirable as Rocco, although I find his voice often lacks focus.

* * *

Mary Ellen Pracht was a charming Marcelline, proving once again that she must be a valuable member of any opera she graces. Nico Castel was the Jacquino and Harold Enns the Don Fernando. The Tanglewood Choir and Berkshire Chorus (which had been prepared by Charles Wilson) made an artistic contribution to the proceedings.

For this version Alfred Ryder was the narrator, bringing the whole production into proper focus for those who were unfamiliar with the German text used Saturday. Some 8100 persons attended the performance at Lenox, Mass.

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,100
AUG 7 1967
New England Newsclip

Beethoven's Original Fidelio Tanglewood Delight

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Music Critic

LENOX—An unforgettable evening: a great and vital work of Beethoven's, given only a handful of times ever, and probably not at all in America; an exciting performance generally, whose special glory was the portrayal of Leonore by the most wonderful new singer heard in this country since the debut of Nilsson.

The "Fidelio" of 1805, as performed Saturday night at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is flawed, and the revisions of 1814 that produced the work we see in the theater and hear on records today were necessary to have a tenable proposition for the modern theater. Also, the 1814 score contains many strokes of genius that enrich the work in ways that go far beyond questions of practicability: the prisoners' music at the end of Act I, the amazing cross-rhythms in the second finale, the spoken interruption of the trumpet quartet, almost all the changes in the role of Pizarro, the hallucinatory second part of Florestan's aria, are examples.

Almost every improvement in the 1814 "Fidelio" carries some loss also: the recitative in pathetic style, "Ach brich noch nicht, du mattes Herz!," before Leonore's aria; the long version of the Leonore-Florestan duet with Beethoven's original and far better melody (the later one being meanly cropped back to eliminate high notes), and also the elaborate recitative before it; many points in the second finale, for instance the agitated duet, "O Gott, nun ist's um uns gescheh'n," but especially the prayer, "O Gott! o welch' ein Augenblick!," which in its magnificently broad original form is the most exalted page in all the "Fidelio" scores.

Scale was the crucial issue in the revisions. The period of the original "Fidelio" is that of Beethoven's most expansive music, of such things as the first movement of the Violin Concerto and of the Quartet Op.59,1. Such breadth, which dominates the 1805 opera score as well, is difficult, even dangerous, in the theater, and so Beethoven eliminated not merely whole pieces—among them a lovely, though dramatically badly placed, duet for Leonore and Marzelline—but also many short bits, a page here, six bars compressed to two there, a single measure gone somewhere else. The most fascinating thing about that is that the pieces whose length, whose insistence on being "musical" rather than theatrical, makes them most problematic in the familiar "Fidelio," namely the two great Trios, are stronger and more convincing in their bigger original forms.

The point altogether is that while the later score may replace the earlier one in the practical life of our theaters, it does not render the original one obsolete or invalid. The 1805 "Fidelio" is a work of surging vitality with a life all its own, full of strokes whose loss cannot represent Beethoven's uncompromised artistic conviction, one of which the traditional estimate, based on inexperience with performance, must be revised, and one that we must know even as we have come to recognize that among the overtures we must know "Leonore 2" as well as "Leonore 3."

Hanne-Lore Kuhse, who sang Leonore, is an East German, probably in her middle 30's, who made her American debut in a "Tristan" performance in Philadelphia last season. A heavy woman, she could hardly make a convincing Fidelio on the stage. She has a dramatic gift: her performance was remarkable before she had sung a note, by virtue of her concentration and stillness as she stood waiting for her entrance in the quartet.

The ARTS

FIDELIO, Beethoven's opera in the original 3-act version of 1805, given in concert form at Tanglewood Saturday evening, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Tanglewood Choir and Berkshire Chorus prepared by Charles Wilson, and with the following cast:

Leonore ..... Hanne-Lore Kuhse
Florestan ..... George Shirley
Don Pizarro ..... Tom Krause
Rocco ..... Ara Berberian
Marzelline ..... Mary Ellen Pracht
Jaquino ..... Nico Castel
Don Fernando ..... Harold Enns
Prisoners
William Brown, Charles Van Tassel

Her voice is a rich, warm, evenly textured soprano of great amplitude. For splendor and radiance I have heard nothing to equal the 10 high B's and the two C's in the "O namen-, namenlose Freude!" duet.

As an interpreter, she gives everything words and music demand, everything they imply, and nothing in excess. Her work is as free of mannerism and of externally imposed dramatics as her voice is free of forcing and pushing. That makes her a great artist, and the operation of her exceptional word sense, of a remarkable, warm femininity, make her a great Leonore, by miles the greatest in my experience.

Her aria got Frau Kuhse an immense ovation, the duet an even bigger one, with Mr. Leinsdorf himself leading the applause. George Shirley contributed distinguished singing as Florestan, though his voice was still cold for his aria. Tom Krause was quite a good Pizarro, though he did not always have enough vocal impact. Ara Berberian, Nico Castel, Harold Enns and William Brown did singing that was in various ways good and interesting, but Mary Ellen Pracht's Marzelline was, for lack of diction, not satisfactory.

Erich Leinsdorf, except for a few under-characterized numbers early in the first act, led a strong and intelligent performance, one in which he had access to a certain emotional energy which, when it is in action, can make him a most gripping conductor. The Boston Symphony played beautifully, though there were some bad horn moments at the start of Leonore's aria. The Choral singing was very fine. The one really disturbing blot was in the narration put in place of the spoken dialogue of the original, the text itself being very well written by Andrew Raeburn, but ludicrously spoken by some ham from a theater in Stockbridge who was booed as he fully deserved.

TELEGRAM (m)
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 62,350
AUG 7 1967
New England Newsclip

Music: 'Fidelio' Performed At Tanglewood

LENOX — A conspicious asset to this summer's highly standard Tanglewood programs was the concert performance of Beethoven's only opera, "Fidelio," on Saturday night.

The Berkshire Music Festival's sixth week was attended by 28,023 persons.

The weekend's greatest acclaim, however, was given Joseph Silverstein yesterday afternoon for his performance of the Brahms Violin Concerto with the Boston Symphony conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

Several aspects of "Fidelio" made it significant. Leinsdorf conducted the original version, a special occasion. The second "Leonore" Overture was used, as Beethoven intended.

Trumpet Fanfares

The orchestra played so nobly that everything sounded important. Armando Ghitalla's off-stage trumpet fanfares were spotless. A chorus of 50 men from the Tanglewood Choir and Berkshire Chorus sang as an integral part of the whole rather than an exhibition unit.

Alfred Ryder was a marvelous narrator. The text by Andrew Raeburn kept the audience versed on story developments with pertinent information.

Perhaps even more exciting was Hanne-Lore Kuhse's debut with the Boston Symphony as Leonore. Leading soprano with the Berlin State Opera, Miss Kuhse has a figure of heroic proportions. She might be a mite ludicruous in a staged production, assuming the male role of Fidelio, as required by the story.

But there was everything magnificent about Miss Kuhse's singing. She has a voluptuous, powerful, expressive voice that brought the evening's first interruption for applause when she finished her big second act aria.

Fine Quality

Fine quality, clear diction and dramatic import marked Mary Ellen Pracht's work as Marcelline. George Shirley was eloquent as Florestan, the doomed political prisoner. Ara Berberian brought stature and a fine bass voice to Rocco, the jailer.

Special costuming was not used, and gestures were sparing Dramatic impressions came through. Characters appeared from behind panels on a staging above chorus and orchestra.

Above all, it was a triumph for Leinsdorf who held it together with hands of steel, and made it work.

Yesterday afternoon, Silverstein, Boston Symphony concert master, gave a musicanly account of the Brahms concerto. His tone was not large, but singing and sensitive. Technique was secure. Orchestra and conductor respected his solo status by adapting to his style and using moderate volume.

Conducted Without Score

Leinsdorf's confidence in Silverstein was such that he conducted without score, a rare occurrence.

"Academic Festival" Overture and Symphony No. 3 in F major completed yesterday's all-Brahms program.

The Overture was filled with nervous energy. Leinsdorf strung its college tunes in a neat, close-knit package. The closing "Gaudeamus Igitur" had sweep and sparkle.

Highlights of the Third Symphony were rhapsodic conversations between strings and winds, personal quality of the slow movement, dark-hued solemnity of the third, vigor with grandiosity in the finale.

R.M.

NEWS (e)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 95,600
AUG 7 1967
New England Newsclip

'Fidelio' Soloists Sing With Perfection

By ARTHUR T. ANDREWES

All operas should be presented on a stage with the appropriate costumes, settings, and theatrical effects. The burden of transcending the inadequacies of a cold stage is just too much for the average opera and the soloists singing the arias.

Thus it was on Saturday night that Tanglewood presented a performance of the original "Fidelio," Beethoven's only opera. Staged on elevated platforms above the audience, nine soloists performed with unquestionable perfection the arias from the German language opera.

Competition from the narrating histrionics of Alfred Ryder and the wildly active conducting by the elevated Erich Leinsdorf prevented the true value of the vocal presentation and operatic continuity from reaching the level of a genuine stage presentation.

This was a historic event. It was the first time this original form of Fidelio had been performed in this country. It was a debut worthy of Tanglewood and the ingenuity of Erich Leinsdorf. The idea and reasons behind its public consumation were all admirable.

However, the organization should not have gone half heartedly into the effort. The orchestra should have assumed its proper location for an opera. In the pit. The stage should have been devoted to the development of a proper setting for such a milestone occasion. The melodramatic narrator should have been replaced by an expertly dramatic production. The idea was great but the execution was inadequate.

Success came through the emotionally charged delivery of the soloists portraying the roles in the opera. Delightfully invigorating performances came from the solo and duet accomplishments of tenor George Shirley and soprano Hanna-Lorre Kuhse, in the roles of Leonore and Florestan.

Both artists displayed clarity and discerning shading in every aria. Above all of the others their combined talents transcended poor atmosphere to establish a full character relationship. If a best of the night was to be selected, however, it would have to be Mr. Shirley.

Arriving with strong deliveries but with almost oratorical restraint were Ara Berberian as Rocco and Mary Ellen Pracht as his daughter. Under the circumstances both artists were above average under every criteria.

The first two thirds of the production worked slowly and the intermission proved to be almost necessary in face of the pondersome pace written into the work.

The final act of the opera moved with the speed of a well dispatched arrow as aria after aria of breath taking vocal presentation swept the entire program along with well defined exposition.

The entire program was far above the average for Tanglewood. Need for a fully developed opera department is accutely apparent. With all of the potentially spectacular material available and the presence of a totally adjustable staging facility the people who decide things at Tanglewood should turn their heads toward respectably produced opera rather than graphic arts, drama and dance.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900
AUG 7 1967
New England Newsclip

Whitestone

ACKNOWLEDGING THE PLAUDITS of Saturday night's capacity audience at the Tanglewood performance of Beethoven's opera "Fidelio" are the nine soloists, chorus, narrator, conductor and orchestra. The three-act opera was presented in the concert version of the 1805 work by Erich Leinsdorf, who directed the Boston Symphony Orchestra with vocal cast. Choral preparation was by Charles Wilson: Andrew Raeburn formulated stage direction, narration.

The Sound of Music

Beethoven's Only Opera: A Renaissance In The Berkshires

By Peter M. Knapp

LENOX — A stage flop of the early 19th century was revived Saturday night at Tanglewood, in a musical undertaking of uncommon interest.

The revival brought back the original version of Beethoven's only opera, "Fidelio." In probably the first performance in the Western Hemisphere of the original "Fidelio," Erich Leinsdorf conducted the Boston Symphony, the Tanglewood Choir, Berkshire Chorus and soloists before a gathering of 8,135.

"Fidelio" had its premiere on Nov. 13, 1805, in Vienna's Theater-an-der-Wien shortly after the French occupied the city. The work disappointed, and folded after only three performances. Beethoven tried again with a revised version in 1806; that had four performances. Finally, in 1814 came the extensively-altered "Fidelio" that we know today.

The Creative Process

The differences between the versions are substantial. The original version is a diamond in the rough. All the basic qualities are there, but the opera was decidedly improved by the cutting and polishing Beethoven did later.

The 1805 "Fidelio" is encumbered as a dramatic work by arias and ensembles that give depth to the characterization but interrupt the action. In themselves, the vocal portions which were excised for the 1814 production have music of charm and lyric beauty; but they are more rooted in 18th century convention than the later score.

The drama also suffers from the interjection of light comic opera tunes and yards of vocal filagree that adorned them. They dilute the central point of the opera, which after all is Leonore-Fidelio's attempt to rescue her husband from Pizarro's prison. The 1814 "Fidelio,' 'in short, is more compact, more dramatic, more single-willed.

There are numerous specific examples of the changes one could point out. For example, the 1805 opera begins with an ascending plan of aria, duet, trio, quartet, then moves to Rocco's aria about gold (here, a biting commentary on the abuses of the power of money), and the act concludes with the usual trio.

In the 1814 version, the Jaquino-Marcelline duet opens the act, then comes Marcelline's aria. The first trio (Rocco, Marcelline, Jaquino) of 1805 is cut, so that the quartet comes next, with the pattern thereafter the same as in the original. In the later version of Rocco's aria, the text was changed and the trumpets and timpani omitted from the accompaniment.

Comic Infiltration

In Act II, Beethoven eventually cut a duet for Marcelline and Fidelio that employs 18th century comic opera devices. This duet comes between the departure of Pizarro and Fidelio's big aria ("Komm, Hoffnung" in the 1805 score; "Abscheulicher!" in 1814) and so on.

ARA BERBERIAN
. . . slow bass progress

The last act also is substantially changed. The 1805 version includes trombones and contra-bassoon in the orchestral introduction which adds weight and sonority; there is a long recitation for Fidelio and Florestan before their joyful reunion duet; the finale takes place in the dungeon rather than in the courtyard and is quite different.

In this Tanglewood performance, Leinsdorf arranged the singers at center-stage rear, where they made their entrances and exits from behind a screen. Acting was confined to a few gestures. With a few crucial exceptions, the spoken dialogue was omitted, the gist of the conversations being given by a narration written by Andrew Raeburn and delivered in histrionic fashion by Alfred Ryder. This device saved time (the original "Fidelio" is quite long), but also left the impression of a succession of musical numbers rather than a continuing drama.

Leinsdorf conducted a generally compelling, illuminating performance and the orchestra played with intensity for him. The ensembles for the most part came through eloquently. The overture (here, the Leonore No. 2) was a triumph of disciplined playing and emotional commitment on Leinsdorf's part.

Of the singers George Shirley (Florestan) sang most beautifully. Always a dependable singer, the tenor's voice seemed to ring out with unusual clarity and lyric grace. Perhaps the 1814 "Fidelio" would be a bit heavy for Shirley but the 1805 score has a far lighter touch to it and provides extensive cantabile passages that were ideal for him.

Bass Tom Krause sang Pizarro's imprecations forcefully, though the total impact of his vocalism was hindered by his lack of carrying power. At the front of the stage, Krause probably could have produced a more malevolent effect.

Late In Take-Off

Ara Berberian has the type of grainy, cutting bass voice that carries very well, but his portrayal of Rocco lacked the depth of personality the chief warder should have. Berberian improved as the performance progressed, though.

In the big role of Leonore-Fidelio, Hanne-Lore Kuhse, leading dramatic soprano of the Berlin State Opera (East Berlin), was a disappointment for this listener. She has a large voice which is round and appealing enough in the middle of her range but her top notes turn shrill and the low notes disappear.

Miss Kuhse often met the dramatic demands of the role and made a big hit with the audience in her long aria, "Komm, Hoffnung." The first Leonore, Anna Milder, complained to the composer about the "unbeautiful, unsingable passages," in this aria, and in truth it is a formidable thing to sing with its involved coloratura and fearsome skips.

Miss Kuhse tussled with the aria bravely, but for a definitive performance a singer with more technique than she has is needed. She is not a particularly graceful or careful singer, with pitch for example, or in her slurring attacks — but the crowd loved her.

Mary Ellen Pracht contributed a pretty and capable Marcelline, and the minor roles were well done by Nico Castel (Jaquino), Harold Enns (Don Fernando), William Brown and Charles Van Tasel (prisoners). The chorus sang exceptionally well in the famous Prisoner's Chorus and the two long choral sections of the finale.

Sunday Afternoon

Leinsdorf returned for a Brahms program Sunday afternoon, attended by 9,018. It began with the "Academic Festival" Overture, moved into the Third Symphony in F, and concluded with Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein playing the Violin Concerto.

The performances emphasized the poetry of Brahms, rather than the Old-Man-of-the-Mountains approach. Leinsdorf's direction of the symphony was relaxed, genial, introspective. The BSO's music director seemed to be in an informal mood as he strolled into the orchestra to chat and joke with the players after the overture, instead of leaving the stage. He also has taken up singing lately as part of his conductor's tools to coax more fervent playing out of his men.

Brahms goes well outdoors for summer listening, and so one welcomed the release from tensions with the serene statements from the woodwinds and the softly-rounded contours Leinsdorf brought to the Third. The familiar allegretto movement seemed seductive in its gracious lines, though perhaps the initial statement of the first movement theme might have had more sinew.

Concertmaster Silverstein was in top form for the concerto, floating his pure, sweet tone confidently over the Brahmsian cantilena. He lacks the big, bold tone to fully carry off all the bravura moments — in the soloist's first entrance, for example —but his conception of the concerto has deepened and he did it very well. The Kreisler cadenza was played in dazzling style notably the chains of trills.

Friday Night

There was an unscheduled event during Friday night's concert, conducted by William Steinberg. A whammer of a thunderstorm swept across Tanglewood as Theodore Lettvin was playing the Beethoven Third Piano Concerto. As the concerto neared the final double-bar, the lights went out. Everyone carried on as usual, and just as the players showed signs of faltering the lights blinked on again. Another hazard of summer music festivals!

Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony, led an all-Beethoven program that attracted 6,676 patrons. Along with the concerto, the Eighth and Fifth Symphonies of Beethoven were on the menu.

The bulky conductor, 68 last week, directed with authority. He favors a muscular approach to Beethoven with definite, chopping accents and brisk tempi. He keeps orchestral discipline with brusque, cutting gestures and got incisive playing. Perhaps because of the soggy, variable weather, the horns had their problems during the evening and wind intonation was not always reliable.

The Eighth Symphony emerged somewhat sterner than customary — on the hard side, but substantial as sauerbraten. The allegretto movement tripped along winningly and the rugged banter of the finale was punctuated by the added percussion of thunderclaps.

The Fifth Symphony brought a splendid conclusion in the rousing grandeur of the finale with the trombones adding their gruff sonorities to the instrumental mix. The andante flowed with a serene and balanced conviction. This movement which can be ploddingly dull if improperly handled, was magnificently directed by Steinberg.

Lettvin contributed a solid performance of the c minor piano concerto. He played cleanly and aggressively in a crisp, sometimes brittle tone that worked best in the rondo — even through the blackout. Yet for this reviewer his playing seems emotionally cold, technically proficient without that dash of "soul" that stimulates excitement. Steinberg's accompaniment was intelligently shaped and helpful to the soloist.

1967 The Patriot Ledger - Fri. 8

REPUBLICAN (m)
WATERBURY, CONN.
CIRC. 26,100
AUG 10 1967
New England Newsclip

Beethoven Featured At Tanglewood

Last weekend. . .the sixth week in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Festival programs at Tanglewood combined the music of two monumental composers. . .Beethoven on Friday and Saturday evenings, with Sunday afternoon's concert devoted entirely to Brahms.

Of added interest and excitement was Friday evening's Prelude Concert at 7 p.m., since it was completely turned over to Miss Hanne-Lore Kuhse, leading dramatic soprano at the Berlin State Opera since 1963. Accompanied by Jonathan Dudley at the piano, Miss Kuhse made her Tanglewood debut in a delightful Lieder Recital, exquisitely performed in the songs of Schubert, Schumann, Brahms and Strauss. She delighted the small, select audience who were fortunate enough to attend this earlier program.

The major concert Friday evening was directed by William Steinberg, guest conductor with the orchestra performing a powerful yet reposeful and rhythmic rendition of Beethoven's Symphony No. 8 in F. major, Op. 93, followed by Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 3, in C minor, OP. 37, featuring the renowned American pianist, Theodore Lettvin, performing brilliantly with great facility and spirit. Beethoven's Symphony No. 5, in C minor, Op. 67, completed the program, which was attended by an audience of loyal supporters, 6,676 people who braved the stormy night. A cloudburst during the concert darkened the shed and the podium for several minutes, but at 9:41 p.m. the orchestra bravely continued playing until the lights went on again. This happened during the performance by Lettvin, who kept right on playing, with the orchestra, a unique experience at Tanglewood, to say the least.

The highlight of the weekend was the Saturday evening's performance of Beethoven's one and only opera — Fidelio. Leinsdorf, regular conductor of the Boston Symphony, used the Libretto freely adapted from the French by Joseph Sonnleithner, which was first performed in Vienna on Nov. 20, 1805. Leinsdorf should be commended for the interesting and exciting presentation of this opera in concert form, not only for the brilliant choice of artists who so ably performed this work, but for selecting Andrew Raeburn, who cleverly directed the staging and narration.

The performers were placed on an elevated stage behind the orchestra and choral groups, so that they could be seen and hard by the entire audience from any location in the shed and the grounds on the periphery. Alfred Ryder, well-known dramatic actor with years of experience in the theatre, was delightful in the actual narration throughout the opera. Plaudits also are in order for the choral preparation by Charles Wilson, assisted by M. Lewis Spratlan, with the Tanglewood Choir and Berkshire Chorus, which heightened the enjoyment of the presentation.

George Shirley as Florestan, has a remarkable and powerful tenor voice and considerable stage presence. He has already sung with the Metropolitan for 6 years. Tom Krause was excellent as Don Pizzaro, and Ara Berberian, as Rocco, had a deep rich baritone, and sang his role most admirable. Nico Castel, as Jaquino, the turnkey gave a splendid performance. Mary Ellen Pracht was excellent in the role as Marcelline, and her beauty, as well as her dramatic presentation and fine voice were matchless in this role. However, the star performance was Miss Hanne-Lore Kuhse in the role of Leonore. She received a standing ovation from the enthusiastic audience of 8,135. While her upper register and high notes were exquisite and she sings with tremendous power and ease, her lower register seemed somewhat slipshod and muddy. Miss Kuhse, however, is indeed a soprano of great talent and she gave a brilliant, polished performance. She made a most notable and gracious debut at Tanglewood. Fidelio as presented by Leinsdorf was a most memorable musical experience for opera lovers.

The seventh week of the Berkshire Festival includes three Boston Orchestra concerts, an appearance of Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops performed last evening at Tanglewood in an all-Gershwin concert with Earl Wild as piano soloist.

The week also brings to Tanglewood the Fifth Festival of Contemporary American Music with a guests-only concert by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra conducted by Gunther Schuller and a concert of electronic music.

Friday evening at 9 Erich Leinsdorf will have Itzhak Perlman who will perform the Sibelius Violin Concerto with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Leinsdorf will conduct Moussorghsky's Khovanchina Prelude and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

John Browning will present a recital of piano music by Chopin, Rachmaninoff and Scriabin for the Weekend Prelude on Friday evening at 7.

William Steinberg will again be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony on Saturday evening at 8 p.m. in ap rogram consisting of Glinka's Kamarinskaya, Borodin's Symphony No. 2 and Tchaikovsky's Manfred Symphony. On Sunday afternoon at 2:30, pianist Browning will perform the Prokofiev Piano Concerto No. 1 and Rachmaninoff's Paganini Rhapsody. Leinsdorf will lead the orchestra in Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As."

"SCM"

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 20,000
AUG 7 1967
New England Newsclip

Whitestone

ACKNOWLEDGING THE PLAUDITS of Saturday night's capacity audience at the Tanglewood performance of Beethoven's opera "Fidelio" are the nine soloists, chorus, narrator, conductor and orchestra. The three-act opera was presented in the concert version of the 1805 work by Erich Leinsdorf, who directed the Boston Symphony Orchestra with vocal cast. Choral preparation was by Charles Wilson; Andrew Raeburn formulated stage direction, narration.

The Sound of Music

Beethoven's Only Opera: A Renaissance In The Berkshires

By Peter M. Knapp

LENOX — A stage flop of the early 19th century was revived Saturday night at Tanglewood, in a musical undertaking of uncommon interest.

The revival brought back the original version of Beethoven's only opera, "Fidelio." In probably the first performance in the Western Hemisphere of the original "Fidelio," Erich Leinsdorf conducted the Boston Symphony, the Tanglewood Choir, Berkshire Chorus and soloists before a gathering of 8,135.

"Fidelio" had its premiere on Nov. 13, 1805, in Vienna's Theater-an-der-Wien shortly after the French occupied the city. The work disappointed, and folded after only three performances. Beethoven tried again with a revised version in 1806; that had four performances. Finally, in 1814 came the extensively-altered "Fidelio" that we know today.

The Creative Process

The differences between the versions are substantial. The original version is a diamond in the rough. All the basic qualities are there, but the opera was decidedly improved by the cutting and polishing Beethoven did later.

The 1805 "Fidelio" is encumbered as a dramatic work by arias and ensembles that give depth to the characterization but interrupt the action. In themselves, the vocal portions which were excised for the 1814 production have music of charm and lyric beauty; but they are more rooted in 18th century convention than the later score.

The drama also suffers from the interjection of light comic opera tunes and yards of vocal filagree that adorned them. They dilute the central point of the opera, which after all is Leonore-Fidelio's attempt to rescue her husband from Pizarro's prison. The 1814 "Fidelio,' 'in short, is more compact, more dramatic, more single-willed.

There are numerous specific examples of the changes one could point out. For example, the 1805 opera begins with an ascending plan of aria, duet, trio, quartet, then moves to Rocco's aria about gold (here, a biting commentary on the abuses of the power of money), and the act concludes with the usual trio.

In the 1814 version, the Jaquino-Marcelline duet opens the act, then comes Marcelline's aria. The first trio (Rocco, Marcelline, Jaquino) of 1805 is cut, so that the quartet comes next, with the pattern thereafter the same as in the original. In the later version of Rocco's aria, the text was changed and the trumpets and timpani omitted from the accompaniment.

Comic Infiltration

In Act II, Beethoven eventually cut a duet for Marcelline and Fidelio that employs 18th century comic opera devices. This duet comes between the departure of Pizarro and Fidelio's big aria ("Komm, Hoffnung" in the 1805 score; "Abscheulicher!" in 1814) and so on.

ARA BERBERIAN
. . . slow bass progress

The last act also is substantially changed. The 1805 version includes trombones and contra-bassoon in the orchestral introduction which adds weight and sonority; there is a long recitation for Fidelio and Florestan before their joyful reunion duet; the finale takes place in the dungeon rather than in the courtyard and is quite different.

In this Tanglewood performance, Leinsdorf arranged the singers at center-stage rear, where they made their entrances and exits from behind a screen. Acting was confined to a few gestures. With a few crucial exceptions, the spoken dialogue was omitted, the gist of the conversations being given by a narration written by Andrew Raeburn and delivered in histrionic fashion by Alfred Ryder. This device saved time (the original "Fidelio" is quite long), but also left the impression of a succession of musical numbers rather than a continuing drama.

Leinsdorf conducted a generally compelling, illuminating performance and the orchestra played with intensity for him. The ensembles for the most part came through eloquently. The overture (here, the Leonore No. 2) was a triumph of disciplined playing and emotional commitment on Leinsdorf's part.

Of the singers George Shirley (Florestan) sang most beautifully. Always a dependable singer, the tenor's voice seemed to ring out with unusual clarity and lyric grace. Perhaps the 1814 "Fidelio" would be a bit heavy for Shirley but the 1805 score has a far lighter touch to it and provides extensive cantabile passages that were ideal for him.

Bass Tom Krause sang Pizarro's imprecations forcefully, though the total impact of his vocalism was hindered by his lack of carrying power. At the front of the stage, Krause probably could have produced a more malevolent effect.

Late In Take-Off

Ara Berberian has the type of grainy, cutting bass voice that carries very well, but his portrayal of Rocco lacked the depth of personality the chief warder should have. Berberian improved as the performance progressed, though.

In the big role of Leonore-Fidelio, Hanne-Lore Kuhse, leading dramatic soprano of the Berlin State Opera (East Berlin), was a disappointment for this listener. She has a large voice which is round and appealing enough in the middle of her range but her top notes turn shrill and the low notes disappear.

Miss Kuhse often met the dramatic demands of the role and made a big hit with the audience in her long aria, "Komm, Hoffnung." The first Leonore, Anna Milder, complained to the composer about the "unbeautiful, unsingable passages," in this aria, and in truth it is a formidable thing to sing with its involved coloratura and fearsome skips.

Miss Kuhse tussled with the aria bravely, but for a definitive performance a singer with more technique than she has is needed. She is not a particularly graceful or careful singer, with pitch for example, or in her slurring attacks — but the crowd loved her.

Mary Ellen Pracht contributed a pretty and capable Marcelline, and the minor roles were well done by Nico Castel (Jaquino), Harold Enns (Don Fernando), William Brown and Charles Van Tasel (prisoners). The chorus sang exceptionally well in the famous Prisoner's Chorus and the two long choral sections of the finale.

Sunday Afternoon

Leinsdorf returned for a Brahms program Sunday afternoon, attended by 9,018. It began with the "Academic Festival" Overture, moved into the Third Symphony in F, and concluded with Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein playing the Violin Concerto.

The performances emphasized the poetry of Brahms, rather than the Old-Man-of-the-Mountains approach. Leinsdorf's direction of the symphony was relaxed, genial, introspective. The BSO's music director seemed to be in an informal mood as he strolled into the orchestra to chat and joke with the players after the overture, instead of leaving the stage. He also has taken up singing lately as part of his conductor's tools to coax more fervent playing out of his men.

Brahms goes well outdoors for summer listening, and so one welcomed the release from tensions with the serene statements from the woodwinds and the softly-rounded contours Leinsdorf brought to the Third. The familiar allegretto movement seemed seductive in its gracious lines, though perhaps the initial statement of the first movement theme might have had more sinew.

Concertmaster Silverstein was in top form for the concerto, floating his pure, sweet tone confidently over the Brahmsian cantilena. He lacks the big, bold tone to fully carry off all the bravura moments — in the soloist's first entrance, for example —but his conception of the concerto has deepened and he did it very well. The Kreisler cadenza was played in dazzling style notably the chains of trills.

Friday Night

There was an unscheduled event during Friday night's concert, conducted by William Steinberg. A whammer of a thunderstorm swept across Tanglewood as Theodore Lettvin was playing the Beethoven Third Piano Concerto. As the concerto neared the final double-bar, the lights went out. Everyone carried on as usual, and just as the players showed signs of faltering the lights blinked on again. Another hazard of summer music festivals!

Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony, led an all-Beethoven program that attracted 6,676 patrons. Along with the concerto, the Eighth and Fifth Symphonies of Beethoven were on the menu.

The bulky conductor, 68 last week, directed with authority. He favors a muscular approach to Beethoven with definite, chopping accents and brisk tempi. He keeps orchestral discipline with brusque, cutting gestures and got incisive playing. Perhaps because of the soggy, variable weather, the horns had their problems during the evening and wind intonation was not always reliable.

The Eighth Symphony emerged somewhat sterner than customary — on the hard side, but substantial as sauerbraten. The allegretto movement tripped along winningly and the rugged banter of the finale was punctuated by the added percussion of thunderclaps.

The Fifth Symphony brought a splendid conclusion in the rousing grandeur of the finale with the trombones adding their gruff sonorities to the instrumental mix. The andante flowed with a serene and balanced conviction. This movement which can be ploddingly dull if improperly handled, was magnificently directed by Steinberg.

Lettvin contributed a solid performance of the c minor piano concerto. He played cleanly and aggressively in a crisp, sometimes brittle tone that worked best in the rondo — even through the blackout. Yet for this reviewer his playing seems emotionally cold, technically proficient without that dash of "soul" that stimulates excitement. Steinberg's accompaniment was intelligently shaped and helpful to the soloist.

1967 The Patriot Ledger Fine 2

45

REPUBLICAN (m)
WATERBURY, CONN.
CIRC. 26,100
AUG 10 1967
New England Newsclip

Beethoven Featured At Tanglewood

Last weekend. . .the sixth week in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Festival programs at Tanglewood combined the music of two monumental composers. . .Beethoven on Friday and Saturday evenings, with Sunday afternoon's concert devoted entirely to Brahms.

Of added interest and excitement was Friday evening's Prelude Concert at 7 p.m., since it was completely turned over to Miss Hanne-Lore Kuhse, leading dramatic soprano at the Berlin State Opera since 1963. Accompanied by Jonathan Dudley at the piano, Miss Kuhse made her Tanglewood debut in a delightful Lieder Recital, exquisitely performed in the songs of Schubert, Schumann, Brahms and Strauss. She delighted the small, select audience who were fortunate enough to attend this earlier program.

The major concert Friday evening was directed by William Steinberg, guest conductor with the orchestra performing a powerful yet reposeful and rhythmic rendition of Beethoven's Symphony No. 8 in F. major, Op. 93, followed by Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 3, in C minor, OP. 37, featuring the renowned American pianist, Theodore Lettvin, performing brilliantly with great facility and spirit. Beethoven's Symphony No. 5, in C minor, Op. 67, completed the program, which was attended by an audience of loyal supporters, 6,676 people who braved the stormy night. A cloudburst during the concert darkened the shed and the podium for several minutes, but at 9:41 p.m. the orchestra bravely continued playing until the lights went on again. This happened during the performance by Lettvin, who kept right on playing, with the orchestra, a unique experience at Tanglewood, to say the least.

The highlight of the weekend was the Saturday evening's performance of Beethoven's one and only opera — Fidelio. Leinsdorf, regular conductor of the Boston Symphony, used the Libretto freely adapted from the French by Joseph Sonnleithner, which was first performed in Vienna on Nov. 20, 1805. Leinsdorf should be commended for the interesting and exciting presentation of this opera in concert form, not only for the brilliant choice of artists who so ably performed this work, but for selecting Andrew Raeburn, who cleverly directed the staging and narration.

The performers were placed on an elevated stage behind the orchestra and choral groups, so that they could be seen and hard by the entire audience from any location in the shed and the grounds on the periphery. Alfred Ryder, well-known ~~dramatic actor~~ with years of experience in the theatre, was delightful in the actual narration throughout the opera. Plaudits also are in order for the choral preparation by Charles Wilson, assisted by M. Lewis Spratlan, with the Tanglewood Choir and Berkshire Chorus, which heightened the enjoyment of the presentation.

George Shirley as Florestan, has a remarkable and powerful tenor voice and considerable stage presence. He has already sung with the Metropolitan for 6 years. Tom Krause was excellent as Don Pizzaro, and Ara Berberian, as Rocco, had a deep rich baritone, and sang his role most admirable. Nico Castel, as Jaquino, the turnkey gave a splendid performance. Mary Ellen Pracht was excellent in the role as Marcelline, and her beauty, as well as her dramatic presentation and fine voice were matchless in this role. However, the star performance was Miss Hanne-Lore Kuhse in the role of Leonore. She received a standing ovation from the enthusiastic audience of 8,135. While her upper register and high notes were exquisite and she sings with tremendous power and ease, her lower register seemed somewhat slipshod and muddy. Miss Kuhse, however, is indeed a soprano of great talent and she gave a brilliant, polished performance. She made a most notable and gracious debut at Tanglewood. Fidelio as presented by Leinsdorf was a most memorable musical experience for opera lovers.

The seventh week of the Berkshire Festival includes three Boston Orchestra concerts, an appearance of Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops performed last evening at Tanglewood in an all-Gershwin concert with Earl Wild as piano soloist.

The week also brings to Tanglewood the Fifth Festival of Contemporary American Music with a guests-only concert by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra conducted by Gunther Schuller and a concert of electronic music.

Friday evening at 9 Erich Leinsdorf will have Itzhak Perlman who will perform the Sibelius Violin Concerto with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Leinsdorf will conduct Moussorghsky's Khovanchina Prelude and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

John Browning will present a recital of piano music by Chopin, Rachmaninoff and Scriabin for the Weekend Prelude on Friday evening at 7.

William Steinberg will again be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony on Saturday evening at 8 p.m. in ap rogram consisting of Glinka's Kamarinskaya, Borodin's Symphony No. 2 and Tchaikovsky's Manfred Symphony. On Sunday afternoon at 2:30, pianist Browning will perform the Prokofiev Piano Concerto No. 1 and Rachmaninoff's Paganini Rhapsody. Leinsdorf will lead the orchestra in Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As."

"SCM"

46

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900

AUG 7 1967

New England Newsclip

Music Review

Magnum Opus at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THERE WERE two dramas at Tanglewood over the past weekend. One was the moving performance of Beethoven's only opera, Fidelio, in concert form Saturday night; the other was unplanned. Friday evening during the angry, grumbling storm which competed with Theodore Lettvin, during his performance of Beethoven's Third Piano Concerto with the Boston Symphony orchestra and William Steinberg as guest conductor, some elemental interference suddenly doused the lights. Everyone was in complete darkness for about two blinks, but not in silence. Troopers all, soloist and orchestra kept going (it was four bars before the final cadenza of the last movement). When the lights came back again two winks later, Beethoven, as if by prescience, lapsed into the major mode of the coda in gratitude and release from the momentary incarceration.

Whitestone

Hanne-Lore Kuhse and George Shirley

* * *

THE AUDIENCE, suddenly released from the unexpected shock, spontaneously broke into great applause as it realized how the show had gone on. Lettvin and Steinberg went down the home stretch with increased elation and ended in a blaze of glory—a performance which, even without the dramatic incident, would still have been compelling and ebullient.

Steinberg surrounded the piano concerto of his all-Beethoven program with two symphonies. He gave them both a connoisseur's touch, but in a modest and perfectly controlled way, never exactly reaching for nobility where it might have been possible in the fifth, nor descending to more intimate communication where the eighth might have allowed it.

* * *

YESTERDAY afternoon Erich Leinsdorf, who returned to conduct the orchestra, chose an all-Brahms program, playing the "Academic Festival" overture and the Third Symphony, in what was probably the most guileless and thus most penetrating performance of that symphony I have heard in a very long time. The conductor caught the "innigkeit," the quintessence of Viennese affection and tenderness. There may be several ways of playing Brahms. Very few play the symphonies the tender way I prefer, but Leinsdorf's unhurried and spacious perusal, especially of the last movements, pleased me enormously.

Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein was at his best as a craftsman on his instrument. There are few who can surpass the tone and mastery of the violin he produces, but he approached the Brahms concerto looking through the big end of the telescope and straining at gnats. The concerto was singularly lacking in emphasis and forward urge. For sheer expertise however it was exemplary.

* * *

THE BEETHOVEN opera will undoubtedly stand out as the magnum opus of the season. In concert form, an opera necessarily loses some degree of vividness in the portrayal of emotion and of graphic enactment of stage business, but by a practical system of entrances and exits of the principals on an elevated terrace from behind a screen at the back of the stage the continuity, aided by a narrator, was made coherent and fluent.

Every component of the undertaking was excellently prepared and Leinsdorf coordinated them all with masterly control. The original 1805 version was played, consisting of three acts, and the overture, which is now designated as the Leonore No. 2, was used. This, incidentally, was played with great distinction. The rhetorical pauses were accentuated with striking effect and tension accumulated with alarming suspense.

* * *

THE CAST of principals was splendid. Marcelline was beautifully sung by Mary Ellen Pracht, a soprano of exceptional personable and vocal attributes. Her opening scene with her suitor, Jaquino, sung by tenor Nico Castel, and which ended in her aria, "O war ich schon" was a harbinger of the level to which the performance was to remain constant all the evening.

Beethoven's interlude which leads into the quartet canon "Mir ist so wunderbar" sung by Marcelline and Jaquino, and Leonore, disguised as Fidelio, and sung by soprano Hanne-Lore Kuhse and bass Ara Berberian, as Rocco, the jailer, was a marvellously impressive verse which the violas and cellos played with wonderful resonance. The quartet competes for the apex of vocal sublimity in the whole opera with the scene in the third act where Leonore recognizes her imprisoned husband Florestan which George Shirley portrayed, with tonal beauty and histrionic persuasiveness.

* * *

THIS SCENE in spite of lacking the advantages which action and scenery and costumes might have assisted and reinforced still had a thrilling impact. Florestan does not appear until the final act but his recognition by his faithful Leonore (Fidelio) and their ensuing reunion were made intense and telling by the two principals.

Miss Kuhse was superb in her arias and especially cooperative in the many concerted opportunities. The orchestral prelude which leads to Pizzaro's aria "Welch ein Augenblick," sung with tremendous effectiveness by Tom Krause, is another of Beethoven's happiest inspirations.

* * *

THERE WERE many cuts and omissions of the original opera but a narrator, Alfred Ryder, understandably carried away by the melodrama, bridged the potential hiatuses and maintained unbroken sequence of dramatic progress. A chorus prepared by Charles Wilson supplied needful support for the prison scenes.

The attendance over the weekend was a season's high. Figures for the three concerts reached, respectively, 6,676 Friday night, 8,135 Saturday, and 9,018 yesterday afternoon.

Whitestone

ACKNOWL[illegible]rday night's capaci[illegible] performance of Beethoven's o[illegible]orus, narrator, con[illegible]e-act opera was presented in th[illegible] Erich Leinsdorf,[illegible]phony Orchestra with vocal cast,[illegible]ilson; Andrew R[illegible]tion, narration.

The Philadelphia Inquirer
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
D. 522,941 SUN. 956,206

AUG 7 1967

At Lenox, Mass.

Beethoven Opera 'Fidelio' Is Presented

By DANIEL WEBSTER
Of The Inquirer Staff

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 5.—Beethoven may have had bad advice, according to evidence presented here Saturday by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Leinsdorf was leading the American premiere of Beethoven's original "Fidelio," his only opera and one which failed dismally at its premiere in 1805. Friends advised the composer to undertake revisions in 1806 (again a flop) and in 1814, when it caught fire. In his revisions, Beethoven threw out some gold, but a lot of dross too.

RADICALLY DIFFERENT

If Beethoven had had the intensly dedicated performance at his premiere that Leinsdorf produced here, his opera might have been an instant success. Leinsdorf's work can only be called inspired.

The later "Fidelio" is a radically different opera from the original. It is shorter by half an hour, tighter, momentous, studded with virtuoso arias. Its dramatic flow however, is not easy and the figure of Rocco the jailer is two-dimensional.

WROTE 4 OVERTURES

The original includes arias, ensembles and orchestral sections later dropped, and a dramatic continuity missing in the final one. Beethoven wrote four overtures for his opera and the original opened with the "Leonore" No. 2, itself more diffuse but more appropriate to the quality of the opera.

In 1805, Beethoven wrote rather conventional work. It followed a pattern of aria, duet, ensemble, gave Marcelline a stronger singing part, and developed Rocco as an embittered man, aware of the power of gold and political pull. His aria on gold, a patter song in the last draft, was ironic and hard-hitting, varied in tempo and mood in the original.

FIRST ACT DUET

Other markedly different portions include a glorious first act duet for basses, Rocco and Pizarro; Fidelio's big "abscheulicher" aria, here longer, and less a virtuoso display although still fiendishly difficult; a prisoner's chorus without the gripping beauty of the later one and a savage second act curtain aria for Pizarro, missing entirely in the later opera.

Florestan's aria, too, is broader and less dependent on the familiar melody which Beethoven developed in his third "Leonore" overture.

LESS TRUMPETLIKE

The final duet, "Namenlose Freude" is more gentle and less trumpetlike, although no easier for soprano.

Leinsdorf's inspired work was not matched by all his soloists. Tom Krause, although a stylish bass, lacked the harsh, black quality to fulfill the Pizarro role. And Hanne-Lore Kuhse, the German soprano, could not meet the demands of this Leonore.

In soft passages, her voice was attractive mellowness, but it lacks fiber in the low register and was wildly inaccurate and piercing in the top.

George Shirley, as Florestan, was careful of the sometimes florid line, accurate and sang in a full, lyric voice. Ara Berberian, Rocco, shaped an oddly bland character while singing the part well.

Mary Ellen Pracht, Marcelline, and Nico Castel, Jaquino, added distinctive performances. The Tanglewood Choir joined in a moving final ensemble.

Andrew Raeburn's narration, read by Alfred Ryder, was unnecessarily intrusive, too often seeking to explain Beethoven.

The hero of the night was Leinsdorf who produced a performance as admirable as his idea of re-examining a lost work.

Faithful to Fidelio

The new opera at Vienna's Theater an der Wien was a flop. The orchestra fumbled, the soprano bumbled, the tenor went flat. Critics dismissed the score as long, repetitive and gnarled with outlandish complexities. The production closed after three nights, reopened the following year, folded again after four more performances. The talented 35-year-old composer set the work aside for eight years. Then he undertook extensive revisions. "Hardly a musical number has been left unchanged," he wrote to a Vienna newspaper, "and more than half the opera was composed anew." Finally, in May 1814, Ludwig van Beethoven's only opera, Fidelio, was produced again at a different Vienna theater—and immediately became a hit.

Since then, the discarded original version has been performed rarely—and, as far as is known, never in the Western Hemisphere. But two years ago, Boston Symphony Conductor Erich Leinsdorf found a copy of the 1805 score in a Prague bookshop, was struck by its "awe-inspiring" power, and thought it would make an effective concert presentation at the Boston Symphony's summer home at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass. Last week, after Leinsdorf conducted a boldly sculptured, energy-charged U.S. première of the work at Tanglewood, it was emphatically clear that he had been right.

Compared with Beethoven's more polished, rounded—and, some say, compromised—version of 1814, the original Fidelio turned out to be expansive and florid, bursting through its forms with a driving force that the composer was only partially able to control. Its heavy orchestration has a strain of wildness that Beethoven tamed in his later revisions; its soaring vocal lines, which he later modified, make harsh demands on singers. In all, there are significant differences from the 1814 revision on 134 of the vocal score's 276 pages.

Leinsdorf does not think the original Fidelio will find a place in regular operatic productions, but he sees it as a strong, if difficult, addition to the concert and festival repertory. "It represents the composer at his hottest," he says—and by way of proof, Leinsdorf had to change his sweat-soaked jacket at intermission. "In it, like the genius he was, Beethoven was asking for things ahead of his time which probably could not be done." As Leinsdorf, the orchestra and the singers—particularly Soprano Hanne-Lore Kuhse and Tenor George Shirley—showed at Tanglewood, they can be done now.

46

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 20,900

AUG 7 1967

New England Newsclip

Music Review

Magnum Opus at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THERE WERE two dramas at Tanglewood over the past weekend. One was the moving performance of Beethoven's only opera, Fidelio, in concert form Saturday night; the other was unplanned. Friday evening during the angry, grumbling storm which competed with Theodore Lettvin, during his performance of Beethoven's Third Piano Concerto with the Boston Symphony orchestra and William Steinberg as guest conductor, some elemental interference suddenly doused the lights. Everyone was in complete darkness for about two blinks, but not in silence. Troopers all, soloist and orchestra kept going (it was four bars before the final cadenza of the last movement). When the lights came back again two winks later, Beethoven, as if by prescience, lapsed into the major mode of the coda in gratitude and release from the momentary incarceration.

* * *

THE AUDIENCE, suddenly released from the unexpected shock, spontaneously broke into great applause as it realized how the show had gone on. Lettvin and Steinberg went down the home stretch with increased elation and ended in a blaze of glory—a performance which, even without the dramatic incident, would still have been compelling and ebullient.

Steinberg surrounded the piano concerto of his all-Beethoven program with two symphonies. He gave them both a connoisseur's touch, but in a modest and perfectly controlled way, never exactly reaching for nobility where it might have been possible in the fifth, nor descending to more intimate communication where the eighth might have allowed it.

* * *

YESTERDAY afternoon Erich Leinsdorf, who returned to conduct the orchestra, chose an all-Brahms program, playing the "Academic Festival" overture and the Third Symphony, in what was probably the most guileless and thus most penetrating performance of that symphony I have heard in a very long time. The conductor caught the "innigkeit," the quintessence of Viennese affection and tenderness. There may be several ways of playing Brahms. Very few play the symphonies the tender way I prefer, but Leinsdorf's unhurried and spacious perusal, especially of the last movements, pleased me enormously.

Whitestone

Hanne-Lore Kuhse and George Shirley

Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein was at his best as a craftsman on his instrument. There are few who can surpass the tone and mastery of the violin he produces but he approached the Brahms concerto looking through the big end of the telescope and strained at gnats. The concerto was singularly lacking in emphasis and forward urge. For sheer expertise however it was exemplary.

* * *

THE BEETHOVEN opera will undoubtedly stand out as the magnum opus of the season. In concert form, an opera necessarily loses some degree of vividness in the portrayal of emotion and of graphic enactment of stage business, but by a practical system of entrances and exits of the principals on an elevated terrace from behind a screen at the back of the stage the continuity, aided by a narrator, was made coherent and fluent.

Every component of the undertaking was excellently prepared and Leinsdorf coordinated them all with masterly control. The original 1805 version was played, consisting of three acts, and the overture, which is now designated as the Leonore No. 2, was used. This, incidentally, was played with great distinction. The rhetorical pauses were accentuated with striking effect and tension accumulated with alarming suspense.

* * *

THE CAST of principals was splendid. Marcelline was beautifully sung by Mary Ellen Pracht, a soprano of exceptional personable and vocal attributes. Her opening scene with her suitor Jaquino, sung by tenor Nico Castel, and which ended in her aria, "O war ich schon" was a harbinger of the level to which the performance was to remain constant all the evening.

Beethoven's interlude which leads into the quartet canon "Mir ist so wunderbar" sung by Marcelline and Jaquino, and Leonore, disguised as Fidelio, and sung by soprano Hanne-Lore Kuhse and bass Ara Berberian, as Rocco, the jailer, was a marvellously impressive verse which the violas and cellos played with wonderful resonance. The quartet competes for the apex of vocal sublimity in the whole opera with the scene in the third act where Leonore recognizes her imprisoned husband Florestan which George Shirley portrayed with tonal beauty and histrionic persuasiveness.

* * *

THIS SCENE in spite of lacking the advantages which action and scenery and costumes might have assisted and reinforced still had a thrilling impact. Florestan does not appear until the final act but his recognition by his faithful Leonore (Fidelio) and their ensuing reunion were made intense and telling by the two principals.

Miss Kuhse was superb in her arias and especially cooperative in the many concerted opportunities. The orchestral prelude which leads to Pizzaro's aria "Welch ein Augenblick," sung with tremendous effectiveness by Tom Krause, is another of Beethoven's happiest inspirations.

* * *

THERE WERE many cuts and omissions of the original opera but a narrator, Alfred Ryder, understandably carried away by the melodrama, bridged the potential hiatuses and maintained unbroken sequence of dramatic progress. A chorus prepared by Charles Wilson supplied needful support for the prison scenes.

The attendance over the weekend was a season's high. Figures for the three concerts reached, respectively, 6,676 Friday night, 8,135 Saturday, and 9,018 yesterday afternoon.

Whitestone

ACKNOWLrday night's capaci performance of Beethoven's op rus, narrator, con ee-act opera was presented in th y Erich Leinsdorf. phony Orchestra with vocal cast ilson; Andrew Rtion, narration.

The Philadelphia Inquirer
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
D. 522,941 SUN. 956,206

AUG 7 1967

At Lenox, Mass.

Beethoven Opera 'Fidelio' Is Presented

By DANIEL WEBSTER
Of The Inquirer Staff

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 5.—Beethoven may have had bad advice, according to evidence presented here Saturday by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Leinsdorf was leading the American premiere of Beethoven's original "Fidelio," his only opera and one which failed dismally at its premiere in 1805. Friends advised the composer to undertake revisions in 1806 (again a flop) and in 1814, when it caught fire. In his revisions, Beethoven threw out some gold, but a lot of dross too.

RADICALLY DIFFERENT

If Beethoven had had the intensly dedicated performance at his premiere that Leinsdorf produced here, his opera might have been an instant success. Leinsdorf's work can only be called inspired.

The later "Fidelio" is a radically different opera from the original. It is shorter by half an hour, tighter, momentous, studded with virtuoso arias. Its dramatic flow however, is not easy and the figure of Rocco the jailer is two-dimensional.

WROTE 4 OVERTURES

The original includes arias, ensembles and orchestral sections later dropped, and a dramatic continuity missing in the final one. Beethoven wrote four overtures for his opera and the original opened with the "Leonore" No. 2, itself more diffuse but more appropriate to the quality of the opera.

In 1805, Beethoven wrote rather conventional work. It followed a pattern of aria, duet, ensemble, gave Marcelline a stronger singing part, and developed Rocco as an embittered man, aware of the power of gold and political pull. His aria on gold, a patter song in the last draft, was ironic and hard-hitting, varied in tempo and mood in the original.

FIRST ACT DUET

Other markedly different portions include a glorious first act duet for basses, Rocco and Pizarro; Fidelio's big "abscheulicher" aria, here longer, and less a virtuoso display although still fiendishly difficult; a prisoner's chorus without the gripping beauty of the later one and a savage second act curtain aria for Pizarro, missing entirely in the later opera.

Florestan's aria, too, is broader and less dependent on the familiar melody which Beethoven developed in his third "Leonore" overture.

LESS TRUMPETLIKE

The final duet, "Namenlose Freude" is more gentle and less trumpetlike, although no easier for soprano.

Leinsdorf's inspired work was not matched by all his soloists. Tom Krause, although a stylish bass, lacked the harsh, black quality to fulfill the Pizarro role. And Hanne-Lore Kuhse, the German soprano, could not meet the demands of this Leonore.

In soft passages, her voice was attractive mellowness, but it lacks fiber in the low register and was wildly inaccurate and piercing in the top.

George Shirley, as Florestan, was careful of the sometimes florid line, accurate and sang in a full, lyric voice. Ara Berberian, Rocco, shaped an oddly bland character while singing the part well.

Mary Ellen Pracht, Marcelline, and Nico Castel, Jaquino, added distinctive performances. The Tanglewood Choir joined in a moving final ensemble.

Andrew Raeburn's narration, read by Alfred Ryder, was unnecessarily intrusive, too often seeking to explain Beethoven.

The hero of the night was Leinsdorf who produced a performance as admirable as his idea of re-examining a lost work.

Faithful to Fidelio

The new opera at Vienna's Theater an der Wien was a flop. The orchestra fumbled, the soprano bumbled, the tenor went flat. Critics dismissed the score as long, repetitive and gnarled with outlandish complexities. The production closed after three nights, reopened the following year, folded again after four more performances. The talented 35-year-old composer set the work aside for eight years. Then he undertook extensive revisions. "Hardly a musical number has been left unchanged," he wrote to a Vienna newspaper, "and more than half the opera was composed anew." Finally, in May 1814, Ludwig van Beethoven's only opera, Fidelio, was produced again at a different Vienna theater—and immediately became a hit.

Since then, the discarded original version has been performed rarely—and, as far as is known, never in the Western Hemisphere. But two years ago, Boston Symphony Conductor Erich Leinsdorf found a copy of the 1805 score in a Prague bookshop, was struck by its "awe-inspiring" power, and thought it would make an effective concert presentation at the Boston Symphony's summer home at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass. Last week, after Leinsdorf conducted a boldly sculptured, energy-charged U.S. première of the work at Tanglewood, it was emphatically clear that he had been right.

Compared with Beethoven's more polished, rounded—and, some say, compromised—version of 1814, the original Fidelio turned out to be expansive and florid, bursting through its forms with a driving force that the composer was only partially able to control. Its heavy orchestration has a strain of wildness that Beethoven tamed in his later revisions; its soaring vocal lines, which he later modified, make harsh demands on singers. In all, there are significant differences from the 1814 revision on 134 of the vocal score's 276 pages.

Leinsdorf does not think the original Fidelio will find a place in regular operatic productions, but he sees it as a strong, if difficult, addition to the concert and festival repertory. "It represents the composer at his hottest," he says—and by way of proof, Leinsdorf had to change his sweat-soaked jacket at intermission. "In it, like the genius he was, Beethoven was asking for things ahead of his time which probably could not be done." As Leinsdorf, the orchestra and the singers—particularly Soprano Hanne-Lore Kuhse and Tenor George Shirley—showed at Tanglewood, they can be done now.

46

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 20,900

AUG 7 1967

New England Newslip

Music Review

Magnum Opus at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THERE WERE two dramas at Tanglewood over the past weekend. One was the moving performance of Beethoven's only opera, Fidelio, in concert form Saturday night; the other was unplanned. Friday evening during the angry, grumbling storm which competed with Theodore Lettvin, during his performance of Beethoven's Third Piano Concerto with the Boston Symphony orchestra and William Steinberg as guest conductor, some elemental interference suddenly doused the lights. Everyone was in complete darkness for about two blinks, but not in silence. Troopers all, soloist and orchestra kept going (it was four bars before the final cadenza of the last movement). When the lights came back again two winks later, Beethoven, as if by prescience, lapsed into the major mode of the coda in gratitude and release from the momentary incarceration.

* * *

THE AUDIENCE, suddenly released from the unexpected shock, spontaneously broke into great applause as it realized how the show had gone on. Lettvin and Steinberg went down the home stretch with increased elation and ended in a blaze of glory - a performance which, even without the dramatic incident, would still have been compelling and ebullient.

Steinberg surrounded the piano concerto of his all-Beethoven program with two symphonies. He gave them both a connoisseur's touch but in a modest and perfectly controlled way, never exactly reaching for nobility where it might have been possible in the fifth, nor descending to more intimate communication where the eighth might have allowed it.

* * *

YESTERDAY afternoon Erich Leinsdorf, who returned to conduct the orchestra, chose an all-Brahms program, playing the "Academic Festival" overture and the Third Symphony, in what was probably the most guileless and thus most penetrating performance of that symphony I have heard in a very long time. The conductor caught the "innigkeit," the quintessence of Viennese affection and tenderness. There may be several ways of playing Brahms. Very few play the symphonies the tender way I prefer, but Leinsdorf's unhurried and spacious perusal, especially of the last movements, pleased me enormously.

Whitestone

Hanne-Lore Kuhse and George Shirley

Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein was at his best as a craftsman on his instrument. There are few who can surpass the tone and mastery of the violin he produces but he approached the Brahms concerto looking through the big end of the telescope and strained at gnats. The concerto was singularly lacking in emphasis and forward urge. For sheer expertise however it was exemplary.

* * *

THE BEETHOVEN opera will undoubtedly stand out as the magnum opus of the season. In concert form, an opera necessarily loses some degree of vividness in the portrayal of emotion and of graphic enactment of stage business, but by a practical system of entrances and exits of the principals on an elevated terrace from behind a screen at the back of the stage the continuity, aided by a narrator, was made coherent and fluent.

Every component of the undertaking was excellently prepared and Leinsdorf coordinated them all with masterly control. The original 1805 version was played, consisting of three acts, and the overture, which is now designated as the Leonore No. 2, was used. This, incidentally, was played with great distinction. The rhetorical pauses were accentuated with striking effect and tension accumulated with alarming suspense.

* * *

THE CAST of principals was splendid. Marcelline was beautifully sung by Mary Ellen Pracht, a soprano of exceptional personable and vocal attributes. Her opening scene with her suitor Jaquino, sung by tenor Nico Castel, and which ended in her aria, "O war ich schon" was a harbinger of the level to which the performance was to remain constant all the evening.

Beethoven's interlude which leads into the quartet canon "Mir ist so wunderbar" sung by Marcelline and Jaquino, and Leonore, disguised as Fidelio, and sung by soprano Hanne-Lore Kuhse and bass Ara Berberian, as Rocco, the jailer, was a marvellously impressive verse which the violas and cellos played with wonderful resonance. The quartet competes for the apex of vocal sublimity in the whole opera with the scene in the third act where Leonore recognizes her imprisoned husband Florestan which George Shirley portrayed with tonal beauty and histrionic persuasiveness.

* * *

THIS SCENE in spite of lacking the advantages which action and scenery and costumes might have assisted and reinforced still had a thrilling impact. Florestan does not appear until the final act but his recognition by his faithful Leonore (Fidelio) and their ensuing reunion were made intense and telling by the two principals.

Miss Kuhse was superb in her arias and especially cooperative in the many concerted opportunities. The orchestral prelude which leads to Pizzaro's aria "Welch ein Augenblick," sung with tremendous effectiveness by Tom Krause, is another of Beethoven's happiest inspirations.

* * *

THERE WERE many cuts and omissions of the original opera but a narrator, Alfred Ryder, understandably carried away by the melodrama, bridged the potential hiatuses and maintained unbroken sequence of dramatic progress. A chorus prepared by Charles Wilson supplied needful support for the prison scenes.

The attendance over the weekend was a season's high. Figures for the three concerts reached, respectively, 6,676 Friday night, 8,135 Saturday, and 9,018 yesterday afternoon.

ACKNOWLEDGING THE PLAUDITS of Satu
Beethoven's opera "Fidelio" are the nine soloists, ch presented in the concert version of the 1805 work b with vocal cast. Choral preparation was by Charles W

The Philadelphia Inquirer
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
D. 522,941 SUN. 956,206

AUG 7 1967

At Lenox, Mass.

Beethoven Opera 'Fidelio' Is Presented

By DANIEL WEBSTER
Of The Inquirer Staff

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 5.—Beethoven may have had bad advice, according to evidence presented here Saturday by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Leinsdorf was leading the American premiere of Beethoven's original "Fidelio," his only opera and one which failed dismally at its premiere in 1805. Friends advised the composer to undertake revisions in 1806 (again a flop) and in 1814, when it caught fire. In his revisions, Beethoven threw out some gold, but a lot of dross too.

RADICALLY DIFFERENT

If Beethoven had had the intensly dedicated performance at his premiere that Leinsdorf produced here, his opera might have been an instant success. Leinsdorf's work can only be called inspired.

The later "Fidelio" is a radically different opera from the original. It is shorter by half an hour, tighter, momentous, studded with virtuoso arias. Its dramatic flow however, is not easy and the figure of Rocco the jailer is two-dimensional.

WROTE 4 OVERTURES

The original includes arias, ensembles and orchestral sections later dropped, and a dramatic continuity missing in the final one. Beethoven wrote four overtures for his opera and the original opened with the "Leonore" No. 2, itself more diffuse but more appropriate to the quality of the opera.

In 1805, Beethoven wrote rather conventional work. It followed a pattern of aria, duet, ensemble, gave Marcelline a stronger singing part, and developed Rocco as an embittered man, aware of the power of gold and political pull. His aria on gold, a patter song in the last draft, was ironic and hard-hitting, varied in tempo and mood in the original.

FIRST ACT DUET

Other markedly different portions include a glorious first act duet for basses, Rocco and Pizarro; Fidelio's big "abscheulicher" aria, here longer, and less a virtuoso display although still fiendishly difficult; a prisoner's chorus without the gripping beauty of the later one and a savage second act curtain aria for Pizarro, missing entirely in the later opera.

Florestan's aria, too, is broader and less dependent on the familiar melody which Beethoven developed in his third "Leonore" overture.

LESS TRUMPETLIKE

The final duet, "Namenlose Freude" is more gentle and less trumpetlike, although no easier for soprano.

Leinsdorf's inspired work was not matched by all his soloists. Tom Krause, although a stylish bass, lacked the harsh, black quality to fulfill the Pizarro role. And Hanne-Lore Kuhse, the German soprano, could not meet the demands of this Leonore.

In soft passages, her voice was attractive mellowness, but it lacks fiber in the low register and was wildly inaccurate and piercing in the top.

George Shirley, as Florestan, was careful of the sometimes florid line, accurate and sang in a full, lyric voice. Ara Berberian, Rocco, shaped an oddly bland character while singing the part well.

Mary Ellen Pracht, Marcelline, and Nico Castel, Jaquino, added distinctive performances. The Tanglewood Choir joined in a moving final ensemble.

Andrew Raeburn's narration, read by Alfred Ryder, was unnecessarily intrusive, too often seeking to explain Beethoven.

The hero of the night was Leinsdorf who produced a performance as admirable as his idea of re-examining a lost work.

Faithful to Fidelio

The new opera at Vienna's Theater an der Wien was a flop. The orchestra fumbled, the soprano bumbled, the tenor went flat. Critics dismissed the score as long, repetitive and gnarled with outlandish complexities. The production closed after three nights, reopened the following year, folded again after four more performances. The talented 35-year-old composer set the work aside for eight years. Then he undertook extensive revisions. "Hardly a musical number has been left unchanged," he wrote to a Vienna newspaper, "and more than half the opera was composed anew." Finally, in May 1814, Ludwig van Beethoven's only opera, Fidelio, was produced again at a different Vienna theater—and immediately became a hit.

Since then, the discarded original version has been performed rarely—and, as far as is known, never in the Western Hemisphere. But two years ago, Boston Symphony Conductor Erich Leinsdorf found a copy of the 1805 score in a Prague bookshop, was struck by its "awe-inspiring" power, and thought it would make an effective concert presentation at the Boston Symphony's summer home at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass. Last week, after Leinsdorf conducted a boldly sculptured, energy-charged U.S. première of the work at Tanglewood, it was emphatically clear that he had been right.

Compared with Beethoven's more polished, rounded—and, some say, compromised—version of 1814, the original Fidelio turned out to be expansive and florid, bursting through its forms with a driving force that the composer was only partially able to control. Its heavy orchestration has a strain of wildness that Beethoven tamed in his later revisions; its soaring vocal lines, which he later modified, make harsh demands on singers. In all, there are significant differences from the 1814 revision on 134 of the vocal score's 276 pages.

Leinsdorf does not think the original Fidelio will find a place in regular operatic productions, but he sees it as a strong, if difficult, addition to the concert and festival repertory. "It represents the composer at his hottest," he says—and by way of proof, Leinsdorf had to change his sweat-soaked jacket at intermission. "In it, like the genius he was, Beethoven was asking for things ahead of his time which probably could not be done." As Leinsdorf, the orchestra and the singers—particularly Soprano Hanne-Lore Kuhse and Tenor George Shirley—showed at Tanglewood, they can be done now.

46

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 20,000

AUG 7 1967

New England Newsclip

Music Review

Magnum Opus at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THERE WERE two dramas at Tanglewood over the past weekend. One was the moving performance of Beethoven's only opera, Fidelio, in concert form Saturday night; the other was unplanned. Friday evening during the angry, grumbling storm which competed with Theodore Lettvin, during his performance of Beethoven's Third Piano Concerto with the Boston Symphony orchestra and William Steinberg as guest conductor, some elemental interference suddenly doused the lights. Everyone was in complete darkness for about two blinks, but not in silence. Troopers all, soloist and orchestra kept going (it was four bars before the final cadenza of the last movement). When the lights came back again two winks later, Beethoven, as if by prescience, lapsed into the major mode of the coda in gratitude and release from the momentary incarceration.

* * *

THE AUDIENCE, suddenly released from the unexpected shock, spontaneously broke into great applause as it realized how the show had gone on. Lettvin and Steinberg went down the home stretch with increased elation and ended in a blaze of glory - a performance which, even without the dramatic incident, would still have been compelling and ebullient.

Steinberg surrounded the piano concerto of his all-Beethoven program with two symphonies. He gave them both a connoisseur's touch, but in a modest and perfectly controlled way, never exactly reaching for nobility where it might have been possible in the fifth, nor descending to more intimate communication where the eighth might have allowed it.

* * *

YESTERDAY afternoon Erich Leinsdorf, who returned to conduct the orchestra, chose an all-Brahms program, playing the "Academic Festival" overture and the Third Symphony, in what was probably the most guileless and thus most penetrating performance of that symphony I have heard in a very long time. The conductor caught the "innigkeit," the quintessence of Viennese affection and tenderness. There may be several ways of playing Brahms. Very few play the symphonies the tender way I prefer, but Leinsdorf's unhurried and spacious perusal, especially of the last movements, pleased me enormously.

Whitestone

Hanne-Lore Kuhse and George Shirley

Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein was at his best as a craftsman on his instrument. There are few who can surpass the tone and mastery of the violin he produces but he approached the Brahms concerto looking through the big end of the telescope and strained at gnats. The concerto was singularly lacking in emphasis and forward urge. For sheer expertise however it was exemplary.

* * *

THE BEETHOVEN opera will undoubtedly stand out as the magnum opus of the season. In concert form, an opera necessarily loses some degree of vividness in the portrayal of emotion and of graphic enactment of stage business, but by a practical system of entrances and exits of the principals on an elevated terrace from behind a screen at the back of the stage the continuity, aided by a narrator, was made coherent and fluent.

Every component of the undertaking was excellently prepared and Leinsdorf coordinated them all with masterly control. The original 1805 version was played, consisting of three acts, and the overture, which is now designated as the Leonore No. 2, was used. This, incidentally, was played with great distinction. The rhetorical pauses were accentuated with striking effect and tension accumulated with alarming suspense.

* * *

THE CAST of principals was splendid. Marcelline was beautifully sung by Mary Ellen Pracht, a soprano of excepti personable and vocal attrib Her opening scene with suitor Jaquino, sung by t Nico Castel, and which ende her aria, "O war ich sch was a harbinger of the leve which the performance wa remain constant all the even Beethoven's interlude w leads into the quartet ca "Mir ist so wunderbar" sun Marcelline and Jaquino, and nore, disguised as Fidelio, sung by soprano Hanne-L Kuhse and bass Ara Berber as Rocco, the jailer, was a r vellously impressive v which the violas and c played with wonderful r nance. The quartet competes the apex of vocal sublimit the whole opera with the s in the third act where Leo recognizes her imprisoned band Florestan which Ge Shirley portrayed with t beauty and histrionic per siveness.

* * *

THIS SCENE in spite of ly ing the advantages which a and scenery and costu might have assisted and reinforced still had a thrilling impact. Florestan does not appear until the final act but his recognition by his faithful Leonore (Fidelio) and their ensuing reunion were made intense and telling by the two principals.

Miss Kuhse was superb in her arias and especially cooperative in the many concerted opportunities. The orchestral prelude which leads to Pizzaro's aria "Welch ein Augenblick," sung with tremendous effectiveness by Tom Krause, is another of Beethoven's happiest inspirations.

* * *

THERE WERE many cuts and omissions of the original opera but a narrator, Alfred Ryder, understandably carried away by the melodrama, bridged the potential hiatuses and maintained unbroken sequence of dramatic progress. A chorus prepared by Charles Wilson supplied needful support for the prison scenes.

The attendance over the weekend was a season's high. Figures for the three concerts reached, respectively, 6,676 Friday night, 8,135 Saturday, and 9,018 yesterday afternoon.

Whitestone

rday night's capacity audience at the Tanglewood performance of orus, narrator, conductor and orchestra. The three-act opera was y Erich Leinsdorf, who directed the Boston Symphony Orchestra
ilson; Andrew Raeburn formulated stage direction, narration.

The Philadelphia Inquirer
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
D. 522,941 SUN. 956,206

AUG 7 1967

At Lenox, Mass.

Beethoven Opera 'Fidelio' Is Presented

By DANIEL WEBSTER
Of The Inquirer Staff

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 5.—Beethoven may have had bad advice, according to evidence presented here Saturday by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Leinsdorf was leading the American premiere of Beethoven's original "Fidelio," his only opera and one which failed dismally at its premiere in 1805. Friends advised the composer to undertake revisions in 1806 (again a flop) and in 1814, when it caught fire. In his revisions, Beethoven threw out some gold, but a lot of dross too.

RADICALLY DIFFERENT

If Beethoven had had the intensly dedicated performance at his premiere that Leinsdorf produced here, his opera might have been an instant success. Leinsdorf's work can only be called inspired.

The later "Fidelio" is a radically different opera from the original. It is shorter by half an hour, tighter, momentous, studded with virtuoso arias. Its dramatic flow however, is not easy and the figure of Rocco the jailer is two-dimensional.

WROTE 4 OVERTURES

The original includes arias, ensembles and orchestral sections later dropped, and a dramatic continuity missing in the final one. Beethoven wrote four overtures for his opera and the original opened with the "Leonore" No. 2, itself more diffuse but more appropriate to the quality of the opera.

In 1805, Beethoven wrote rather conventional work. It followed a pattern of aria, duet, ensemble, gave Marcelline a stronger singing part, and developed Rocco as an embittered man, aware of the power of gold and political pull. His aria on gold, a patter song in the last draft, was ironic and hard-hitting, varied in tempo and mood in the original.

FIRST ACT DUET

Other markedly different portions include a glorious first act duet for basses, Rocco and Pizarro; Fidelio's big "abscheulicher" aria, here longer, and less a virtuoso display although still fiendishly difficult; a prisoner's chorus without the gripping beauty of the later one and a savage second act curtain aria for Pizarro, missing entirely in the later opera.

Florestan's aria, too, is broader and less dependent on the familiar melody which Beethoven developed in his third "Leonore" overture.

LESS TRUMPETLIKE

The final duet, "Namenlose Freude" is more gentle and less trumpetlike, although no easier for soprano.

Leinsdorf's inspired work was not matched by all his soloists. Tom Krause, although a stylish bass, lacked the harsh, black quality to fulfill the Pizarro role. And Hanne-Lore Kuhse, the German soprano, could not meet the demands of this Leonore.

In soft passages, her voice was attractive mellowness, but it lacks fiber in the low register and was wildly inaccurate and piercing in the top.

George Shirley, as Florestan, was careful of the sometimes florid line, accurate and sang in a full, lyric voice. Ara Berberian, Rocco, shaped an oddly bland character while singing the part well.

Mary Ellen Pracht, Marcelline, and Nico Castel, Jaquino, added distinctive performances. The Tanglewood Choir joined in a moving final ensemble.

Andrew Raeburn's narration, read by Alfred Ryder, was unnecessarily intrusive, too often seeking to explain Beethoven.

The hero of the night was Leinsdorf who produced a performance as admirable as his idea of re-examining a lost work.

Faithful to Fidelio

The new opera at Vienna's Theater an der Wien was a flop. The orchestra fumbled, the soprano bumbled, the tenor went flat. Critics dismissed the score as long, repetitive and gnarled with outlandish complexities. The production closed after three nights, reopened the following year, folded again after four more performances. The talented 35-year-old composer set the work aside for eight years. Then he undertook extensive revisions. "Hardly a musical number has been left unchanged," he wrote to a Vienna newspaper, "and more than half the opera was composed anew." Finally, in May 1814, Ludwig van Beethoven's only opera, Fidelio, was produced again at a different Vienna theater—and immediately became a hit.

Since then, the discarded original version has been performed rarely—and, as far as is known, never in the Western Hemisphere. But two years ago, Boston Symphony Conductor Erich Leinsdorf found a copy of the 1805 score in a Prague bookshop, was struck by its "awe-inspiring" power, and thought it would make an effective concert presentation at the Boston Symphony's summer home at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass. Last week, after Leinsdorf conducted a boldly sculptured, energy-charged U.S. première of the work at Tanglewood, it was emphatically clear that he had been right.

Compared with Beethoven's more polished, rounded—and, some say, compromised—version of 1814, the original Fidelio turned out to be expansive and florid, bursting through its forms with a driving force that the composer was only partially able to control. Its heavy orchestration has a strain of wildness that Beethoven tamed in his later revisions; its soaring vocal lines, which he later modified, make harsh demands on singers. In all, there are significant differences from the 1814 revision on 134 of the vocal score's 276 pages.

Leinsdorf does not think the original Fidelio will find a place in regular operatic productions, but he sees it as a strong, if difficult, addition to the concert and festival repertory. "It represents the composer at his hottest," he says—and by way of proof, Leinsdorf had to change his sweat-soaked jacket at intermission. "In it, like the genius he was, Beethoven was asking for things ahead of his time which probably could not be done." As Leinsdorf, the orchestra and the singers—particularly Soprano Hanne-Lore Kuhse and Tenor George Shirley—showed at Tanglewood, they can be done now.

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 25,000

AUG 10 1967

YOUR WORLD OF OPERA

By WILLIAM D. MIRANDA

TANGLEWOOD'S FIDELIO

The third in a series of annual performances of Tanglewood of opera in concert form, Beethoven's Fidelio in the original 1805 version introduced to Boston audiences the remarkable voice of Hanne-Lore Kuhse making her local debut. Miss Kuhse, the first East Berlin Opera star to make western concert appearances, combines the dedication and taste of a true Mozartean, the power of a helden soprano and the coloratura agility of a bel-canto era prinma donna. It was thus that she was able to handle the original Leonore Music and cause the performance to be stopped twice, once after her Komm Hoffnung aria which in this version contains long arias and other embellishments all executed with precision, there was also prolonged cheering following her duet with George Shirley as the original version reaches into the uncomfortable startosphere making spectacular vocal display, if dramatically inferior to the familiar version.

Miss Kuhse, protege of recent Boston visitor Friedelinde Wagner, also revealed a dramatic intensity and a keen sense of diction both characteristics valuable to any Germanic singer.

George Shirley opposite Miss Kuhse was a light voiced Florestan, hesitant in his aria and uncertain of pitch with harsh vocal coloring. By the great duet he had settled down and partnered her well. He is miscast here, almost as much as if the later version of the role with its heart rendering moments and dramatic excitement had been chosen. Tom Krause was a virile and viscious Pizarro after a slow start making much of the villian that is usually a disappointment. Ara Berberian's Rocco was warmly human and totally serious (thank heaven the production eliminated all misplaced humor). Mary Ellen Pracht's voice is really too heavy for Marcelline and she made no satisfactory contrast with Miss Kuhse but the duet between the women cut in the familiar version was a joy to hear nonetheless. The Jaquino of Nico Castel was first rate singing without levity and musicianly throughout. Harold Ennes was a Cipher as Don Fernando.

In the pit Erich Leinsdorf demonstrated this full understanding of Beethoven ennobling even the passages that are less than the titan's greatest. A libretto supplied, with lights raised and use of some dialogue would have served the purpose better than Alfred Ryder's narration which became more overdone with each appearance and finally emerged as semi-satiric. Mr. Ryder should stick to Peter and the Wolf. A choral work by a group prepared by Charles Wilson made touching the great freedom chorus and the orchestra gave us some magnificent sound particularly in difficult brass sections. Now R.C.A. why don't you take the B.S.O. and Miss Kuhse and give us this version of Fidelio for all time?

NEWPORT FESTIVAL

After last year's tentative efforts by the Metropolitan at Newport, the staff promised a bigger and better festival this year. That was an understatement. They have scheduled for the Verdi Festival which opens a ten-day stand on August 17 some of the most mouth-watering operatic events ever anticipated in the New England area. Not only are there many and varied programs for all tastes, but something is scheduled daily from 9:30 in the morning until past midnite for opera buffs of the largest calibre to steep themselves in their passion to their hearts' content. (I confess I am one such buff myself). For full schedules I suggest you consult the ads and news releases, but a few highlights of the day-by-day events should help you decide what day or days to take in part of the Festival.

Thursday, August 17, Evening performance in concert of Macbeth features brilliant baritone Kostas Paskalis in title role with Grace Bumbry as a fascinating choice for Lady Macbeth to kick off the Festival.

Friday, August 18 - A tape playing of Verdi's opera Oberto will launch a day that includes a morning concert of Verdi's exquisite, little known songs, a Biography in Music of Caruso by Francis Robinson during the afternoon opera bazaar and Rigoletto in the evening with Roberta Peters and Peter Glossop who has wowed Italian audiences in the title role will finish up a busy day. (He was Marcello opposite Renata Tebaldi season before last for his Boston debut with the Opera Company's Boheme.)

Saturday the 19th will have Rudolph Bing himself speak during the afternoon bazaar with a special reading of rare opera excerpts at the lovely Elms Estate at tea time. That night for film buffs the evening performance of Traviata starring Gabriella Tucci will be followed by the movie Charlie Chan at the Opera.

On Sunday a tape of Due Foscari will start off the day that will also feature a supper and a Connoisseur's concert of salon music in the evening at the Breakers.

Monday will begin the daily performance of operas for students presented at 11 a.m. by the Met Studio and alternating Cosi Fan Tutte with Don Pasquale. At the bazaar in the afternoon Frank Dunand, official photographer of the Metropolitan Opera Guild, will show his marvellous slides of Falstaff, one of several such visual delights for the week. There will follow an opportunity to meet some of the stars and in the evening, the American premiere of a new opera, Williamson's The Happy Prince.

Tuesday the 22nd will have an afternoon reading of excerpts from early Verdi works with James McCracken's virile Manrico spearheading the evening's concert performance of Trovatore.

Next day the long-awaited, rarely performed Sicilian Vespers, Verdi's least-heard mature work, will be given with the thrilling soprano Virginia Zeani, Eugenio Fernandi, newly returned to the Met and Mr. Paskalis in lead roles.

Thursday's program (the 24th) will feature string quartets by three opera composers in the morning, in the afternoon a concert by virtuoso pianist Raymond Lewenthal, famous for his interpretation of virtuoso renderings of opera excerpts for the piano, and the late evening film will be Grace Moore's unforgettable One Night of Love. The final weekend will feature the great Tito Gobbi in Otello on Friday and Aida Saturday evenings. Tebaldi and Vickers will make the Otello cast ideal, and Richard Tucker will give New Englanders their first taste of his famous Radames opposite the Aida of Martina Arroyo. The Saturday afternoon bazaar will star Mr. Bing in an opera quiz.

These are only a few highlights, but trying to choose a day just out of these is like picking Miss America. Why not try the whole festival. It's a thrilling way to end a quiet operatic summer.

PATRIOT-LEDGER (e)
QUINCY, MASS.
CIRC. 58,900

AUG 8 1967

New England Newsclip

The Sound of Music

47

Beethoven's Only Opera: A Renaissance In The Berkshires

By Peter M. Knapp

LENOX — A stage flop of the early 19th century was revived Saturday night at Tanglewood, in a musical undertaking of uncommon interest.

The revival brought back the original version of Beethoven's only opera, "Fidelio." In probably the first performance in the Western Hemisphere of the original "Fidelio," Erich Leinsdorf conducted the Boston Symphony, the Tanglewood Choir, Berkshire Chorus and soloists before a gathering of 8,135.

"Fidelio" had its premiere on Nov. 13, 1805, in Vienna's Theater-an-der-Wien shortly after the French occupied the city. The work disappointed, and folded after only three performances. Beethoven tried again with a revised version in 1806; that had four performances. Finally, in 1814 came the extensively-altered "Fidelio" that we know today.

The Creative Process

The differences between the versions are substantial. The original version is a diamond in the rough. All the basic qualities are there, but the opera was decidedly improved by the cutting and polishing Beethoven did later.

The 1805 "Fidelio" is encumbered as a dramatic work by arias and ensembles that give depth to the characterization but interrupt the action. In themselves, the vocal portions which were excised for the 1814 production have music of charm and lyric beauty; but they are more rooted in 18th century convention than the later score.

The drama also suffers from the interjection of light comic opera tunes and yards of vocal filagree that adorned them. They dilute the central point of the opera, which after all is Leonore-Fidelio's attempt to rescue her husband from Pizarro's prison. The 1814 "Fidelio," in short, is more compact, more dramatic, more single-willed.

There are numerous specific examples of the changes one could point out. For example, the 1805 opera begins with an ascending plan of aria, duet, trio, quartet, then moves to Rocco's aria about gold (here, a biting commentary on the abuses of the power of money), and the act concludes with the usual trio.

In the 1814 version, the Jaquino-Marcelline duet opens the act, then comes Marcelline's aria. The first trio (Rocco, Marcelline, Jaquino) of 1805 is cut, so that the quartet comes next, with the pattern thereafter the same as in the original. In the later version of Rocco's aria, the text was changed and the trumpets and timpani omitted from the accompaniment.

Comic Infiltration

In Act II, Beethoven eventually cut a duet for Marcelline and Fidelio that employs 18th century comic opera devices. This duet comes between the departure of Pizarro and Fidelio's big aria ("Komm, Hoffnung" in the 1805 score; "Abscheulicher!" in 1814) and so on.

ARA BERBERIAN
. . . slow bass progress

The last act also is substantially changed. The 1805 version includes trombones and contra-bassoon in the orchestral introduction which adds weight and sonority; there is a long recitation for Fidelio and Florestan before their joyful reunion duet; the finale takes place in the dungeon rather than in the courtyard and is quite different.

In this Tanglewood performance, Leinsdorf arranged the singers at center-stage rear, where they made their entrances and exits from behind a screen. Acting was confined to a few gestures. With a few crucial exceptions, the spoken dialogue was omitted, the gist of the conversations being given by a narration written by Andrew Raeburn and delivered in histrionic fashion by Alfred Ryder. This device saved time (the original "Fidelio" is quite long), but also left the impression of a succession of musical numbers rather than a continuing drama.

Leinsdorf conducted a generally compelling, illuminating performance and the orchestra played with intensity for him. The ensembles for the most part came through eloquently. The overture (here, the Leonore No. 2) was a triumph of disciplined playing and emotional commitment on Leinsdorf's part.

Of the singers George Shirley (Florestan) sang most beautifully. Always a dependable singer, the tenor's voice seemed to ring out with unusual clarity and lyric grace. Perhaps the 1814 "Fidelio" would be a bit heavy for Shirley but the 1805 score has a far lighter touch to it and provides extensive cantabile passages that were ideal for him.

Bass Tom Krause sang Pizarro's imprecations forcefully, though the total impact of his vocalism was hindered by his lack of carrying power. At the front of the stage, Krause probably could have produced a more malevolent effect.

Late In Take-Off

Ara Berberian has the type of grainy, cutting bass voice that carries very well, but his portrayal of Rocco lacked the depth of personality the chief warder should have. Berberian improved as the performance progressed, though.

In the big role of Leonore-Fidelio, Hanne-Lore Kuhse, leading dramatic soprano of the Berlin State Opera (East Berlin), was a disappointment for this listener. She has a large voice which is round and appealing enough in the middle of her range but her top notes turn shrill and the low notes disappear.

Miss Kuhse often met the dramatic demands of the role and made a big hit with the audience in her long aria, "Komm, Hoffnung." The first Leonore, Anna Milder, complained to the composer about the "unbeautiful, unsingable passages," in this aria, and in truth it is a formidable thing to sing with its involved coloratura and fearsome skips.

Miss Kuhse tussled with the aria bravely, but for a definitive performance a singer with more technique than she has is needed. She is not a particularly graceful or careful singer, with pitch for example, or in her slurring attacks — but the crowd loved her.

Mary Ellen Pracht contributed a pretty and capable Marcelline, and the minor roles were well done by Nico Castel (Jaquino), Harold Enns (Don Fernando), William Brown and Charles Van Tasel (prisoners). The chorus sang exceptionally well in the famous Prisoner's Chorus and the two long choral sections of the finale.

Sunday Afternoon

Leinsdorf returned for a Brahms program Sunday afternoon, attended by 9,018. It began with the "Academic Festival" Overture, moved into the Third Symphony in F, and concluded with Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein playing the Violin Concerto.

The performances emphasized the poetry of Brahms, rather than the Old-Man-of-the-Mountains approach. Leinsdorf's direction of the symphony was relaxed, genial, introspective. The BSO's music director seemed to be in an informal mood as he strolled into the orchestra to chat and joke with the players after the overture, instead of leaving the stage. He also has taken up singing lately as part of his conductor's tools to coax more fervent playing out of his men.

Brahms goes well outdoors for summer listening, and so one welcomed the release from tensions with the serene statements from the woodwinds and the softly-rounded contours Leinsdorf brought to the Third. The familiar allegretto movement seemed seductive in its gracious lines, though perhaps the initial statement of the first movement theme might have had more sinew.

Concertmaster Silverstein was in top form for the concerto, floating his pure, sweet tone confidently over the Brahmsian cantilena. He lacks the big, bold tone to fully carry off all the bravura moments — in the soloist's first entrance, for example —but his conception of the concerto has deepened and he did it very well. The Kreisler cadenza was played in dazzling style notably the chains of trills.

Friday Night

There was an unscheduled event during Friday night's concert, conducted by William Steinberg. A whammer of a thunderstorm swept across Tanglewood as Theodore Lettvin was playing the Beethoven Third Piano Concerto. As the concerto neared the final double-bar, the lights went out. Everyone carried on as usual, and just as the players showed signs of faltering the lights blinked on again. Another hazard of summer music festivals!

Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony, led an all-Beethoven program that attracted 6,676 patrons. Along with the concerto, the Eighth and Fifth Symphonies of Beethoven were on the menu.

The bulky conductor, 68 last week, directed with authority. He favors a muscular approach to Beethoven with definite, chopping accents and brisk tempi. He keeps orchestral discipline with brusque, cutting gestures and got incisive playing. Perhaps because of the soggy variable weather, the horns had their problems during the evening and wind intonation was not always reliable.

The Eighth Symphony emerged somewhat sterner than customary — on the hard side, but substantial as sauerbraten. The allegretto movement tripped along winningly and the rugged banter of the finale was punctuated by the added percussion of thunderclaps.

The Fifth Symphony brought a splendid conclusion in the rousing grandeur of the finale with the trombones adding their gruff sonorities to the instrumental mix. The andante flowed with a serene and balanced conviction. This movement which can be ploddingly dull if improperly handled, was magnificently directed by Steinberg.

Lettvin contributed a solid performance of the c minor piano concerto. He played cleanly and aggressively in a crisp, sometimes brittle tone that worked best in the rondo — even through the blackout. Yet for this reviewer his playing seemed emotionally cold, technically proficient without that dash of "soul" that stimulates excitement. Steinberg's accompaniment was intelligently shaped and helpful to the soloist.

N.Y. Times Aug. 7, '67

Music: 'Fidelio' in the Original Version

Beethoven Work Given for First Time in U.S.

By RAYMOND ERICSON
Special to The New York Times

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 6—The Berkshire Music Festival behaved like a festival last night and came up with something special—the original version of Beethoven's only opera, "Fidelio." As far as is known, it had not previously been performed in this country.

The final version, is familiar, of course, but its forerunner turned out to be interesting enough to raise the question of which version is superior.

"Fidelio" had its premiere in Vienna in 1805. Its failure at that time could be attributed to a poor performance and an audience largely made up of French occupation troops.

Beethoven revised it, chiefly by making cuts, for performances the following year. This apparently didn't help with the public. For the final version there was large-scale reworking of the original material and when it was produced in 1814 it became a popular success.

•

The obvious ways in which the opera was changed were the deletion of two set pieces from the first act and the revamping of the finales to the acts. Some of the arias and duets begin familiarly, but end differently.

In countless places there are small variations—elisions or extensions of phrases, a change in the melodic line, rescoring. In general, Beethoven tightened and condensed for the final version and made more interesting modulations in the harmonies. Everything he did is understandable and makes sense in musical terms. However, in dramatic terms the changes were not necessarily improvements.

The first part of the opera, in its original form, begins with set pieces for one, two, three and four voices in that order. The trio, eventually deleted, is for Marcelline, Jaquino and Rocco, and is delightful. There is another duet, also deleted later, for Marcelline and Leonore. It flows along in a beautiful, almost Mozartean style.

The way in which Beethoven originally let his finales run on has its compensations, too, since they are able to build more gradually and generate more excitement.

The great "Abscheulicher" recitative for Leonore is missing from the early version. Her music is more florid. An emphasis on lyricism, melodic richness and vocal resources pervades the opera, making it a rival in interest to the final version.

The performance was excellent. A major factor was the playing of the Boston Symphony. This kind of brilliant orchestral sound and technical accuracy is seldom encountered in the opera house. Erich Leinsdorf, whose idea it was to resurrect the original version, kept the singers and players under strict control, but he was not above whipping up an orchestral storm whenever suitable.

Erich Leinsdorf Leads the Boston Symphony

•

Leonore was sung by Hanne-Lore Kuhse, a soprano from East Germany, who made her American debut last spring in Philadelphia as Isolde. Singing under better circumstances here, she made a more favorable impression in the Beethoven opera than she had in the Wagner. She has a lovely voice, and she uses it sensitively, but she didn't have the technique to cope with all the florid passages; omitted some, and her high notes were hard and shrill.

There were tasteful, well-sung performances from George Shirley as Florestan, Mary Ellen Pracht as Marcelline, Tom Krause as Pizarro, Ara Berberian as Rocco, Nico Castel as Jaquino and Harold Enns as Fernando.

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.

AUG 10 1967

YOUR WORLD OF OPERA

By WILLIAM D. MIRANDA

TANGLEWOOD'S FIDELIO

The third in a series of annual performances of Tanglewood of opera in concert form, Beethoven's Fidelio in the original 1805 version introduced to Boston audiences the remarkable voice of Hanne-Lore Kuhse making her local debut. Miss Kuhse, the first East Berlin Opera star to make western concert appearances, combines the dedication and taste of a true Mozartean, the power of a helden soprano and the coloratura agility of a belcanto era prinma donna. It was thus that she was able to handle the original Leonore Music and cause the performance to be stopped twice, once after her Komm Hoffnung aria which in this version contains long arias and other embellishments all executed with precision, there was also prolonged cheering following her duet with George Shirley as the original version reaches into the uncomfortable startosphere making spectacular vocal display, if dramatically inferior to the familiar version.

Miss Kuhse, protege of recent Boston visitor Friedelinde Wagner, also revealed a dramatic intensity and a keen sense of diction both characteristics valuable to any Germanic singer.

George Shirley opposite Miss Kuhse was a light voiced Florestan, hesitant in his aria and uncertain of pitch with harsh vocal coloring. By the great duet he had settled down and partnered her well. He is miscast here, almost as much as if the later version of the role with its heart rendering moments and dramatic excitement had been chosen. Tom Krause was a virile and viscious Pizarro after a slow start making much of the villian that is usually a disappointment. Ara Berberian's Rocco was warmly human and totally serious (thank heaven the production eliminated all misplaced humor). Mary Ellen Pracht's voice is really too heavy for Marcelline and she made no satisfactory contrast with Miss Kuhse but the duet between the women cut in the familiar version was a joy to hear nonetheless. The Jaquino of Nico Castel was first rate singing without levity and musicianly throughout. Harold Ennes was a Cipher as Don Fernando.

In the pit Erich Leinsdorf demonstrated this full understanding of Beethoven ennobling even the passages that are less than the titan's greatest. A libretto supplied, with lights raised and use of some dialogue would have served the purpose better than Alfred Ryder's narration which became more overdone with each appearance and finally emerged as semi-satiric. Mr. Ryder should stick to Peter and the Wolf. A choral work by a group prepared by Charles Wilson made touching the great freedom chorus and the orchestra gave us some magnificent sound particularly in difficult brass sections. Now R.C.A. why don't you take the B.S.O. and Miss Kuhse and give us this version of Fidelio for all time?

NEWPORT FESTIVAL

After last year's tentative efforts by the Metropolitan at Newport, the staff promised a bigger and better festival this year. That was an understatement. They have scheduled for the Verdi Festival which opens a ten-day stand on August 17 some of the most mouth-watering operatic events ever anticipated in the New England area. Not only are there many and varied programs for all tastes, but something is scheduled daily from 9:30 in the morning until past midnite for opera buffs of the largest calibre to steep themselves in their passion to their hearts' content. (I confess I am one such buff myself). For full schedules I suggest you consult the ads and news releases, but a few highlights of the day-by-day events should help you decide what day or days to take in part of the Festival.

Thursday, August 17, Evening performance in concert of Macbeth features brilliant baritone Kostas Paskalis in title role with Grace Bumbry as a fascinating choice for Lady Macbeth to kick off the Festival.

Friday, August 18 - A tape playing of Verdi's opera Oberto will launch a day that includes a morning concert of Verdi's exquisite, little known songs, a Biography in Music of Caruso by Francis Robinson during the afternoon opera bazaar and Rigoletto in the evening with Roberta Peters and Peter Glossop who has wowed Italian audiences in the title role will finish up a busy day. (He was Marcello opposite Renata Tebaldi season before last for his Boston debut with the Opera Company's Boheme.)

Saturday the 19th will have Rudolph Bing himself speak during the afternoon bazaar with a special reading of rare opera excerpts at the lovely Elms Estate at tea time. That night for film buffs the evening performance of Traviata starring Gabriella Tucci will be followed by the movie Charlie Chan at the Opera.

On Sunday a tape of Due Foscari will start off the day that will also feature a supper and a Connoisseur's concert of salon music in the evening at the Breakers.

Monday will begin the daily performance of operas for students presented at 11 a.m. by the Met Studio and alternating Cosi Fan Tutte with Don Pasquale. At the bazaar in the afternoon Frank Dunand, official photographer of the Metropolitan Opera Guild, will show his marvellous slides of Falstaff, one of several such visual delights for the week. There will follow an opportunity to meet some of the stars and in the evening, the American premiere of a new opera, Williamson's The Happy Prince.

Tuesday the 22nd will have an afternoon reading of excerpts from early Verdi works with James McCracken's virile Manrico spearheading the evening's concert performance of Trovatore.

Next day the long-awaited, rarely performed Sicilian Vespers, Verdi's least-heard mature work, will be given with the thrilling soprano Virginia Zeani, Eugenio Fernandi, newly returned to the Met and Mr. Paskalis in lead roles.

Thursday's program (the 24th) will feature string quartets by three opera composers in the morning, in the afternoon a concert by virtuoso pianist Raymond Lewenthal, famous for his interpretation of virtuoso renderings of opera excerpts for the piano, and the late evening film will be Grace Moore's unforgettable One Night of Love. The final weekend will feature the great Tito Gobbi in Otello on Friday and Aida Saturday evenings. Tebaldi and Vickers will make the Otello cast ideal, and Richard Tucker will give New Englanders their first taste of his famous Radames opposite the Aida of Martina Arroyo. The Saturday afternoon bazaar will star Mr. Bing in an opera quiz.

These are only a few highlights, but trying to choose a day just out of these is like picking Miss America. Why not try the whole festival. It's a thrilling way to end a quiet operatic summer.

PATRIOT-LEDGER (e)
QUINCY, MASS.
CIRC. 58,900

AUG 8 1967

New England Newsclip

The Sound of Music

47

Beethoven's Only Opera: A Renaissance In The Berkshires

By Peter M. Knapp

LENOX — A stage flop of the early 19th century was revived Saturday night at Tanglewood, in a musical undertaking of uncommon interest.

The revival brought back the original version of Beethoven's only opera, "Fidelio." In probably the first performance in the Western Hemisphere of the original "Fidelio," Erich Leinsdorf conducted the Boston Symphony, the Tanglewood Choir, Berkshire Chorus and soloists before a gathering of 8,135.

"Fidelio" had its premiere on Nov. 13, 1805, in Vienna's Theater-an-der-Wien shortly after the French occupied the city. The work disappointed, and folded after only three performances. Beethoven tried again with a revised version in 1806; that had four performances. Finally, in 1814 came the extensively-altered "Fidelio" that we know today.

The Creative Process

The differences between the versions are substantial. The original version is a diamond in the rough. All the basic qualities are there, but the opera was decidedly improved by the cutting and polishing Beethoven did later.

The 1805 "Fidelio" is encumbered as a dramatic work by arias and ensembles that give depth to the characterization but interrupt the action. In themselves, the vocal portions which were excised for the 1814 production have music of charm and lyric beauty; but they are more rooted in 18th century convention than the later score.

The drama also suffers from the interjection of light comic opera tunes and yards of vocal filagree that adorned them. They dilute the central point of the opera, which after all is Leonore-Fidelio's attempt to rescue her husband from Pizarro's prison. The 1814 "Fidelio,' in short, is more compact, more dramatic, more single-willed.

There are numerous specific examples of the changes one could point out. For example, the 1805 opera begins with an ascending plan of aria, duet, trio, quartet, then moves to Rocco's aria about gold (here, a biting commentary on the abuses of the power of money), and the act concludes with the usual trio.

In the 1814 version, the Jaquino-Marcelline duet opens the act, then comes Marcelline's aria. The first trio (Rocco, Marcelline, Jaquino) of 1805 is cut, so that the quartet comes next, with the pattern thereafter the same as in the original. In the later version of Rocco's aria, the text was changed and the trumpets and timpani omitted from the accompaniment.

Comic Infiltration

In Act II, Beethoven eventually cut a duet for Marcelline and Fidelio that employs 18th century comic opera devices. This duet comes between the departure of Pizarro and Fidelio's big aria ("Komm, Hoffnung" in the 1805 score; 'Abscheulicher!" in 1814) and so on.

ARA BERBERIAN
. . . slow bass progress

The last act also is substantially changed. The 1805 version includes trombones and contra-bassoon in the orchestral introduction which adds weight and sonority; there is a long recitation for Fidelio and Florestan before their joyful reunion duet; the finale takes place in the dungeon rather than in the courtyard and is quite different.

In this Tanglewood performance, Leinsdorf arranged the singers at center-stage rear, where they made their entrances and exits from behind a screen. Acting was confined to a few gestures. With a few crucial exceptions, the spoken dialogue was omitted, the gist of the conversations being given by a narration written by Andrew Raeburn and delivered in histrionic fashion by Alfred Ryder. This device saved time (the original "Fidelio" is quite long), but also left the impression of a succession of musical numbers rather than a continuing drama.

Leinsdorf conducted a generally compelling, illuminating performance and the orchestra played with intensity for him. The ensembles for the most part came through eloquently. The overture (here, the Leonore No. 2) was a triumph of disciplined playing and emotional commitment on Leinsdorf's part.

Of the singers George Shirley (Florestan) sang most beautifully. Always a dependable singer, the tenor's voice seemed to ring out with unusual clarity and lyric grace. Perhaps the 1814 "Fidelio" would be a bit heavy for Shirley but the 1805 score has a far lighter touch to it and provides extensive cantabile passages that were ideal for him.

Bass Tom Krause sang Pizarro's imprecations forcefully, though the total impact of his vocalism was hindered by his lack of carrying power. At the front of the stage, Krause probably could have produced a more malevolent effect.

Late In Take-Off

Ara Berberian has the type of grainy, cutting bass voice that carries very well, but his portrayal of Rocco lacked the depth of personality the chief warder should have. Berberian improved as the performance progressed, though.

In the big role of Leonore-Fidelio, Hanne-Lore Kuhse, leading dramatic soprano of the Berlin State Opera (East Berlin), was a disappointment for this listener. She has a large voice which is round and appealing enough in the middle of her range but her top notes turn shrill and the low notes disappear.

Miss Kuhse often met the dramatic demands of the role and made a big hit with the audience in her long aria, "Komm, Hoffnung." The first Leonore, Anna Milder, complained to the composer about the "unbeautiful, unsingable passages," in this aria, and in truth it is a formidable thing to sing with its involved coloratura and fearsome skips.

Miss Kuhse tussled with the aria bravely, but for a definitive performance a singer with more technique than she has is needed. She is not a particularly graceful or careful singer, with pitch for example, or in her slurring attacks — but the crowd loved her.

Mary Ellen Pracht contributed a pretty and capable Marcelline, and the minor roles were well done by Nico Castel (Jaquino), Harold Enns (Don Fernando), William Brown and Charles Van Tasel (prisoners). The chorus sang exceptionally well in the famous Prisoner's Chorus and the two long choral sections of the finale.

Sunday Afternoon

Leinsdorf returned for a Brahms program Sunday afternoon, attended by 9,018. It began with the "Academic Festival" Overture, moved into the Third Symphony in F, and concluded with Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein playing the Violin Concerto.

The performances emphasized the poetry of Brahms, rather than the Old-Man-of-the-Mountains approach. Leinsdorf's direction of the symphony was relaxed, genial, introspective. The BSO's music director seemed to be in an informal mood as he strolled into the orchestra to chat and joke with the players after the overture, instead of leaving the stage. He also has taken up singing lately as part of his conductor's tools to coax more fervent playing out of his men.

Brahms goes well outdoors for summer listening, and so one welcomed the release from tensions with the serene statements from the woodwinds and the softly-rounded contours Leinsdorf brought to the Third. The familiar allegretto movement seemed seductive in its gracious lines, though perhaps the initial statement of the first movement theme might have had more sinew.

Concertmaster Silverstein was in top form for the concerto, floating his pure, sweet tone confidently over the Brahmsian cantilena. He lacks the big, bold tone to fully carry off all the bravura moments — in the soloist's first entrance, for example —but his conception of the concerto has deepened and he did it very well. The Kreisler cadenza was played in dazzling style notably the chains of trills.

Friday Night

There was an unscheduled event during Friday night's concert, conducted by William Steinberg. A whammer of a thunderstorm swept across Tanglewood as Theodore Lettvin was playing the Beethoven Third Piano Concerto. As the concerto neared the final double-bar, the lights went out. Everyone carried on as usual, and just as the players showed signs of faltering the lights blinked on again. Another hazard of summer music festivals!

Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony, led an all-Beethoven program that attracted 6,676 patrons. Along with the concerto, the Eighth and Fifth Symphonies of Beethoven were on the menu.

The bulky conductor, 68 last week, directed with authority. He favors a muscular approach to Beethoven with definite, chopping accents and brisk tempi. He keeps orchestral discipline with brusque, cutting gestures and got incisive playing. Perhaps because of the soggy variable weather, the horns had their problems during the evening and wind intonation was not always reliable.

The Eighth Symphony emerged somewhat sterner than customary — on the hard side, but substantial as sauerbraten. The allegretto movement tripped along winningly and the rugged banter of the finale was punctuated by the added percussion of thunderclaps.

The Fifth Symphony brought a splendid conclusion in the rousing grandeur of the finale with the trombones adding their gruff sonorities to the instrumental mix. The andante flowed with a serene and balanced conviction. This movement which can be ploddingly dull if improperly handled, was magnificently directed by Steinberg.

Lettvin contributed a solid performance of the c minor piano concerto. He played cleanly and aggressively in a crisp, sometimes brittle tone that worked best in the rondo — even through the blackout. Yet for this reviewer his playing seemed emotionally cold, technically proficient without that dash of "soul" that stimulates excitement. Steinberg's accompaniment was intelligently shaped and helpful to the soloist.

N.Y. Times Aug. 7, 67

Music: 'Fidelio' in the Original Version

Beethoven Work Given for First Time in U.S.

By RAYMOND ERICSON
Special to The New York Times

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 6—The Berkshire Music Festival behaved like a festival last night and came up with something special—the original version of Beethoven's only opera, "Fidelio." As far as is known, it had not previously been performed in this country.

The final version, is familiar, of course, but its forerunner turned out to be interesting enough to raise the question of which version is superior.

"Fidelio" had its premiere in Vienna in 1805. Its failure at that time could be attributed to a poor performance and an audience largely made up of French occupation troops.

Beethoven revised it, chiefly by making cuts, for performances the following year. This apparently didn't help with the public. For the final version there was large-scale reworking of the original material and when it was produced in 1814 it became a popular success.

•

The obvious ways in which the opera was changed were the deletion of two set pieces from the first act and the revamping of the finales to the acts. Some of the arias and duets begin familiarly, but end differently.

In countless places there are small variations—elisions or extensions of phrases, a change in the melodic line, rescoring. In general, Beethoven tightened and condensed for the final version and made more interesting modulations in the harmonies. Everything he did is understandable and makes sense in musical terms. However, in dramatic terms the changes were not necessarily improvements.

The first part of the opera, in its original form, begins with set pieces for one, two, three and four voices in that order. The trio, eventually deleted, is for Marcelline, Jaquino and Rocco, and is delightful. There is another duet, also deleted later, for Marcelline and Leonore. It flows along in a beautiful, almost Mozartean style.

The way in which Beethoven originally let his finales run on has its compensations, too, since they are able to build more gradually and generate more excitement.

The great "Abscheulicher" recitative for Leonore is missing from the early version. Her music is more florid. An emphasis on lyricism, melodic richness and vocal resources pervades the opera, making it a rival in interest to the final version.

The performance was ex-

Erich Leinsdorf Leads the Boston Symphony

cellent. A major factor was the playing of the Boston Symphony. This kind of brilliant orchestral sound and technical accuracy is seldom encountered in the opera house. Erich Leinsdorf, whose idea it was to resurrect the original version, kept the singers and players under strict control, but he was not above whipping up an orchestral storm whenever suitable.

•

Leonore was sung by Hanne-Lore Kuhse, a soprano from East Germany, who made her American debut last spring in Philadelphia as Isolde. Singing under better circumstances here, she made a more favorable impression in the Beethoven opera than she had in the Wagner. She has a lovely voice, and she uses it sensitively, but she didn't have the technique to cope with all the florid passages; omitted some, and her high notes were hard and shrill.

There were tasteful, well-sung performances from George Shirley as Florestan, Mary Ellen Pracht as Marcelline, Tom Krause as Pizarro, Ara Berberian as Rocco, Nico Castel as Jaquino and Harold Enns as Fernando.

48

FADED TEXT

Bud clip

Top Mus fyi → Pls return prompt

BEETHOVEN IN BERKSHIRES

Original 'Fidelio' Given First U.S. Presentation

By SPEIGHT JENKINS JR.

LENOX, Mass.— Of the music festivals in America, none has a more beautiful natural setting than Tanglewood, the summer location in the Berkshires of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This weekend, in this breathtakingly bucolic setting of hills and lakes, Erich Leinsdorf conducted the first performance in the Western Hemisphere of the first version (1805) of Beethoven's "Fidelio."

This paean to freedom, which has been associated with every major central European rebellion against tyranny since its composition, is known universally in its second form. Leinsdorf unearthed the first version, which had not been successful in its premiere, and so gave his summer audience a concert performance of a virtually new work.

BEETHOVEN'S work, one of the few totally serious operas with a happy ending, tells the story of a wife who goes through unbearable difficulties to free her husband from political imprisonment. Enabled by music expressing Beethoven's lifelong hatred of tyranny, the story describes resistance to all dictatorships throughout history.

Its first version, however, does not erase the latter one nor is it a viable alternative. In the nine years between the two versions, Beethoven tightened his score (eliminating about 40 minutes), perfected his vocal technique and created a much more exciting work.

IN THE FIRST act of the earlier version, there are two additional pieces and many changes in the vocal and orchestral score, the first occurring only a few bars into Marzelline's opening aria.

ARA BERBERIAN
. . . most satisfactory

An additional duet between Leonore and Marzelline tends to blunt a famous effect. In a normal "Fidelio," the duet between Rocco, the jailor, and Pizarro, the evil commandant of the prison, lets the audience know of the imminent murder of Florestan, the political prisoner.

Leonore, his disguised wife, overhears and rushes on stage to cry "Abscheulicher, wo eilst du hin!" (Blackest monster! How you hasten away!)

AFTER A DRAMATIC recitative, she calls for hope to give her strength in her endeavor and ends with an affirmation of her resolve to free her husband.

The scene breathes great theater and is not improved at all by the earlier version. Here the duet of the two men is followed by a light, almost Mozartean duet between Leonore and the young girl, Marzelline. Leonore's aria, without the opening recitative, follows and has no dramatic reason for being. Though the conclusion of the first act is quite exciting, throughout the whole of the second act the writing is less taut and less movingly constructed than in the familiar version.

THAT THE EVENING was a success was due almost single-handedly to Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony. Burning with zeal for this performance, the musical level never once dropped below fever pitch; Leinsdorf has rarely conducted an opera with so much interest and obvious abandon. The orchestra played beautifully (the French horns were perfect) and the balance between chorus, principals and orchestra was never less than ideal.

Of the soloists, Ara Berberian as Rocco and Mary Ellen Pracht as Marzelline were the most satisfactory. Berberian sang the jailor's bass sonorities with a smooth cantilena that never failed, while Miss Pracht created an attractively warm-voiced young girl.

HANNE-LORE Kuhse, the East-German dramatic soprano and protogee of Friedelind Wagner, sang Leonore with a smaller voice than necessary and with all of her abilities concentrated on singing the difficult music. In this version, the role of Leonore becomes almost impossible to sing; that she sang the notes is to her credit, but her client left her without the ability to make the character live.

George Shirley, the Florestan, is not a dramatic tenor. Even in this reduced version of his role, his voice was not right. Nor should the villain Pizarro have been sung by a baritone, in this case Tom Krause. It needs a solid bass-baritone, and the difference left Krause gasping for notes that were barely there.

YET IT WAS more than a rewarding evening. The vigor and knowledgeability of Leinsdorf and that marvelous Boston Symphony gave a capacity audience of 3,000 a rare exposure to unknown Beethoven. It may not be the preferable "Fidelio," but well-performed mature Beethoven can hardly be less than gratifying.

EVENING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 139,700
AUG 7 1967
New England Newsclip

In Beethoven's Original 'Fidelio'

New Singer Thrills Tanglewood Throng

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Music Critic

LENOX—An unforgettable evening: a great and vital work of Beethoven's, given only a handful of times ever, and probably not at all in America; an exciting performance generally, whose special glory was the portrayal of Leonore by the most wonderful new singer heard in this country since the debut of Nilsson.

The "Fidelio" of 1805, as performed Saturday night at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is flawed, and the revisions of 1814 that produced the work we see in the theater and hear on records today were necessary to have a tenable proposition for the modern theater. Also, the 1814 score contains many strokes of genius that enrich the work in ways that go far beyond questions of practicability: the prisoners' music at the end of Act I, the amazing cross-rhythms in the second finale, the spoken interruption of the trumpet quartet, almost all the changes in the role of Pizarro, the hallucinatory second part of Florestan's aria, are examples.

Almost every improvement in the 1814 "Fidelio" carries some loss also: the recitative in pathetic style, "Ach brich noch nicht, du mattes Herz!," before Leonore's aria; the long version of the Leonore-Florestan duet with Beethoven's original and far better melody (the later one being meanly cropped back to eliminate high notes), and also the elaborate recitative before it; many points in the second finale, for instance the agitated duet, "O Gott, nun ist's um uns gescheh'n," but especially the prayer, "O Gott! o welch' ein Augenblick!," which in its magnificently broad original form is the most exalted page in all the "Fidelio" scores.

Scale was the crucial issue in the revisions. The period of the original "Fidelio" is that of Beethoven's most expansive music, of such things as the first movement of the Violin Concerto and of the Quartet Op.59,1. Such breadth, which dominates the 1805 opera score as well, is difficult, even dangerous, in the theater, and so Beethoven eliminated not merely whole pieces—among them a lovely, though dramatically badly placed, duet for Leonore and Marzelline—but also many short bits, a page here, six bars compressed to two there, a single measure gone somewhere else. The most fascinating thing about that is that the pieces whose length, whose insistence on being "musical" rather than theatrical, makes them most problematic in the familiar "Fidelio," namely the two great Trios, are stronger and more convincing in their bigger original forms.

The point altogether is that while the later score may replace the earlier one in the practical life of our theaters, it does not render the original one obsolete or invalid. The 1805 "Fidelio" is a work of surging vitality with a life all its own, full of strokes whose loss cannot represent Beethoven's uncompromised artistic conviction, one of which the traditional estimate, based on inexperience with performance, must be revised, and one that we must know even as we have come to recognize that among the overtures we must know "Leonore 2" as well as "Leonore 3."

Hanne-Lore Kuhse, who sang Leonore, is an East German, probably in her middle 30's, who made her American debut in a "Tristan" performance in Philadelphia last season. A heavy woman, she could hardly make a convincing Fidelio on the stage. She has a dramatic gift: her performance was remarkable before she had sung a note, by virtue of her concentration and stillness as she stood waiting for her entrance in the quartet.

Her voice is a rich, warm, evenly textured soprano of great amplitude. For splendor and radiance I have heard nothing to equal the 10 high B's and the two C's in the "O namen-, namenlose Freude!" duet.

As an interpreter, she gives everything words and music demand, everything they imply, and nothing in excess. Her work is as free of mannerism and of externally imposed dramatics as her voice is free of forcing and pushing. That makes her a great artist, and the operation of her exceptional word sense, of a remarkable, warm femininity, make her a great Leonore, by miles the greatest in my experience.

Her aria got Frau Kuhse an immense ovation, the duet an even bigger one, with Mr. Leinsdorf himself leading the applause. George Shirley contributed distinguished singing as Florestan, though his voice was still cold for his aria. Tom Krause was quite a good Pizarro, though he did not always have enough vocal impact. Ara Berberian, Nico Castel, Harold Enns and William Brown did singing that was in various ways good and interesting, but Mary Ellen Pracht's Marzelline was, for lack of diction, not satisfactory.

Erich Leinsdorf, except for a few under-characterized numbers early in the first act, led a strong and intelligent performance, one in which he had access to a certain emotional energy which, when it is in action, can make him a most gripping conductor. The Boston Symphony played beautifully, though there were some bad horn moments at the start of Leonore's aria. The Choral singing was very fine. The one really disturbing blot was in the narration put in place of the spoken dialogue of the original, the text itself being very well written by Andrew Raeburn, but ludicrously spoken by some ham from a theater in Stockbridge who was booed as he fully deserved.

FIDELIO, Beethoven's opera in the original 3-act version of 1805, given in concert form at Tanglewood Saturday evening, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Tanglewood Choir and Berkshire Chorus prepared by Charles Wilson, and with the following cast

Leonore ..... Hanne-Lore Kuhse
Florestan ..... George Shirley
Don Pizarro ..... Tom Krause
Rocco ..... Ara Berberian
Marzelline ..... Mary Ellen Pracht
Jaquino ..... Nico Castel
Don Fernando ..... Harold Enns
Prisoners
William Brown, Charles Van Tassel

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350
AUG 5 1967
New England Newsclip

BUSIEST WEEK AHEAD AT BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

LENOX—The seventh and busiest week of the Berkshire festival includes three Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts, an appearance of Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops and the first five concerts in the fifth festival of contemporary American music.

Concert Friday

For the Berkshire festival concert next Friday at 9, Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will have Itzhak Perlman as guest soloist. Perlman will perform the Sibelius Violin Concerto with the orchestra. For the balance of the program, Leinsdorf will conduct Moussorgsky's Khovanchina Prelude and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

John Browning will present a recital of piano music by Chopin, Rachmaninoff and Scriabin for the now traditional Weekend Prelude next Friday at 7.

William Steinberg will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony next Saturday at 8, in a program consisting of Glinka's Kamarinskaya, Borodin's Symphony No. 2 and Tchaikovsky's Manfred Symphony.

On Sunday, August 13 at 2.30, pianist John Browning will perform the Prokofiev Piano Concerto No. 1 and Rachmaninoff's Paganini Rhapsody. Erich Leinsdorf also will lead the orchestra in a performance of Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As."

Boston Pops Tuesday

The annual appearance of Arthur Feidler and the Boston Pops at Tanglewood will be on Tuesday at 8. Fiedler will have pianist Earl Wild as his guest for an all Gershwin evening. The program will begin with An American In Paris continuing with the Concerto in F for piano and orchestra and an orchestral suite from "Porgy And Bess." Wild will be heard again in the famous Rhapsody In Blue for piano and orchestra, and the concert will close with Strike Up The Band.

The regular open rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension fund will be held next Saturday at 10.30.

Tomorrow afternoon's Boston Symphony Orchestra program at 2.30 features Joseph Silverstein in the Brahms Violin Concerto. The program, featuring exclusively the works of Brahms, also will include the Academic Festival Overture and the Symphony No. 3.

FADED TEXT

48

EVENING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
AUG 7 1967
New England Newsclip

In Beethoven's Original 'Fidelio'

New Singer Thrills Tanglewood Throng

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Music Critic

LENOX—An unforgettable evening: a great and vital work of Beethoven's, given only a handful of times ever, and probably not at all in America; an exciting performance generally, whose special glory was the portrayal of Leonore by the most wonderful new singer heard in this country since the debut of Nilsson.

The "Fidelio" of 1805, as performed Saturday night at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is flawed, and the revisions of 1814 that produced the work we see in the theater and hear on records today were necessary to have a tenable proposition for the modern theater. Also, the 1814 score contains many strokes of genius that enrich the work in ways that go far beyond questions of practicability: the prisoners' music at the end of Act I, the amazing cross-rhythms in the second finale, the spoken interruption of the trumpet quartet, almost all the changes in the role of Pizarro, the hallucinatory second part of Florestan's aria, are examples.

Almost every improvement in the 1814 "Fidelio" carries some loss also: the recitative in pathetic style, "Ach brich noch nicht, du mattes Herz!," before Leonore's aria; the long version of the Leonore-Florestan duet with Beethoven's original and far better melody (the later one being meanly cropped back to eliminate high notes), and also the elaborate recitative before it; many points in the second finale, for instance the agitated duet, "O Gott, nun ist's um uns gescheh'n," but especially the prayer, "O Gott! o welch' ein Augenblick!," which in its magnificently broad original form is the most exalted page in all the "Fidelio" scores.

FIDELIO. Beethoven's opera in the original 3-act version of 1805, given in concert form at Tanglewood Saturday evening, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Tanglewood Choir and Berkshire Chorus prepared by Charles Wilson, and with the following cast

Leonore ..... Hanne-Lore Kuhse
Florestan ..... George Shirley
Don Pizarro ..... Tom Krause
Rocco ..... Ara Berberian
Marzelline ..... Mary Ellen Pracht
Jaquino ..... Nico Castel
Don Fernando ..... Harold Enns
Prisoners
William Brown, Charles Van Tassel

Scale was the crucial issue in the revisions. The period of the original "Fidelio" is that of Beethoven's most expansive music, of such things as the first movement of the Violin Concerto and of the Quartet Op.59,1. Such breadth, which dominates the 1805 opera score as well, is difficult, even dangerous, in the theater, and so Beethoven eliminated not merely whole pieces—among them a lovely, though dramatically badly placed, duet for Leonore and Marzelline—but also many short bits, a page here, six bars compressed to two there, a single measure gone somewhere else. The most fascinating thing about that is that the pieces whose length, whose insistence on being "musical" rather than theatrical, makes them most problematic in the familiar "Fidelio," namely the two great Trios, are stronger and more convincing in their bigger original forms.

The point altogether is that while the later score may replace the earlier one in the practical life of our theaters, it does not render the original one obsolete or invalid. The 1805 "Fidelio" is a work of surging vitality with a life all its own, full of strokes whose loss cannot represent Beethoven's uncompromised artistic conviction, one of which the traditional estimate, based on inexperience with performance, must be revised, and one that we must know even as we have come to recognize that among the overtures we must know "Leonore 2" as well as "Leonore 3."

Hanne-Lore Kuhse, who sang Leonore, is an East German, probably in her middle 30's, who made her American debut in a "Tristan" performance in Philadelphia last season. A heavy woman, she could hardly make a convincing Fidelio on the stage. She has a dramatic gift: her performance was remarkable before she had sung a note, by virtue of her concentration and stillness as she stood waiting for her entrance in the quartet.

Her voice is a rich, warm, evenly textured soprano of great amplitude. For splendor and radiance I have heard nothing to equal the 10 high B's and the two C's in the "O namen-, namenlose Freude!" duet.

As an interpreter, she gives everything words and music demand, everything they imply, and nothing in excess. Her work is as free of mannerism and of externally imposed dramatics as her voice is free of forcing and pushing. That makes her a great artist, and the operation of her exceptional word sense, of a remarkable warm femininity, make her a great Leonore, by miles the greatest in my experience.

Her aria got Frau Kuhse an immense ovation, the duet an even bigger one, with Mr. Leinsdorf himself leading the applause. George Shirley contributed distinguished singing as Florestan, though his voice was still cold for his aria. Tom Krause was quite a good Pizarro, though he did not always have enough vocal impact. Ara Berberian, Nico Castel, Harold Enns and William Brown did singing that was in various ways good and interesting, but Mary Ellen Pracht's Marzelline was, for lack of diction, not satisfactory.

Erich Leinsdorf, except for a few under-characterized numbers early in the first act, led a strong and intelligent performance, one in which he had access to a certain emotional energy which, when it is in action, can make him a most gripping conductor. The Boston Symphony played beautifully, though there were some bad horn moments at the start of Leonore's aria. The Choral singing was very fine. The one really disturbing blot was in the narration put in place of the spoken dialogue of the original, the text itself being very well written by Andrew Raeburn, but ludicrously spoken by some ham from a theater in Stockbridge who was booed as he fully deserved.

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIR. 79,350
AUG 5 1967
New England Newsclip

BUSIEST WEEK AHEAD AT BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

LENOX—The seventh and busiest week of the Berkshire festival includes three Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts, an appearance of Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops and the first five concerts in the fifth festival of contemporary American music.

Concert Friday

For the Berkshire festival concert next Friday at 9, Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will have Itzhak Perlman as guest soloist. Perlman will perform the Sibelius Violin Concerto with the orchestra. For the balance of the program, Leinsdorf will conduct Moussorgsky's Khovanchina Prelude and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

John Browning will present a recital of piano music by Chopin, Rachmaninoff and Scriabin for the now traditional Weekend Prelude next Friday at 7.

William Steinberg will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony next Saturday at 8, in a program consisting of Glinka's Kamarinskaya, Borodin's Symphony No. 2 and Tchaikovsky's Manfred Symphony.

On Sunday, August 13 at 2.30, pianist John Browning will perform the Prokofiev Piano Concerto No. 1 and Rachmaninoff's Paganini Rhapsody. Erich Leinsdorf also will lead the orchestra in a performance of Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As."

Boston Pops Tuesday

The annual appearance of Arthur Feidler and the Boston Pops at Tanglewood will be on Tuesday at 8. Fiedler will have pianist Earl Wild as his guest for an all Gershwin evening. The program will begin with An American In Paris continuing with the Concerto in F for piano and orchestra and an orchestral suite from "Porgy And Bess." Wild will be heard again in the famous Rhapsody In Blue for piano and orchestra, and the concert will close with Strike Up The Band.

The regular open rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension fund will be held next Saturday at 10.30.

Tomorrow afternoon's Boston Symphony Orchestra program at 2.30 features Joseph Silverstein in the Brahms Violin Concerto. The program, featuring exclusively the works of Brahms, also will include the Academic Festival Overture and the Symphony No. 3.

JOURNAL
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,500

AUG 3 1967 New England Newsclip

Original "Fidelio" at Tanglewood

WILLIAM STEINBERG . . . Music Director of the Pittsburgh Symphony and Principal Guest Conductor of the New York Philharmonic, will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday evening, August 4 (9:00 p.m.). The program will consist of Beethoven's Symphonies No. 5 and No. 8 and the Beethoven Piano Concerto No. 3. For the Piano Concerto Mr. Theodore Lettvin will be soloist.

Three concerts of music by Beethoven and Brahms will be highlighted by a performance Saturday evening (August 5, 8:00 p.m.) of the original 1805 version of Beethoven's Fidelio for the sixth week of Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood.

The original version of the Fidelio has many distinct differences from the opera usually seen on the stage. The overture of the original version is the Overture we know today as the Leonore No. 2. The final scene is entirely different from the one we are familiar with, and throughout the work there are extensive changes. The original score is looked upon as vocally and musically more demanding than the later score which places greater emphasis on drama.

The soloists for the evening will be Hanne-Lore Kuhse, soprano; George Shirley, tenor; Tom Krause, baritone; Mary Ellen Pracht, soprano; Ara Berberian, bass; Nico Castel, tenor; and Harold Enns, baritone. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has prepared the combined forces of the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus for this performance.

On Friday evening (August 4, 9 p.m.) William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra and principal guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all Beethoven program. The program will consist of the Symphonies No. 8 and No. 5 and the Piano Concerto No. 3 for which Theodore Lettvin will be piano soloist.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude (August 4, 1967, 7 p.m.), a lieder recital by Hanne-Lore Kuhse.

The Sunday afternoon concert (August 6, 2:30 p.m.) will have a program of music by Brahms. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony in the Academic Festival Overture, the Symphony No. 3 and the Violin Concerto for which Joseph Silverstein will be soloist.

HERALD (E)
PORTSMOUTH, N. H.
CIRC. 15,450

AUG 18 1967 New England Newsclip

Perlman Soloist At Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass. (AP) — The violin soloist Thursday night at the Boston Symphony orchestra concert at Tanglewood was seated when he played Saint-Saenn's Introduction and Rondo Capricioso.

At the conclusion, he picked up his crutches and left the stage.

Itzhak Perlman, now 23, and called by critics one of the most promising of the young violinists today, was crippled by polio when he was a small child in his native Israel.

But he studied the violin there, and came to the United States nine years ago to continue study at the Juillard School in New York.

He made his debut in 1963 at Carnegie Hall in New York, and last year made his first major concert tour of the United States.

He appeared last winter as a soloist with the Boston Symphony in its home Symphony Hall, and recently made his first recording, also with the Boston Symphony and Erich Leinsdorf conducting.

Perlman's parents migrated to Israel from Poland in the mid-1930s, and he was born there in 1945.

HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE (e)
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
CIRC. 14,250

AUG 8 1967 New England Newsclip

ITZHAK PERLMAN, violinist, who will perform the Sibelius Violin Concerto with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, music director, conducting, on Friday night at 9 at Tanglewood. The program for the evening will also include Moussorgsky's "Khovanchina Prelude" and Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 6."

The seventh and busiest week of the Berkshire Festival includes three Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts, an appearance of Arthur Fiedler and The Boston Pops and the first five concerts in the Fifth Festival of Contemporary American Music.

John Browning will present a recital of piano music by Chopin, Rachmaninoff and Scriabin for the now traditional Weekend Prelude on Friday evening at 7 p.m.

William Steinberg will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony on Saturday evening at 8 p.m. in a program consisting of Glinka's Kamarinskaya, Borodin's Symphony No. 2 and Tchaikovsky's Manfred Symphony.

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30 p.m. pianist John Browning will perform the Prokofiev Piano Concerto No. 1 and Rachmanioff's Paganini Rhapsody. Erich Leinsdorf will also lead the orchestra in a performance of Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As."

The Regular Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to the first five concerts in the Fifth Festival of Contemporary American Music this week. The Festival will open with a concert of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra conducted by Gunther Schuller on Wednesday night at 8. On Thursday evening Iva Dee Hiatt will conduct a concert by the Tanglewood Choir at 8 p.m. On Saturday afternoon at 2:30 there will be an unusual concert of electronic music in the Formal Gardens on the Tanglewood grounds. Two concerts on Sunday at 10 a.m. and 8 p.m. will conclude the offering this week. Two more concerts are scheduled in this Festival next week.

The Festival of Contemporary American Music is under the joint sponsorship of the Berkshire Music Center and the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are those who make voluntary contributions to aid in reducing the Center's deficit. In addition to providing funds for the Music Center, the Friends also provide an audience for the young musicians, in keeping with the Center's basic philosophy of training performers through performance.

Information on all Tanglewood events may be obtained by writing Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240 (Telephone 413-637-1600).

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SARATOGA SARATOGIAN
Tuesday, August 8, 1967

Berkshire Festival Slates Busy Week with 9 Concerts

The seventh and busiest week of the Berkshire Festival includes three Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts, an appearance of Arthur Fiedler and The Boston Pops and the first five concerts in the Fifth Festival of Contemporary American Music.

For the Berkshire Festival concert on Friday at 9 p.m., Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will have Itzhak Perlman as guest soloist. Perlman will perform the Sibelius Violin Concerto with the orchestra. For the balance of the program, Leinsdorf will conduct Moussorgsky's Khovanchina Prelude and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

John Browning will present a recital of piano music by Chopin, Rachmaninoff and Scriabin for the now traditional Weekend Prelude on Friday at 7 p.m.

Steinberg

William Steinberg will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony on Saturday at 8 p.m. in a program consisting of Glinka's Kamarinskaya, Borodin's Symphony No. 2 and Tchaikovsky's Manfred Symphony.

On Sunday at 2:30 p.m., pianist John Browning will perform the Prokofiev Piano Concerto No. 1 and Rachmaninoff's Paganini Rhapsody. Erich Leinsdorf will also lead the orchestra in a performance of Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As."

The annual appearance of Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops at Tanglewood will be tonight at 8. Fiedler will have pianist Earl Wild as his guest for an all-Gershwin evening. The program will begin with An American in Paris continuing with The Concerto in F for piano and orchestra and an orchestral suite from "Porgy and Bess." Wild will be heard again in the famous Rhapsody in Blue for piano and orchestra, and the concert will close with Strike Up the Band.

The regular open rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to the first five concerts in the Fifth Festival of Contemporary American Music this week. The Festival will open with a concert of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra conducted by Gunther Schuller on Wednesday at 8. On Thursday at 8 p.m. Iva Dee Hiatt will conduct a concert by the Tanglewood Choir. On Saturday at 2:30 p.m. there will be an unusual concert of electronic music in the Formal Gardens on the Tanglewood grounds. Two concerts on Sunday at 10 a.m. and 8 p.m. will conclude the offering this week. Two more concerts are scheduled in this Festival next week.

Festival

The Festival of Contemporary American Music is under the joint sponsorship of the Berkshire Music Center and the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are those who make voluntary contributions to aid in reducing the Center's deficit. In addition to providing funds for the Music Center, the Friends also provide an audience for the young musicians, in keeping with the Center's basic philosophy of training performers through performance.

Information on all Tanglewood events may be obtained by writing Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240 (Telephone 413-637-1600).

RECORDER-GAZETTE (e)
GREENFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 13,350

AUG 18 1967 New England Newsclip

Polio Victim Soloist At Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass. (AP) — The violin soloist Thursday night at the Boston Symphony orchestra concert at Tanglewood was seated when he played Saint-Saenn's Introduction and Rondo Capricioso.

At the conclusion, he picked up his crutches and left the stage.

Itzhak Perlman, now 23, and called by critics one of the most promising of the young violinists today, was crippled by polio when he was a small child in his native Israel.

But he studied the violin there, and came to the United States nine years ago to continue study at the Juillard School in New York.

He made his debut in 1963 at Carnegie Hall in New York, and last year made his first major concert tour of the United States.

He appeared last winter as a soloist with the Boston Symphony in its home Symphony Hall, and recently made his first recording, also with the Boston Symphony and Erich Leinsdorf conducting.

Perlman's parents migrated to Israel from Poland in the mid-1930s, and he was born there in 1945.

JOURNAL
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,500

AUG 3 1967 New England Newsclip

Original "Fidelio" at Tanglewood

WILLIAM STEINBERG . . . Music Director of the Pittsburgh Symphony and Principal Guest Conductor of the New York Philharmonic, will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday evening, August 4 (9:00 p.m.). The program will consist of Beethoven's Symphonies No. 5 and No. 8 and the Beethoven Piano Concerto No. 3. For the Piano Concerto Mr. Theodore Lettvin will be soloist.

Three concerts of music by Beethoven and Brahms will be highlighted by a performance Saturday evening (August 5, 8:00 p.m.) of the original 1805 version of Beethoven's Fidelio for the sixth week of Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood.

The original version of the Fidelio has many distinct differences from the opera usually seen on the stage. The overture of the original version is the Overture we know today as the Leonore No. 2. The final scene is entirely different from the one we are familiar with, and throughout the work there are extensive changes. The original score is looked upon as vocally and musically more demanding than the later score which places greater emphasis on drama.

The soloists for the evening will be Hanne-Lore Kuhse, soprano; George Shirley, tenor; Tom Krause, baritone; Mary Ellen Pracht, soprano; Ara Berberian, bass; Nico Castel, tenor; and Harold Enns, baritone. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has prepared the combined forces of the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus for this performance.

On Friday evening (August 4, 9 p.m.) William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra and principal guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all Beethoven program. The program will consist of the Symphonies No. 8 and No. 5 and the Piano Concerto No. 3 for which Theodore Lettvin will be piano soloist.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude (August 4, 1967, 7 p.m.), a lieder recital by Hanne-Lore Kuhse.

The Sunday afternoon concert (August 6, 2:30 p.m.) will have a program of music by Brahms. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony in the Academic Festival Overture, the Symphony No. 3 and the Violin Concerto for which Joseph Silverstein will be soloist.

HERALD (E)
PORTSMOUTH, N. H.
CIRC. 15,450

AUG 18 1967 New England Newsclip

next Monday.

Perlman Soloist At Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass. (AP) — The violin soloist Thursday night at the Boston Symphony orchestra concert at Tanglewood was seated when he played Saint-Saenn's Introduction and Rondo Capricioso.

At the conclusion, he picked up his crutches and left the stage.

Itzhak Perlman, now 23, and called by critics one of the most promising of the young violinists today, was crippled by polio when he was a small child in his native Israel.

But he studied the violin there, and came to the United States nine years ago to continue study at the Juillard School in New York.

He made his debut in 1963 at Carnegie Hall in New York, and last year made his first major concert tour of the United States.

He appeared last winter as a soloist with the Boston Symphony in its home Symphony Hall, and recently made his first recording, also with the Boston Symphony and Erich Leinsdorf conducting.

Perlman's parents migrated to Israel from Poland in the mid-1930s, and he was born there in 1945.

HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE (e)
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
CIRC. 14,250

AUG 8 1967 New England Newsclip

Tuesday, August 8, 1967

ITZHAK PERLMAN, violinist, who will perform the Sibelius Violin Concerto with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, music director, conducting, on Friday night at 9 at Tanglewood. The program for the evening will also include Moussorgsky's "Khovanchina Prelude" and Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 6."

The seventh and busiest week of the Berkshire Festival includes three Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts, an appearance of Arthur Fiedler and The Boston Pops and the first five concerts in the Fifth Festival of Contemporary American Music.

John Browning will present a recital of piano music by Chopin, Rachmaninoff and Scriabin for the now traditional Weekend Prelude on Friday evening at 7 p.m.

William Steinberg will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony on Saturday evening at 8 p.m. in a program consisting of Glinka's Kamarinskaya, Borodin's Symphony No. 2 and Tchaikovsky's Manfred Symphony.

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30 p.m. pianist John Browning will perform the Prokofiev Piano Concerto No. 1 and Rachmanioff's Paganini Rhapsody. Erich Leinsdorf will also lead the orchestra in a performance of Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As."

The Regular Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to the first five concerts in the Fifth Festival of Contemporary American Music this week. The Festival will open with a concert of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra conducted by Gunther Schuller on Wednesday night at 8. On Thursday evening Iva Dee Hiatt will conduct a concert by the Tanglewood Choir at 8 p.m. On Saturday afternoon at 2:30 there will be an unusual concert of electronic music in the Formal Gardens on the Tanglewood grounds. Two concerts on Sunday at 10 a.m. and 8 p.m. will conclude the offering this week. Two more concerts are scheduled in this Festival next week.

The Festival of Contemporary American Music is under the joint sponsorship of the Berkshire Music Center and the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are those who make voluntary contributions to aid in reducing the Center's deficit. In addition to providing funds for the Music Center, the Friends also provide an audience for the young musicians, in keeping with the Center's basic philosophy of training performers through performance.

Information on all Tanglewood events may be obtained by writing Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240 (Telephone 413-637-1600).

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SARATOGA SARATOGIAN
Friday, August 8, 1967

Berkshire Festival Slates Busy Week with 9 Concerts

The seventh and busiest week of the Berkshire Festival includes three Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts, an appearance of Arthur Fiedler and The Boston Pops and the first five concerts in the Fifth Festival of Contemporary American Music.

For the Berkshire Festival concert on Friday at 9 p.m., Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will have Itzhak Perlman as guest soloist. Perlman will perform the Sibelius Violin Concerto with the orchestra. For the balance of the program, Leinsdorf will conduct Moussorgsky's Khovanchina Prelude and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

John Browning will present a recital of piano music by Chopin, Rachmaninoff and Scriabin for the now traditional Weekend Prelude on Friday at 7 p.m.

Steinberg

William Steinberg will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony on Saturday at 8 p.m. in a program consisting of Glinka's Kamarinskaya, Borodin's Symphony No. 2 and Tchaikovsky's Manfred Symphony.

On Sunday at 2:30 p.m., pianist John Browning will perform the Prokofiev Piano Concerto No. 1 and Rachmaninoff's Paganini Rhapsody. Erich Leinsdorf will also lead the orchestra in a performance of Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As."

The annual appearance of Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops at Tanglewood will be tonight at 8. Fiedler will have pianist Earl Wild as his guest for an all-Gershwin evening. The program will begin with An American in Paris continuing with The Concerto in F for piano and orchestra and an orchestral suite from "Porgy and Bess." Wild will be heard again in the famous Rhapsody in Blue for piano and orchestra, and the concert will close with Strike Up the Band.

The regular open rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to the first five concerts in the Fifth Festival of Contemporary American Music this week. The Festival will open with a concert of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra conducted by Gunther Schuller on Wednesday at 8. On Thursday at 8 p.m. Iva Dee Hiatt will conduct a concert by the Tanglewood Choir. On Saturday at 2:30 p.m. there will be an unusual concert of electronic music in the Formal Gardens on the Tanglewood grounds. Two concerts on Sunday at 10 a.m. and 8 p.m. will conclude the offering this week. Two more concerts are scheduled in this Festival next week.

Festival

The Festival of Contemporary American Music is under the joint sponsorship of the Berkshire Music Center and the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are those who make voluntary contributions to aid in reducing the Center's deficit. In addition to providing funds for the Music Center, the Friends also provide an audience for the young musicians, in keeping with the Center's basic philosophy of training performers through performance.

Information on all Tanglewood events may be obtained by writing Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240 (Telephone 413-637-1600).

RECORDER-GAZETTE (e)
GREENFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 13,350

AUG 18 1967 New England Newsclip

Polio Victim Soloist At Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass. (AP) — The violin soloist Thursday night at the Boston Symphony orchestra concert at Tanglewood was seated when he played Saint-Saenn's Introduction and Rondo Capricioso.

At the conclusion, he picked up his crutches and left the stage.

Itzhak Perlman, now 23, and called by critics one of the most promising of the young violinists today, was crippled by polio when he was a small child in his native Israel.

But he studied the violin there, and came to the United States nine years ago to continue study at the Juillard School in New York.

He made his debut in 1963 at Carnegie Hall in New York, and last year made his first major concert tour of the United States.

He appeared last winter as a soloist with the Boston Symphony in its home Symphony Hall, and recently made his first recording, also with the Boston Symphony and Erich Leinsdorf conducting.

Perlman's parents migrated to Israel from Poland in the mid-1930s, and he was born there in 1945.

50

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SYRACUSE HERALD AMERICAN
Sunday, August 6, 1967

Browning, Perlman featured during festival's seventh week

NE

The seventh and busiest week of the Berkshire Festival includes three Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts, an appearance of Arthur Fiedler and The Boston Pops and the first five concerts in the fifth Festival of Contemporary American Music.

For the Berkshire Festival concert on Friday at 9 p.m. Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will have Itzhak Perlman as guest soloist. Perlman will perform the Sibelius Violin Concerto with the orchestra. For the balance of the program Leinsdorf will conduct Moussorgsky's "Khovanchina Prelude" and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

John Browning will present a recital of piano music by Chopin, Rachmanioff and Scriabin for the now traditional Weekend Prelude on at 7 p.m. that same day.

William Steinberg will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony on Saturday evening at 8 in a program consisting of Glinka's "Kamarinskaya," Borodin's Symphony No. 2, and Tchaikovsky's "Manfred Symphony."

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30, pianist John Browning will perform the Prokofiev Piano Concerto No. 1 and

JOHN BROWNING

Rachmaninoff's "Paganini Rhapsody." Leinsdorf, will also lead the orchestra in a performance of Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As."

The annual appearance of Arthur Fiedler and The Boston Pops at Tanglewood will be Tuesday at 8 p.m. with pianist Earl Wild as guest for an all-Gershwin evening. The program will begin with "An American In Paris" continuing with The Concerto in F for piano and orchestra and an orchestral suite from "Porgy And Bess." Wild will be heard again in the famous "Rhapsody In Blue" for piano and orchestra, and the concert will close with "Strike Up The Band."

The regular open rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension fund will be held Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

The friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to the first five concerts in the festival. The festival will open with a concert of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra conducted by Gunther Schuller on Wednesday evening at 8. On Thursday evening Iva Dee Hiatt will conduct a concert by the Tanglewood Choir also at 8. And on Satuurday afternoon there will be an unusual concert of electronic music in the formal gardens on the Tanglewood grounds at 2:30. Two concerts on Sunday, at 10 a.m. and 8 p.m. will conclude the offering this week. Two more concerts are scheduled in this festival next week.

The festival of Contemporary American Music is under the joint sponsorship of the Berkshire Music Center and the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago.

ITZHAK PERLMAN

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

RAVENA NEWS HERALD
Friday, August 11, 1967

047

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ATHENS HERALD
Thursday, August 10, 1967

047

Seventh Week At Tanglewood

NE

The seventh and busiest week of Berkshire Festival includes three Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts, an appearance of Arthur Fiedler and The Boston Pops and the first five concerts in the Fifth Festival of Contemporary American Music.

For the Berkshire Festival concert this Friday evening at 9:00 p. m. Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will have Itzhak Perlman as guest soloist. Mr. Perlman will perform the Sibelius Violin Concerto with the Orchestra. For the balance of the program Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Moussorgsky's Khovanchina Prelude and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

John Browning will present a recital of piano music by Chopin, Rachmaninoff and Scriabin for the now traditional Weekend Prelude on Friday evening at 7:00 p. m.

William Steinberg will be guest conductor on Saturday evening at 8:00 in a program consisting of Glinka's Kamarinskaya, Borodin's Symphony No. 2 and Tchaikoysky's Manfred Symphony.

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30 pianist John Browning will perform the Prokofiev Piano Concerto No. 1 and Rachmaninoff's Paganini Rhapsody. Erich Leinsdorf will also lead the orchestra in a performance of Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As."

The Regular Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday at 10:30 a. m.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to the first five concerts in the Fifth Festival of Contemporary American Music this week. The Festival will open with a concert of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra conducted by Gunther Schuller on Wednesday evening. On Thursday evening Iva Dee Hiatt will conduct a concert by the Tanglewood Choir. On Saturday afternoon there will be an unusual concert of electronic music in the Formal Gardens of the Tanglewood grounds at 2:30. Two concerts on Sunday at 10:00 a. m. and 8:00 p. m. will conclude the offering this week. Two more concerts are scheduled in this Festival next week.

The Festival of Contemporary American Music is under the joint sponsorship of the Berkshire Music Center and the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago.

JOURNAL
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,500

AUG 10 1967 New England Newsclip

Musical Week at Tanglewood

For the Berkshire Festival concert at Tanglewood on Friday evening (Aug. 11, 9 p.m.) Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will have Itzhak Perlman as guest soloist. Mr. Perlman will perform the Sibelius Violin Concerto with the orchestra. For the balance of the program, Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Moussorgsky's Khovanchina Prelude and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

John Browning will present a recital of piano music by Chopin, Rachmaninoff and Scriabin for the now traditional Weekend Prelude on Friday evening (Aug. 11, 7 p.m.)

William Steinberg will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony on Saturday evening (Aug. 12, 8 p.m.) in a program consisting of Glinka's Kamarinskaya, Borodin's Symphony No. 2 and Tchaikovsky's Manfred Symphony.

On Sunday afternoon (August 13, 2 p.m.) pianist John Browning will perform the Prokofiev Piano Concerto No. 1 and Rachmaninoff's Paganini Rhapsody. Erich Leinsdorf will also lead the orchestra in a performance of Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As."

The Regular Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday (August 12, at 10:30 a.m.)

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are enjoying the first five concerts in the Fifth Festival of Contemporary American Music this week. The Festival opened with a concert of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra conducted by Gunther Schuller last evening (August 9.) This evening Iva Dee Hiatt will conduct a concert by the Tanglewoood Choir (August 10, 8 p.m.) On Saturday afternoon there will be an unusual concert of electronic music in the Formal Gardens on the Tanglewood grounds (August 12, 2:30 p.m.) Two concerts on Sunday (August 13 at 10:00 a.m. and 8:00 p.m.) will conclude the offering this week. Two more concerts are scheduled in this Festival next week.

The Festival of Contemporary American Music is under the joint sponsorship of the Berkshire Music Center and the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are those who make voluntary contributions to aid in reducing the Center's deficit. In addition to providing funds for the Music Center, the Friends also provide an audience for the young musicians.

ITZHAK PERLMAN . . . violinist who will perform the Sibelius Violin Concert with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood this Friday evening, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. The Friday, Aug. 11, concert begins at 9 p.m. following a Prelude recital by John Browning at 7. The program will include Moussorgsky's Khovanchina Prelude and Tchaikovsky's Sixth Symphony.

PRESS (e)
BRISTOL, CONN.
CIRC. 15,900

AUG 9 1967 New England Newsclip

Berkshire Festival Schedule For Week

The seventh and busiest week of the Berkshire Festival includes three Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts, an appearance of Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops and the first five concerts in the Fifth Festival of Contemporary American Music.

For the Berkshire Festival concert on Friday evening at 9, Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will have Itzhak Perlman as guest soloist. Mr. Perlman will perform the Sibelius Viloin Concerto with the orchestra. For the balance of the program Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Moussogorsky's Khovanchina Prelude and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

John Browning will present a recital of piano music by Chopin, Rachmaninoff and Scriabin for the now traditional Weekend Prelude at 7 on Friday evening.

William Steinberg will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony 8 p.m. on Saturday in a program consisting of Glinka's Kamarinskaya, Borodin's Symphony No. 2 and Tcaikovsky's Manfred Symphony.

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30 pianist John Browning will perform the Prokofiev Piano Concerto No. 1 and Rachmaninoff's Paganini Rhapsody. Erich Leinsdorf will also lead the orchestra in a performance of Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As".

The Regular Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held 10:30 a.m. on Saturday.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to the first five concerts in the Fifth Festival of Contemporary American Music this week. The Festival will open with a concert of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra conducted by Gunther Schuller tonight at 8. On Thursday evening at 8 Iva Dee Hiatt will conduct a concert by the Tanglewood Choir. On Saturday afternoon at 2:30 there will be an unusual concert of electronic music in the Formal Gardens on the Tanglewood grounds. Two concerts on Sunday — 10 a.m. and 8 p.m. will conclude the offering this week. Two more concerts are scheduled in this Festival next week.

The Festival of Contemporary American Music is under the joint sponsorship of the Berkshire Music Center and the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are those who make voluntary contributions to aid in reducing the Center's deficit. In addition to providing funds for the Music Center, the Friends also provide an audience for the young musicians, in keeping with the Center's music philosophy of training performers through performance.

Information on all Tanglewood events may be obtained by writing Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240 (Telephone 413-637-1600).

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900

AUG 12 1967 New England Newsclip

The Russians Have Come To a Tanglewood Weekend

The next to last weekend of the Tanglewood season which started last night is devoted to Russian music, with only two exceptions—and one of these exceptions is closely related by geography. This is Sibelius, who was represented last night by his violin concerto in which the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of music director Erich Leinsdorf, had Itzhak Perlman as soloist.

Perlman was afflicted with polio as a youth and now needs mechanical aids for locomotion. He sits when he plays, but he neither needs nor asks special consideration in the performance of his task.

The purely orchestral parts of the program were the prelude to Moussorgsky's opera "Khovanchina" and the Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 6, more popularly known as "THE Pathetique."

No Obscurities

It was entirely 19th-century music with no special problems or obscurities. The Moussorgsky prelude is a highly atmospheric and descriptive work, allowing those with imagination to discern daybreak over the Kremlin and attempting to depict the stirring political incidents of the end of the 17th century, focusing, on the prominent part played by the Prince Khovantsky in the passing of the old Russia and the birth of the new.

The Sibelius concerto, the composer's only essay in this field, is full of rich melody. It is fantasia in many instances and provides the soloist with unique opportunities for the exploitation of the instrument. It was written a very few years after the turn of this century and in style is torn between the traditions of the past and an early ray of the new century's musical light.

50

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SYRACUSE HERALD AMERICAN
Sunday, August 6, 1967

Browning, Perlman featured during festival's seventh week

NE

The seventh and busiest week of the Berkshire Festival includes three Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts, an appearance of Arthur Fiedler and The Boston Pops and the first five concerts in the fifth Festival of Contemporary American Music.

For the Berkshire Festival concert on Friday at 9 p.m. Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will have Itzhak Perlman as guest soloist. Perlman will perform the Sibelius Violin Concerto with the orchestra. For the balance of the program Leinsdorf will conduct Moussorgsky's "Khovanchina Prelude" and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

John Browning will present a recital of piano music by Chopin, Rachmanioff and Scriabin for the now traditional Weekend Prelude on at 7 p.m. that same day.

William Steinberg will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony on Saturday evening at 8 in a program consisting of Glinka's "Kamarinskaya," Borodin's Symphony No. 2, and Tchaikovsky's "Manfred Symphony."

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30, pianist John Browning will perform the Prokofiev Piano Concerto No. 1 and

ITZHAK PERLMAN

JOHN BROWNING

Rachmaninoff's "Paganini Rhapsody." Leinsdorf, will also lead the orchestra in a performance of Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As."

The annual appearance of Arthur Fiedler and The Boston Pops at Tanglewood will be Tuesday at 8 p.m. with pianist Earl Wild as guest for an all-Gershwin evening. The program will begin with "An American In Paris" continuing with The Concerto in F for piano and orchestra and an orchestral suite from "Porgy And Bess." Wild will be heard again in the famous "Rhapsody In Blue" for piano and orchestra, and the concert will close with "Strike Up The Band."

The regular open rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension fund will be held Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

The friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to the first five concerts in the festival. The festival will open with a concert of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra conducted by Gunther Schuller on Wednesday evening at 8. On Thursday evening Iva Dee Hiatt will conduct a concert by the Tanglewood Choir also at 8. And on Satuurday afternoon there will be an unusual concert of electronic music in the formal gardens on the Tanglewood grounds at 2:30. Two concerts on Sunday, at 10 a.m. and 8 p.m. will conclude the offering this week. Two more concerts are scheduled in this festival next week.

The festival of Contemporary American Music is under the joint sponsorship of the Berkshire Music Center and the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ATHENS HERALD
Thursday, August 10, 1967

Seventh Week At Tanglewood

NE

The seventh and busiest week of Berkshire Festival includes three Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts, an appearance of Arthur Fiedler and The Boston Pops and the first five concerts in the Fifth Festival of Contemporary American Music.

For the Berkshire Festival concert this Friday evening at 9:00 p. m. Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will have Itzhak Perlman as guest soloist. Mr. Perlman will perform the Sibelius Violin Concerto with the Orchestra. For the balance of the program Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Moussorgsky's Khovanchina Prelude and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

John Browning will present a recital of piano music by Chopin, Rachmaninoff and Scriabin for the now traditional Weekend Prelude on Friday evening at 7:00 p. m.

William Steinberg will be guest conductor on Saturday evening at 8:00 in a program consisting of Glinka's Kamarinskaya, Borodin's Symphony No. 2 and Tchaikoysky's Manfred Symphony.

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30 pianist John Browning will perform the Prokofiev Piano Concerto No. 1 and Rachmaninoff's Paganini Rhapsody. Erich Leinsdorf will also lead the orchestra in a performance of Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As."

The Regular Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday at 10:30 a. m.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to the first five concerts in the Fifth Festival of Contemporary American Music this week. The Festival will open with a concert of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra conducted by Gunther Schuller on Wednesday evening. On Thursday evening Iva Dee Hiatt will conduct a concert by the Tanglewood Choir. On Saturday afternoon there will be an unusual concert of electronic music in the Formal Gardens of the Tanglewood grounds at 2:30. Two concerts on Sunday at 10:00 a. m. and 8:00 p. m. will conclude the offering this week. Two more concerts are scheduled in this Festival next week.

The Festival of Contemporary American Music is under the joint sponsorship of the Berkshire Music Center and the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ELMIRA NEWS HERALD
August 11, 1967

047

JOURNAL
LEXEVILLE, CONN.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,500
AUG 10 1967
New England Newsclip

Musical Week at Tanglewood

For the Berkshire Festival concert at Tanglewood on Friday evening (Aug. 11, 9 p.m.) Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will have Itzhak Perlman as guest soloist. Mr. Perlman will perform the Sibelius Violin Concerto with the orchestra. For the balance of the program, Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Moussorgsky's Khovanchina Prelude and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

John Browning will present a recital of piano music by Chopin, Rachmaninoff and Scriabin for the now traditional Weekend Prelude on Friday evening (Aug. 11, 7 p.m.)

William Steinberg will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony on Saturday evening (Aug. 12, 8 p.m.) in a program consisting of Glinka's Kamarinskaya, Borodin's Symphony No. 2 and Tchaikovsky's Manfred Symphony.

On Sunday afternoon (August 13, 2 p.m.) pianist John Browning will perform the Prokofiev Piano Concerto No. 1 and Rachmaninoff's Paganini Rhapsody. Erich Leinsdorf will also lead the orchestra in a performance of Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As."

The Regular Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday (August 12, at 10:30 a.m.)

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are enjoying the first five concerts in the Fifth Festival of Contemporary American Music this week. The Festival opened with a concert of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra conducted by Gunther Schuller last evening (August 9.) This evening Iva Dee Hiatt will conduct a concert by the Tanglewoood Choir (August 10, 8 p.m.) On Saturday afternoon there will be an unusual concert of electronic music in the Formal Gardens on the Tanglewood grounds (August 12, 2:30 p.m.) Two concerts on Sunday (August 13 at 10:00 a.m. and 8:00 p.m.) will conclude the offering this week. Two more concerts are scheduled in this Festival next week.

The Festival of Contemporary American Music is under the joint sponsorship of the Berkshire Music Center and the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are those who make voluntary contributions to aid in reducing the Center's deficit. In addition to providing funds for the Music Center, the Friends also provide an audience for the young musicians.

ITZHAK PERLMAN . . . violinist who will perform the Sibelius Violin Concert with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood this Friday evening, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. The Friday, Aug. 11, concert begins at 9 p.m. following a Prelude recital by John Browning at 7. The program will include Moussorgsky's Khovanchina Prelude and Tchaikovsky's Sixth Symphony.

PRESS (e)
BRISTOL, CONN.
AUG 9 1967

Berkshire Festival Schedule For Week

The seventh and busiest week of the Berkshire Festival includes three Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts, an appearance of Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops and the first five concerts in the Fifth Festival of Contemporary American Music.

For the Berkshire Festival concert on Friday evening at 9, Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will have Itzhak Perlman as guest soloist. Mr. Perlman will perform the Sibelius Viloin Concerto with the orchestra. For the balance of the program Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Moussogorsky's Khovanchina Prelude and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

John Browning will present a recital of piano music by Chopin, Rachmaninoff and Scriabin for the now traditional Weekend Prelude at 7 on Friday evening.

William Steinberg will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony 8 p.m. on Saturday in a program consisting of Glinka's Kamarinskaya, Borodin's Symphony No. 2 and Tcaikovsky's Manfred Symphony.

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30 pianist John Browning will perform the Prokofiev Piano Concerto No. 1 and Rachmaninoff's Paganini Rhapsody. Erich Leinsdorf will also lead the orchestra in a performance of Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As".

The Regular Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held 10:30 a.m. on Saturday.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to the first five concerts in the Fifth Festival of Contemporary American Music this week. The Festival will open with a concert of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra conducted by Gunther Schuller tonight at 8. On Thursday evening at 8 Iva Dee Hiatt will conduct a concert by the Tanglewood Choir. On Saturday afternoon at 2:30 there will be an unusual concert of electronic music in the Formal Gardens on the Tanglewood grounds. Two concerts on Sunday — 10 a.m. and 8 p.m. will conclude the offering this week. Two more concerts are scheduled in this Festival next week.

The Festival of Contemporary American Music is under the joint sponsorship of the Berkshire Music Center and the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are those who make voluntary contributions to aid in reducing the Center's deficit. In addition to providing funds for the Music Center, the Friends also provide an audience for the young musicians, in keeping with the Center's basic philosophy of training performers through performance.

Information on all Tanglewood events may be obtained by writing Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240 (Telephone 413-637-1600).

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900
AUG 12 1967
New England Newsclip

The Russians Have Come To a Tanglewood Weekend

The next to last weekend of the Tanglewood season which started last night is devoted to Russian music, with only two exceptions—and one of these exceptions is closely related by geography. This is Sibelius, who was represented last night by his violin concerto in which the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of music director Erich Leinsdorf, had Itzhak Perlman as soloist.

Perlman was afflicted with polio as a youth and now needs mechanical aids for locomotion. He sits when he plays, but he neither needs nor asks special consideration in the performance of his task.

The purely orchestral parts of the program were the prelude to Moussorgsky's opera "Khovanchina" and the Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 6, more popularly known as "THE Pathetique."

No Obscurities

It was entirely 19th-century music with no special problems or obscurities. The Moussorgsky prelude is a highly atmospheric and descriptive work, allowing those with imagination to discern daybreak over the Kremlin and attempting to depict the stirring political incidents of the end of the 17th century, focusing on the prominent part played by the Prince Khovantsky in the passing of the old Russia and the birth of the new.

The Sibelius concerto, the composer's only essay in this field, is full of rich melody. It is fantasia in many instances and provides the soloist with unique opportunities for the exploitation of the instrument. It was written a very few years after the turn of this century and in style is torn between the traditions of the past and an early ray of the new century's musical light.

SEVENTH WEEK AUG 11, 12 & 13

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350
AUG 12 1967
New England Newsclip

Leinsdorf Builds Symphonic Castle Of Tchaikovsky

By R. C. HAMMERICH
Union Music Critic

LENOX — Erich Leinsdorf constructed a vast edifice Friday night as he led the Boston Symphony Orchestra through Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique" Symphony.

It was evident at the outset that there was to be plenty of time to stroll, pause, look out and up into space.

"Grand Manner"

Spacious architecture in the grand manner seemed to be his intention.

There aren't many symphonies that can stand this sort of stretching and it seemed, at first, that he was going to ask too much of this great crowd-pleaser.

The pace he set in the opening measures was astonishingly slow. But his purpose became evident when the allegro section was reached. The sparks began to fly, and they were all the brighter because of the contrast with the almost pedestrian pace which preceded it.

Then, in the following movements, his structural plan bore more fruit. It seemed to open space for the many solo strands that keep popping through the orchestration.

Lend Late Strength

And the beautiful melodies of the first and second movements also were given a sturdy framework by the spacious structure. There was a touch of pedantic deliberation about it which didn't help the early parts of the third movement, but it gave the late sections a march-like strength and dramatic impact that led the 6316 listeners to stop the progress into the last movement with applause.

It helped the finale, however, in much the same way that it worked well with the first movement.

It was a grand display . . . not as electrically exciting as some listeners might like, but grand in an elegant manner.

The theatricality of Tchaikovsky is a tough act to follow, but by the time Itzhak Perlman, violinist and polio victim, had struggled across the stage on his crutches, let himself down into a chair and received his violin from Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein, the audience was on his side.

And when he had demonstrated the kind of strength he puts into his tone and the security of his technique, both of which are required by the first movement of the Sibelius Violin Concerto, Op. 47, the audience interrupted that work, too, as it had the symphony, with applause.

The Sibelius concerto is long on action and short on lyrical melody. Perlman played it with conviction and skill..

SUNDAY REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 115,050
AUG 13 1967
New England Newsclip

At Tanglewood

Russian Music Reflects Moods Bright to Sombre

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — The cool air was full of Russianism at Tanglewood Saturday night. Visiting conductor William Steinberg led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program of Glinka, Borodin and Tchaikovsky.

Flavor of Weekend

It is, in fact, almost a completely Russian weekend. Friday there were Moussorgsky and Tchaikovsky and this afternoon there will be Rimsky-Korsakov, Prokofiev and Rachmaninoff.

Steinberg's penchant for carefully-defined clarity was colorfully evident Saturday. All of the bright glitter and clangor as well as rumbling, dark sonority so common in Russian music was made brilliantly evident.

The evening began with Glinka's "Kamarinskaya" fantasy, a short, pops-like piece of bouncing innocence. It is a musical trinket and Steinberg made it lively by sharply varying its tempos.

Edge of Vulgarity

Glinka was followed by Borodin's Symphony No. 2, a work of heavier weight than the fantasy but also of brighter colors. There were times when it reached the edge of vulgarity, musical vulgarity that is, which is a kind of vulgarity that can be capricious and vigorous while being gaudy . . . like a circus.

It was a volatile, fluid performance, cheerful and buoyant except during the third movement, which offers the symphony's only moments of stately, sombre Russian solemnity.

There was a lot of that minor-key frowning from the steppes in Tchaikovsky,'s "Manfred" symphony which followed intermission.

Drama of Sound

There is much more drama in the orchestration, and those who like (as we all do on occasion) to hear Tchaikovsky's thunderous kettledrums and blaring brass as well as his flexible melodies had ample opportunity Saturday.

The "Manfred" certainly was thunderous and melodic. It was, also, occasionally beautiful as well as theatrical.

The fact that the score sclls for an hour and a quarter of music and that it was scheduled for 57 minutes makes little difference except to those of the 5343 in the audience who were in a hurry to escape the parking lot.

Well Received

All of the essential, Russian orchestral acrobatics were there, and the audience behaved as if it were well worth the trip.

This afternoon the major works on the program will be Prokofiev's Piano concerto Mo.1 and Rachmaninoff's Paganini Rhapsody, for which John Browning will be soloist.

Other works scheduled are Rimsky-Korsakov's suit from "Le Coo D'or" and Colgrass' "As Quiet As," a new work which received its first performance last summer by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra.

SUNDAY TELEGRAM
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 107,550
AUG 13 1967
New England Newsclip

Berkshire Festival

Israeli Violinist Is Orchestra Soloist

LENOX — The opening concert of the Berkshire Music Festival's seventh weekend at Tanglewood on Friday night was a fine success in spite off handicaps.

It was an uncomfortably chilly night. The audience shivered through a stirring performance of Tchaikovsky's Sixth Symphony, the "Pathetique," by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

The program got off to a tepid start with the prelude to Mousssorgshy's opera, "Khovanshchina."

Equal in excitement to the Tchaikovsky symphony was a memorable Sibelius violin concerto with Itzhak Perlman of Israel as soloist.

Thanks to the fortitude of pianist John Browning, the weekend prelude turned out well.

Friday morning, Browning canceled his engagement to take part in a panel discussion of the Music Critics Association which held its annual convention at Tanglewood during the week.

Browning was suffering from a severe cold and there was the possibility that he wouldn't be able to play his recital at 7 p.m.

Not in Top Form

Obviously he was not in top form, but he still did creditably well.

The first and final movements of Chopin's Sonata in B Flat Minor were rather thickly pedalled, but melodies sang richly and technique was more than competent. The scherzo was played at top speed without loss of clarity. The funeral march had dignity, plus serene quiet in the sentimental interludes.

Two etudes — Tableaux .by Rachmaninoff received affectionate treatment by the pianist who also achieved a wide palette of tonal hues and rich dramatic content with preludes and etudes by Scriabin.

The only comparable Tchaikovsky "Pathetique" we have heard at Tanglewood goes back to the Koussevitzky regime.

After capitalizing on the mournful nature of the opening, Leinsdorf directed the protesting, rebellious developments with zeal. The emotional second theme in strings was a mite sugary, but also compelling. Actually, this approach served to emphasize the movement's huge climax and recession.

The march had tremendous momentum. Leinsdorf built it into giant strides, sizzling string passages, and a final burst of the seams. The audience had remained quiet up to this point but couldn't repress heavy applause after the march.

Intense sorrow instead of despair permeated the finale. It was far-removed from the usual convulsive sobbing that most conductors bring from this movement.

R.M.

ITAL CITY NEWS BURE.
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Sa... 1967

Israeli Violinist, 22, Soloist at Tanglewood

WRHG

In 1958, 13-year-old Itzhak Perlman was broght to the United States as the winner in the serious music division of a talent competition held in his native Israel in search of youthful performers.

Perlman, now 22, will be featured as the guest soloist in "An Evening at Tanglewood," a two-hour prime-time telecast of a summer evening concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, live and in color from Tanglewood on NBC Thursday, Aug. 17 (7:30-9:30).

He will play Saine-Saens' Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso on the program, which will be produced by NBC's George A. Heinemann.

* * *

The young violin virtuoso's first music studies were in the Tel-Aviv Academy of Music. He not only gave recitals in and around Tel-Aviv, where he was born, but also played on the state radio, both in recital and with orchestra.

Shortly after his arrival in the United States, the Zionist Organizations of America arranged a tour of more than 20 concerts in this country and Canada for him and put him in touch with the preparatory division of the Juilliard School of Music in New York. After five years as a scholarship student, he entered the regular division, and during summers he attended the Meadowmount School of Music.

In addition to five appearances on "The Ed Sullivan Show" Perlman has given recitals in a number of cities in the United States and has appeared widely in Canada. He was featured twice with orchestras at Carnegie Hall in New York and also appeared with the Philharmonic Symphony of Westchester in Mount Vernon, N.Y.

In April, 1964, he entered the Leventritt Memorial Award International Competition in New York City for young violinists, the most prestigious American musical contest. From a field of 19 contestants, he was awarded first prize by a jury including Isaac Stern, George Szell, William Steinberg, Joseph Fuchs and Leopold Mannes.

SEVENTH WEEK AUG 11, 12 & 13

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC 79,350
AUG 12 1967
New England Newsclip

Leinsdorf Builds Symphonic Castle Of Tchaikovsky

By R. C. HAMMERICH
Union Music Critic

LENOX — Erich Leinsdorf constructed a vast edifice Friday night as he led the Boston Symphony Orchestra through Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique" Symphony.

It was evident at the outset that there was to be plenty of time to stroll, pause, look out and up into space.

"Grand Manner"

Spacious architecture in the grand manner seemed to be his intention.

There aren't many symphonies that can stand this sort of stretching and it seemed, at first, that he was going to ask too much of this great crowd-pleaser.

The pace he set in the opening measures was astonishingly slow. But his purpose became evident when the allegro section was reached. The sparks began to fly, and they were all the brighter because of the contrast with the almost pedestrian pace which preceded it.

Then, in the following movements, his structural plan bore more fruit. It seemed to open space for the many solo strands that keep popping through the orchestration.

Lend Late Strength

And the beautiful melodies of the first and second movements also were given a sturdy framework by the spacious structure. There was a touch of pedantic deliberation about it which didn't help the early parts of the third movement, but it gave the late sections a march-like strength and dramatic impact that led the 6316 listeners to stop the progress into the last movement with applause.

It helped the finale, however, in much the same way that it worked well with the first movement.

It was a grand display . . . not as electrically exciting as some listeners might like, but grand in an elegant manner.

The theatricality of Tchaikovsky is a tough act to follow, but by the time Itzhak Perlman, violinist and polio victim, had struggled across the stage on his crutches, let himself down into a chair and received his violin from Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein, the audience was on his side.

And when he had demonstrated the kind of strength he puts into his tone and the security of his technique, both of which are required by the first movement of the Sibelius Violin Concerto, Op. 47, the audience interrupted that work, too, as it had the symphony, with applause.

The Sibelius concerto is long on action and short on lyrical melody. Perlman played it with conviction and skill..

SUNDAY REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
AUG 13 1967
New England Newsclip

At Tanglewood

Russian Music Reflects Moods Bright to Sombre

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — The cool air was full of Russianism at Tanglewood Saturday night. Visiting conductor William Steinberg led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program of Glinka, Borodin and Tchaikovsky.

Flavor of Weekend

It is, in fact, almost a completely Russian weekend. Friday there were Moussorgsky and Tchaikovsky and this afternoon there will be Rimsky-Korsakov, Prokofiev and Rachmaninoff.

Steinberg's penchant for carefully-defined clarity was colorfully evident Saturday. All of the bright glitter and clangor as well as rumbling, dark sonority so common in Russian music was made brilliantly evident.

The evening began with Glinka's "Kamarinskaya" fantasy, a short, pops-like piece of bouncing innocence. It is a musical trinket and Steinberg made it lively by sharply varying its tempos.

Edge of Vulgarity

Glinka was followed by Borodin's Symphony No. 2, a work of heavier weight than the fantasy but also of brighter colors. There were times when it reached the edge of vulgarity, musical vulgarity that is, which is a kind of vulgarity that can be capricious and vigorous while being gaudy . . . like a circus.

It was a volatile, fluid performance, cheerful and buoyant except during the third movement, which offers the symphony's only moments of stately, sombre Russian solemnity.

There was a lot of that minor-key frowning from the steppes in Tchaikovsky,'s "Manfred" symphony which followed intermission.

Drama of Sound

There is much more drama in the orchestration, and those who like (as we all do on occasion) to hear Tchaikovsky's thunderous kettledrums and blaring brass as well as his flexible melodies had ample opportunity Saturday.

The "Manfred" certainly was thunderous and melodic. It was, also, occasionally beautiful as well as theatrical.

The fact that the score sells for an hour and a quarter of music and that it was scheduled for 57 minutes makes little difference except to those of the 5343 in the audience who were in a hurry to escape the parking lot.

Well Received

All of the essential, Russian orchestral acrobatics were there, and the audience behaved as if it were well worth the trip.

This afternoon the major works on the program will be Prokofiev's Piano concerto Mo.1 and Rachmaninoff's Paganini Rhapsody, for which John Browning will be soloist.

Other works scheduled are Rimsky-Korsakov's suit from "Le Coo D'or" and Colgrass' "As Quiet As," a new work which received its first performance last summer by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra.

SUNDAY TELEGRAM
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC 107,550
AUG 13 1967
New England Newsclip

Berkshire Festival

Israeli Violinist Is Orchestra Soloist

LENOX — The opening concert of the Berkshire Music Festival's seventh weekend at Tanglewood on Friday night was a fine success in spite off handicaps.

It was an uncomfortably chilly night. The audience shivered through a stirring performance of Tchaikovsky's Sixth Symphony, the "Pathetique," by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

The program got off to a tepid start with the prelude to Mousssorgshy's opera, "Khovanshchina."

Equal in excitement to the Tchaikovsky symphony was a memorable Sibelius violin concerto with Itzhak Perlman of Israel as soloist.

Thanks to the fortitude of pianist John Browning, the weekend prelude turned out well.

Friday morning, Browning canceled his engagement to take part in a panel discussion of the Music Critics Association which held its annual convention at Tanglewood during the week.

Browning was suffering from a severe cold and there was the possibility that he wouldn't be able to play his recital at 7 p.m.

Not in Top Form

Obviously he was not in top form, but he still did creditably well.

The first and final movements of Chopin's Sonata in B Flat Minor were rather thickly pedalled, but melodies sang richly and technique was more than competent. The scherzo was played at top speed without loss of clarity. The funeral march had dignity, plus serene quiet in the sentimental interludes.

Two etudes — Tableaux .by Rachmaninoff received affectionate treatment by the pianist who also achieved a wide palette of tonal hues and rich dramatic content with preludes and etudes by Scriabin.

The only comparable Tchaikovsky "Pathetique" we have heard at Tanglewood goes back to the Koussevitzky regime.

After capitalizing on the mournful nature of the opening, Leinsdorf directed the protesting, rebellious developments with zeal. The emotional second theme in strings was a mite sugary, but also compelling. Actually, this approach served to emphasize the movement's huge climax and recession.

The march had tremendous momentum. Leinsdorf built it into giant strides, sizzling string passages, and a final burst of the seams. The audience had remained quiet up to this point but couldn't repress heavy applause after the march.

Intense sorrow instead of despair permeated the finale. It was far-removed from the usual convulsive sobbing that most conductors bring from this movement.

R.M.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

Israeli Violinist, 22, Soloist at Tanglewood

WA48

In 1958, 13-year-old Itzhak Perlman was broght to the United States as the winner in the serious music division of a talent competition held in his native Israel in search of youthful performers.

Perlman, now 22, will be featured as the guest soloist in "An Evening at Tanglewood," a two-hour prime-time telecast of a summer evening concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, live and in color from Tanglewood on NBC Thursday, Aug. 17 (7:30-9:30).

He will play Saine-Saens' Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso on the program, which will be produced by NBC's George A. Heinemann.

* * *

The young violin virtuoso's first music studies were in the Tel-Aviv Academy of Music. He not only gave recitals in and around Tel-Aviv, where he was born, but also played on the state radio, both in recital and with orchestra.

Shortly after his arrival in the United States, the Zionist Organizations of America arranged a tour of more than 20 concerts in this country and Canada for him and put him in touch with the preparatory division of the Juilliard School of Music in New York. After five years as a scholarship student, he entered the regular division, and during summers he attended the Meadowmount School of Music.

In addition to five appearances on "The Ed Sullivan Show" Perlman has given recitals in a number of cities in the United States and has appeared widely in Canada. He was featured twice with orchestras at Carnegie Hall in New York and also appeared with the Philharmonic Symphony of Westchester in Mount Vernon, N.Y.

In April, 1964, he entered the Leventritt Memorial Award International Competition in New York City for young violinists, the most prestigious American musical contest. From a field of 19 contestants, he was awarded first prize by a jury including Isaac Stern, George Szell, William Steinberg, Joseph Fuchs and Leopold Mannes.

52

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 885,000 SUN. 1,500,000

AUG 18 1967 Buffalo

Music: Nationwide From Tanglewood

N.B.C. Shows Concert by Boston Symphony

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

PRESUMABLY a live broadcast each summer from Tanglewood is going to develop into a national custom, like cowboy shows, aquacades, night baseball and LSD parties. Last night, for the second consecutive season, Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony came through live from the Berkshire Music Festival, with the National Broadcasting Company's Edwin Newman as master of ceremonies. In color; fireworks at the end; no commercials during the music; all suave, with great respect to culture.

The same old problems came up. Here was a two-hour show, most of it devoted to the playing of a symphony orchestra. What to do? You can't run the show as it is seen by a listener in an auditorium seat. So you get busy with the cameras. You shoot the conductor front, back, left, right, under and over. You have the score marked so that when the horns enter, or the tympanist whacks away, the busy, eager camera is focused on those busy gentlemen.

•

You pay attention to the audience. You let the cameras rove around the hall. You even get some of the Berkshire flora and fauna. There are some noble trees on the Tanglewood grounds, and the cameras panned into quite a few of them.

One trouble is that the viewer is apt to become as distracted with too much camera work as with too little. During the Dvorak "New World" Symphony, the producer, George Heinemann, was much too busy-busy-busy. After a while the medium rather than the music begins to assert itself, and last night the medium was indeed the massage. Not that anybody has to listen to so familiar a work as the Dvorak "New World" with the respect and concentration one brings to Bach's "Art of Fugue" or a Boulez serial work, but at the same time the fussy, itchy camera work did prove a little distracting.

The concert opened with Mozart's "Abduction From the Seraglio" Overture, proceeded to the Dvorak, continued with the Saint-Saëns Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso and ended with Tchaikovsky's "1812 Overture," supplemented by young musicians from the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, a few cannon and a fireworks display. This is what they call a summer program, meaning it puts no undue strain on anybody's intellect. At that, it could have been a lot more patronizing. Mr. Leinsdorf, after all, is a musician.

•

Itzhak Perlman was the soloist in the Saint-Saëns, and here the camera work came into its own. There was something specific to latch on to, namely the gifted young (22-year-old) Israeli violinist, who, crippled by polio, has to play sitting down. He, as it should have been, was the feature, and there were close-ups of his face, his left hand, the way he worked with the conductor.

There seems to be a notion among television cameramen that violinists have only one hand, the left. Is there any time when, in a television show, any attention is paid to a violinist's bow arm? Yet some close-ups of the right hand and arm, illustrating the way a master violinist (and Mr. Perlman is a young master) varies pressure, uses his wrist, changes his style of bowing, would be just as rewarding as the inevitable close-ups of the fingers of the left hand scampering micelike over the fingerboard.

Leinsdorf Conducts—Newman Is M.C.

During the intermission, Mr. Newman spoke with the conductor and with several key members of the orchestra. He acted as straight man, innocently asking basic questions: What is the make-up of an orchestra? What does a first-desk man do? What is the job of personnel manager? It was pleasant and relaxed. At one moment Mr. Leinsdorf was asked if he glowered at any of his players when they made a mistake. Mr. Leinsdorf, looking as innocent as Mr. Newman, indicated this was a canard. No, no, no, he said. Conductors no longer glower. Only section leaders glower. This should come as the news of the century to the players of the orchestras in Philadelphia, New York, Chicago, Battle Creek, Buenos Aires and Ayyub ibn-Shadhi.

Newark Evening News
NEWARK, N. J.
D. 275,716 SUN. 427,240

AUG 18 1967 Buffalo

Tanglewood Music Ends With a Bang

By ALAN BRANIGAN

Some of the magic of Tanglewood filtered through the television tube last night. The occasion was the second annual Channel 4 evening from the Berkshire Music Festival, with Erich Leinsdorf leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Itzhak Perlman as violin soloist. Both Leinsdorf and Perlman, by the way, will be at Newark's Symphony Hall this season.

For two hours of prime time, the NBC live cameras roamed restlessly across the orchestra, the face of narrator Edwin Newman and the audience which packed the famous Tanglewood shed. Perhaps too restlessly, as the relentless cuts went from one scene to another, in a fever of impatience, tiring the eyes and often leaving the music far behind. The sound, at least on our household set, seemed to be very low-fi.

The program certainly missed the scenic beauty and the fascinating artistic aura that have made Tanglewood one of the fabulous summer places of the United States. A few vagrant landscape shots did little to create any sort of identifiable image.

But when all else went awry, including Newman's stilted chats with some of the musicians, there was still the Boston in all its magnificence, especially in Dvorak's "New World" Symphony. Leinsdorf's gentle, expressive conducting technique held the attention in a variety of long shots and the flawless style of the players' response was unbeatable.

Perlman's youthful zest and mastery of his instrument made his performance a joy to watch, as he played Saint-Saens' "Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso" and a "Tarantelle" by Wieniawski.

As a grand and glorious conclusion played by 190 musicians — the Bostonians and the festival's student orchestra, plus cannon and fireworks — there was Tchaikovsky's "1812 Overture," to end the whole thing with a crash.

SUNDAY STANDARD TIMES
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
CIRC. 60,150

AUG 20 1967 New England Newsclip

Critic Reports on Visit To Berkshire Music Fete

By EARL J. DIAS
Standard-Times Music Critic

LENOX — At the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood Lenox, last weekend, in weather that was more like late fall than late summer, director Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented three programs. The emphasis was on music by Russian composers and on two young soloists — violinist Itzhak Perlman and pianist John Browning.

On Friday night, for example, Mr. Leinsdorf conducted the orchestra in the brief but lovely "Prelude to 'Khovanschnia' " by Moussorgsky and followed this with Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 6 in B Minor" (The "Pathetique"). Mr. Leinsdorf's reading of this well-loved work was a solid one.

Too often, conductors in interpreting this Tchaikovsky work emphasize the theatrical and the sentimental rather than letting the music speak for itself.

When the score is played as it is written. (Without violations of rhythm and intent), the result is the drive, intensity, and nervous excitement that are its hallmark. It was these inherent qualities that Mr. Leinsdorf and his musicians managed to convey expertly.

Violinist Hailed

Mr. Perlman was soloist for the Friday program in the Sibelius violin concerto, which I heard him perform with the orchestra last December.

Because of the effects of a childhood illness, young Perlman plays from a seated position — a circumstance that in no way detracts from his virtuosity and effectiveness. The Sibelius work is romantic in conception and flavored by a Northern sort of atmosphere.

Sometimes lyrical, sometimes sinewy, it is a work of considerable substance and of much difficulty in the solo part. Notably in the opening Allegro and the rousing Finale, Perlman again gave evidence that he is one of the most engaging and competent of the current crop of young fiddlers.

For the Saturday night performance, William Steinberg, who has appeared in New Bedford both as conductor of the Buffalo Philharmonic and the Pittsburgh Symphony, took over the podium.

He chose to perform Glinka's "Kamarinskaya," a colorfully-orchestrated fantasy on two Russian folk songs; Borodin's heroic and orientally-flavored masterpiece, the "Symphony No. 2 in B Minor," and Tchaikovsky's seldom heard "Manfred Symphony."

Steinberg is not a showy conductor; he works quietly and seriously for this effects. He had the orchestra under excellent control, although I thought that his tempi in the Borodin were more rapid than is customary.

Sound Glorious

He managed to obtain some glorious sound in the Tchaikovsky "Manfred," a curious piece, more a tone poem than a symphony, based on Byron's Faustian hero. The work, which is in four movements, varies from charming and pleasant to downright bad (the Bacchanale of the last movement, for example, is woefully banal).

The Sunday afternoon program, with Mr. Leinsdorf back in command, opened with a slam-bang version of Rimsky-Korsakov's suite from "Le Coq d'Or," included Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As," which was inspired by the answers of 4th Grade children asked by their teacher to complete the sentence beginning, "Let's be as quiet as," and featured pianist browning in Prokofiev's "Piano Concerto No. 1" and Rachmaninoff's "Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini."

Within the last three or four years, Browning has become one of the golden boys of the keyboard world.

I heard him perform the Prokofiev back in 1965 with the Boston Symphony, and on Sunday afternoon he once more displayed his technical skill, his, bravura style, and his ability to convey the sardonic qualities of the piece as well as its less frequent passages of simple but effective melody.

In the Rachmaninoff "Variations," which I think is the best work the composer ever wrote for piano an orchestra, Browning again played confidently and efficaciously.

These variations, inspired by the same theme used by Brahms in his "Piano Variations, Opus 35," are clever, demanding, and pleasurable. Into the rapid passage work and in that soaringly beautiful melody that comes toward the end of the work, both Browning and the orchestra were in fine fettle.

The Tanglewood season ends this week-end.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ROCHESTER TIMES UNION
Saturday, August 19, 1967

No Barrier to Music

Itzhak Perlman, 23, remained seated when he gave his violin solo at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at Tanglewood. When he was finished, he picked up his crutches and left the stage.

Perlman, called by critics one of the most promising of the young violinists today, was crippled by polio when he was a child in his native Israel.

But he studied the violin there, and came to the United States nine years ago to continue study at the Juilliard School in New York.

He made his debut in 1963 at Carnegie Hall in New York.

JOURNAL
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,500

AUG 17 1967 New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Reviewed

TANGLEWOOD, FRIDAY
By C. N. D.

On Friday evening, the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf played the Prelude to Khovanshchina of Moussorsky, The Sixth Symphony of Tchaikovsky, and the Sibelius Violin Concerto in D minor, with Itzhak Perlman as soloist. Except for the Sibelius concerto and one other work on Sunday afternoon, the entire week-end was devoted to Russian composers. This meant a week-end of music in which glowing orchestral colors, pulsing peasant rhythms, and dramatic contrasts dominated the ear.

On Friday evening, however, it was the Sibelius Violin Concerto which made the evening memorable. The soloist who had been stricken with polio as a child hobbled out on crutches and played the taxing work in a seated position. The playing was superb, and in its own right elicited an ovation from the audience. But this coupled with the listeners' sympathy and admiration created a fervent response that brought the audience to its feet.

John Browning presented a piano recital for the week-end Prelude preceding the orchestra. playing music by Chopin, Scriabin, and Rachmaninoff.

TANGLEWOOD. SATURDAY
By C. N. D.

On Saturday evening William Steinberg directed the orchestra. He began with the refreshing Glinka Kamarinskaya Fantasy on Russian Folksongs. Written in 1848 this work embodied an idiom which was to keep Russian composers busy for the next sixty years. Borodin's Symphony No. 2 followed.

After the intermission the Tanglewood audience heard Tchaikovsky's Manfred Symphony which had never been done here before. Why this symphony based on Byron's dramatic poem is not played more often is probably due to its length which, uncut, runs to an hour and a quarter. Saturday's performance was cut and took under an hour.

All the romantic extravagance of the nineteenth century is contained in this great descriptive piece. Weltschmerz, bacchanalian orgies, a scherzo describing an Alpine fairy who appears in a rainbow from the spray of a waterfall, the portrayal of simple country living, all come in this work in which Tchaikovsky sings some of his most beautiful melodies and uses the entire range of orchestral coloring. The second movement describing the Alpine fairy is a scherzo which should rank with the Berlioz Queen Mab or the Mendelssohn Midsummer's Night Dream Scherzo. Steinberg conducted it for all it was worth and with the Boston Orchestra to do his bidding recaptured a romantic ecstasy which was a joy to hear.

TANGLEWOOD, SUNDAY
By C. N. D.

On Sunday afternoon Mr. Leinsdorf conducted the orchestra and had John Browning, pianist, as his soloist in the Prokofiev Piano Concerto, No. 1 and the Rachmaninoff Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini. Both of these early twentieth-century works call for brilliant piano playing. Brilliance is what Browning has and both pieces were played in a dazzling manner with perfect support from the conductor and the orchestra.

The orchestra began with the Suite from Le Cog d'Or of Rimsky-Korsakov. Here again a work which calls for a virtuoso orchestra received a vivid interpretation full of riotous orchestral coloring.

After the intermission, the Russian composers were forsaken and a contemporary American composer, Michael Colgrass, was represented by a set of seven short pieces called As Quiet As. The pieces were inspired by the responses of a group of fourth grade children to the teacher's request that they finish a sentence beginning "Let's be as quiet as . . .". They are tender little pieces that barely escape being precious and embrace all degrees of modern writing. They would have fared better in a smaller auditorium as some of the sounds were so tenuous as to be inaudible from the seats on the side. Mr. Leinsdorf gave them a finely worked out performance.

7, 1967

52

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 885,000 SUN. 1,500,000

AUG 18 1967

Music: Nationwide From Tanglewood

N.B.C. Shows Concert by Boston Symphony

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

PRESUMABLY a live broadcast each summer from Tanglewood is going to develop into a national custom, like cowboy shows, aquacades, night baseball and LSD parties. Last night, for the second consecutive season, Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony came through live from the Berkshire Music Festival, with the National Broadcasting Company's Edwin Newman as master of ceremonies. In color; fireworks at the end; no commercials during the music; all suave, with great respect to culture.

The same old problems came up. Here was a two-hour show, most of it devoted to the playing of a symphony orchestra. What to do? You can't run the show as it is seen by a listener in an auditorium seat. So you get busy with the cameras. You shoot the conductor front, back, left, right, under and over. You have the score marked so that when the horns enter, or the tympanist whacks away, the busy, eager camera is focused on those busy gentlemen.

•

You pay attention to the audience. You let the cameras rove around the hall. You even get some of the Berkshire flora and fauna. There are some noble trees on the Tanglewood grounds, and the cameras panned into quite a few of them.

One trouble is that the viewer is apt to become as distracted with too much camera work as with too little. During the Dvorak "New World" Symphony, the producer, George Heinemann, was much too busy-busy-busy. After a while the medium rather than the music begins to assert itself, and last night the medium was indeed the massage. Not that anybody has to listen to so familiar a work as the Dvorak "New World" with the respect and concentration one brings to Bach's "Art of Fugue" or a Boulez serial work, but at the same time the fussy, itchy camera work did prove a little distracting.

The concert opened with Mozart's "Abduction From the Seraglio" Overture, proceeded to the Dvorak, continued with the Saint-Saëns Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso and ended with Tchaikovsky's "1812 Overture," supplemented by young musicians from the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, a few cannon and a fireworks display. This is what they call a summer program, meaning it puts no undue strain on anybody's intellect. At that, it could have been a lot more patronizing. Mr. Leinsdorf, after all, is a musician.

•

Itzhak Perlman was the soloist in the Saint-Saëns, and here the camera work came into its own. There was something specific to latch on to, namely the gifted young (22-year-old) Israeli violinist, who, crippled by polio, has to play sitting down. He, as it should have been, was the feature, and there were close-ups of his face, his left hand, the way he worked with the conductor.

There seems to be a notion among television cameramen that violinists have only one hand, the left. Is there any time when, in a television show, any attention is paid to a violinist's bow arm? Yet some close-ups of the right hand and arm, illustrating the way a master violinist (and Mr. Perlman is a young master) varies pressure, uses his wrist, changes his style of bowing, would be just as rewarding as the inevitable close-ups of the fingers of the left hand scampering micelike over the fingerboard.

Leinsdorf Conducts—Newman Is M.C.

During the intermission, Mr. Newman spoke with the conductor and with several key members of the orchestra. He acted as straight man, innocently asking basic questions: What is the make-up of an orchestra? What does a first-desk man do? What is the job of personnel manager? It was pleasant and relaxed. At one moment Mr. Leinsdorf was asked if he glowered at any of his players when they made a mistake. Mr. Leinsdorf, looking as innocent as Mr. Newman, indicated this was a canard. No, no, no, he said. Conductors no longer glower. Only section leaders glower. This should come as the news of the century to the players of the orchestras in Philadelphia, New York, Chicago, Battle Creek, Buenos Aires and Ayyub ibn-Shadhi.

Newark Evening News
NEWARK, N. J.
D. 275,716 SUN. 427,240

AUG 18 1967

Tanglewood Music Ends With a Bang

By ALAN BRANIGAN

Some of the magic of Tanglewood filtered through the television tube last night. The occasion was the second annual Channel 4 evening from the Berkshire Music Festival, with Erich Leinsdorf leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Itzhak Perlman as violin soloist. Both Leinsdorf and Perlman, by the way, will be at Newark's Symphony Hall this season.

For two hours of prime time, the NBC live cameras roamed restlessly across the orchestra, the face of narrator Edwin Newman and the audience which packed the famous Tanglewood shed. Perhaps too restlessly, as the relentless cuts went from one scene to another, in a fever of impatience, tiring the eyes and often leaving the music far behind. The sound, at least on our household set, seemed to be very low-fi.

The program certainly missed the scenic beauty and the fascinating artistic aura that have made Tanglewood one of the fabulous summer places of the United States. A few vagrant landscape shots did little to create any sort of identifiable image.

But when all else went awry, including Newman's stilted chats with some of the musicians, there was still the Boston in all its magnificence, especially in Dvoraki's "New World" Symphony. Leinsdorf's gentle, expressive conducting technique held the attention in a variety of long shots and the flawless style of the players' response was unbeatable.

Perlman's youthful zest and mastery of his instrument made his performance a joy to watch, as he played Saint-Saens' "Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso" and a "Tarantelle" by Wieniawski.

As a grand and glorious conclusion played by 190 musicians — the Bostonians and the festival's student orchestra, plus cannon and fireworks — there was Tchaikovsky's "1812 Overture," to end the whole thing with a crash.

SUNDAY STANDARD TIMES
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
CIRC. 60,150

AUG 20 1967

New England Newsclip

Critic Reports on Visit To Berkshire Music Fete

By EARL J. DIAS
Standard-Times Music Critic

LENOX — At the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood Lenox, last weekend, in weather that was more like late fall than late summer, director Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented three programs. The emphasis was on music by Russian composers and on two young soloists — violinist Itzhak Perlman and pianist John Browning.

On Friday night, for example, Mr. Leinsdorf conducted the orchestra in the brief but lovely "Prelude to 'Khovanschnia' " by Moussorgsky and followed this with Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 6 in B Minor" (The "Pathetique"). Mr. Leinsdorf's reading of this well-loved work was a solid one.

Too often, conductors in interpreting this Tchaikovsky work emphasize the theatrical and the sentimental rather than letting the music speak for itself.

When the score is played as it is written. (Without violations of rhythm and intent), the result is the drive, intensity, and nervous excitement that are its hallmark. It was these inherent qualities that Mr. Leinsdorf and his musicians managed to convey expertly.

Violinist Hailed

Mr. Perlman was soloist for the Friday program in the Sibelius violin concerto, which I heard him perform with the orchestra last December.

Because of the effects of a childhood illness, young Perlman plays from a seated position — a circumstance that in no way detracts from his virtuosity and effectiveness. The Sibelius work is romantic in conception and flavored by a Northern sort of atmosphere.

Sometimes lyrical, sometimes sinewy, it is a work of considerable substance and of much difficulty in the solo part. Notably in the opening Allegro and the rousing Finale, Perlman again gave evidence that he is one of the most engaging and competent of the current crop of young fiddlers.

For the Saturday night performance, William Steinberg, who has appeared in New Bedford both as conductor of the Buffalo Philharmonic and the Pittsburgh Symphony, took over the podium.

He chose to perform Glinka's "Kamarinskaya," a colorfully-orchestrated fantasy on two Russian folk songs; Borodin's heroic- and orientally-flavored masterpiece, the "Symphony No. 2 in B Minor," and Tchaikovsky's seldom heard "Manfred Symphony."

Steinberg is not a showy conductor; he works quietly and seriously for this effects. He had the orchestra under excellent control, although I thought that his tempi in the Borodin were more rapid than is customary.

Sound Glorious

He managed to obtain some glorious sound in the Tchaikovsky "Manfred," a curious piece, more a tone poem than a symphony, based on Byron's Faustian hero. The work, which is in four movements, varies from charming and pleasant to downright bad (the Bacchanale of the last movement, for example, is woefully banal).

The Sunday afternoon program, with Mr. Leinsdorf back in command, opened with a slam-bang version of Rimsky-Korsakov's suite from "Le Coq d'Or," included Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As," which was inspired by the answers of 4th Grade children asked by their teacher to complete the sentence beginning, "Let's be as quiet as," and featured pianist browning in Prokofiev's "Piano Concerto No. 1" and Rachmaninoff's "Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini."

Within the last three or four years, Browning has become one of the golden boys of the keyboard world.

I heard him perform the Prokofiev back in 1965 with the Boston Symphony, and on Sunday afternoon he once more displayed his technical skill, his, bravura style, and his ability to convey the sardonic qualities of the piece as well as its less frequent passages of simple but effective melody.

In the Rachmaninoff "Variations," which I think is the best work the composer ever wrote for piano an orchestra, Browning again played confidently and efficaciously.

These variations, inspired by the same theme used by Brahms in his "Piano Variations, Opus 35," are clever, demanding, and pleasurable. Into the rapid passage work and in that soaringly beautiful melody that comes toward the end of the work, both Browning and the orchestra were in fine fettle.

The Tanglewood season ends this week-end.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ROCHESTER TIMES UNION
Saturday, August 19, 1967

No Barrier to Music

Itzhak Perlman, 23, remained seated when he gave his violin solo at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at Tanglewood. When he was finished, he picked up his crutches and left the stage.

Perlman, called by critics one of the most promising of the young violinists today, was crippled by polio when he was a child in his native Israel.

But he studied the violin there, and came to the United States nine years ago to continue study at the Juilliard School in New York.

He made his debut in 1963 at Carnegie Hall in New York.

JOURNAL
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,500

AUG 17 1967

New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Reviewed

TANGLEWOOD, FRIDAY
By C. N. D.

On Friday evening, the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf played the Prelude to Khovanshchina of Moussorsky, The Sixth Symphony of Tchaikovsky, and the Sibelius Violin Concerto in D minor, with Itzhak Perlman as soloist. Except for the Sibelius concerto and one other work on Sunday afternoon, the entire week-end was devoted to Russian composers. This meant a week-end of music in which glowing orchestral colors, pulsing peasant rhythms, and dramatic contrasts dominated the ear.

On Friday evening, however, it was the Sibelius Violin Concerto which made the evening memorable. The soloist who had been stricken with polio as a child hobbled out on crutches and played the taxing work in a seated position. The playing was superb, and in its own right elicited an ovation from the audience. But this coupled with the listeners' sympathy and admiration created a fervent response that brought the audience to its feet.

John Browning presented a piano recital for the week-end Prelude preceding the orchestra, playing music by Chopin, Scriabin, and Rachmaninoff.

TANGLEWOOD, SATURDAY
By C. N. D.

On Saturday evening William Steinberg directed the orchestra. He began with the refreshing Glinka Kamarinskaya Fantasy on Russian Folksongs. Written in 1848 this work embodied an idiom which was to keep Russian composers busy for the next sixty years. Borodin's Symphony No. 2 followed.

After the intermission the Tanglewood audience heard Tchaikovsky's Manfred Symphony which had never been done here before. Why this symphony based on Byron's dramatic poem is not played more often is probably due to its length which, uncut, runs to an hour and a quarter. Saturday's performance was cut and took under an hour.

All the romantic extravagance of the nineteenth century is contained in this great descriptive piece. Weltschmerz, bacchanalian orgies, a scherzo describing an Alpine fairy who appears in a rainbow from the spray of a waterfall, the portrayal of simple country living, all come in this work in which, Tchaikovsky sings some of his most beautiful melodies and uses the entire range of orchestral coloring. The second movement describing the Alpine fairy is a scherzo which should rank with the Berlioz Queen Mab or the Mendelssohn Midsummer's Night Dream Scherzo. Steinberg conducted it for all it was worth and with the Boston Orchestra to do his bidding recaptured a romantic ecstasy which was a joy to hear.

TANGLEWOOD, SUNDAY
By C. N. D.

On Sunday afternoon Mr. Leinsdorf conducted the orchestra and had John Browning, pianist, as his soloist in the Prokofiev Piano Concerto, No. 1 and the Rachmaninoff Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini. Both of these early twentieth-century works call for brilliant piano playing. Brilliance is what Browning has and both pieces were played in a dazzling manner with perfect support from the conductor and the orchestra.

The orchestra began with the Suite from Le Cog d'Or of Rimsky-Korsakov. Here again a work which calls for a virtuoso orchestra received a vivid interpretation full of riotous orchestral coloring.

After the intermission, the Russian composers were forsaken and a contemporary American composer, Michael Colgrass, was represented by a set of seven short pieces called As Quiet As. The pieces were inspired by the responses of a group of fourth grade children to the teacher's request that they finish a sentence beginning "Let's be as quiet as . . .". They are tender little pieces that barely escape being precious and embrace all degrees of modern writing. They would have fared better in a smaller auditorium as some of the sounds were so tenuous as to be inaudible from the seats on the side. Mr. Leinsdorf gave them a finely worked out performance.

7, 1967

GAZETTE (e)
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 91,290
AUG 14 1967
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Weekend

Pianist Browning Performs

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — The seventh weekend at Tanglewood put the emphasis on Russian music. An exception was the Sibelius Concerto in D minor, on Friday, by Itzhak Perlman, the Israeli violinist, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Saturday's concert, conducted by William Steinberg of Pittsburgh, had no soloist.

Of greatest interest to Worcester was yesterday's concert, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, in which the young pianist John Browning soloed twice. He also presented the Friday Weekend Prelude, works of Chopin, Rachmaninoff and Scriabin.

Will Perform Here

Browning will play the Barber Piano Concerto with the Detroit Symphony Orchestra at the Worcester Festival on Saturday, Oct. 28. He presented its first performance several years ago, and has followed that world premiere with over 50 playings of the same concerto.

His tasks yesterday were diversified. The Prokofiev "Piano Concerto No. 1 in D-flat major" was driving music, geared to velocity and endurance, and orchestral resonance.

Leindsorf and the orchestra were large and impressive rather than an accompaniment. His feat of brisk and strong pianism earned Browning four stage recalls.

Later the cooperation was even more productive in the truly eloquent Rachmaninoff's "Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini." The 24 variations ran the gamut from technical skill to singing soulfulness. Variation No. 18, "Andante cantabile," provided perhaps the most charming moments. Browning was recalled six times.

Gazette Review

Bold, Colorful

Leinsdorf and the orchestra painted colors boldly and surely in the Suite from Rimsky-Korsakov's "The Golden Cockerel." Though often on the quiet side, it rose to dazzling intensifies in the Wedding March.

Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As" was a charming adventure in modern techniques tackling deep problems from a child's viewpoint. With occasional droll lapses into established music of well-known styles, the seven sections essayed such portrayals as a leaf turning colors, a lonely creek, ants, children sleeping, soft rain, and the first star coming out. Charles Wilson occasionally directed a small group of instruments, playing notes contrary to the main ensemble.

This and the Rachmaninoff were firsts for Tanglewood.

TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM (e)
HOLYOKE, MASS.
CIRC. 26,950
AUG 14 1967
New England Newsclip

Russian Weekend Drew Heavily As Tanglewood Enters Final Week

It was a Russian weekend at Tanglewood, where the Berkshire Festival staged its next-to-last weekend of Boston Symphony orchestra programs. For the three concerts there was an attendance of nearly 22,000, not record audiences, but the weather was a little cool.

Friday night director Erich Leinsdorf conducted a heavily nostalgic program, opening with Moussorgsky's prelude to "Khovanshchina," a dreamy work with folk themes that carries the listener along. Then the orchestra played Tchaikovsky's Sixth Symphony, the dearly beloved "Pathetique" which has been played and played to death, but which appeared vigorous enough at Tanglewood. The second movement, not borrowed so much for popular uses, was especially fresh and pleasant.

The high point of the evening was the performance of Sibelius's Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in D minor with soloist Itshak Perlman. This talented young man is an artist of great interpretive warmth as well as ability. This is a work that gives the solo violin much attention. Mr. Perlman won heavy applause for his remarkable work.

The evening prelude on Friday night was a splendid piano recital by John Browning, playing works of Chopin, Rachmaninoff and Scriabin.

On Saturday night, William Steinberg was guest conductor for a program that included Glinka's "Kamarinskaya," Symphony No. 2 by Borodin and Tchaikovsky's "Manfred" Symphony. Sunday afternoon, Leinsdorf conducted and pianist John Browning was soloist in the Prokofiev Piano Concerto No. 1 and Rachmaninoff's Rhapsody on a Theme by Paganini. The program also included the suite from "Le Coq d'Or" by Rimsky-Korsakov and "As Quiet As" by Colgrass. Mr. Browning was the star of the afternoon in a brilliant performance.

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350
AUG 14 1967
New England Newsclip

At Tanglewood

Browning Glitter Offset By New Work's Fragility

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — In comparison to the dull gray sky Sunday afternoon and the sprinkling rain which started during intermission, most of the music in the great shed at Tanglewood was nearly blinding.

Russian Works

John Browning, one of the more luminous young pianists, was soloist with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra for performance of Prokofiev's Piano Concerto No. 1 and Rachmaninoff's famous Paganini Rhapsody, both works of dashing sparkle.

And, as might be expected, he played both with lavish, almost reckless, vitality.

Both works are neo-romantic and, although the rhapsody is much less angular and brittle, are similar in many respects.

Beads of Steel

Sunday they moved with nervous, compulsive momentum and were dominated by sonic brilliance. The piano notes flew tumultuously and were nearly all percussive...they rang and tinkled and glittered and clanged.

They were like beads of stainless steel...in strings and clusters rolling and bounding.

Both performances were full of excitement (except for the middle introspective sections) and the audience responded in kind, especially to the "Paganini" rhapsody.

First for Symphony

But all was not robust musical clamor Sunday. Between the Prokofiev and the Rachmaninoff was an avant garde work commissioned for its first performance at the Berkshire Music Center last summer and performed for the first time by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Sunday — Michael Colgrass' seven-section peice, dedicated to children, called "As Quiet As."

The dominant character of the piece is of infinitely percussive sounds of almost gossamer fragility presented with the subtlest of organizational control.

The idea for the piece came to the composer when he read some children replies to the request that they complete the phrase "as quiet as."

Seven Answers

Seven of their answers became titles of sections of the piece in its attempt ot recreate them in sound.

Here they are: a leaf turning colors, an uninhabited creek, an ant walking, children sleeping, time passing, a soft rainfall, the first star coming out.

The most significant instruments used in recreating the "atmosphere" of these abstractions are harps, celeste harpsichord, sleigh bells, wood blocks, glockenspiel, vibraphone, cymbals, chimes, tamtam, crotale and drums.

Full of Surprises

It was an endlessly interesting performance, full of little friendly surprises, twists and turns, whimsies and wit...all gentle, all childlike, all stated in unorthodox musical terms.

The concert opened with Rimsky-Korsakov's suite from "Le Coq D'or," which is usually the most colorful work on any program on which it appears. It was overshadowed early Sunday.

The attendance was 7621, which brought the weekend's total to 21,938.

Next weekend, this year's last Tanglewood, the more interesting events will be the performance of Charles Ives' Symphony No. 4 conducted by Gunther Schuller Friday night, Verdi's "Requiem" with four vocal soloists, the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus Saturday night and an all-Wagner program conducted by Leinsdorf Sunday afternoon.

HARTFORD TIMES, 9B
Monday, August 14, 1967

John Browning Sunday Soloist At Tanglewood

By GEORGE W. STOWE

John Browning, the brilliant young pianist, was the soloist with the Boston Symphony in the Prokofiev Concerto No. 1 Sunday afternoon at Tanglewood.

In music demanding a motoric approach this pianist is very much at home and this is certainly the case with this work. Although there were times when the orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf covered the piano tone, Browning gave a generally satisfying account of this fairly unfamiliar opus.

The more romantic Rachmaninoff "Pagaini" Rhapsody provided a ringing finale to Sunday's program but here Browning's inability to produce a tone of genuine sonority was even more noticeable. Nevertheless, the rapport between soloist and orchestra was admirable and the audience showered the participants with applause.

For a novelty there was Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As" (recently recorded by Leinsdorf and the Bostonians), an extremely clever and beguiling piece. The title derives from answers by fourth-grade children asked to complete the sentence — "As quiet as . . . ." For instance, "A Leaf Turning Color," "An Ant Walking," "Children Sleeping," "The First Star Coming Out" are subtitles.

Mr. Leinsdorf's program also included Rimsky - Korsakoff's Suite from "Le Coq d'Or." Some 7,600 persons attended Sunday's concert at Lenox, Mass.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Tuesday, August 15, 1967

Musical Giants on Tanglewood Program

By D. E. RITZ

A program by the musical giants Rimsky-Korsakoff, Prokofieff and Rachmaninoff was presented Sunday afternoon by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Erich Leinsdorf at Tanglewood. A number by the modern American Michael Colgrass was added for good measure.

John Browning, young American pianist and Pulitzer Prize winner, appeared as soloist with the orchestra in the Prokofieff "Piano Concerto Number 1 in D-flat Major, Opus 10" and the Rachmannioff "Raphsody on a Theme of Paganini, Opus 43."

Colgrass' "As Quiet As," descriptive writing in the modern idiom, was commissioned by the Fromm Music Foundation and first performed at Tanglewood on Aug. 18, 1966, by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra conducted by Gunther Schuler. Bringing the harps, celesta and harpsichord to solo positions, the work as conducted by Leinsdorf used a harpsichordist as a second conductor in certain sections. The work is dedicated to children "with love and hope." From the applause, we would judge that the Tanglewood audience loved it. We'll admit that we seemed to be beyond the scope of the dedication.

The Rimsky-Korsakoff music, composed in 1906-1907 and not performed until after the composer's death—first privately in September, 1909 and later publicly in 1914, is from the opera "The Golden Cock" based on a text by Vladimer Bielsky and is an elaboration of a Pushkin fairy-tale. The music of the four movement suite is as whimsical as any fairy-tale, brilliant with its Eastern oriented melodies and flamboyancies, magnificent military displays, rustic wedding scene and finally the mourning at the "Lamentable end of King Dodon."

The Prokofieff Piano Concerto and the Rachmaninoff "Rhapsody" demand a tremendous technique plus high musicianship and John Browning is blessed with both.

Browning, a pupil of Madame Rosina Lhevinne at Juilliard, has won the Edgar M. Leventritt award, the Concours International Musical, the competition founded by Queen Elizabeth of Belgium as well as the Pulitzer Prize.

His playing is superb and his tone transcends that of the orchestra, even at its greatest brilliance. His technical dexterity is amazing and the clarity of the tone in the scale passage based themes of the Prokofieff made them a joy. Piquant harmonies distinguish the orchestral score. The work is dated 1911.

The Rachmaninoff "Rhapsody," composed in 1934, is based on the even more famed "Caprice 24 for Violin Solo, opus 1" of Paganini. Both the 24-measure theme and each of its similar length variations are as vivid in the solo piano part with the brilliant orchestration of Rachmaninoff as they are in the original work. Truly a masterpiece, the work was presented as such by Browning and the Boston Symphony.

Ovations were much in evidence at the close of the program.

A light rain Sunday afternoon cut into the ordinary lawn attendance bringing the total for the day down to 7,621.

The Tuesday night Boston Pops program under Arthur Fiedler drew 13,862 persons. The Friday night attendance numbered 6,317 with the Saturday morning open rehearsal attended by 2,660. The Saturday night attendance was 5,343, bringing the week's total attendance to 35,800.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Tanglewood season comes to a close this weekend.

Gunther Schuller will conduct the Friday 9 p.m. program and Leinsdorf will conduct the Saturday 8 p.m. and Sunday 2:30 p.m. programs. Verdi's "Requiem" will be featured on Saturday night and an all-Wagner program will be presented Sunday afternoon.

54

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 SUN. 122,607

AUG 14 1967

Browning Masterful at Tanglewood

John Browning, an extraordinary pianist, teamed up with conductor Erich Liensdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra Sunday afternoon to mesmerize nearly 8,000 persons attending the concert at Tanglewood.

The program opened with Rimsky-Korsakov's excerpts from "The Golden Clock," the master's last work—an opera based on a Pushkin fairytale. It was a good performance.

But it was Browning who won the afternoon with Prokofiv's Piano Concerto No. 1 and Rachmaninoff's Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini for piano and orchestra, Opus 43.

Prokofiev wrote his concerto in one movement, opening and closing in D-flat major, but in the course of the work traersing many episodes and keys.

The piquant harmonies of the concerto probably disturbed the more serious-minded of Prokofiev's masters, but they obviously delighted the huge crowd at Tanglewood Sunday.

Browning showed undeniable signs of being a child prodigy when he was five years old, and he made his orchestral debut at the age of ten, playing Mozart's "Coronation" Concerto in a special concert with the Denver Symphony.

However, he did not follow the usual pattern of the prodigy and instead continued normal studies in public schools. Eventually he moved to New York and attended Juilliard School of music.

He won the Steinway Centennial Award in 1954, sponsored by the National Federation of Music Clubs, and a year later the Edgar M. Leventritt award, which resulted in his debut with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra in 1956.

Since then he has been in constant demand and played with the Boston Symphony for the first time by introducing Samuel Barber's Piano Concerto in 1962.

His technique is superb and his touch is sensitive and the hundreds on the lawn Sunday afternoon remained despite rain while Browning played the Rachmaninoff Rhapsody.

Friday evening, 6,316 persons turned out to hear Leinsdorf conduct the orchestra in Moussorsky's Prelude to "Kohvanshchina;" Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6 and Sibelius' Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, with Ipzhak Perlman as the soloist.

Saturday evening, another 5,343 came to hear William Steinberg conduct the orchestra in Glinka's "Kamarinskaya;" Borodin's Symphony in B minor, and Tchaikovsky's "Manfred" Symphony.

Thursday will be one of the biggest days of the season when the Boston Symphony and the Berkshire Music Center present "Tanglewood on Parade."

The program will begin at 2 p.m. and will conclude with a gala evening concert in the Shed featuring Tchaikovsky's "1812 Overture"—with cannon firing at the climax.

—Robert J. Barber

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.

AUG 14 1967

New England Newsclip

Music Review

Russian Weekend at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE LAST weekend-but-one at Tanglewood closed yesterday afternoon with an exceptionally enjoyable light program in which John Browning was the soloist in two piano concertos and Erich Leinsdorf led the Boston Symphony orchestra in two extremely contrasting works: the Rimsky-Korsakov "Le Coq d'Or" Suite and "As Quiet As" by Michael Colgrass.

The Colgrass work consists of music set to seven answers to a question given a 4th-grade class by their teacher, asking them to complete the sentence "Let's be as quiet as . . ." The children suggested "A leaf turning colors," "an ant walking," "the first star coming out" and so on, and Colgrass completed it on a commission from the Fromm Music Foundation for performances at last year's Berkshire Music Center Contemporary Festival at Tanglewood.

COLGRASS has caught the essence of the imaginative children by wisps of sound, fairy-like touches and delightfully contrived musical syllogisms. At no point is there a substantial quantity of sound yet the figments have been conveyed with remarkable fidelity. At one point in the sketches "children sleeping" and "time passing," a sonatina written by Beethoven as a child appears quite independent of the progress of the general ensemble and a separate conductor, Charles Wilson in this case, who had been seated at the harpsichord, stood up and directed a portion of the violins, in the manner of Charles Ives with his rhythmically-unrelated duets.

The "Coq d'Or" suite is a pleasing piece. It is almost an intrusion to have the vigorous march disturb the genial and cheerful, curling chromatics of the scenes in the palace and the country.

* * *

BROWNING played both of his assignments with complete bravado but the Rachmaninoff Rhapsody on the 24th Paganini caprice for violin is by far the more rewarding work. The Prokofieff First Piano Concerto is animated and percussive and remains remarkable as the work of a 20-year-old man. Browning was able to add grace and elegance to the Rachmaninoff and Leinsdorf gave the orchestra full rein for a combination of lush abandon.

Saturday night William Steinberg made his second appearance of the season as guest conductor and played a Russian program with major emphasis on the Tchaikovsky "Manfred" Symphony. We may find it difficult today to understand why Byron had such a hold on 19th century composers but it is evident that no one, except his aged contemporary Goethe, incited so many attempts to convey in music what he tried to express in poetry. But it is not difficult to see why Byron appealed to the pitiable Tschaikkovsky, a man of morbid sensitiveness to begin with, usually in abject depths of despair. He found Manfred a kindred spirit, deliberately seeking the perverse joys of romantic melancholy and yearning for his distant love, Madame Von Meck, as Manfred for his Astarte. "In my heart," Manfred cried, "there is a vigil, and these eyes but close to look within."

* * *

"MANFRED" was published exactly 150 years ago; the Manfred Symphony is approximately half-way between that date and today. Steinberg extracted every minute particle of emotion from the rich score and the utmost in dynamic contrast from the orchestra. It's a very long symphony but everyone was held engrossed every inch of the way, Steinberg making but one short abridgement at the very end of the coda. It was interesting to hear the "Manfred" the night after Leinsdorf had played the same composer's "Pathetique." Both symphonies expose the wretchedness and anguished soul of the composer. The mournful phrases of the sixth symphony are obvious sequences of the sinister and weird effects depicting Manfred in his Alpine wanderings, dissatisfied and disillusioned. Yet Tschaikovsky, for all his unhappiness, could not but apply to his music the tone painting of Byron when "Summer's sunset gilds with the azure and vermilion."

* * *

THE FRIDAY evening concert should be marked in the record books as one of the peaks of the season. The cool evening put resonance into the strings, sparkle in the air and a bracing zest in the music. Yet the "Pathetique" was probably one of the 'coolest' performances one may have heard in a long time. Leinsdorf, instead of rushing into luscious romanticism, understated the emotion of the first movement and the restraint gave it the pregnant understatement of a love-song, not of a promiscuous Don Giovanni but rather more of an Abelard or Cyrano.

The orchestra was at Leinsdorf's fingertips. The rhetorical pauses, dramatically dilated, found no one breathing. The allegro con grazia had a marvelously Viennese lilt, reminding one of the lovely "Zwei Herzen in funf-viertel Takt." No audience can sit unmoved at the end of the supercharged vivace and Leinsdorf let them exhaust themselves before adding the fourth movement, the heartbreaking plea which ends in complete dejection.

* * *

THE ORCHESTRA had distinguished itself at the outset with the curtain raiser—Moussorgsky's Prelude to "Khovanshchina," a diaphanous short skirtch which gave the wind instrument soloists special opportunities.

The soloist of the evening was the sensational Itzhak Perlman in the Sibelius violin concerto. Perlman is 22. Because of polio in his early childhood he plays seated. He comes onstage aided by two arm crutches and his violin is handed him after he sits down. He is a big and strong young man, bold, impetuous, incautious though secure, playing with a fire and vitality which buttress his vivid tone.

* * *

THE CONCERTO is more a fantasia, leaping from one point of repose to another with extravagant vaults and perilous escalades. The central tranquil movement was given a gripping intensity. There was always an impression of music-making rather than of violin-playing. Whatever of compassion there may have been in the unbounded ovation the audience gave Perlman there was little mercy shown him in their insistent demand for recalls. This was music-making on a grand scale, a thrilling finale to an exceptional evening.

SUNDAY COURANT
HARTFORD, CONN.
CIRC. 188,450

AUG 13 1967

New England Newsclip

Leinsdorf Conducting the Boston; Young Israel Artist Is Featured

In 1958, 13-year-old Itzhak Perlman was brought to the United States as the winner in the serious music division of a talent competition held in his native Israel in search of youthful performers.

Perlman, now 22 years old, will be featured as the guest soloist in "An Evening at Tanglewood," a two-hour prime-time telecast of a summer evening concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, live and in color from Tanglewood on NBC, Thursday (7:30-9:30 p.m.)

He will play Saint-Saens' Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso on the program, which will be produced by NBC's George A. Heinemann.

EVENING AT TANGLEWOOD: Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct a summer evening concert which is part of the annual Berkshire Festival and will be a two-hour prime-time telecast, "An Evening at Tanglewood," on NBC live and in color from Tanglewood, at Lenox, Mass., Thursday, 7:30 to 9:30 p.m.)

The South Bend Tribune
SOUTH BEND, IND.
D. 118,257 SUN. 123,970

AUG 18 1967

TV VIEWS

By JOHN GARDNER
Tribune Amusements Editor

"An Evening at Tanglewood" was indeed an evening to enjoy last night on NBC's most welcome special color presentation on Channel 16 of a complete Berkshire Festival summer concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra from the Music Shed of Tanglewood at Lenox, Mass.

Erich Leinsdorf, the distinguished conductor, had as his guest soloist the brilliant, young Israeli violinist, Itzhak Perlman. The program consisted of Mozart's overture to the "Abduction from the Seraglio," Dvorak's symphony No. 9 in E minor (the 9, or ninth work being defended admirably and explained by the program's host and narrator, Edwin Newman), Saint Saens' Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso, with Perlman as soloist, followed by a scherzo as encore; then something to take our minds off the Viet War, the "1812 Overture" and a little artillery of its own—cannon and firecrackers.

But the real dazzler was Perlman, an intense, wholly-dedicated virtuoso who at 22 has transformed a deep understanding and genuine feeling for his music into the rich, pure penetrating sound of an instrument whose voice transcends all language barriers in reaching the ear of the world. A thoroughly enjoyable program and one which should prompt many letters to the network from grateful viewers. Why don't you add a card or note if this is the type of programming you enjoy — NBC Television, 30 Rockefeller Plaza, N.Y. 10020.

Another network host during a brief intermission was Frank Blair, offering a peek into an impressive season of special productions which I have mentioned in the column and will no doubt mention again before air time.

* * *

Gravel-voiced Bill Lawrence led us through the campsites of the GOP bush-beaters and wheedled a lot of noncommital blurbs from fellows like Richard Nixon, Govs. Ronald Reagan and George Romney and Sen. Charles Percy during ABC's "Who In '68" last night on Channel 28.

Wouldn't you like to hear just one guy pipe up with, "Yes, Sir. I want to be president! I want to serve my country and I believe I have the knowledge, guts and experience to offer something of value to the people and the party! I would gratefully accept the nomination if offered." Well, don't hold your breath waiting for a statement like that. The game will be footsy, or cat-and-mouse for quite a while yet. (Even more bothersome is the fact that there doesn't seem to be anyone in or out of office now who recognizes the real enemy in the Vietnam aggression. It must be considered less risky to threaten and kill the pawns).

One thing is obvious. ABC was early on this one, perhaps a bit too early, but it was an interesting tour even though much of what was said was nothing new to viewers abreast of current events.

The Knickerbocker News
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 55,425

AUG 12 1967

TANGLEWOOD SCENE—Music lovers enjoy a summer evening concert from the lawns.

'An Evening at Tanglewood'

"An Evening at Tanglewood," a two-hour prime-time telecast of a summer evening concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, will be presented live and in color from Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., by the NBC televison network on Thursday from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m.

The concert, part of the annual Berkshire Festival, will feature as its guest soloist Itzhak Perlman, 22-year-old Israeli violin virtuoso who has been frequently compared to Jascha Heifetz as a youth.

Mr. Perlman will play Saint-Saens's Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso. Also included in the program will be Mozart's Overture to the "Abduction from the Seraglio," Dvorak's Symphony Number 9 in E Minor ("From the New World"), and Tchaikovsky's "1812" Overture.

★ ★ ★

NBC NEWS reporter Edwin Newman will serve as program host and narrator, and during the 20-minute intermission will interview some of the first chair players and guests at the concert. Mr. Newman will also recall Tanglewood's illustrious 31-year history as the summer home of the Boston Symphony and the site of its annual Berkshire Festival.

The concert will originate in the open-sided 6,037-seat Music Shed, opened in 1938 and known for its fine natural acoustics. Thousands of additional listeners hear the concerts while seated on the surrounding lawns.

NBC color cameras will range over the 210-acre Tanglewood estate where, in the surroundings of formal gardens, hemlock hedges, avenues of tall pine and great lawns, the Boston Symphony Orchestra each summer gives a series of 24 Berkshire Festival concerts during an eight-week period.

"An Evening at Tanglewood" is another in a growing series of events in NBC's exclusive relationship with the Boston Symphony. The first association occurred in January, 1964, when NBC presented Mozart's Requiem for John F. Kennedy, complete with full orchestra and a 100-voice choir.

"An Evening at Tanglewood" is NBC-TV's second concert presentation from the Berkshire Festival. Last August it broadcast "An Afternoon at Tanglewood," featuring two winners of the Third International Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow — Mischa Dichter, pianist and Masuko Ushioda, violinist. The program was seen in nearly 4,000,000 homes in an early Sunday afternoon time period.

Cannons and fireworks will be utilized during the performance of Tchaikovsky's "1812" Overture, the program's concluding number in which the student orchestra will combine with the Boston Symphony veterans.

SAN LEANDRO, CALIF.
NEWS
D. 9,500

AUG 17 1967

ERICH LEINSDORF conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra in "An Evening at Tanglewood" over Channel 4 tonight.

HE NEW YORK TIMES, SATURDAY, AUGUST 19, 1967

Music: Nationwide From Tanglewood

N.B.C. Shows Concert by Boston Symphony

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

PRESUMABLY a live telecast each summer from Tanglewood is going to develop into a national custom, like cowboy shows, aquacades, night baseball and LSD parties. Thursday night, for the second consecutive season, Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony came through live from the Berkshire Music Festival, with the National Broadcasting Company's Edwin Newman as master of ceremonies. In color; fireworks at the end; no commercials during the music; all suave, with great respect to culture.

●

The same old problems came up. Here was a two-hour show, most of it devoted to the playing of a symphony orchestra. What to do? You can't run the show as it is seen by a listener in an auditorium seat. So you get busy with the cameras. You shoot the conductor front, back, left, right, under and over. You have the score marked so that when the horns enter, or the tympanist whacks away, the busy, eager camera is focused on those busy gentlemen.

You pay attention to the audience. You let the cameras rove around the hall. You even get some of the Berkshire flora and fauna. There are some noble trees on the Tanglewood grounds, and the cameras panned into quite a few of them.

One trouble is that the viewer is apt to become as distracted with too much camera work as with too little. During the Dvorak "New World" Symphony, the producer, George Heinemann, was much too busy-busy-busy. After a while the medium rather than the music begins to assert itself, and last night the medium was indeed the massage. Not that anybody has to listen to so familiar a work as the Dvorak "New World" with the respect and concentration one brings to Bach's "Art of Fugue" or a Boulez serial work, but at the same time the fussy, itchy camera work did prove a little distracting.

●

The concert opened with Mozart's "Abduction From the Seraglio" Overture, proceeded to the Dvorak, continued with the Saint-Saëns Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso and ended with Tchaikovsky's "1812 Overture," supplemented by young musicians from the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, a few cannon and a fireworks display. This is what they call a summer program, meaning it puts no undue strain on anybody's intellect. At that, it could have been a lot more patronizing. Mr. Leinsdorf, after all, is a musician.

Itzhak Perlman was the soloist in the Saint-Saëns, and here the camera work came into its own. There was something specific to latch on to, namely the gifted young (22-year-old) Israeli violinist, who, crippled by polio, has to play sitting down. He, as it should have been, was the feature, and there were close-ups of his face, his left hand, the way he worked with the conductor.

There seems to be a notion among television cameramen that violinists have only one hand, the left. Is there any time when, in a television show, any attention is paid to a violinist's bow arm? Yet some close-ups of the right hand and arm, illustrating the way a master violinist (and Mr. Perlman is a young master) varies pressure, uses his wrist, changes his style of bowing, would be just as rewarding as the inevitable close-ups of the fingers of the left hand scampering micelike over the fingerboard.

●

During the intermission, Mr. Newman spoke with the conductor and with several key members of the orchestra. He acted as straight man, innocently asking basic questions: What is the make-up of an orchestra? What does a first-desk man do? What is the job of personnel manager? It was pleasant and relaxed. At one moment Mr. Leinsdorf was asked if he glowered at any of his players when they made a mistake. Mr. Leinsdorf, looking as innocent as Mr. Newman, indicated this was a canard. No, no, no, he said. Conductors no longer glower. Only section leaders glower. This should come as the news of the century to the players of the orchestras in Philadelphia, New York, Chicago, Battle Creek, Buenos Aires and Ayyub ibn-Shadhi.

Leinsdorf Conducts—Newman Is M.C.

SUNDAY STANDARD
TIMES
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
CIRC. 60,150

JUL 23 1967

New England Newsclip

Israeli Violinist Set For Tanglewood

By NBC STAFF

"An Evening at Tanglewood," a two-hour prime-time telecast of a summer evening concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, will be presented live and in color from Tanglewood, at Lenox, Mass., by NBC on Aug.17.

George A. Heinemann, manager of public affairs, NBC News, will produce the program, and Walter C. Miller will be the director. The program will preempt Daniel Boone and Star Trek.

The concert, part of the annual Berkshire Festival, will feature as its guest soloist Itzhak Perlman, 22-year-old Israeli violin virtuoso who has been frequently compared to Jascha Heifetz as a youth. Mr. Perlman will play Saint-Saens's Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso. Also included in the program will be Mozart's Overture to the "Abduction from the Seraglio," Dvorak's Symphony Number 9 in E Minor ("From the New World"), and Tchaikovsky's "1812" Overture.

NBC News Reporter-at-Large Edwin Newman will serve as program host and narrator, and during the 20-minute intermission will interview some of the first chair players and guests at the concert. Mr. Newman will also recall Tanglewood's illustrious 31-year history as the summer home of the Boston Symphony and the site of its annual Berkshire Festival.

The concert will originate in the open-sided 6,037-seat Music Shed, opened in 1938 and known for its fine natural acoustics. Thousands of additional listeners hear the concerts while seated on the surrounding lawns.

NBC color cameras will range over the 210-acre Tanglewood estate where in the surroundings of formal gardens, hemlock hedges, avenues of tall pine and great lawns, the Boston Symphony Orchestra each Summer gives a series of 24 Berkshire Festival concerts during an eight-week period.

"An Evening at Tanglewood" is another in a growing series of events in NBC's exclusive relationship with the Boston Symphony. The first association occurred in January, 1964, when NBC Television presented Mozart's Requiem for John F. Kennedy, complete with full orchestra and a 100-voice choir.

"An Evening at Tanglewood" is NBC-TV's second concert presentation from the Berkshire Festival. Last August it broadcast "An Afternoon at Tanglewood," also produced by George Heinemann.

55

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

RAVENA NEWS HERALD
Friday, August 18, 1967

Final Week At Tanglewood

Several of the highlights of the thirtieth Berkshire Festival are incorporated into the eighth and final week of concerts. The weekend concerts will feature performances of Verdi's Requiem Saturday, an all Wagner program Sunday and Tanglewood-on-Parade Thursday.

On Friday evening at 9:00 Gunther Schuller will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program consisting of Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's Symphony No. 8 and Ives' Symphony No. 4.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude at 7:00 p.m. This week the Prelude will feature both the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, performing Wagner's Sigfried Idyll,, and Phyllis Curtin, performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

On Saturday evening, Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the orchestra, will conduct a performance of Verdi's Requiem. He has invited Martina Arroyo, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano, Michele Molese, tenor and Ezio Flagello, bass, to be guest soloists.

For Sunday afternoon's concert Mr. Leinsdorf has chosen an all Wagner program. The Prelude from Die Meistersinger, selections from Die Walkuere and Goetterdaemmerung make up the prgram for the last concert of the 1967 Berkshire Festival. Mr. Leinsdorf will have Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne as soloists.

The annual Tanglewood - - on Parade, given for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, will be this Thursday. The Tanglewood grounds will open at 2:00 p. m. and beginning at 2:15 members of the Berkshire Music Center will give performances that will continue until 7:20 p. m. At 7:30 there will be a Gala Concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Mr. Leinsdorf conducting . The program for this concert includes a performance of Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture which will utilize the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center orchestras, cannon and salute guns and will conclude with a display of fireworks.

The Gala Concert will be telecast live and in color over the NBC television network.

56

CITIZEN (E)
WINSTED, CONN.
CIRC. 4000
AUG 9 1967
New England Newsclip

Berkshire Festival Enters Final Week Of Outstanding Work

Several of the highlights of the 30th Berkshire festival are incorporated into the eighth and final week of concerts. The weekend concerts will feature performances of Verdi's Requiem (Aug. 19) and an all Wagner program (Aug. 20), Tanglewood-on-Parade (Aug. 17) and the closing concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music (Aug. 14 and 15).

This Friday at 9 p.m. Gunther Schuller will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in a program consisting of Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's Symphony No. 8 and Ives' Symphony No. 4. Mr. Schuller has been guest conductor with the Boston Symphony orchestra on numerous occasion for programs that have included his own works.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend prelude (Aug. 18, 7 p.m.). This week the prelude will feature both the Boston Symphony chamber players, performing Wagner's Sigfried Idyll, and Phyllis Curtin, performing songs or Verdi and Ives.

On Saturday evening Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct a performance of Verdi's Requiem. He has invited Martina Arroyo, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano, Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass, to be guest soloists. The Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus have been prepared for this performance by Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

For Sunday afternoon's concert Erich Leinsdorf has chosen an all Wagner program. The Prelude from Die Meistersinger, selections from Die Walkuere and Goetterdaemmerung make up the program for the last concert of the 1967 Berkshire Festival. Mr. Leinsdorf will have Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne as soloists.

INDEPENDENT
AGAWAM, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 2,900
AUG 10 1967
New England Newsclip

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass. Marilyn Horne, soprano will be soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Sunday afternoon August 20 as part of an all Wagner program.

TIME (e)
GREENWICH, CONN.
CIRC. 11,950
0-47
AUG 10 1967
New England Newsclip

Final Tanglewood Week Varied

Several of the highlights of the thirtieth Berkshire Festival are incorporated into the eighth and final week of concerts. The weekend concerts will feature performances of Verdi's Requiem (August 19) and an all-Wagner program (August 20), Tanglewood-on-Parade (August 17) and the closing concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music (August 14 and 15).

On Friday evening, Aug. 18 at 9, Gunther Schuller will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program consisting of Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's Symphony No. 8 and Ives' Symphony No. 4. Mr. Schuller has been guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on numerous occasions for programs that have included his own works.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude, Aug. 18 at 7 p.m. This week the Prelude will feature both the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, performing Wagner's Sigfried Idyll, and Phyllis Curtin, performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

On Saturday evening Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct a performance of Verdi's Requiem. He has invited Martina Arroyo, soprano; Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano; Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass, to be guest soloists. The Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus have been prepared for this performance by Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

For Sunday's afternoon's concert Erich Leinsdorf has chosen an all Wagner program, The Prelude from Die Meistersinger, selections from Die Walkuere and Goetterdaemmerung make up the program for the last concert of the 1967 Berkshire Festival. Mr. Leinsdorf will have Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne as soloists.

The annual Tanglewood-on-Parade, given for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, will be on Thursday, Aug. 17. The Tanglewood grounds will open at 2 p.m. and, beginning at 2:15, members of the Berkshire Music Center will give performances that will continue until 7:20 p.m. At 7:30 there will be a Gala Concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. The program for this concert includes a performance of Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture which will utilize the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center orchestras, cannon and salute guns and will conclude with a display of fireworks.

The final two concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music will be given on Monday and Tuesday evening, Aug. 14 and 15 at 8 p.m. The Monday concert is presented as a Friends event to which the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited. The Tuesday evening concert, a performance by the Columbia University Group for Contemporary Music will be presented as part of the series of Berkshire Festival Chamber of Music Concerts.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to two additional concerts during this last week of the Berkshire Festival. A concert of Baroque music will be performed on Wednesday evening, Aug. 16, at 8, and there will be a Chamber Music Concert on Sunday morning, Aug. 20 at 10.

The regular Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday morning, Aug. 19, at 10:30.

Information on all Tanglewood events may be obtained by writing Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240. (Telephone 413—637-1600.)

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SARATOGA SARATOGIAN
Monday, August 14, 1967

Verdi's Requiem Set at Tanglewood

Several of the highlights of the 13 Berkshire Festival are incorporated into the eighth and final week of concerts.

The weekend concerts will feature performances of Verdi's Requiem (Aug. 19) and an all Wagner program (Aug. 20), Tanglewood-on-Parade (Aug. 17) and the closing concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music (Aug. 14 and 15).

On Friday (Aug. 18 at 9 p.m.) Gunther Schuller will onduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program consisting of Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's Symphony No. 8 nd Ives' Symphony No. 4.

The Friday Aug. 18 concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude at 7 p.m. This week the Prelude will feature both the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, performing Wagner's Sigfried Idyll, and Phyllis Curtin, performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

On Saturday Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct a performance of Verdi's Requiem. He has invited Martina Arroyo, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano, Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass, to be guest soloists. The Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus have been prepared for this performance by Charles Wilson, asistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

For Sunday afternoon's concert Erich Leinsdorf has chosen an all Wagner program.

Schenectady Union-Star
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 30,615
AUG 14 1967

Boston Symphony Orchestra To Perform at Tanglewood

Gunther Schuller will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program at Tanglewood near Lenox, Mass., consisting of Dvorak's "Othello" overture, Schubert's "Symphony No. 8" and Ives' "Symphony No. 4." The program at 9 will be preceded by the traditional weekend prelude at 7 when the program will feature the Boston Symphony Chamber Players performing Wagner's "Siegfried Idyll" and Phyllis Curtin performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

The concert Saturday at 8:30 with Erich Leinsdorf as conductor will consist of a performance of Verdi's "Requiem." Soloists will be Martina Arroyo, soprano; Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano; Michele Molese, tenor; and Ezio Flagello, bass. The Tanglewood Choir and Berkshire Chorus have been prepared for this performance by Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony.

An all-Wagner program will be presented Sunday afternoon with Leinsdorf conducting. It will include the Prelude from "Die Meistersinger," and selections from "Die Walkuere" and "Goetterdaemerrung." Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horn will be the soloists for the Sunday afternoon program which will bring the 1967 Berkshire Festival to a close.

The annual Tanglewood-on-Parade, given for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, will be on Thursday when the grounds will open at 2 p.m. There will be performances from 2:15 until 7:20 p.m. by members of the Berkshire Music Center. These will be followed by a gala concert by the Boston Symphony with Leinsdorf conducting. The program will include Tchaikovsky's "1812 Overture" which will use the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center orchestras, cannon and salute guns and conclude with a display of fireworks.

Open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, the final two concerts in the fourth festival of contemporary American music will be given tonight and Tuesday at 8 p.m.

There will be an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

STAR
WINCHESTER, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 5,450
AUG 17 1967
New England Newsclip

WGBH Broadcasts Wagner Program

The Boston Symphony Orchestra concludes its 1967 Berkshire Festival season with an all-Wagner program to be broadcast live by WGBH-FM on Sunday, August 20 at 2:30 p.m.

Conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, the program opens with the Prelude to "Die Meistersinger." Also included are excerpts from "Die Walkure" and "Gotterdammerung" with mezzo-soprano Marilyn Horne and bass Ezio Flagello.

Although this program ends the Tanglewood season, two other concerts recorded earlier in the summer will be heard on Monday and Tuesday, August 21 and 22 at 8 p.m. The Monday program features contemporary American music, with a concert of chamber music scheduled Tuesday. Both programs will be broadcast in stereo.

FARMINGTON VALLEY
HERALD
SIMSBURY, CONN.
WEEKLY CIRC. 4,400
AUG 10 1967
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Concerts Set

VALLEY — Highlights of the 13th Bershire Festival are incorporated into the 8th and final week of concerts. The weekend concerts will feature performances of Verdi's Requiem (Aug. 19) and an all Wagner program (Aug. 20), Tanglewood-on-Parade (Aug. 17) and the closing concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music (Aug. 14 and 15).

On Aug. 18 at 9 p.m. Gunther Schulier will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program consisting of Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's Symphony No. 8 and Ive's Symphony No. 4.

On Aug. 19 Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct a performance of Verdit's Requiem. He has invited Martina Arroyo, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo- soprano, Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass, to be guest soloists. The Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus will join in.

For Sunday afternoon's concert Erich Leinsdorf has chosen an all Wagner program. The Prelude from Die Meeistersinger, selections from Die Walkuere and Goetterdaemmerung make up the program for the last concert of the 1967 Berkshire Festival. Mr. Leinsdorf will have Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne as soloists.

56

CITIZEN (E)
WINSTED, CONN.
AUG 9 1967 New England Newsclip

Berkshire Festival Enters Final Week Of Outstanding Work

Several of the highlights of the 30th Berkshire festival are incorporated into the eighth and final week of concerts. The weekend concerts will feature performances of Verdi's Requiem (Aug. 19) and an all Wagner program (Aug. 20), Tanglewood-on-Parade (Aug. 17) and the closing concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music (Aug. 14 and 15).

This Friday at 9 p.m. Gunther Schuller will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in a program consisting of Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's Symphony No. 8 and Ives' Symphony No. 4. Mr. Schuller has been guest conductor with the Boston Symphony orchestra on numerous occasion for programs that have included his own works.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend prelude (Aug. 18, 7 p.m.). This week the prelude will feature both the Boston Symphony chamber players, performing Wagner's Sigfried Idyll, and Phyllis Curtin, performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

On Saturday evening Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct a performance of Verdi's Requiem. He has invited Martina Arroyo, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano, Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass, to be guest soloists. The Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus have been prepared for this performance by Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

For Sunday afternoon's concert Erich Leinsdorf has chosen an all Wagner program. The Prelude from Die Meistersinger, selections from Die Walkuere and Goetterdaemmerung make up the program for the last concert of the 1967 Berkshire Festival. Mr. Leinsdorf will have Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne as soloists.

INDEPENDENT
AGAWAM, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 2,900
AUG 10 1967 New England Newsclip

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass. Marilyn Horne, soprano will be soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Sunday afternoon August 20 as part of an all Wagner program.

TIME (e)
GREENWICH, CONN.
CIRC. 11,95
AUG 10 1967 New England Newsclip

Final Tanglewood Week Varied

Several of the highlights of the thirtieth Berkshire Festival are incorporated into the eighth and final week of concerts. The weekend concerts will feature performances of Verdi's Requiem (August 19) and an all-Wagner program (August 20), Tanglewood-on-Parade (August 17) and the closing concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music (August 14 and 15).

On Friday evening, Aug. 18 at 9, Gunther Schuller will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program consisting of Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's Symphony No. 8 and Ives' Symphony No. 4. Mr. Schuller has been guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on numerous occasions for programs that have included his own works.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude, Aug. 18 at 7 p.m. This week the Prelude will feature both the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, performing Wagner's Sigfried Idyll, and Phyllis Curtin, performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

On Saturday evening Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct a performance of Verdi's Requiem. He has invited Martina Arroyo, soprano; Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano; Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass, to be guest soloists. The Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus have been prepared for this performance by Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

For Sunday's afternoon's concert Erich Leinsdorf has chosen an all Wagner program, The Prelude from Die Meistersinger, selections from Die Walkuere and Goetterdaemmerung make up the program for the last concert of the 1967 Berkshire Festival. Mr. Leinsdorf will have Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne as soloists.

The annual Tanglewood-on-Parade, given for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, will be on Thursday, Aug. 17. The Tanglewood grounds will open at 2 p.m. and, beginning at 2:15, members of the Berkshire Music Center will give performances that will continue until 7:20 p.m. At 7:30 there will be a Gala Concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. The program for this concert includes a performance of Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture which will utilize the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center orchestras, cannon and salute guns and will conclude with a display of fireworks.

The final two concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music will be given on Monday and Tuesday evening, Aug. 14 and 15 at 8 p.m. The Monday concert is presented as a Friends event to which the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited. The Tuesday evening concert, a performance by the Columbia University Group for Contemporary Music will be presented as part of the series of Berkshire Festival Chamber of Music Concerts.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to two additional concerts during this last week of the Berkshire Festival. A concert of Baroque music will be performed on Wednesday evening, Aug. 16, at 8, and there will be a Chamber Music Concert on Sunday morning, Aug. 20 at 10.

The regular Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday morning, Aug. 19, at 10:30.

Information on all Tanglewood events may be obtained by writing Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240. (Telephone 413—637-1600.)

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SARATOGA SARATOGIAN
Monday, August 14, 1967

Verdi's Requiem Set at Tanglewood

Several of the highlights of the 13 Berkshire Festival are incorporated into the eighth and final week of concerts.

The weekend concerts will feature performances of Verdi's Requiem (Aug. 19) and an all Wagner program (Aug. 20), Tanglewood-on-Parade (Aug. 17) and the closing concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music (Aug. 14 and 15).

On Friday (Aug. 18 at 9 p.m.) Gunther Schuller will onduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program consisting of Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's Symphony No. 8 nd Ives' Symphony No. 4.

The Friday Aug. 18 concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude at 7 p.m. This week the Prelude will feature both the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, performing Wagner's Sigfried Idyll, and Phyllis Curtin, performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

On Saturday Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct a performance of Verdi's Requiem. He has invited Martina Arroyao, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano, Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass, to be guest soloists. The Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus have been prepared for this performance by Charles Wilson, asistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

For Sunday afternoon's concert Erich Leinsdorf has chosen an all Wagner program.

Schenectady Union-Star
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 30,615
AUG 14 1967

Boston Symphony Orchestra To Perform at Tanglewood

Gunther Schuller will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program at Tanglewood near Lenox, Mass., consisting of Dvorak's "Othello" overture, Schubert's "Symphony No. 8" and Ives' "Symphony No. 4." The program at 9 will be preceded by the traditional weekend prelude at 7 when the program will feature the Boston Symphony Chamber Players performing Wagner's "Siegfried Idyll" and Phyllis Curtin performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

The concert Saturday at 8:30 with Erich Leinsdorf as conductor will consist of a performance of Verdi's "Requiem." Soloists will be Martina Arroyo, soprano; Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano; Michele Molese, tenor; and Ezio Flagello, bass. The Tanglewood Choir and Berkshire Chorus have been prepared for this performance by Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony.

An all-Wagner program will be presented Sunday afternoon with Leinsdorf conducting. It will include the Prelude from "Die Meistersinger," and selections from "Die Walkuere" and "Goetterdaemerrung." Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horn will be the soloists for the Sunday afternoon program which will bring the 1967 Berkshire Festival to a close.

The annual Tanglewood-on-Parade, given for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, will be on Thursday when the grounds will open at 2 p.m. There will be performances from 2:15 until 7:20 p.m. by members of the Berkshire Music Center. These will be followed by a gala concert by the Boston Symphony with Leinsdorf conducting. The program will include Tchaikovsky's "1812 Overture" which will use the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center orchestras, cannon and salute guns and conclude with a display of fireworks.

Open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, the final two concerts in the fourth festival of contemporary American music will be given tonight and Tuesday at 8 p.m.

There will be an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

STAR
WINCHESTER, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 5,450
AUG 17 1967 New England Newsclip

WGBH Broadcasts Wagner Program

The Boston Symphony Orchestra concludes its 1967 Berkshire Festival season with an all-Wagner program to be broadcast live by WGBH-FM on Sunday, August 20 at 2:30 p.m.

Conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, the program opens with the Prelude to "Die Meistersinger." Also included are excerpts from "Die Walkure" and "Gotterdammerung" with mezzo-soprano Marilyn Horne and bass Ezio Flagello.

Although this program ends the Tanglewood season, two other concerts recorded earlier in the summer will be heard on Monday and Tuesday, August 21 and 22 at 8 p.m. The Monday program features contemporary American music, with a concert of chamber music scheduled Tuesday. Both programs will be broadcast in stereo.

FARMINGTON VALLEY
HERALD
SIMSBURY, CONN.
AUG 10 1967 New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Concerts Set

VALLEY — Highlights of the 13th Bershire Festival are incorporated into the 8th and final week of concerts. The weekend concerts will feature performances of Verdi's Requiem (Aug. 19) and an all Wagner program (Aug. 20), Tanglewood-on-Parade (Aug. 17) and the closing concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music (Aug. 14 and 15).

On Aug. 18 at 9 p.m. Gunther Schulier will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program consisting of Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's Symphony No. 8 and Ive's Symphony No. 4.

On Aug. 19 Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct a performance of Verdit's Requiem. He has invited Martina Arroyo, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo- soprano, Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagelio, bass, to be guest soloists. The Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus will join in.

For Sunday afternoon's concert Erich Leinsdorf has chosen an all Wagner program. The Prelude from Die Meeistersinger, selections from Die Walkuere and Goetterdaemmerung make up the program for the last concert of the 1967 Berkshire Festival. Mr. Leinsdorf will have Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne as soloists.

TOWN TIMES
OAKVILLE, CONN.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,400

AUG 17 1967 New England Newsclip

Marilyn Horne

Ezio Flagello

Martina Arroyo

Michele Molese

Tatiana Troyanos

30th Berkshire Festival Concludes This Weekend

Several of the highlights of the thirtieth Berkshire Festival are incorporated into the eighth and final week of concerts. The weekend concerts will feature performances of Verdi's Requiem, August 19 an all Wagner program August 20 and Tanglewood-on-Parade, August 17.

On Friday evening, August 18, at 9 p.m., Gunther Schuller will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program consisting of Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's Symphony No. 8 and Ives' Symphony No. 4. Mr. Schuller has been guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on numerous occasions for programs that have included his own works.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude, August 18 at 7 p.m. This week the Prelude will feature both the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, performing Wagner's Sigfried Idyll, and Phyllis Curtin, performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

On Saturday evening Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct a performance of Verdi's Requiem. He has invited Martina Arroyo, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano, Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass, to be guest soloists. The Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus have been prepared for this performance by Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

For Sunday afternoon's concert Erich Leinsdorf has chosen an all Wagner program. The Prelude fro m Die Meistersinger, selections from Die Walkuere and Goetterdaemmerung make up the program for the last concert of the 1967 Berkshire Festival. Mr. Leinsdorf will have Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne as soloists.

The annual Tanglewood-on-Parade given for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center will be on Thursday, August 17. The Tanglewood grounds will open at 2 and beginning at 2:15 members of the Berkshire Music Center will give performances that will continue until 7:20. At 7:30 there will be a Gala Concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. The program for this concert includes a performance of Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture which will utilize the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center orchestras, cannon and salute guns and will conclude with a display of fireworks.

The Gala Concert will be telecast live and in color over the NBC television network.

The regular Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday morning, August 19, at 10:30.

HERALD TRAVELER (M)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 240,000

AUG 18 1967 New England Newsclip

Berkshire Chorus At Tanglewood

For the third time this summer the Berkshire Chorus will perform at Tanglewood on Saturday. The chorus will be part of a presentation of Verdi's Requiem conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

The Berkshire Chorus is composed of about 30 persons who are residents of the area.

This summer the Chorus rehearsed with Mr. Leinsdorf and joined the Tanglewood Choir in performances of the Bach Mass in B minor and Beethoven's original version of Fidelio.

Persons interested in auditioning for the 1968 Berkshire Chorus should write tt: Berkshire Chorus, Symphony Hall, Boston 02115.

BERKSHIRE COURIER
GT. BARRINGTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,400

047
AUG 17 1967 New England Newsclip

Gala Week at Tanglewood To Mark Final Concerts

LENOX — Several of the highlights of the 30th Berkshire Festival will be incorporated this weekend into the eighth and final series of concerts.

The weekend concerts will feature performances of Verdi's Requiem Saturday and an all-Wagner program Sunday, as well as Tanglewood-on-Parade tonight.

On Friday evening at 9, Gunther Schuller will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program consisting of Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's Symphony No. 8 and Ives' Symphony No. 4. Schuller has been guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on numerous occasions for programs that have included his own works.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional weekend prelude at 7. This week the prelude will feature both the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, performing Wagner's Sigfried Idyll, and Phyllis Curtin, performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

On Saturday evening Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct a performance of Verdi's Requiem. He has invited Martina Arroyo, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano, Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass, to be guest soloists. The Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus have been prepared for this performance by Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

For Sunday afternoon's concert, Leinsdorf has chosen an all-Wagner program. The Prelude from Die Meistersinger, selections from Die Walkuere and Goetterdaemmerung make up the program for the last concert of the 1967 Berkshire Festival. Leinsdorf will have Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne as soloists.

The annual Tanglewood-on-Parade given for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center will be tonight. The Tanglewood grounds will open at 2 p.m. and beginning at 2:15 members of the Berkshire Music Center will give performances that will continue until 7:20 p.m. At 7:30 there will be a gala concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Leinsdorf conducting. The program for this concert includes a performance of Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture, which will utilize the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center orchestras, as well as cannon and salute guns, and will conclude with a display of fireworks.

The Gala Concert will be telecast live and in color over the NBC television network.

The regular open rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension fund will be held Saturday morning at 10:30.

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350

AUG 18 1967 New England Newsclip

Berkshire Chorus Sings At Tanglewood Saturday

For the third time this summer the Berkshire Chorus will perform at Tanglewood Saturday. The chorus will be part of a presentation of Verdi's Requiem, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

The Berkshire Chorus is composed of about thirty residents of the area, some from as far away as Springfield and Albany, but most from Berkshire County. Charles Wilson and M. Lewis Spratlan chose the members by audition last winter and rehearsed with them during the spring.

This summer the chorus has rehearsed with Mr. Leinsdorf as well, and has joined the Tanglewood Choir in performances of the Bach Mass in B minor and Beethoven's original version of Fidelio.

Persons interested in auditioning for the 1968 Berkshire Chorus should write to: Berkshire Chorus, Symphony Hall, Boston.

SUNDAY REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 115,000

AUG 13 1967 New England Newsclip

57

Berkshire Festival

Final Week at Tanglewood Will Present Wagner Program

EZIO FLAGELLO

TATIANA TROYANOS

MICHELE MOLESE

MARILYN HORNE

MARTINA ARROYO

Several of the highlights of the 30th Berkshire Festival are incorporated into the eighth and final week of concerts. The weekend concerts will feature performances of Verdi's Requiem, Saturday, and an all Wagner program, the 20th, Tanglewood - on - Parade, Thursday and the closing concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music, Monday and Tuesday.

Guest Conductor

On Friday evening, at 9.00 pm, Gunther Schuller will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program consisting of Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's Symphony No. 8 and Ives' Symphony No. 4. Mr. Schuller has been guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on numerous occasions for programs that have included his own works.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude at 7.00 pm. This week the Prelude will feature both the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, performing Wagner's Sigfried Idyll, and Phyllis Curtin, performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

On Saturday evening Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct a performance of Verdi's Requiem. He has invited Martina Arroyo, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo - soprano, Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass, to be guest soloists.

Prepared Performance

The Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus have been prepared for this performance by Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

For Sunday afternoon's concert on the 20th, Erich Leinsdorf has chosen an all Wagner program. The Prelude from Die Meistersinger, selections from Die Walkuere and Goetterdaemmerung make up the program for the last concert of the 1967 Berkshire Festival. Mr. Leinsdorf will have Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne as soloists.

The annual Tanglewood - on - Parade given for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center will be on Thursday. The Tanglewood grounds will open at 2.00 p.m. and beginning at 2.15 pm members of the Berkshire Music Center will give performances that will continue until 7.20 pm. At 7.30 pm there will be a Gala Concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting.

Combined Forces

The program for this concert includes a performance of Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture which will utilize the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center orchestras, cannon and salute guns and will conclude with a display of fireworks.

The Gala Concert will be telecast live and in color over the NBC television network.

The final two concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music will be given on Monday evening at 8.00 pm, and Tuesday evening at 8.00 pm. The Monday concert is presented as a Friends event to which the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited.

Part of Series

The Tuesday evening concert, a performance by the Columbia University Group for Contemporary Music, will be presented as part of the series of Berkshire Festival Chamber Music Concerts.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to two additional concerts during this last week of the Berkshire Festival. A concert of Baroque music will be performed on Wednesday evening at 8.00 pm and there will be a Chamber Music Concert on Sunday morning the 20th, at 10.00 am.

Open Rehearsal

The regular Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday morning at 10.30 am.

This afternoon's Boston Symphony Orchestra program features John Browning as guest soloist with the orchestra. Mr. Browning will perform the Prokofiev Piano Concerto No. 1 and the Rachmaninoff Paganini Rhapsody with the orchestra. Mr. Leinsdorf will also conduct a performance of Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As."

TOWN TIMES
OAKVILLE, CONN.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,400

AUG 17 1967 New England Newsclip

Marilyn Horne

Ezio Flagello

Martina Arroyo

Michele Molese

Tatiana Troyanos

30th Berkshire Festival Concludes This Weekend

Several of the highlights of the thirtieth Berkshire Festival are incorporated into the eighth and final week of concerts. The weekend concerts will feature performances of Verdi's Requiem, August 19 an all Wagner program August 20 and Tanglewood-on-Parade, August 17.

On Friday evening, August 18, at 9 p.m., Gunther Schuller will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program consisting of Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's Symphony No. 8 and Ives' Symphony No. 4. Mr. Schuller has been guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on numerous occasions for programs that have included his own works.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude, August 18 at 7 p.m. This week the Prelude will feature both the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, performing Wagner's Sigfried Idyll, and Phyllis Curtin, performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

On Saturday evening Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct a performance of Verdi's Requiem. He has invited Martina Arroyo, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano, Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass, to be guest soloists. The Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus have been prepared for this performance by Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

For Sunday afternoon's concert Erich Leinsdorf has chosen an all Wagner program. The Prelude from Die Meistersinger, selections from Die Walkuere and Goetterdaemmerung make up the program for the last concert of the 1967 Berkshire Festival. Mr. Leinsdorf will have Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne as soloists.

The annual Tanglewood-on-Parade given for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center will be on Thursday, August 17. The Tanglewood grounds will open at 2 and beginning at 2:15 members of the Berkshire Music Center will give performances that will continue until 7:20. At 7:30 there will be a Gala Concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. The program for this concert includes a performance of Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture which will utilize the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center orchestras, cannon and salute guns and will conclude with a display of fireworks.

The Gala Concert will be telecast live and in color over the NBC television network.

The regular Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday morning, August 19, at 10:30.

HERALD TRAVELER (M)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 240,000

AUG 18 1967 New England Newsclip

Berkshire Chorus At Tanglewood

For the third time this summer the Berkshire Chorus will perform at Tanglewood on Saturday. The chorus will be part of a presentation of Verdi's Requiem conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

The Berkshire Chorus is composed of about 30 persons who are residents of the area.

This summer the Chorus rehearsed with Mr. Leinsdorf and joined the Tanglewood Choir in performances of the Bach Mass in B minor and Beethoven's original version of Fidelio.

Persons interested in auditioning for the 1968 Berkshire Chorus should write tt: Berkshire Chorus, Symphony Hall, Boston 02115.

BERKSHIRE COURIER
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 3,400

AUG 17 1967 New England Newsclip

Gala Week at Tanglewood To Mark Final Concerts

LENOX — Several of the highlights of the 30th Berkshire Festival will be incorporated this weekend into the eighth and final series of concerts.

The weekend concerts will feature performances of Verdi's Requiem Saturday and an all-Wagner program Sunday, as well as Tanglewood-on-Parade tonight.

On Friday evening at 9, Gunther Schuller will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program consisting of Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's Symphony No. 8 and Ives' Symphony No. 4. Schuller has been guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on numerous occasions for programs that have included his own works.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional weekend prelude at 7. This week the prelude will feature both the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, performing Wagner's Sigfried Idyll, and Phyllis Curtin, performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

On Saturday evening Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct a performance of Verdi's Requiem. He has invited Martina Arroyo, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano, Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass, to be guest soloists. The Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus have been prepared for this performance by Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

For Sunday afternoon's concert, Leinsdorf has chosen an all-Wagner program. The Prelude from Die Meistersinger, selections from Die Walkuere and Goetterdaemmerung make up the program for the last concert of the 1967 Berkshire Festival. Leinsdorf will have Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne as soloists.

The annual Tanglewood-on-Parade given for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center will be tonight. The Tanglewood grounds will open at 2 p.m. and beginning at 2:15 members of the Berkshire Music Center will give performances that will continue until 7:20 p.m. At 7:30 there will be a gala concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Leinsdorf conducting. The program for this concert includes a performance of Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture, which will utilize the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center orchestras, as well as cannon and salute guns, and will conclude with a display of fireworks.

The Gala Concert will be telecast live and in color over the NBC television network.

The regular open rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension fund will be held Saturday morning at 10:30.

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350

AUG 18 1967 New England Newsclip

Berkshire Chorus Sings At Tanglewood Saturday

For the third time this summer the Berkshire Chorus will perform at Tanglewood Saturday. The chorus will be part of a presentation of Verdi's Requiem, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

The Berkshire Chorus is composed of about thirty residents of the area, some from as far away as Springfield and Albany, but most from Berkshire County. Charles Wilson and M. Lewis Spratlan chose the members by audition last winter and rehearsed with them during the spring.

This summer the chorus has rehearsed with Mr. Leinsdorf as well, and has joined the Tanglewood Choir in performances of the Bach Mass in B minor and Beethoven's original version of Fidelio.

Persons interested in auditioning for the 1968 Berkshire Chorus should write to: Berkshire Chorus, Symphony Hall, Boston.

SUNDAY REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

AUG 13 1967 New England Newsclip

57

Berkshire Festival

Final Week at Tanglewood Will Present Wagner Program

EZIO FLAGELLO

TATIANA TROYANOS

MICHELE MOLESE

MARILYN HORNE

MARTINA ARROYO

Several of the highlights of the 30th Berkshire Festival are incorporated into the eighth and final week of concerts. The weekend concerts will feature performances of Verdi's Requiem, Saturday, and an all Wagner program, the 20th, Tanglewood - on - Parade, Thursday and the closing concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music, Monday and Tuesday.

Guest Conductor

On Friday evening, at 9.00 pm, Gunther Schuller will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program consisting of Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's Symphony No. 8 and Ives' Symphony No. 4. Mr. Schuller has been guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on numerous occasions for programs that have included his own works.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude at 7.00 pm. This week the Prelude will feature both the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, performing Wagner's Sigfried Idyll, and Phyllis Curtin, performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

On Saturday evening Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct a performance of Verdi's Requiem. He has invited Martina Arroyo, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo - soprano, Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass, to be guest soloists.

Prepared Performance

The Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus have been prepared for this performance by Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

For Sunday afternoon's concert on the 20th, Erich Leinsdorf has chosen an all Wagner program. The Prelude from Die Meistersinger, selections from Die Walkuere and Goetterdaemmerung make up the program for the last concert of the 1967 Berkshire Festival. Mr. Leinsdorf will have Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne as soloists.

The annual Tanglewood - on - Parade given for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center will be on Thursday. The Tanglewood grounds will open at 2.00 p.m. and beginning at 2.15 pm members of the Berkshire Music Center will give performances that will continue until 7.20 pm. At 7.30 pm there will be a Gala Concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting.

Combined Forces

The program for this concert includes a performance of Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture which will utilize the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center orchestras, cannon and salute guns and will conclude with a display of fireworks.

The Gala Concert will be telecast live and in color over the NBC television network.

The final two concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music will be given on Monday evening at 8.00 pm, and Tuesday evening at 8.00 pm. The Monday concert is presented as a Friends event to which the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited.

Part of Series

The Tuesday evening concert, a performance by the Columbia University Group for Contemporary Music, will be presented as part of the series of Berkshire Festival Chamber Music Concerts.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to two additional concerts during this last week of the Berkshire Festival. A concert of Baroque music will be performed on Wednesday evening at 8.00 pm and there will be a Chamber Music Concert on Sunday morning the 20th, at 10.00 am.

Open Rehearsal

The regular Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday morning at 10.30 am.

This afternoon's Boston Symphony Orchestra program features John Browning as guest soloist with the orchestra. Mr. Browning will perform the Prokofiev Piano Concerto No. 1 and the Rachmaninoff Paganini Rhapsody with the orchestra. Mr. Leinsdorf will also conduct a performance of Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As."

58

KINGSTON, N. Y.
FREEMAN
D. 18,000

AUG 9 1967

Announce Closing Concerts at Berkshire

Several highlights of the 13th Berkshire Festival are incorporated into the eighth and final week of concerts. The weekend concerts will feature performances of Verdi's Requiem (August 19) and an all Wagner program (August 20), Tanglewood on-Parade (August 17) and the closing concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music (August 14 and 15).

On Friday evening (August 18, 9 p. m.) Gunther Schuller will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program consisting of Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's Symphony No. 8 and Ives' Symphony No. 4 Mr. Schuller has been guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on numerous occasions for programs that have included his own works.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude (August 18, 7 p. m.) This week the Prelude will feature both the Boston Symphony Chmber Players, performing Wagner's Sigfried Idyll, and Phyllis Curtin, performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

On Saturday evening Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct a performance of Verdi's Requim. He has invited Martina Arroyo, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano, Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass, to be guest soloists. The Tangelwood Choir and the Bergshire Chorus have been prepared for this performance by Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

For Sunday afternoon's concert Erich Leinsdorf has chosen an all Wagner program. The Prelude from Die Meistersinger, selections from Die Walkuere and Goetterdaemmerung make up the program for the last concert of the 1967 Berkshire Festival. Mr. Leinsdorf will have Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne as soloists.

The annual Tanglewood-on-Parade given for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center will be on Thursday (August 17). The Tanglewood grounds will open at 2 p. m. and beginning at 2:15 p. m. members of the Berkshire Music Center will give performances that will continue until 7:20 p. m. At 7:30 there will be a Gala Concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. The program for this concert includes a performance of Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture which will utilize the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center orchestras, cannon and salute guns and will conclude with a display of fireworks.

The Gala Concert will be telecast live and in color over the NBC television network.

The final two concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music will be given on Monday evening (August 14, 8 p. m.) and Tuesday evening (August 15, 8 p. m.). The Monday concert is presented as a Friends event to which the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited. The Tuesday evening concert, a performance by the Columbia University Group for Contemporary Music, will be presented as part of the series of Berkshire Festival Music Concerts.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to two additional concerts during this last week of the Berkshire Festival. A concert of Baroque music will be performed Wednesday evening (August 16, 8 p. m.) and there will be a Chamber Music Concert on Sunday morning (August 20, 10 a. m.).

The regular Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday morning (August 19) at 10:30 a. m.

Information on all Tanglewood events may be obtained by writing Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240.

BEE
NEWTOWN, CONN.
WEEKLY CIRC. 7,900

AUG 11 1967 New England Newsclip

Verdi's "Requiem" At Tanglewood, August 19

All-Wagner Concert In Final Festival Week

Several of the highlights of 30th Berkshire Festival are incorporated into the eighth and final week of concerts. The week-end will feature performances of Verdi's Requiem on August 19 and an all-Wagner program August 20, Tanglewood-on-Parade August 17 and the closing concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music August 14 and 15.

On Friday evening, August 18, 9 pm, Gunther Schuller will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's Symphony No. 8 and Ives' Symphony No. 4. The evening concert will be preceded by the traditional "Week-end Prelude" at 7 pm with the Boston Symphony Chamber Players performing Wagner's Sigfried Idyll, and Phyllis Curtin performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

On Saturday evening, August 19, Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct Verdi's Requiem. He has invited Martina Arroyo, soprano; Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano; Michele Molese, tenor; and Ezio Flagello, bass; to be guest soloists. The Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus have been prepared for this performance by Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

For Sunday afternoon Erich Leinsdorf has chosen an all-Wagner program for the last concert of the 1967 Berkshire Festival with Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne as soloists.

The annual Tanglewood-on-Parade for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center will be Thursday, August 17. The Tanglewood grounds will open at pm and beginning at 2:15 pm members of the Berkshire Music Center will give performances that will continue until :20 pm. At 7:30 there will be gala concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting.

The program includes Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture which will utilize the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center orchestras, cannon and salute guns and will conclude with a display of fireworks. It will be telecast live and in color over the NBC network.

Information on all Tanglewood events may be obtained by writing Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240, or telephoning 413-637-5400.

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y.
SARATOGIAN
D. 10,500

AUG 14 1967

Verdi's Requiem Set at Tanglewood

Several of the highlights of the 13 Berkshire Festival are incorporated into the eighth and final week of concerts.

The weekend concerts will feature performances of Verdi's Requiem (Aug. 19) and an all Wagner program (Aug. 20), Tanglewood-on-Parade (Aug. 17) and the closing concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music (Aug. 14 and 15).

On Friday (Aug. 18 at 9 p.m.) Gunther Schuller will onduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program consisting of Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's Symphony No. 8 nd Ives' Symphony No. 4.

The Friday Aug. 18 concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude at 7 p.m. This week the Prelude will feature both the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, performing Wagner's Sigfried Idyll, and Phyllis Curtin, performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

On Saturday Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct a performance of Verdi's Requiem. He has invited Martina Arroyao, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano, Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass, to be guest soloists. The Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus have been prepared for this performance by Charles Wilson, asistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

For Sunday afternoon's concert Erich Leinsdorf has chosen an all Wagner program.

JOURNAL
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,500

AUG 17 1967 New England Newsclip

MARTINA ARROYO, soprano, who will be featured in a performance of the Verdi Requiem by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director conducting, on Saturday evening, August 19 at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

Final Week at Tanglewood

Several of the highlights of the thirtieth Berkshire Festival are incorporated into the eighth and final week of concerts. The weekend concerts will feature performances of Verdi's Requiem (August 19) and an all Wagner program (August 20), Tanglewood-on-Parade (August 17). The closing concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music were played August 14 and 15.

On Friday evening (August 18, 9 p.m.) Gunther Schuller will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program consisting of Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's Symphony No. 8 and Ives' Symphony No. 4. Mr. Schuller has been guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on numerous occasions for programs that have included his own works.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude (August 18, 7 p.m.) This week the Prelude will feature both the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, performing Wagner's Sigfried Idyll, and Phyllis Curtin, performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct a performance of Verdi's Requiem on Saturday evening. He has invited Martina Arroyo, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo - soprano, Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass, to be guest soloists. The Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus have been prepared for this performance by Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

For Sunday afternoon's concert Erich Leinsdorf has chosen an all Wagner program. The Prelude from Die Meistersinger, selections from Die Walkuere and Goetterdaemmerung make up the program for the last concert of the 1967 Berkshire Festival. Mr. Leinsdorf will have Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne as soloists.

The annual Tanglewood-on-Parade given for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center will be today and this evening, Thursday (August 17.) The Tanglewood grounds will open at 2 p.m. and beginning at 2:15 p.m. members of the Berkshire Music Center will give performances that will continue until 7:20 p.m. At 7:30 there will be a Gala Concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. The program for this concert includes a performance of Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture which will utilize the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center orchestras, cannon and salute guns and will conclude with a display of fireworks.

The Gala Concert will be telecast live and in color over the NBC television network.

The regular Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday morning (August 19) at 10:30

TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM (e)
HOLYOKE, MASS.
CIRC. 26,950

AUG 12 1967 New England Newsclip

Final Week At Tanglewood Ahead

Several of the highlights of the 30th Berkshire Festival are incorporated into the eighth and final week of concerts. The weekend concerts will feature performances of Verdi's Requiem and an all-Wagner program, Tanglewood-on-Parade and the closing concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music.

On Friday evening, Aug. 18, Gunther Schuller will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program consisting of Dvorak's Othello Overture. Schubert's Symphony No. 8 and Ives' Symphony No. 4. Mr. Schuller has been guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on numerous occasions for programs that have included his own works.

The concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude at 7. This week the Prelude will feature both the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, performing Wagner's Sigfried Idyll, and Phyllis Curtin, performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

On Saturday evening, Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct a performance of Verdi's Requiem. Martina Arroyo, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano, Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass, will be guest soloist. The Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus will sing.

Sunday afternoon's concert will be an all-Wagner program. The Prelude from Die Meistersinger, selections from Die Walkuere and Gotterdaemmerung make up the program for the last concert of the 1967 Berkshire Festival. Mr. Leinsdorf will have Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne as soloists.

The annual Tanglewood-on-Parade given for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center will be on Thursday, Aug. 17. The Tanglewood grounds wil open at 2 p. m. and beginning at 2:15 p. m., members of the Berkshire Music Center will give performances that will continue until 7:30 p. m. At 7:30, there will be a Gala Concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. The program for this concert includes a performance of Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture which will utilize the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center orchestras, cannon and salute guns and will conclude with a display of fireworks.

The Gala Concert will be telecast live and in color over the NBC television network.

This Sunday afternoon's Boston Symphony Orchestra program features John Browning as guest soloist with the orchestra. Mr. Browning will perform the Prokofiev Piano Concerto No. 1 and the Rachmaninoff Paganini Rhapsody with the orchestra. Mr. Leinsdorf will also conduct a performance of Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As."

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUR.
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Tuesday, August 15, 1967

Boston Symphony's Final Week Set at Tanglewood

The final weekend concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be presented Friday, Saturday and Sunday at Tanglewood in the Berkshires, near Lenox, Mass.

* * *

The week also brings the annual Tanglewood on Parade benefit for the Berkshire Music Center on Thursday with the Tanglewood grounds opening at 2:15 p.m. and Berkshire Music Center events until 7:20 p.m. At 7:30 p.m. a gala concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

The program will include a performance of Tchaikovsky's "1812 Overture" which wil' utilize the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and the Berkshire Music Center orchestras, cannon and salute guns and will conclude with a display of fireworks.

The Friday Weekend Prelude program will be presented at 7 p.m. by the Boston Symphony Chamber Players. They will perform Wagner's "Siegfried Idyll" with Phyllis Curtin presenting songs of Verdi and Ives.

* * *

Gunther Schuler will conduct the Friday 9 p.m. program including Dvorak's "Othello Overture," Schubert's "Symphony number 8" and Ives's "Symphony number 4."

The Saturday 8 p.m. program, directed by Leinsdorf, will feature Verdi's "Requiem." Martina Arroyo, soprano; Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano; Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass, will be the guest soloists. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has prepared the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus for this performance.

* * *

The Sunday 2:30 p.m. program will feature an all-Wagner program conducted by Leinsdorf. It will include "The Prelude from 'Die Meistersinger' " selections from "Die Walkuere" and "Gotterdaemmerung." Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne will be th soloists.

The regular open rehearsal for th benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

Information or tickets may be obtained by writing Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240.

58

KINGSTON, N. Y.
FREEMAN
D. 18,000

AUG 9 1967

Announce Closing Concerts at Berkshire

Several highlights of the 13th Berkshire Festival are incorporated into the eighth and final week of concerts. The weekend concerts will feature performances of Verdi's Requiem (August 19) and an all Wagner program (August 20), Tanglewood on-Parade (August 17) and the closing concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music (August 14 and 15).

On Friday evening (August 18, 9 p. m.) Gunther Schuller will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program consisting of Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's Symphony No. 8 and Ives' Symphony No. 4 Mr. Schuller has been guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on numerous occasions for programs that have included his own works.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude (August 18, 7 p. m.) This week the Prelude will feature both the Boston Symphony Chmber Players, performing Wagner's Sigfried Idyll, and Phyllis Curtin, performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

On Saturday evening Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct a performance of Verdi's Requim. He has invited Martina Arroyo, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano, Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass, to be guest soloists. The Tangelwood Choir and the Bergshire Chorus have been prepared for this performance by Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

For Sunday afternoon's concert Erich Leinsdorf has chosen an all Wagner program. The Prelude from Die Meistersinger, selections from Die Walkuere and Goetterdaemmerung make up the program for the last concert of the 1967 Berkshire Festival. Mr. Leinsdorf will have Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne as soloists.

The annual Tanglewood-on-Parade given for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center will be on Thursday (August 17). The Tanglewood grounds will open at 2 p. m. and beginning at 2:15 p. m. members of the Berkshire Music Center will give performances that will continue until 7:20 p. m. At 7:30 there will be a Gala Concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. The program for this concert includes a performance of Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture which will utilize the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center orchestras, cannon and salute guns and will conclude with a display of fireworks.

The Gala Concert will be telecast live and in color over the NBC television network.

The final two concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music will be given on Monday evening (August 14, 8 p. m.) and Tuesday evening (August 15, 8 p. m.). The Monday concert is presented as a Friends event to which the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited. The Tuesday evening concert, a performance by the Columbia University Group for Contemporary Music, will be presented as part of the series of Berkshire Festival Music Concerts.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to two additional concerts during this last week of the Berkshire Festival. A concert of Baroque music will be performed Wednesday evening (August 16, 8 p. m.) and there will be a Chamber Music Concert on Sunday morning (August 20, 10 a. m.).

The regular Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday morning (August 19) at 10:30 a. m.

Information on all Tanglewood events may be obtained by writing Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240.

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y.
SARATOGIAN
D. 10,500

AUG 14 1967

Verdi's Requiem Set at Tanglewood

Several of the highlights of the 13 Berkshire Festival are incorporated into the eighth and final week of concerts.

The weekend concerts will feature performances of Verdi's Requiem (Aug. 19) and an all Wagner program (Aug. 20), Tanglewood-on-Parade (Aug. 17) and the closing concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music (Aug. 14 and 15).

On Friday (Aug. 18 at 9 p.m.) Gunther Schuller will onduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program consisting of Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's Symphony No. 8 nd Ives' Symphony No. 4.

The Friday Aug. 18 concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude at 7 p.m. This week the Prelude will feature both the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, performing Wagner's Sigfried Idyll, and Phyllis Curtin, performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

On Saturday Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct a performance of Verdi's Requiem. He has invited Martina Arroyao, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano, Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass, to be guest soloists. The Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus have been prepared for this performance by Charles Wilson, asistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

For Sunday afternoon's concert Erich Leinsdorf has chosen an all Wagner program.

BEE
NEWTOWN CONN
WEEKLY CIRC. 7,900

AUG 11 1967

New England Newsclip

Verdi's "Requiem" At Tanglewood, August 19

All-Wagner Concert In Final Festival Week

Several of the highlights of 30th Berkshire Festival are incorporated into the eighth and final week of concerts. The week-end will feature performances of Verdi's Requiem on August 19 and an all-Wagner program August 20, Tanglewood-on-Parade August 17 and the closing concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music August 14 and 15.

On Friday evening, August 18, 9 pm, Gunther Schuller will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's Symphony No. 8 and Ives' Symphony No. 4. The evening concert will be preceded by the traditional "Week-end Prelude" at 7 pm with the Boston Symphony Chamber Players performing Wagner's Sigfried Idyll, and Phyllis Curtin performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

On Saturday evening, August 19, Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct Verdi's Requiem. He has invited Martina Arroyo, soprano; Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano; Michele Molese, tenor; and Ezio Flagello, bass; to be guest soloists. The Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus have been prepared for this performance by Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

For Sunday afternoon Erich Leinsdorf has chosen an all-Wagner program for the last concert of the 1967 Berkshire Festival with Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne as soloists.

The annual Tanglewood-on-Parade for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center will be Thursday, August 17. The Tanglewood grounds will open at pm and beginning at 2:15 pm members of the Berkshire Music Center will give performances that will continue until :20 pm. At 7:30 there will be gala concert by the Boston ymphony Orchestra, Erich einsdorf conducting.

The program includes Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture which ill utilize the combined forces f the Boston Symphony and erkshire-Music-Center orches-s, cannon and salute guns l will conclude with a dis-y of fireworks. It will be ecast live and in color over NBC network.

nformation on all Tangle-od events may be obtained writing Festival Ticket Of-e, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 240, or telephoning 413-637-00.

JOURNAL
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,500

AUG 17 1967

New England Newsclip

MARTINA ARROYO, soprano, who will be featured in a performance of the Verdi Requiem by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director conducting, on Saturday evening, August 19 at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM (c)
HOLYOKE, MASS.

AUG 12 1967

Final Week At Tanglewood Ahead

Several of the highlights of the 30th Berkshire Festival are incorporated into the eighth and final week of concerts. The weekend concerts will feature performances of Verdi's Requiem and an all-Wagner program, Tanglewood-on-Parade and the closing concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music.

On Friday evening, Aug. 18, Gunther Schuller will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program consisting of Dvorak's Othello Overture. Schubert's Symphony No. 8 and Ives' Symphony No. 4. Mr. Schuller has been guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on numerous occasions for programs that have included his own works.

The concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude at 7. This week the Prelude will feature both the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, performing Wagner's Sigfried Idyll, and Phyllis Curtin, performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

On Saturday evening, Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct a performance of Verdi's Requiem. Martina Arroyo, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano, Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass, will be guest soloist. The Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus will sing.

Sunday afternoon's concert will be an all-Wagner program. The Prelude from Die Meistersinger, selections from Die Walkuere and Gotterdaemmerung make up the program for the last concert of the 1967 Berkshire Festival. Mr. Leinsdorf will have Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne as soloists.

The annual Tanglewood-on-Parade given for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center will be on Thursday, Aug. 17. The Tanglewood grounds wil open at 2 p. m. and beginning at 2:15 p. m., members of the Berkshire Music Center will give performances that will continue until 7:30 p. m. At 7:30, there will be a Gala Concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. The program for this concert includes a performance of Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture which will utilize the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center orchestras, cannon and salute guns and will conclude with a display of fireworks.

The Gala Concert will be telecast live and in color over the NBC television network.

This Sunday afternoon's Boston Symphony Orchestra program features John Browning as guest soloist with the orchestra. Mr. Browning will perform the Prokofiev Piano Concerto No. 1 and the Rachmaninoff Paganini Rhapsody with the orchestra. Mr. Leinsdorf will also conduct a performance of Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As."

Final Week at Tanglewood

Several of the highlights of the thirtieth Berkshire Festival are incorporated into the eighth and final week of concerts. The weekend concerts will feature performances of Verdi's Requiem (August 19) and an all Wagner program (August 20), Tanglewood-on-Parade (August 17). The closing concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music were played August 14 and 15.

On Friday evening (August 18, 9 p.m.) Gunther Schuller will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program consisting of Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's Symphony No. 8 and Ives' Symphony No. 4. Mr. Schuller has been guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on numerous occasions for programs that have included his own works.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude (August 18, 7 p.m.) This week the Prelude will feature both the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, performing Wagner's Sigfried Idyll, and Phyllis Curtin, performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct a performance of Verdi's Requiem on Saturday evening. He has invited Martina Arroyo, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo - soprano, Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass, to be guest soloists. The Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus have been prepared for this performance by Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

For Sunday afternoon's concert Erich Leinsdorf has chosen an all Wagner program. The Prelude from Die Meistersinger, selections from Die Walkuere and Goetterdaemmerung make up the program for the last concert of the 1967 Berkshire Festival. Mr. Leinsdorf will have Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne as soloists.

The annual Tanglewood-on-Parade given for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center will be today and this evening, Thursday (August 17.) The Tanglewood grounds will open at 2 p.m. and beginning at 2:15 p.m. members of the Berkshire Music Center will give performances that will continue until 7:20 p.m. At 7:30 there will be a Gala Concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. The program for this concert includes a performance of Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture which will utilize the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center orchestras, cannon and salute guns and will conclude with a display of fireworks.

The Gala Concert will be telecast live and in color over the NBC television network.

The regular Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday morning (August 19) at 10:30.

CAPITAL CITY PRESS BUR.
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Tuesday, August 15, 1967

Boston Symphony's Final Week Set at Tanglewood

The final weekend concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be presented Friday, Saturday and Sunday at Tanglewood in the Berkshires, near Lenox, Mass.

* * *

The week also brings the annual Tanglewood on Parade benefit for the Berkshire Music Center on Thursday with the Tanglewood grounds opening at 2:15 p.m. and Berkshire Music Center events until 7:20 p.m. At 7:30 p.m. a gala concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

The program will include a performance of Tchaikovsky's "1812 Overture" which will utilize the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and the Berkshire Music Center orchestras, cannon and salute guns and will conclude with a display of fireworks.

The Friday Weekend Prelude program will be presented at 7 p.m. by the Boston Symphony Chamber Players. They will perform Wagner's "Siegfried Idyll" with Phyllis Curtin presenting songs of Verdi and Ives.

* * *

Gunther Schuler will conduct the Friday 9 p.m. program including Dvorak's "Othello Overture," Schubert's "Symphony number 8" and Ives's "Symphony number 4."

The Saturday 8 p.m. program, directed by Leinsdorf, will feature Verdi's "Requiem." Martina Arroyo, soprano; Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano; Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass, will be the guest soloists. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has prepared the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus for this performance.

* * *

The Sunday 2:30 p.m. program will feature an all-Wagner program conducted by Leinsdorf. It will include "The Prelude from 'Die Meistersinger' " selections from "Die Walkuere" and "Gotterdaemmerung." Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne will be th soloists.

The regular open rehearsal for th benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

Information or tickets may be obtained by writing Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SYRACUSE HERALD AMERICAN
Sunday, August 13, 1967

Berkshire's last week

Verdi's 'Requiem' will be featured Saturday

Several highlights of the 30th Berkshire Festival are incorporated into the eighth and final week of concerts. The weekend concerts will feature performances of Verdi's "Requiem" Saturday and an all-Wagner program next Sunday, Tanglewood-on-Parade Thursday and the closing concerts in the fourth festival of Contemporary American Music tomorrow and Tuesday.

On Friday evening at 9, Gunther Schuller will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program consisting of Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's Symphony No. 8 and Ives' Symphony No. 4. Schuller has been guest conductor with the Boston Orchestra for his programs that have included his own works.

MARILYN HORNE

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude at 7 featuring both the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, performing Wagner's "Sikfried Idyll," and Phyllis Curtin, performing songs of Veri and Ives.

On Saturday evening Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct a performance of Verdi's "Requiem." He has Martina Arroyo, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano, Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass, as guest soloists. The Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus have been prepared for this performance by Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

On next Sunday afternoon's concert Leinsdorf will conduct. The Prelude from "Die Meistersinger," selections from "Die Walkuere" and "Goetterdaemmerung" make up the program for the last concert of the Festival. Leinsdorf will have Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne as soloists.

TATIANA TROYANOS

The annual Tanglewood-on-Parade given for benefit of the Berkshire Music Center will begin Thursday with the grounds opening at 2 p.m. Fifteen minutes later, members of the Center will give performances that will continue until 7:20 p.m. At 7:30 there will be a gala concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Leinsdorf conducting. The program includes a performance of Tchiakovsky's "1812 Overture" which will utilize the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and Center orchestras, cannon and salute guns and will conclude with a display of fireworks.

The concert will be telecast live and in color over the NBC television netword.

The final two concerts in the fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music will be given on tomorrow at 8 p.m. and again Tuesday at 8. Tomorrow's concert is presented as a friends event. The Tuesday evening concert, a performance by the Columbia University Group for Contemporary Music, will be presented.

Friends of the Center are invited to two additional concerts during this last week. A concert of Baroque music will be performed on Wednesday evening at 8 p.m. and there will be a chamber music concert next Sunday morning at 10.

The open rehearsal for benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held Saturday morning at 10:30.

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 26,000
AUG 10 1967
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Set For Final Week Of Concerts

Several of the highlights of the thirtieth Berkshire Festival are incorporated into the eighth and final week of concerts. The weekend concerts will feature performances of Verdi's Requiem (Aug. 19) and an all Wagner program (Aug. 20), Tanglewood-on-Parade (Aug. 17) and the closing concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music (Aug. 14 and 15).

On Friday evening (Aug. 18, 9 p.m.) Gunther Schuller will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program consisting of Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's Symphony No. 8 and Ives' Symphony No. 4. Mr. Schuller has been guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on numerous occasions for programs that have included his own works.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude (Aug. 18, 7 p.m.). This week the Prelude will feature both the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, performing Wagner's Sigfried Idyll, and Phyllis Curtin, performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

On Saturday evening Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct a performance of Verdi's Requiem. He has invited Martina Arroyo, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano. Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass, to be guest soloists. The Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus have been prepared for this performance by Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

For Sunday afternoon's concert Erich Leinsdorf has chosen an all Wagner program. The Prelude from Die Meistersinger, selections from Die Walkuere and Goetterdaemmerung make up the program for the last concert of the 1967 Berkshire Festival. Mr. Leinsdorf will have Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne as soloists.

The annual Tanglewood-on-Parade given for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center will be on Thursday (Aug. 17). The Tanglewood grounds will open at 2 p.m. and beginning at 2:15 p.m. members of the Berkshire Music Center will give performances that will continue until 7:20 p.m. At 7:30 there will be a gala concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. The program for this concert includes a performance of Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture which will utilize the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center orchestras, cannon and salute guns and will conclude with a display of fireworks.

The gala concert will be telecast live and in color over the NBC television network.

Information on all Tanglewood events may be obtained by writing Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240.

SUNDAY REGISTER
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
CIRC. 119,550
AUG 13 1967
New England Newsclip

59

Final Week To Be Busy At Berkshire Festival

Several of the highlights of the thirtieth Berkshire Festival are incorporated into the eighth and final week of concerts. The weekend concerts will feature performances of Verdi's Requiem Saturday and an all Wagner program Sunday, Tanglewood-on-Parade Thursday and the closing concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music Monday and Tuesday.

On Friday evening Gunther Schuller will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program consisting of Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's Symphony No. 8 and Ives' Symphony No. 4. Mr. Schuller has been guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on numerous occasions for programs that have included his own works.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude. This week the Prelude will feature both the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, performing Wagner's Sigfried Idyll, and Phyllis Curtin, performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

On Saturday evening Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct a performance of Verdi's Requiem. He has invited Martina Arroyo, soprano, Tatiana Tryanos, mezzo-soprano, Miche Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagel lo, bass, to be guest soloists The Tanglewood Choir and th Berkshire Chorus have bee prepared for this performanc by Charles Wilson, assistan conductor of the Boston Sym phony Orchestra.

For Sunday afternoon's cor cert Erich Leinsdorf has chose an all Wagner program. Th Prelude from Die Meistersinge selections from Die Walkuer and Goetterdaemmerung mak up the program for the last cor cert of the 1967 Berkshire Festival. Mr. Leinsdorf will hav Ezio Flagello and Marily Horne as soloists.

The annual Tanglewood -on Parade given for the benefit o the Berkshire Music Center wil be on Thursday. The Tangle wood grounds will open at P.M. and beginning at 2:1 members of the Berkshire Mu sic Center will give performan ces that will continue until 7:20 At 7:30 there will be a Gal Concert by the Boston Sympho ny Orchestra, Erich Leinsdor conducting. The program fo this concert includes a perfor mance of Tchaikovsky's 181 Overture which will utilize the combined forces of the Bostor Symphony and Berkshire Music Center orchestras, cannon and salute guns and will conclude with a display of fireworks.

The Gala Concert will be telecast live and in color over the NBC television network.

The final two concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music will be given on Monday evening and Tuesday evening. The Monday concert is presented as a Friends event to which the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited. The Tuesday evening concert, a performance by the Columbia University Group for Contemporary Music, will be presented as part of the series of Berkshire Festival Chamber Music Concerts.

The Friends of the Berkshie Music Center are invited to two additional concerts during this last week of the Berkshire Festival. A concert of Baroque music will be performed on Wednesday evening and there will be a Chamber Music Concert on Sunday Morning.

The regular Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday morning at 10:30.

Information on all Tanglewood events may be obtained by writing Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240. (Teelphone 413-637-1600).

Poughkeepsie Journal
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
D. 34,306 SUN. 37,584
AUG 12 1967

30th Berkshire Festival To Conclude 1967 Season

Next weekend will mark the end of the eighth and final week of concerts of the 30th Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Highlighting the program will be a concert at 9 o'clock next Friday night. Gunther Schuller will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a performance including Dvorak's "Othello Overture," Schubert's Symphony No. 8 and Ives' Symphony No. 4.

This concert will be preceded at 7 o'clock by the Weekend Prelude which will feature both the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, performing Wagner's Sigfried Idyll, and Phyllis Curtin, performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

A performance of Verdi's Requiem will be done next Saturday night by Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony. Guest soloists will be Martina Arroyo, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano, Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass. Also appearing will be the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus, who were rehearsed by Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony.

An all-Wagner program is scheduled for next Sunday afternoon's program. The Prelude from Die Meistersinger, selections from Die Walkuere and Goetterdaemmerung will be included in this last concert for the '67 festival. Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne will be soloists.

Thursday's events include the annual Tanglewood-on-Parade, given for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center. Tanglewood grounds will open at 2 o'clock and at 2:15 o'clock members of the center will give performances continuing until 7:20 o'clock. At 7:30 o'clock Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony in a "Gala Concert," featuring Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture, in conjunction with the center orchestras. This program will be telecast.

Two final concerts of the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music will be given at 8 o'clock Monday night and at 8 o'clock Tuesday night. The Monday concert is a "Friends" event to which Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited. The Tuesday concert will feature the Columbia University Group for Contemporary Music and will be given as part of the series of Berkshire Festival Chamber Music Concerts. Two additional concerts, to which the "Friends of the Center" are invited, are set for 8 o'clock Wednesday night and 10 o'clock next Sunday morning. The Wednesday program features a concert of Baroque music and Sunday's is a chamber music concert.

The regular open rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony's Pension Fund will be at 10:30 o'clock next Saturday morning.

Tomorrow's concert features the Boston Symphony Orchestra with John Browning as guest soloist. Mr. Browning will perform the Prokoviev Piano Conto No. 1 and the Rachmanin- Rhapsody with the orchestra. o featured will be Mr. Leins- f conducting a performance Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet."

SUNDAY HERALD TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC 310,000
AUG 13 1967
New England Newsclip

Schuller Conducts BSO With Tanglewood Final

LENOX—Several of the highlights of the 30th Berkshire Festival are incorporated into this, the eighth and final week of concerts will feature performances of Verdi's Requiem Saturday and an all-Wagner program next Sunday, Tanglewood - on - Parade Thursday and the closing concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music tomorrow and Tuesday.

On Friday at 9 pm Gunther Schuller will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program consisting of Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's symphony No. 8 and Ives' Symphony No. 4.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude at 7. This week the Prelude will feature both the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, performing Wagner's Sigfried Idyll, and Phyllis Curtin, performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

On Saturday evening Erich Leinsdorf, will conduct a performance of Verdi's Requiem. Martina Arroyo, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano, Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass, will be guest soloists, with the Tanglewood Choir and Berkshire Chorus.

For Sunday afternoon's concert the Prelude from Die Meistersinger, selections from Die Walkuere and Goetterdaemmerung for this last concert of the 1967 Berkshire Festival.

The open rehearsal will be held on Saturday morning at 10:30.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SYRACUSE HERALD AMERICAN
Sunday, August 13, 1967

Berkshire's last week

Verdi's 'Requiem' will be featured Saturday

Several highlights of the 30th Berkshire Festival are incorporated into the eighth and final week of concerts. The weekend concerts will feature performances of Verdi's "Requiem" Saturday and an all-Wagner program next Sunday, Tanglewood-on-Parade Thursday and the closing concerts in the fourth festival of Contemporary American Music tomorrow and Tuesday.

On Friday evening at 9, Gunther Schuller will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program consisting of Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's Symphony No. 8 and Ives' Symphony No. 4. Schuller has been guest conductor with the Boston Orchestra for his programs that have included his own works.

MARILYN HORNE

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude at 7 featuring both the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, performing Wagner's "Sikfried Idyll," and Phyllis Curtin, performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

On Saturday evening Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct a performance of Verdi's "Requiem." He has Martina Arroyo, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano, Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass, as guest soloists. The Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus have been prepared for this performance by Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

On next Sunday afternoon's concert Leinsdorf will conduct. The Prelude from "Die Meistersinger," selections from "Die Walkuere" and "Goetterdaemmerung" make up the program for the last concert of the Festival. Leinsdorf will have Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne as soloists.

TATIANA TROYANOS

The annual Tanglewood-on-Parade given for benefit of the Berkshire Music Center will begin Thursday with the grounds opening at 2 p.m. Fifteen minutes later, members of the Center will give performances that will continue until 7:20 p.m. At 7:30 there will be a gala concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Leinsdorf conducting. The program includes a performance of Tchiakovsky's "1812 Overture" which will utilize the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and Center orchestras, cannon and salute guns and will conclude with a display of fireworks.

The concert will be telecast live and in color over the NBC television netword.

The final two concerts in the fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music will be given on tomorrow at 8 p.m. and again Tuesday at 8. Tomorrow's concert is presented as a friends event. The Tuesday evening concert, a performance by the Columbia University Group for Contemporary Music, will be presented.

Friends of the Center are invited to two additional concerts during this last week. A concert of Baroque music will be performed on Wednesday evening at 8 p.m. and there will be a chamber music concert next Sunday morning at 10.

The open rehearsal for benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held Saturday morning at 10:30.

THE JEWISH ADVOCATE, THURSDAY, AUGUST 10, 1967

Tanglewood Set For Final Week Of Concerts

Several of the highlights of the thirtieth Berkshire Festival are incorporated into the eighth and final week of concerts. The weekend concerts will feature performances of Verdi's Requiem (Aug. 19) and an all Wagner program (Aug. 20), Tanglewood-on-Parade (Aug. 17) and the closing concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music (Aug. 14 and 15).

On Friday evening (Aug. 18, 9 p.m.) Gunther Schuller will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program consisting of Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's Symphony No. 8 and Ives' Symphony No. 4. Mr. Schuller has been guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on numerous occasions for programs that have included his own works.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude (Aug. 18, 7 p.m.). This week the Prelude will feature both the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, performing Wagner's Sigfried Idyll, and Phyllis Curtin, performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

On Saturday evening Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct a performance of Verdi's Requiem. He has invited Martina Arroyo, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano. Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass, to be guest soloists. The Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus have been prepared for this performance by Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

For Sunday afternoon's concert Erich Leinsdorf has chosen an all Wagner program. The Prelude from Die Meistersinger, selections from Die Walkuere and Goetterdaemmerung make up the program for the last concert of the 1967 Berkshire Festival. Mr. Leinsdorf will have Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne as soloists.

The annual Tanglewood-on-Parade given for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center will be on Thursday (Aug. 17). The Tanglewood grounds will open at 2 p.m. and beginning at 2:15 p.m. members of the Berkshire Music Center will give performances that will continue until 7:20 p.m. At 7:30 there will be a gala concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. The program for this concert includes a performance of Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture which will utilize the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center orchestras, cannon and salute guns and will conclude with a display of fireworks.

The gala concert will be telecast live and in color over the NBC television network.

Information on all Tanglewood events may be obtained by writing Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240.

SUNDAY REGISTER
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
AUG 13 1967
New England Newsclip

59

Final Week To Be Busy At Berkshire Festival

Several of the highlights of the thirtieth Berkshire Festival are incorporated into the eighth and final week of concerts. The weekend concerts will feature performances of Verdi's Requiem Saturday and an all Wagner program Sunday, Tanglewood-on-Parade Thursday and the closing concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music Monday and Tuesday.

On Friday evening Gunther Schuller will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program consisting of Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's Symphony No. 8 and Ives' Symphony No. 4. Mr. Schuller has been guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on numerous occasions for programs that have included his own works.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude. This week the Prelude will feature both the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, performing Wagner's Sigfried Idyll, and Phyllis Curtin, performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

On Saturday evening Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct a performance of Verdi's Requiem. He has invited Martina Arroyo, soprano, Tatiana Tryanos, mezzo-soprano, Miche Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagel lo, bass, to be guest soloists The Tanglewood Choir and th Berkshire Chorus have bee prepared for this performanc by Charles Wilson, assistan conductor of the Boston Sym phony Orchestra.

For Sunday afternoon's cor cert Erich Leinsdorf has chose an all Wagner program. Th Prelude from Die Meistersinge selections from Die Walkuer and Goetterdaemmerung mak up the program for the last cor cert of the 1967 Berkshire Fes val. Mr. Leinsdorf will hav Ezio Flagello and Marily Horne as soloists.

The annual Tanglewood -on Parade given for the benefit o the Berkshire Music Center wil be on Thursday. The Tangle wood grounds will open at P.M. and beginning at 2:1 members of the Berkshire Mu sic Center will give performan ces that will continue until 7:20 At 7:30 there will be a Gal Concert by the Boston Sympho ny Orchestra, Erich Leinsdor conducting. The program fo this concert includes a perfor mance of Tchaikovsky's 181 Overture which will utilize th combined forces of the Bostor Symphony and Berkshire Music Center orchestras, cannon and salute guns and will conclude with a display of fireworks.

The Gala Concert will be telecast live and in color over the NBC television network.

The final two concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music will be given on Monday evening and Tuesday evening. The Monday concert is presented as a Friends event to which the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited. The Tuesday evening concert, a performance by the Columbia University Group for Contemporary Music, will be presented as part of the series of Berkshire Festival Chamber Music Concerts.

The Friends of the Berkshie Music Center are invited to two additional concerts during this last week of the Berkshire Festival. A concert of Baroque music will be performed on Wednesday evening and there will be a Chamber Music Concert on Sunday Morning.

The regular Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday morning at 10:30.

Information on all Tanglewood events may be obtained by writing Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240. (Teelphone 413-637-1600).

Poughkeepsie Journal
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
D. 34,306 SUN. 37,584
AUG 12 1967

30th Berkshire Festival To Conclude 1967 Season

Next weekend will mark the end of the eighth and final week of concerts of the 30th Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Highlighting the program will be a concert at 9 o'clock next Friday night. Gunther Schuller will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a performance including Dvorak's "Othello Overture," Schubert's Symphony No. 8 and Ives' Symphony No. 4.

This concert will be preceded at 7 o'clock by the Weekend Prelude which will feature both the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, performing Wagner's Sigfried Idyll, and Phyllis Curtin, performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

A performance of Verdi's Requiem will be done next Saturday night by Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony. Guest soloists will be Martina Arroyo, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano, Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass. Also appearing will be the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus, who were rehearsed by Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony.

An all-Wagner program is scheduled for next Sunday afternoon's program. The Prelude from Die Meistersinger, selections from Die Walkuere and Goetterdaemmerung will be included in this last concert for the '67 festival. Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne will be soloists.

Thursday's events include the annual Tanglewood-on-Parade, given for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center. Tanglewood grounds will open at 2 o'clock and at 2:15 o'clock members of the center will give performances continuing until 7:20 o'clock. At 7:30 o'clock Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony in a "Gala Concert," featuring Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture, in conjunction with the center orchestras. This program will be telecast.

Two final concerts of the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music will be given at 8 o'clock Monday night and at 8 o'clock Tuesday night. The Monday concert is a "Friends" event to which Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited. The Tuesday concert will feature the Columbia University Group for Contemporary Music and will be given as part of the series of Berkshire Festival Chamber Music Concerts. Two additional concerts, to which the "Friends of the Center" are invited, are set for 8 o'clock Wednesday night and 10 o'clock next Sunday morning. The Wednesday program features a concert of Baroque music and Sunday's is a chamber music concert.

The regular open rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony's Pension Fund will be at 10:30 o'clock next Saturday morning.

Tomorrow's concert features the Boston Symphony Orchestra with John Browning as guest soloist. Mr. Browning will perform the Prokoviev Piano Conto No. 1 and the Rachmanin- Rhapsody with the orchestra. o featured will be Mr. Leins- f conducting a performance Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet "

SUNDAY HERALD TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
AUG 13 1967
New England Newsclip

Schuller Conducts BSO With Tanglewood Final

LENOX—Several of the highlights of the 30th Berkshire Festival are incorporated into this, the eighth and final week of concerts will feature performances of Verdi's Requiem Saturday and an all-Wagner program next Sunday, Tanglewood - on - Parade Thursday and the closing concerts in the Fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music tomorrow and Tuesday.

On Friday at 9 pm Gunther Schuller will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program consisting of Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's symphony No. 8 and Ives' Symphony No. 4.

The Friday evening concert will be preceded by the traditional Weekend Prelude at 7. This week the Prelude will feature both the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, performing Wagner's Sigfried Idyll, and Phyllis Curtin, performing songs of Verdi and Ives.

On Saturday evening Erich Leinsdorf, will conduct a performance of Verdi's Requiem. Martina Arroyo, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano, Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass, will be guest soloists, with the Tanglewood Choir and Berkshire Chorus.

For Sunday afternoon's concert the Prelude from Die Meistersinger, selections from Die Walkuere and Goetterdaemmerung for this last concert of the 1967 Berkshire Festival.

The open rehearsal will be held on Saturday morning at 10:30.

60

EIGTH WEEK AUGUST 18, 19 & 20

CAPITAL BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Monday, August 21, 1967

Weather Dampens Closing Weekend at Tanglewood

COMBINED CHORUSES—The Berkshire Chorus, comprised of regional residents, and the Tanglewood Choir, made up of students at the Berkshire Music Center, joined forces for the third time this season Saturday night for a performance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Verdi's "Requiem." Erich Leinsdorf conducted.

BY JOAN SIMMONS
Times-Union Music Critic

The Boston Symphony Orchestra season at Tanglewood closed as it opened, with threatning rain.

Attendance all season has been far below average and rain kept the lawn crowds away even for the closing concerts which are usually jammed.

A good-sized lawn crowd was washed away about mid-way in Verdi's "Requiem" Saturday night. Needless to say the 6,000 shelter seats have been selling well with the season's average atendance running somewhere around that figure and the top figure being less than 8,000.

But the Berkshire Music Festival has weathered such catastrophes before. Its first season held in a tent which was ruined by a thunder storm during the final concert and everybody got wet.

The weekend and the summer concluded Sunday afternoon with Erich Leinsdorf conducting the orchestra in an all-Wagner program made up of the Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg," Act III of "Die Walkure" and excerpts from "Gotterdammerung." Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne were soloists in a program designed to sound like a special occasion.

Gunther Schuller opened the weekend on Friday night conducting the orchestra in Dvorak's "Othello" Overture, Schubert's "Unifinished Symphony" and Ives' Symphony No. 4.

Leinsdorf also conducted the orchestra and double chorus in the performance of Verdi's Requiem" on Saturday night.

The work, relatively short for concert length was done without intermission which would other wise have interrupted the long and integrated mass.

The Boston Symphony and both choruses were in full voice, but unfortunately barely carried beyond the confines of the shelter due to the humid weather.

Leinsdorf whipped all of his performers to high peaks of musical excitement in this works which catches the composer's natural genius for the tragic, this time the tragedy of death itself.

Soloists Martina Arroyo, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezo-soprano, tenor Michele Molese and bass Ezio Flagello were each fitting in their performance, with Flagello particularly outstanding.

The regular Tangelwood Choir made up of students at the Berkshire Music Center, was augmented by the Berkshire Chorus which is made up entirely of local residents. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the BSO, prepared both choruses. The result in combination is powerful and clear.

The choruses were combined for two other concerts during the season, Bach's B Minor Mass and a concert version of Beethoven's "Fidelio."

The real tragedy of Saturday night's program was that more people could not have enjoyed the performance.

SUNDAY TELEGRAM
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 107,550
AUG 20 1967
New England Newsclip

TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM (e)
HOLYOKE, MASS.
CIRC. 26,950
AUG 21 1967
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Final Weekend Included Rich Repertoire

The Berkshire Festival was concluded at Tanglewood in Lenox Sunday afternoon with a Wagner program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with director Erich Leinsdorf conducting. Around 20,000 people attended the three concerts of the final weekend, bringing the total attendance for the season to the 170,000 mark. This is remarkably good for a 24-concert season that was plagued with rain and threats of rain, with constant humidity in between.

Friday night there was a very mixed program conducted by the new president of the New England Conservatory of Music, Gunther Schuller. Me is also a well known composer, whose works were heard at Tanglewood during the contemporary music festival. The highlight Friday night was Charles Ives Symphony No. 4 — a modern piece full of dissonance and clashing rhythms. It made the audience nervous among other things; they laughed while applauding. Also on the program was Dvorak's "Othello" overture, and Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony. The evening prelude presented the Boston Symphony chamber players in a performance of Wagner's Siegfried Idyll, and a song recital by Phyllis Curtin.

On Saturday night Leinsdorf conducted the Boston Symphony and the Tanglewood Choir and Berkshire Chorus in a gorgeous performance of Verdi's Requiem. It thirlled the audience. The soloists were Martina Arroyo, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano, Michel Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass.

The Wagner program on Sunday afternoon was devoted to the great old operatic favorites: Prelude to "Die Meister singer"; excerpts from Act III of "Die Walkure": the Ride of Valkyries, Wotan's Farewell, and the Fire Music; seven Excerpts from "Gotterdammerung." The soloists were Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne.

Ives' Symphony Launches Final Weekend at Tanglewood

LENOX — The final weekend of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood got under way Friday night with a program tailored to suit the taste of a small, select audience.

Attendance was 4,636, an unusually low figure for Tanglewood.

The big item was Charles Ives' Symphony No. 4. It created quite a fuss when premiered in New York two years ago under three simultaneous conductors, one of which was Leopold Stokowski.

Friday night, the augmented Boston Symphony played it for all it was worth, to the obvious merriment of some players.

Conducted by Schuller

The conductor was Gunther Schuller, who is better known as one of the more progressive contemporary composers.

Schuller made revisions that enable the work to be performed with only one conductor, although concertmaster Joseph Silverstein used his bow to lead a segment of racket makers during a particularly frenzied sequence.

There were three pianos, organ, celeste, full cast of instruments and a few spares on elevated platforms.

One had a chance to listen to this piece according to Ives' expressed philosophy. The opening movement asks "What?" and "Why?" The remaining three movements presumably answer the questions.

Or, one could just relax, become involved with no questions or answers, and enjoy watching everyone work like mad to raise a storm of sound, generously stepped in cacophony.

In all four movements such tunes as "Turkey in the Straw," "Campton Races" and "Nearer, My God, to Thee" spring briefly into the light, and that was a diversion.

Schuller and the orchestra worked diligently as keeping all this in tow and dispensing it on cue. Even the heaviest downpours of dissonance were obviously ruled by dictation.

There was a small exodus at intermission, before the Ives, and it appeared that performances of Dvorak's "Othello" Overture and Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony were possible reasons.

The Schubert symphony has held up nicely since it was premiered 102 years ago. It is imbued with gorgeous melody and emotional vitality.

Its comparatively lifeless impression on Friday night was partly due to dawdling tempos. The rich, warm and famous theme in cellos bordered on a parody of sentimentality. Intended but extended ritards sounded a bit like lapses of memory. Both movements were long-drawn, dry and basically ineffectual.

It isn't anyones fault but Dvorak's that "Othello" falls short of importance as an overture. Schuller made his wishes known without flamboyance, exaggerated gesture, or visual impact.

He did approach the overture carefully, seeking melodic clarity, neat phrasing, and enhancing balances. The most that can be said is that the overture made modestly interesting music, and had the novelty of being conservative and unfamiliar.

There were a few high spots in the weekend prelude that preceded the main concert.

An exact instrumental replica of Wagner's "Siegfried Idyll" premiere (1870) was given by the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, strings, woodwinds, horn and trumpet.

The group gave it soft, cushiony sounds in which one was rarely aware of solo instruments. The winds blended as a contributing color rather than prominent feature.

Soprano Phyllis Curtin sang songs by Ives and Verdi. Ives' gracious, persuasive moods were best realized in "Mists," 'a glowing song of deep insight. The Verdi was feelingly sung.

The singer's most memorable results were achieved in her encore, Rahcmaninoff's "Vocalise."

Ryan Edwards was a splendid piano accompanist.

—R.M.

Rebellious Charles Ives Conquers at Tanglewood

By R. C. HAMMERICH
Union Music Critic

LENO X— The audience at Tanglewood was given a 33 minute taste Friday night of some of the spicier output of one of America's great musical rebels . . . Charles Ives.

Schuller Conducts

Ives was rebellious enough to make himself a miltionaire in the insurance business so that he could compose music entirely as he pleased and let the chips fall.

There were 4646 listeners Friday for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's presentation of his Symphony No. 4 conducted by Gunther Schuller.

It was first performed in 1965, conducted by Leopold Stokowski, 11 years after Ives' death. Schuller had conducted it in Berlin, London and last winter in Boston.

Organized Cacophony

It is a formidible piece of music, full of contrasting strains at seeming cross purposes. The first and third movements, although dissonant, are relatively mild. The second and fourth are very carefully organized cacophony.

Here are a couple of indications of the more extreme ingredients: There were three pianos, one of which had 20 notes tuned sharp by a quarter of a tone; at one point the conductor and the concertmaster were leading different sections of the orchestra at different tempos and rhythms; there were several times when several groups of instruments were playing different music in different keys, times, rhythms and intensities.

A few of the dozens of recognizable tunes that came popping up most entertainingly from massed trumpets were "Marching Through Georgia," "In the Sweet Bye and Bye," "Turkey in the Straw," and "Columbia the Gem of the Ocean."

When the apparent chaos of the second movement had finished its last cycle of sudden crescendos and faded out limply without coming to an orthodox finish, the audience sat in stunned silence for a moment; then it burst out laughing, and then it applauded joyously.

Approving Shouts

That the craziness of Ives combination of intense seriousness and "Big put-on" was received with shouts of approval might have come as a surprise to conservative music lovers; but at least one was seen with a giant grin at the symphony's close. Ives would have liked that.

The symphony is incredibly difficult to play. Whether any mistakes were made hardly anyone knows. Except, perhaps, the conductor. He's a man with an almost magical agility with this sort of complexity.

He led the orchestra with a lithe, swaying motion which made it seem as if more of the message was coming from his body than from his arms and hands.

Credentials Imposing

There were no extraneou movements, and his manne was one of intense concer tration on the sound.

His credentials for the jo of conducting the complexit of Ives are formidable.

As a performer he spent years in the pit at the Metro politan Opera playing a frenc horn. As educator he taugl at Yale and in New York co servatories and will start h first year this fall as presider of the New England Conserva tory of Music in Boston. Thi is his fifth year on the facult at Tanglewood.

As composer his work ha been performed all over th world, frequently under hi own baton. He is especiall known as conductor of avant garde works in New York and Tanglewood.

Conservative Treatment

As conductor of traditional works, however, he is less well known and there were conservative music lovers in the audience Friday who were anticipating with curiosity his treatment of Dvorak's "Othello" overture which opened the program and Schubert's misnamed "Unfinished" Symphony which also preceded intermission.

Both of those comfortable works were eminently smooth. Even as a musical experimentor, Schuller failed to play fast and loose with the old values. It might even be said that the music was overly conservative.

The Dvorak came out with its fully orchestrated, dark chords solidly fashioned as if they were made of oak, and Schubert's magnificant melodies floated with ease.

If anything, it might be said that the Schubert was a bit too slow. It was beautifully fashioned, nevertheless.

Players' Gentleness

The prelude program opened at 7 with a welcome appearance of the Boston Symphon Chamber Players. There wer 13 of them, 10 first-chair play ers plus three: two violins viola, cello, bass, flute, oboe two clarinets, bassoon, tw horns, trumpet.

They played Wagner's "Sieg fried Idyll," a lovely piece s gently conceived and writte that it is more like a lullab than a wake-up work, which i how it was heard one Christ mas morning by Wagner' wife, Cosima, for whom it wa written.

Usually it is heard playe by full orchestra, but the scor calls for 13 players. That i how it was played that firs morning and, now that I hav heard it that way, that is how like it.

The Boston Players treate it with respect and turned it sentimental shmaltziness int beauty.

Curtin Recital

The piece was followed by a short recital by Phyllis Curtin soprano.

She sang five caustic an comical songs by Charles Ive and four dramatic, almos operatic, songs by Verdi. Sh sang them with technica assurance and ringing autho ity.

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350

AUG 19 1967 New England Newsclip

SUNDAY REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 115,950

AUG 20 1967 New England Newsclip

Vocal Beauty at Tanglewood

BY R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — It was nearly impossible to feel sensible Saturday night immediately after the forces at Tanglewood finished performing one of music's great masterpieces, Verdi's Manzoni Requiem.

Erich Leinsdorf led the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the combined Tanglewood Choir and Berkshire Chorus and four soloists in a performance that was filled with beauty as well as brilliance.

There were moments, of course, when long memories could recall more effective notes or tones or chords or transitions, but to do so would only be quibbling.

The Tanglewood performance Saturday was of one piece, unified, cohesive, balanced, unflagging but unhurried, theatrical (as the composer intended) but unmarred by melodrama.

Leinsdorf conducted its 16 sections of solos, duets, trios, quartets and choruses without recourse to the printed score and virtually without break.

There was a pause after the opening requiem and kyrie to admit late comers and two short pauses after the lacrymosa and agnus dei. Otherwise the numbers ran directly into one another and the work was completed withoute intermission.

The soloists were Martina Arroyo, Soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano; Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass.

Their best moments came when they weren't called upon for great volume—when they were blending their voices in ensemble, as in the wonderful "Offertorium Domine Jesu" for instance.

Miss Arroyo's very high, low volume notes were perfectly placed; Miss Troyanos had a ner-contralto low register with ringing high tones, Molese's bright tenor became more and more mellow as the music progressed, and Flagello's bass was, as usual, dramatic and vigorous.

The high moment for the chorus happened early during the "Dies Irae" that followed the opening number.

It was a real rouser. Leinsdorf placed banks of trumpets outside the shed on each side, each with its own conductor, and while the chorus was booming at top volume, three, and possibly an unseen fourth bank of trumpets sent brilliant fanfares at each other in overlapping echoes.

Nothing that happened later was quite as theatrically dramatic. But there was plenty that was beautiful, to wit, the soprano mezzo-soprano, duet "Recorde," the soprano, mezzo-soprano, tenor trio, "Quid Sum Miser," the quartet and chorus, "Lacrymosa," the mezzo-soprano, tenor, bass trio, "Lux Aeterna," and the soprano and chorus, "Libera Me."

There were 7784 in the audience. Some, as usual, were running for the gates as the last chord floated across the lawn, but most stayed to applaud. They were clapping and shouting bravos for nearly 10 minutes.

This afternoon the 30th Berkshire Festival will end with an all-Wagner program excerpts from "Die Meistersinger," "Die Walkure" and "Gotterdammerung." Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne will be vocal soloists.

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 124,100

AUG 21 1967 New England Newsclip

Verdi's Requiem at Tanglewood

A Performance to Treasure

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Music Critic

VERDI'S REQUIEM, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, with Martina Arroyo, soprano; Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano; Michele Molese, tenor; Ezio Flagello, base; the Tanglewood Choir and Berkshire Chorus prepared by Charles Wilson, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Saturday evening at Tanglewood.

LENOX — If what the devout Christian imagines by Eternal Light is capable of translation into earthly matter at all, then I would suppose that the sound of Tatiana Troyanos singing Verdi's "Lux aeterna" is as close as we dare hope to come to such a thing.

That, for me, was the most exalted moment in the performance, Saturday, of the Requiem, the most intense confrontation with this deeply inspired work of Verdi's; many pages, though, were given on virtually that level of excellence—I would cite especially "Tuba mirum," "Quid sum miser," "Recordare," Lacrymosa," much of the Offertory, the "Agnus Dei"—and the performance as a whole, with the exception only of the scrambled dash through the "Sanctus," was a throughly listenable one.

Most performances of the Verdi Requiem, including Leinsdorf's recorded one, are not at all listenable really. The better ones, typically, offer a number of properly conceived and excitingly projected details, but at least as many disasters brought about by bad technique and, more often, by the absence of taste and brains.

In the Tanglewood performance, there was occasion for regret at the momentary failure of nerves that produced the confused "Sanctus," occasion also for longing for more fire in this place or more sensuous beauty in that, but one was never roused to fury at the sense of Verdi betrayed by stupidity or vanity. By a listenable performance of the Requiem, then, I mean something as rare as it is treasurable.

Leinsdorf's interpretation was generally well paced, though I cannot like his slow tempo, the traditional one, for the opening, too slow not only for itself but also in relation to the four appearances of the "Dies irae" music, which should go at the same speed.

It was for the most part successful as projection of large-scale form, and it was exemplary in respect to many usually neglected points of dynamics and phrasing, the accented yet sustained violin line at "dona eis Domine" in the "Requiem aeternam" being a beautiful example.

It was an energetic performance, too, though I remember the one at Tanglewood three years ago as having more fire. Two significant details, poor in 1964, but beautiful now: the bassoon accompaniment to "Quid sum miser," sensitively phrased by Sherman Walt instead of with the customary mindless staccato pop on the first note of each group of six; the flexible and natural choral declamation of "Libera me, Domine, de morte aeterna".

The choruses, though neither very large nor particularly rich in tone, sang with a clean and concentrated sound. Diction was excellent; that is, not only clear but colorful and expressive as well. Charles Wilson and M. Lewis Spratlan did a first-class job of training. Most of the orchestral playing was superb, and I recall with special gratitude the "Ingemisco," the Offertory, the shimmering violins and the gentle rainfall of woodwinds in "Lux aeterna," the shuddering behind "Tremens factus sum ego."

In the solo quartet, Troyanos stood out thanks to her strong and, in its upper register, thrillingly luminous voice, even more for her singing of the music. Given the voice itself, her grand sense of phrase and of style, and her arresting personal force as a performer, she is, in another 10 years or so, likely to be the Amneris and Eboli of our lifetimes.

Martina Arroyo and Troyanos together were the finest pair of female soloists I have heard in the Requiem at lease since Walter's performances with Milanov and Nikolaidi in 1961. Arroyo's dark and vibrant sound is extraordinarily exciting in itself, her use of the voice is assured, her taste and musicianship are on the highest level. By temperment, she seems ever so slightly cool, and other sopranos, including the otherwise less impressive Amara of three years ago, have conveyed the terror of "Libere me" more vividly.

Flagello, though his voice has lost its sumptuousness, sang with characteristically impressive musical feeling and power. Molese is a rather ordinary tenor with a dry voice and a straightforward way with the music. The treacherous unaccompanied passages for the soloists were sufficiently in tune to be unfailingly intelligible, which is rare, but they were not sufficiently limpid in sound to be beautiful as well.

Rebellious Charles Ives Conquers at Tanglewood

By R. C. HAMMERICH
Union Music Critic

LENO X— The audience at Tanglewood was given a 33 minute taste Friday night of some of the spicier output of one of America's great musical rebels . . . Charles Ives.

Schuller Conducts

Ives was rebellious enough to make himself a miltionaire in the insurance business so that he could compose music entirely as he pleased and let the chips fall.

There were 4646 listeners Friday for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's presentation of his Symphony No. 4 conducted by Gunther Schuller.

It was first performed in 1965, conducted by Leopold Stokowski, 11 years after Ives' death. Schuller had conducted it in Berlin, London and last winter in Boston.

Organized Cacophony

It is a formidible piece of music, full of contrasting strains at seeming cross purposes. The first and third movements, although dissonant, are relatively mild. The second and fourth are very carefully organized cacophony.

Here are a couple of indications of the more extreme ingredients: There were three pianos, one of which had 20 notes tuned sharp by a quarter of a tone; at one point the conductor and the concertmaster were leading different sections of the orchestra at different tempos and rhythms; there were several times when several groups of instruments were playing different music in different keys, times, rhythms and intensities.

A few of the dozens of recognizable tunes that came popping up most entertainingly from massed trumpets were "Marching Through Georgia," "In the Sweet Bye and Bye," "Turkey in the Straw," and "Columbia the Gem of the Ocean."

When the apparent chaos of the second movement had finished its last cycle of sudden crescendos and faded out limply without coming to an orthodox finish, the audience sat in stunned silence for a moment; then it burst out laughing, and then it applauded joyously.

Approving Shouts

That the craziness of Ives' combination of intense seriousness and "Big put-on" was received with shouts of approval might have come as a surprise to conservative music lovers; but at least one was seen with a giant grin at the symphony's close. Ives would have liked that.

The symphony is incredibly difficult to play. Whether any mistakes were made hardly anyone knows. Except, perhaps, the conductor. He's a man with an almost magical agility with this sort of complexity.

He led the orchestra with a lithe, swaying motion which made it seem as if more of the message was coming from his body than from his arms and hands.

Credentials Imposing

There were no extraneous movements, and his manner was one of intense concentration on the sound.

His credentials for the job of conducting the complexities of Ives are formidable.

As a performer he spent years in the pit at the Metropolitan Opera playing a French horn. As educator he taught at Yale and in New York conservatories and will start his first year this fall as president of the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston. This is his fifth year on the faculty at Tanglewood.

As composer his work has been performed all over the world, frequently under his own baton. He is especially known as conductor of avant garde works in New York and Tanglewood.

Conservative Treatment

As conductor of traditional works, however, he is less well known and there were conservative music lovers in the audience Friday who were anticipating with curiosity his treatment of Dvorak's "Othello" overture which opened the program and Schubert's misnamed "Unfinished" Symphony which also preceded intermission.

Both of those comfortable works were eminently smooth. Even as a musical experimentor, Schuller failed to play fast and loose with the old values. It might even be said that the music was overly conservative.

The Dvorak came out with its fully orchestrated, dark chords solidly fashioned as if they were made of oak, and Schubert's magnificant melodies floated with ease.

If anything, it might be said that the Schubert was a bit too slow. It was beautifully fashioned, nevertheless.

Players' Gentleness

The prelude program opened at 7 with a welcome appearance of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players. There were 13 of them. 10 first-chair players plus three: two violins, viola, cello, bass, flute, oboe, two clarinets, bassoon, two horns, trumpet.

They played Wagner's "Siegfried Idyll," a lovely piece so gently conceived and written that it is more like a lullaby than a wake-up work, which it is how it was heard one Christmas morning by Wagner's wife, Cosima, for whom it was written.

Usually it is heard played by full orchestra, but the score calls for 13 players. That is how it was played that first morning and, now that I have heard it that way, that is how I like it.

The Boston Players treated it with respect and turned its sentimental shmaltziness into beauty.

Curtin Recital

The piece was followed by a short recital by Phyllis Curtin, soprano.

She sang five caustic and comical songs by Charles Ives and four dramatic, almost operatic, songs by Verdi. She sang them with technical assurance and ringing authority.

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350

AUG 19 1967

New England Newsclip

SUNDAY REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 115,950

AUG 20 1967

New England Newsclip

Vocal Beauty at Tanglewood

BY R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — It was nearly impossible to feel sensible Saturday night immediately after the forces at Tanglewood finished performing one of music's great masterpieces, Verdi's Manzoni Requiem.

Erich Leinsdorf led the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the combined Tanglewood Choir and Berkshire Chorus and four soloists in a performance that was filled with beauty as well as brilliance.

There were moments, of course, when long memories could recall more effective notes or tones or chords or transitions, but to do so would only be quibbling.

The Tanglewood performance Saturday was of one piece, unified, cohesive, balanced, unflagging but unhurried, theatrical (as the composer intended) but unmarred by melodrama.

Leinsdorf conducted its 16 sections of solos, duets, trios, quartets and choruses without recourse to the printed score and virtually without break.

There was a pause after the opening requiem and kyrie to admit late comers and two short pauses after the lacrymosa and agnus dei. Otherwise the numbers ran directly into one another and the work was completed withoute intermission.

The soloists were Martina Arroyo, Soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano; Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, bass.

Their best moments came when they weren't called upon for great volume—when they were blending their voices in ensemble, as in the wonderful "Offertorium Domine Jesu" for instance.

Miss Arroyo's very high, low volume notes were perfectly placed; Miss Troyanos had a richer-contralto low register with ringing high tones. Molese's bright tenor became more and more mellow as the music progressed, and Flagello's bass was, as usual, dramatic and vigorous.

The high moment for the chorus happened early during the "Dies Irae" that followed the opening number.

It was a real rouser. Leinsdorf placed banks of trumpets outside the shed on each side, each with its own conductor, and while the chorus was booming at top volume, three, and possibly an unseen fourth bank of trumpets sent brilliant fanfares at each other in overlapping echoes.

Nothing that happened later was quite as theatrically dramatic. But there was plenty that was beautiful, to wit, the soprano mezzo-soprano, duet "Recorde," the soprano, mezzo-soprano, tenor trio, "Quid Sum Miser," the quartet and chorus, "Lacrymosa," the mezzo-soprano, tenor, bass trio, "Lux Aeterna," and the soprano and chorus, "Libera Me."

There were 7784 in the audience. Some, as usual, were running for the gates as the last chord floated across the lawn, but most stayed to applaud. They were clapping and shouting bravos for nearly 10 minutes.

This afternoon the 30th Berkshire Festival will end with an all-Wagner program excerpts from "Die Meistersinger," "Die Walkure" and "Gotterdammerung." Ezio Flagello and Marilyn Horne will be vocal soloists.

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS

AUG 21 1967

New England Newsclip

Verdi's Requiem at Tanglewood

A Performance to Treasure

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Music Critic

VERDI'S REQUIEM, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, with Martina Arroyo, soprano; Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano; Michele Molese, tenor; Ezio Flagello, base; the Tanglewood Choir and Berkshire Chorus prepared by Charles Wilson, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Saturday evening at Tanglewood.

LENOX — If what the devout Christian imagines by Eternal Light is capable of translation into earthly matter at all, then I would suppose that the sound of Tatiana Troyanos singing Verdi's "Lux aeterna" is as close as we dare hope to come to such a thing.

That, for me, was the most exalted moment in the performance, Saturday, of the Requiem, the most intense confrontation with this deeply inspired work of Verdi's; many pages, though, were given on virtually that level of excellence—I would cite especially "Tuba mirum," "Quid sum miser," "Recordare," Lacrymosa," much of the Offertory, the "Agnus Dei"—and the performance as a whole, with the exception only of the scrambled dash through the "Sanctus," was a throughly listenable one.

Most performances of the Verdi Requiem, including Leinsdorf's recorded one, are not at all listenable really. The better ones, typically, offer a number of properly conceived and excitingly projected details, but at least as many disasters brought about by bad technique and, more often, by the absence of taste and brains.

In the Tanglewood performance, there was occasion for regret at the momentary failure of nerves that produced the confused "Sanctus," occasion also for longing for more fire in this place or more sensuous beauty in that, but one was never roused to fury at the sense of Verdi betrayed by stupidity or vanity. By a listenable performance of the Requiem, then, I mean something as rare as it is treasurable.

Leinsdorf's interpretation was generally well paced, though I cannot like his slow tempo, the traditional one, for the opening, too slow not only for itself but also in relation to the four appearances of the "Dies irae" music, which should go at the same speed.

It was for the most part successful as projection of large-scale form, and it was exemplary in respect to many usually neglected points of dynamics and phrasing, the accented yet sustained violin line at "dona eis Domine" in the "Requiem aeternam" being a beautiful example.

It was an energetic performance, too, though I remember the one at Tanglewood three years ago as having more fire. Two significant details, poor in 1964, but beautiful now: the bassoon accompaniment to "Quid sum miser," sensitively phrased by Sherman Walt instead of with the customary mindless staccato pop on the first note of each group of six; the flexible and natural choral declamation of "Libera me, Domine, de morte aeterna".

The choruses, though neither very large nor particularly rich in tone, sang with a clean and concentrated sound. Diction was excellent; that is, not only clear but colorful and expressive as well. Charles Wilson and M. Lewis Spratlan did a first-class job of training. Most of the orchestral playing was superb, and I recall with special gratitude the "Ingemisco," the Offertory, the shimmering violins and the gentle rainfall of woodwinds in "Lux aeterna," the shuddering behind "Tremens factus sum ego."

In the solo quartet, Troyanos stood out thanks to her strong and, in its upper register, thrillingly luminous voice, even more for her singing of the music. Given the voice itself, her grand sense of phrase and of style, and her arresting personal force as a performer, she is, in another 10 years or so, likely to be the Amneris and Eboli of our lifetimes.

Martina Arroyo and Troyanos together were the finest pair of female soloists I have heard in the Requiem at lease since Walter's performances with Milanov and Nikolaidi in 1961. Arroyo's dark and vibrant sound is extraordinarily exciting in itself, her use of the voice is assured, her taste and musicianship are on the highest level. By temperment, she seems ever so slightly cool, and other sopranos, including the otherwise less impressive Amara of three years ago, have conveyed the terror of "Libere me" more vividly.

Flagello, though his voice has lost its sumptuousness, sang with characteristically impressive musical feeling and power. Molese is a rather ordinary tenor with a dry voice and a straightforward way with the music. The treacherous unaccompanied passages for the soloists were sufficiently in tune to be unfailingly intelligible, which is rare, but they were not sufficiently limpid in sound to be beautiful as well.

62

Verdi's 'Requiem' marks the summer's end at Tanglewood

By Clifford Barnes

Lenox, Mass.

Six American-born singers were featured this past weekend on the concluding programs of the 30th Berkshire Festival with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood. They all have had extensive experience in Europe, but they represent the best of what the United States produces in artists. The two women making their BSO debuts are counted among the great voices of our day: Marilyn Horne and Martina Arroyo.

Miss Arroyo was responsible with Mr. Leinsdorf for the most memorable moments in Saturday evening's performance of the Verdi Requiem. She was ideal for the part with its dramatic full power and delicately woven pianissimo. The problem lay in pairing this voice with that of Tatiana Troyanos, whose timbre was too nasal to blend with the soprano's flute-like tones. And Verdi wrote extensive duets for the two in this work.

Ives's Fourth

The quartet and the trio sections were fine. Michele Molese had a tendency to sound strained in his tenor solos. Ezio Flagello, bass, who has recorded this Requiem with Mr. Leinsdorf and the BSO, approaches the score with musical intelligence. None of the three soloists could match the beautiful tones that Miss Arroyo delivered in the "Offertorium" and "Libera me."

Mr. Leinsdorf stirred up a terrifying "Dies Irae" each time it appeared. And the trumpets did sound in stereo effect from the left and right outside of the Music Shed during the "Tuba mirum." The Tanglewood Choir and Berkshire Chorus were not up to all the conductor asked of them, but they sang with gusto. The orchestra responded easily to Mr. Leinsdorf in his operatic element with this theatrical setting of the sacred text.

Friday's Prelude Concert was given by the Boston Symphony Chamber Players with Wagner's "Siegfried Idyll," and Phyllis Curtin in songs by Ives and Verdi. These were the three composers who were to receive the most attention on the closing programs. Gunther Schuller repeated his conducting stint of single-handedly presenting the Ives Symphony No. 4.

With more space on the stage than at the Symphony Hall performance a few months ago, it was easier to see what was going on. The ensemble was larger, and there was special seating by sections and choirs. One of the three pianists frequently played a prepared piano with one hand and an ordinary piano with the other. First-chair cellist Martin Hoherman again proved his versatility by playing the celeste. A few weeks ago it was the saxophone.

Mr. Schuller really doesn't conduct the symphony all alone. There was discreet assistance from concertmaster Joseph Silverstein in the second movement, and from someone in the percussion section during the finale. Many in the audience were not prepared for the free-for-all July 4th in the Allegretto. The orchestra got as big a charge out of the fun as the audience. Friday's concert opened with Dvořák's "Othello" Overture, and Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony.

Wagner fireworks

The perfect Wagnerite was offered a feast at Sunday's concert. Mr. Leinsdorf kept the Prelude to "Die Meistersinger" moving at a brisk tempo until it built to an exciting climax. Then three excerpts from the third act of "Die Walküre" were played without pause. The conductor stood almost immobile during the "Ride of the Valkyries," letting it ride with only a few twitches of the baton.

Ezio Flagello brought a tenderness to Wotan's Farewell that was heightened by a well-balanced accompaniment. Still he was not ideal for the part. The Magic Fire Music began with a deliberate, moderate tempo. The fire was there, but the flames didn't leap very high.

The fireworks came after intermission when Marilyn Horne quietly walked on stage dressed in cool icy blue. Mr. Leinsdorf had chosen six excerpts from the "Götterdämmerung" to be played in one continuous movement. There had been a few shaky moments when the brass missed a cue in a bridge passage. Then the "Immolation Scene" began and a new Brünnhilde was born.

This heroine had womanly warmth added to her warrior nobility. She was stronger and more human because she had known Siegfried. Marilyn Horne, a mezzo-soprano noted for her extraordinary range and facile coloratura, successfully built a bridge toward a new career as a dramatic soprano.

Actually she only established on the East Coast what the West Coast already knows. This is one of the most versatile voices on the concert stage today.

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 192,400

AUG 21 1967

New England Newsclip

Tympanist's-eye view

For members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra the view of Tanglewood and conductor Erich Leinsdorf differs from that of the audience. The closing concerts were given this past weekend.

Verdi Requiem Concert Disappoints At Tanglewood

What was largely an undistinguished performance of Verdi's magnificent "Requiem Mass for four solo voices, chorus and orchestra" was presented Saturday evening at Tanglewood by Erich Leinsdorf, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the combined Tanglewood Choir and Berkshire Chorus, and what amounted to half a quartet.

The Mass itself is one of the supreme musical and dramatic statements in the literature, and the work demands extraordinary gifts on the part of its interpreters. The four soloists must have deluxe voices and a thorough mastery of the Verdi style; the chorus must be able to produce melting pianissimos, scarcely a whisper, and thunder over the full orchestra, the orchestra must be equal to virtuoso demands made on all its choirs, and, above all, the conductor must have a total grasp of the piece, so that the various sections receive their due, but all are subsumed into the gigantic whole. Unfortunately, only part of the requirements were met in every case, so that while the performance was acceptable, it was not really powerful or penetrating.

It was, finally, Leinsdorf at whose feet most of the lackluster and the absence of architectonic unity must be placed. The conductor has a tendency to sacrifice the whole for the sake of a piece or a part, and this tendency was at work in many sections of the "Requiem." The "Quid sum miser" is one case in point, for instead of offering a surcease from the tumultuous expressions preceding it, the trio was allowed to drag and become too expansive. Not only was it wrong for the music, it nullified the effectiveness of the "Rex Tremendae" following; and that section too was flawed. The score calls for an absolute piano in the final "Salva me" statement, building without regard to the climax; yet each "Salva me" was given its own little expansion, so that the sense of inevitability was completeness that the music suggests was finally missing.

There were some sections that worked in spite of general slow tempi and distension, of course, especially the opening statement of the Introit, the hair-raising "Tuba Mirum, the difficult and vigorous "Santus" and the miraculous drama of the "Libera me," but by and large the presentation was not entirely satisfactory.

Part of the difficulty was with the forces Leinsdorf had to work, for of the soloists, only Martina Arroyo had the necessary power and command of technique to do justice to her assignment. Miss Arroyo is obviously an important singer, perhaps the most important one presented at the festival this summer. The voice is large and lovely, with a blooming top and a nice edge to it, so that it rides the full orchestra with ease. Here pianissimos in the "Lacrymosa" section were thrillingly beautiful, and her high C's in the "Rex tremendae" were awesome in size and brilliance. It was largely due to her that the "Libera Me" section was the best part of the performance, for her superb singing seemed to give new fire to conductor, chorus and orchestra alike.

Tatiana Troyanos was fairly impressive in the "Liber scriptus" section, but from then on it was largely a downhill progression. She could not summon the power for the "Recordare," nor float tones in the "Lux Aeterna." Hers is a serviceable mezzo, but not the rich and full contralto that the score demands. Michele Molese was simply ineffectual, and Ezio Flagello, who had the requisite breadth of sound, seemed ill at ease about the whole thing. Perhaps it was the heat and humidity, for the soloists were squeezed into a small space in front of the chorus and behind the orchestra, so that they could not have had much breathing room--something both the singers and the work need, I might add.

The choral work was precise without being impressive, and the sound and the style seemed less secure for this performance than for either the Bach Mass or the "Fidelio," in which they also participated. Again, it may have been the heat--for the orchestra played in shirt sleeves, but the male members of the chorus wore jackets.

A work like the "Requiem" deserves the best, since it is such a great piece of music. Unfortunately, the best is not one or two soloists who can do it, a chorus that looks uncomfortable and sounds it, an orchestra that is both ragged and tired, and a conductor (however much he doesn't use a score) whose insight and perspective seems somehow limited.

It may be, of course, that the shed itself is finally unsatisfactory for performances calling for voices (solo or chorus); but it seems more likely that the forces were not shaped and coordinated into an effective unit as they must be to prevent the "Requiem" from becoming either tasteless or dull.

B.D.

HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE (e)
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
CIRC. 14,250

AUG 22 1967

New England Newsclip

PATRIOT-LEDGER (e)
QUINCY, MASS.
CIRC. 58,900
AUG 22 1967
New England Newschp

The Sound of Music

BSO's Double Tribute

By Peter M. Knapp

LENOX — Few left the music shed on the Tanglewood grounds after Saturday night's performance of Giuseppe Verdi's Requiem Mass. Long after the final "Libera Me, Domine" supplication, the audience of 7,784 stood and applauded an intense, vocally exciting performance.

Contributing to the unbroken drama of this mass for the dead were the decisions to omit an intermission and to leave the auditorium lights off. The mass was played as a single entity, thereby gaining in intensity. The practice of leaving the lights on to enable listeners to follow the text always is a distracting one, encouraging the attention to wander from the stage.

The performance led by Erich Leinsdorf crackled with emotional fervor through the combination of the Boston Symphony, the Tanglewood Choir, Berkshire Chorus and four exceptionally gifted soloists.

Leinsdorf's conception judiciously balances the reverential and operatic elements of Verdi's tribute to Alessandro Manzoni. His accompaniment of the solo portions is aggressive and independent — never mere mush. There might have been more emphatic rhythmic pulse, however, notably in the Offertorium.

Wilderness Voices

What made this performance soar, though, was the brilliant singing of the solo quartet: soprano Martina Arroyo, mezzo Tatiana Troyanos, tenor Michele Molese and bass Ezio Flagello. It is rare to have a group of soloists perform with such uniform distinction, balanced ensemble singing and consistently noble solo work. Leinsdorf deserves great credit for assembling this quartet. All four, one can note with some patriotic pride, are Americans.

The real treats came in the solos and duets of the two women. Singing of this caliber is scarce indeed. Miss Arroyo has a soprano like molten gold and enough power to be heard down in Stockbridge.

Miss Troyanos, young, dark, slim and attractive, is a real find. Her voice in contralto register is broad and sumptuous, with a suggestion of tears in it. Higher up, it takes on a pure, radiant quality. She sang with confident accuracy and with a fervent commitment to the import of the text. Even her colleague, bass Flagello, seemed astonished at Miss Troyanos' glorious clarity at the opening of the "Lux aeterna."

Though the soloists were placed at the rear of the orchestra, in front of the chorus, they had no problems in projecting, and the diction was generally excellent. Flagello, always a steady singer, was at his smooth best. Molese, somewhat cool and pressing at the start, warmed up to accomplish the Ingemisco solo successfully and to get off some beautifully-controlled trills in the "Hostias" section of the Offertorium.

Leinsdorf provided additional excitement for the "last trumpet" depiction in the awesome Dies Irae by placing trumpeters off-stage at various places outside the shed. The chorus, vastly improved this year under the guidance of Assistant Conductor Charles Wilson, sang effectively, with the exception of messy fugal entries in the Sanctus.

Summer Finale

An all-Wagner program on Sunday afternoon closed this summer's Berkshire Music Festival. An audience of 8,489 attended, bringing the total for the 24 Boston Symphony concerts to just over 170,000 this summer, about 12,000 less than last year — a drop principally attributed to the rainy weather.

TATIANA TROYANOS
. . . home in any range

Leinsdorf chose selections from three Wagnerian operas for the finale — the Prelude to "Die Meistersinger," the "Ride of the Valkyries," "Wotan's Farewell" and the "Magic Fire Music" from the last act of "Die Walkuere," and portions of "Goetterdaemmerung."

The appearance of Marilyn Horne raised the afternoon from the routine. She caused a sensation in the Immolation Scene from "Goetterdaemmerung."

Miss Horne refuses to be typed. She does everything from Rossini to Berg, and now Wagner, and in just about any female range. It may be a long way from the contralto coloratura frills of Rossini in which Miss Horne excels, to the dramatic soprano challenge of Bruennhilde, but she has the scope, the power and the finesse to do it with incredible smoothness.

One might say her diction was not the clearest, or that there might have been more consistent drama in her portrayal, but for sheer vocal beauty Miss Horne's performance was stunning. Here is one of the great voices of our time.

Lesser Of Two Roles

Bass Ezio Flagello had to work much harder in "Wotan's Farewell," and his singing had less impact than the night before. Though musically careful, it was vocalism with insufficient personality, more declamatory than sorrowful in his good-byes to Bruennhilde. An exception was the pathos Flagello mustered for the line, "So kuesst er die Gottheit von dir."

In the orchestral portions, Leinsdorf inclined toward expansive tempi with variable results. Sometimes his pacing resulted in the illumination of detail; at others, it seemed to lack much punch.

The "Goetterdaemmerung" interludes had the proper atmosphere of heavy foreboding, and the conclusion of the opera and of Siegfried's Funeral March were compelling enough. There were several instances of erratic instrumental playing and general untidiness, but Marilyn Horne compensated for these deficiencies.

JOURNAL
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,500
AUG 24 1967
New England Newschp

Tanglewood Is Reviewed

TANGLEWOOD, FRIDAY
By J. W. H.

Gunther Schuller beat time meticulously while the Boston Symphony read through Dvorak's Othello Overture, and the Schubert Symphony No. 8, ("Unfinished") on Friday night. Although the Boston's competence makes a bad performance virtually impossible, neither of these numbers was an inspiration.

Those who remained for the second half of the program, however, had a surprise in store for them. Mr. Schuller came alive and conducted a rousing performance of Connecticut's own Charles Ives' Fourth Symphony. Scored for everything the orchestra provides, including organ, piano and a large array of kitchen equipment, this symphony could hardly fail to be rousing.

On a first hearing, the activities of so many people gathered on the platform contributes to a sense of confusion in following the music. Nevertheless, Ives has provided islands of recognition in the seaurge of sound, by the use of many old familiar folk tunes and hymns. Even the first time the hearer has the feeling of having been there before.

In the Weekend Prelude Phyllis Curtin sang a group of ves songs richly, and a grou by Verdi. She is a fine and perceptive musician.

TANGLEWOOD, SATURDAY
By A. C. S.

It is interesting that Erich Leinsdorf should have chosen works by the two greatest opera composers of the nineteenth century to mark the close of this season at Tanglewood. It is even more interesting that the works deal, in part, with death; the death of a famous human and the deaths of legendary gods.

Saturday evening we heard the Verdi Requiem, in memory of Alessandro Manzoni, with a star-studded cast of soloists, all of them luminaries of the opera world. Martina Arroyo, soprano, has a splendid voice, large, well-rounded, and well suited to this type of music. Michele Molese, tenor, was equally satisfying. Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano, has a lovely voice, but at present is unable to compete in volume with the other members of the quartet (nor, I might add, did the conductor offer much help, even in the Liber scriptus.) Ezio Flagello completed the solo group. The chorus was excellent, made up partially of students at the Berkshire Music Center and partially by residents of the Berkshires.

If one is enthusiastic about the work, it was a first-rate performance.

TANGLEWOOD, SUNDAY
By A. C. S.

Sunday afternoon, it was Wagner's turn to illustrate how he felt about death. There were some detours, however. The concert opened with a hair-raising performance of the Prelude to Die Meistersinger. Then came Act III of Die Walkure, with Ezio Flagello singing the role of Wotan. Not only was Mr. Flagello's singing sympathetic to the character, but here is one of the handsomest bass sounds produced today.

Marilyn Horne drifted on stage toward the close of Siegfried's death (part of a compilation of various scenes from Gotterdammerung) to sing the Immolation Scene. We have read much of Miss Horne, but one must hear the perfection of the voice from top to bottom to truly appreciate it.

Flagello and Horne not-withstanding, the afternoon would never have been the triumph it was without the supreme control and electrifying musicianship of Erich Leinsdorf. There are times when one may quibble over his interpretations; when he and the BSO appear to say, "Oh, this piece again." But not today. From start to finish it was a magifificent communication of all the best that Wagner and the Boston Symphony can offer.

GAZETTE (e)
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 94,350
AUG 21 1967
New England Newschp

Tanglewood

Boston Symphony Concludes Festival

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — In 1936, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra first played in the Berkshires, it drew 15,000 to three concerts in a tent. The 30th Berkshire Festival, just concluded, had 170,000 at its 24 major concerts. This reduction of seven per cent from the 182,000 in 1966 was due to unusually rainy and threatening weather, and competition from Saratoga.

Gazette Review

The fact remains that Tanglewood serves the orchestra-loving public for eight weeks as against Saratoga's three (the earlier three weeks of the latter being devoted to ballet). The sound of the Boston ensemble continues to be marvelous, the conducting of Erich Leinsdorf a joy, and the programs a happy mixture of established favorites, little known works of famous composers, and the modern idiom.

Guest conductors and soloists this summer have for the most part, been excellent.

Yesterday's concluding concert, which drew 8,489 on an afternoon which occasionally spit rain, was a heartwarming experience. All-Wagner, it featured in turn Ezio Flagello, bass, and Marilyn Horne, soprano, stars of the world's great opera companies.

No less featured was the Boston "sound." It is hard to recall as glowing and substantial a performance of the Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg." Everyone knows this music. It is thus doubly hard to make it as fresh and alive as it was yesterday. The trombones and tuba in themselves deserve a paragraph of praise.

Excerpts from Act III of "Die Walkure" included The Ride of the Valkyries, Wotan's Farewell and The Magic Fire Music. The "Ride" seemed tame at its beginning after the preceding joyousness, but steady progress toward the big climaxes soon worked its spell. Flagello's voice was of fine timbre, and large enough to make its point without forcing the orchestra to hold back. The total effect was of great nobility.

Portions of "Gotterdammerung" brought persistent coughers in the audience during the quiet "Daybreak," eloquent orchestral work in "Siegfried's Rhine Journey" and other portions leading up to the immensities portraying Siegfried's death, and singing of the most chaste but thrilling sort from Miss Horne. Her lowest register was rich, phrases had great warmth in spite of their penetration, never shouted but masterfully sung.

SPRINGFIELD HERALD
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
BI-WEEKLY CIRC. 111,000
AUG 24 1967
New England Newschp

End of the Season at Tanglewood

A light rain signaled the last concert of the season at Tanglewood. Conductor Eric Leinsdorf received a resounding ovation for his interpretation of great Wagnerian Saga theses. Soloist Marian also received a great ovation. Then the orchestra members arose, shook hands with each other and carried their instruments from the shed. The harps were last to go . . . and so the season ended.

PAGE ONE

"The harps were last instruments taken from shed."

Last hurrah . . . in rain.

PATRIOT-LEDGER (e)
QUINCY, MASS.
CIRC. 58,900
AUG 22 1967
New England Newschp

The Sound of Music

BSO's Double Tribute

By Peter M. Knapp

LENOX — Few left the music shed on the Tanglewood grounds after Saturday night's performance of Giuseppe Verdi's Requiem Mass. Long after the final "Libera Me, Domine" supplication, the audience of 7,784 stood and applauded an intense, vocally exciting performance.

Contributing to the unbroken drama of this mass for the dead were the decisions to omit an intermission and to leave the auditorium lights off. The mass was played as a single entity, thereby gaining in intensity. The practice of leaving the lights on to enable listeners to follow the text always is a distracting one, encouraging the attention to wander from the stage.

The performance led by Erich Leinsdorf crackled with emotional fervor through the combination of the Boston Symphony, the Tanglewood Choir, Berkshire Chorus and four exceptionally gifted soloists.

Leinsdorf's conception judiciously balances the reverential and operatic elements of Verdi's tribute to Alessandro Manzoni. His accompaniment of the solo portions is aggressive and independent — never mere mush. There might have been more emphatic rhythmic pulse, however, notably in the Offertorium.

Wilderness Voices

What made this performance soar, though, was the brilliant singing of the solo quartet: soprano Martina Arroyo, mezzo Tatiana Troyanos, tenor Michele Molese and bass Ezio Flagello. It is rare to have a group of soloists perform with such uniform distinction, balanced ensemble singing and consistently noble solo work. Leinsdorf deserves great credit for assembling this quartet. All four, one can note with some patriotic pride, are Americans.

The real treats came in the solos and duets of the two women. Singing of this caliber is scarce indeed. Miss Arroyo has a soprano like molten gold and enough power to be heard down in Stockbridge.

Miss Troyanos, young, dark, slim and attractive, is a real find. Her voice in contralto register is broad and sumptuous, with a suggestion of tears in it. Higher up, it takes on a pure, radiant quality. She sang with confident accuracy and with a fervent commitment to the import of the text. Even her colleague, bass Flagello, seemed astonished at Miss Troyanos' glorious clarity at the opening of the "Lux aeterna."

Though the soloists were placed at the rear of the orchestra, in front of the chorus, they had no problems in projecting, and the diction was generally excellent. Flagello, always a steady singer, was at his smooth best. Molese, somewhat cool and pressing at the start, warmed up to accomplish the Ingemisco solo successfully and to get off some beautifully-controlled trills in the "Hostias" section of the Offertorium.

Leinsdorf provided additional excitement for the "last trumpet" depiction in the awesome Dies Irae by placing trumpeters off-stage at various places outside the shed. The chorus, vastly improved this year under the guidance of Assistant Conductor Charles Wilson, sang effectively, with the exception of messy fugal entries in the Sanctus.

Summer Finale

An all-Wagner program on Sunday afternoon closed this summer's Berkshire Music Festival. An audience of 8,489 attended, bringing the total for the 24 Boston Symphony concerts to just over 170,000 this summer, about 12,000 less than last year — a drop principally attributed to the rainy weather.

TATIANA TROYANOS
. . . home in any range

Leinsdorf chose selections from three Wagnerian operas for the finale — the Prelude to "Die Meistersinger," the "Ride of the Valkyries," "Wotan's Farewell" and the "Magic Fire Music" from the last act of "Die Walkuere," and portions of "Goetterdaemmerung."

The appearance of Marilyn Horne raised the afternoon from the routine. She caused a sensation in the Immolation Scene from "Goetterdaemmerung."

Miss Horne refuses to be typed. She does everything from Rossini to Berg, and now Wagner, and in just about any female range. It may be a long way from the contralto coloratura frills of Rossini in which Miss Horne excels, to the dramatic soprano challenge of Bruennhilde, but she has the scope, the power and the finesse to do it with incredible smoothness.

One might say her diction was not the clearest, or that there might have been more consistent drama in her portrayal, but for sheer vocal beauty Miss Horne's performance was stunning. Here is one of the great voices of our time.

Lesser Of Two Roles

Bass Ezio Flagello had to work much harder in "Wotan's Farewell," and his singing had less impact than the night before. Though musically careful, it was vocalism with insufficient personality, more declamatory than sorrowful in his good-byes to Bruennhilde. An exception was the pathos Flagello mustered for the line, "So kuesst er die Gottheit von dir."

In the orchestral portions, Leinsdorf inclined toward expansive tempi with variable results. Sometimes his pacing resulted in the illumination of detail; at others, it seemed to lack much punch.

The "Goetterdaemmerung" interludes had the proper atmosphere of heavy foreboding, and the conclusion of the opera and of Siegfried's Funeral March were compelling enough. There were several instances of erratic instrumental playing and general untidiness, but Marilyn Horne compensated for these deficiencies.

JOURNAL
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,500
AUG 24 1967
New England Newschp

Tanglewood Is Reviewed

TANGLEWOOD, FRIDAY
By J. W. H.

Gunther Schuller beat time meticulously while the Boston Symphony read through Dvorak's Othello Overture, and the Schubert Symphony No. 8, ("Unfinished") on Friday night. Although the Boston's competence makes a bad performance virtually impossible, neither of these numbers was an inspiration.

Those who remained for the second half of the program, however, had a surprise in store for them. Mr. Schuller came alive and conducted a rousing performance of Connecticut's own Charles Ives' Fourth Symphony. Scored for everything the orchestra provides, including organ, piano and a large array of kitchen equipment, this symphony could hardly fail to be rousing.

On a first hearing, the activities of so many people gathered on the platform contributes to a sense of confusion in following the music. Nevertheless, Ives has provided islands of recognition in the seaurge of sound, by the use of many old familiar folk tunes and hymns. Even the first time the hearer has the feeling of having been there before.

In the Weekend Prelude Phyllis Curtin sang a group of Ives songs richly, and a group by Verdi. She is a fine and perceptive musician.

TANGLEWOOD, SATURDAY
By A. C. S.

It is interesting that Erich Leinsdorf should have chosen works by the two greatest opera composers of the nineteenth century to mark the close of this season at Tanglewood. It is even more interesting that the works deal, in part, with death; the death of a famous human and the deaths of legendary gods.

Saturday evening we heard the Verdi Requiem, in memory of Alessandro Manzoni, with a star-studded cast of soloists, all of them luminaries of the opera world. Martina Arroyo, soprano, has a splendid voice, large, well-rounded, and well suited to this type of music. Michele Molese, tenor, was equally satisfying. Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano, has a lovely voice, but at present is unable to compete in volume with the other members of the quartet (nor, I might add, did the conductor offer much help, even in the Liber scriptus.) Ezio Flagello completed the solo group. The chorus was excellent, made up partially of students at the Berkshire Music Center and partially by residents of the Berkshires.

If one is enthusiastic about the work, it was a first-rate performance.

TANGLEWOOD, SUNDAY
By A. C. S.

Sunday afternoon, it was Wagner's turn to illustrate how he felt about death. There were some detours, however. The concert opened with a hair-raising performance of the Prelude to Die Meistersinger. Then came Act III of Die Walkure, with Ezio Flagello singing the role of Wotan. Not only was Mr. Flagello's singing sympathetic to the character, but here is one of the handsomest bass sounds produced today.

Marilyn Horne drifted on stage toward the close of Siegfried's death (part of a compilation of various scenes from Gotterdammerung) to sing the Immolation Scene. We have read much of Miss Horne, but one must hear the perfection of the voice from top to bottom to truly appreciate it.

Flagello and Horne not-withstanding, the afternoon would never have been the triumph it was without the supreme control and electrifying musicianship of Erich Leinsdorf. There are times when one may quibble over his interpretations; when he and the BSO appear to say, "Oh, this piece again." But not today. From start to finish it was a magifificent communication of all the best that Wagner and the Boston Symphony can offer.

GAZETTE (e)
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 94,350
AUG 21 1967
New England Newschp

Tanglewood

Boston Symphony Concludes Festival

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — In 1936, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra first played in the Berkshires, it drew 15,000 to three concerts in a tent. The 30th Berkshire Festival, just concluded, had 170,000 at its 24 major concerts. This reduction of seven per cent from the 182,000 in 1966 was due to unusually rainy and threatening weather, and competition from Saratoga.

Gazette Review

The fact remains that Tanglewood serves the orchestra-loving public for eight weeks as against Saratoga's three (the earlier three weeks of the latter being devoted to ballet). The sound of the Boston ensemble continues to be marvelous, the conducting of Erich Leinsdorf a joy, and the programs a happy mixture of established favorites, little known works of famous composers, and the modern idiom.

Guest conductors and soloists this summer have for the most part, been excellent.

Yesterday's concluding concert, which drew 8,489 on an afternoon which occasionally spit rain, was a heartwarming experience. All-Wagner, it featured in turn Ezio Flagello, bass, and Marilyn Horne, soprano, stars of the world's great opera companies.

No less featured was the Boston "sound." It is hard to recall as glowing and substantial a performance of the Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg." Everyone knows this music. It is thus doubly hard to make it as fresh and alive as it was yesterday. The trombones and tuba in themselves deserve a paragraph of praise.

Excerpts from Act III of "Die Walkure" included The Ride of the Valkyries, Wotan's Farewell and The Magic Fire Music. The "Ride" seemed tame at its beginning after the preceding joyousness, but steady progress toward the big climaxes soon worked its spell. Flagello's voice was of fine timbre, and large enough to make its point without forcing the orchestra to hold back. The total effect was of great nobility.

Portions of "Gotterdammerung" brought persistent coughers in the audience during the quiet "Daybreak," eloquent orchestral work in "Siegfried's Rhine Journey" and other portions leading up to the immensities portraying Siegfried's death, and singing of the most chaste but thrilling sort from Miss Horne. Her lowest register was rich, phrases had great warmth in spite of their penetration, never shouted but masterfully sung.

SPRINGFIELD HERALD
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
BI-WEEKLY CIRC. 111,000
AUG 24 1967
New England Newschp

End of the Season at Tanglewood

A light rain signaled the last concert of the season at Tanglewood. Conductor Eric Leinsdorf received a resounding ovation for his interpretation of great Wagnerian Saga theses. Soloist Marian also received a great ovation. Then the orchestra members arose, shook hands with each other and carried their instruments from the shed. The harps were last to go . . . and so the season ended.

PAGE ONE

"The harps were last instruments taken from shed."

Last hurrah . . . in rain.

64

TIMES (E)
HARTFORD, CONN.
CIRC. 133,800

AUG 21 1967 New England Newsclip

All-Wagner Program at Tanglewood

Erich Leinsdorf, whose reputation at the Metropolitan was made as conductor of the Wagnerian wing, devoted Tanglewood's final concert to the Master of Bayreuth.

In the last few years All-Wagner programs are few and far between and Sunday's musical agenda was indeed welcome. The soloists — Marilyn Horne and Ezio Flagello — were singers who have not heretofore been associated with the Wagnerian music-dramas.

* * *

Miss Horne, whose versatility seems to be boundless, was definitely the hit of the afternoon. In the Immolation Scene from "Die Goetterdammerung" she amazed more than one veteran concertgoer with the authority and musical intelligence she brought to this challenging excerpt.

If the voice itself is not of the heroic proportions of a Flagstad or even a Nilsson, it was used with such resourcefulness and control that her "debut" as a Wagnerian was an unqualified success. And Mr. Leinsdorf was considerate of the singer (I can still recall a famed Wagnerian singer being drowned out by the orchestra under one of Leinsdorf's predecessors.)

* * *

Ezio Flagello was the soloist in Wotan's Farewell (from "Die Walkure") and his huge voice was generally a match for the orchestral sound but he lacked the warmth and glow that a singer like Schorr or Tibbett brought to this music.

For the purely orchestral selections Leinsdorf chose the noble Prelude to "Die Meistersinger" and an amalgam of excerpts from "Die Goetterdammerung." These included Daybreak, Siegfried's Rhine Journey, the Act One and Three Preludes, Siegfried's Death, and the Immolation Scene.

* * *

The Boston orchestra was at its sonorous best in the "Meistersinger" Overture (although the brass had a tendency to overpower the string contingent). The "Gotterdammerung" excerpts were not up to the Boston's standards with some fluffed passages, which was probably an indication that everybody was a little tired at season's end.

Some 8,500 persons attended this final concert of the Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass.

STOWE

TELEGRAM (m)
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 62,350

AUG 21 1967 New England Newsclip

Music: Berkshire Music Festival Ended

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — The 30th Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood had many hits and a few misses during the past eight weeks, but it wound up in a blaze of glory over the weekend with memorable performances of Verdi and Wagner.

Saturday night it was Verdi's Manzoni Requiem. Yesterday afternoon, Leinsdorf conducted the Boston Symphony in an all-Wagner program, with soloists.

Attendance for the final week, including the Tanglewood-on-Parade Gala on Thursday night was 32,224.

The 24 regular concerts of this summer's festival had total attendance of just over 170,000. The two benefit performances totaled almost 22,000 (Boston Pops at Tanglewood, 14,000; Tanglewood-on-Parade, 7,800.

Last summer's 24 concerts attracted 182,000 persons. The Pops was the same, 14,000. Tanglewood-on-Parade, 7,000.

Among the reasons expressed for this decline in attendance are (1) a rainy summer, (2) competition from the Saratoga Festival which is 85 miles from Tanglewood, and (3) weakness in some of the programming.

Leinsdorf Specialty

Music of Wagner is clearly the Leinsdorf specialty. As at Saturday night's Verdi, he conducted the Wagner from memory. Combined, they constitute a remarkable feat.

The prelude to "Meistersinger" opened yesterday's program with large blocks of brassy sound in a festive, heroic vein.

Excerpts from "Walkure" were splashes of brilliant sound, culminated by a superlative reading of "Wotan's Farewell" by Met bass, Ezio Flagello. He achieved high drama with a big voice, wrapped in resonance, and perfectly attuned to the Wagner metier.

Highlight of the "Gotterdammerung" selections was Marilyn Horne's glowing voice and perceptive performance of the "Immolation Scene."

She stood erect, let her hands remain at her sides, evinced little facial emotion, and let the beautiful sounds pour out.

Verdi Mass

The Verdi Mass of Saturday night belongs on the engraved page of great performances of this summer's Tanglewood festival.

Leinsdorf not only performed the role of cue-giver, balance maker, tempo-setter and detailist, but was the main fount of inspiration.

HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE (e)
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
CIRC. 14,250

AUG 24 1967 New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Festival Bows Out With Wagner

The final weekend of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, opened and closed with the incomparable music of Wagner. Friday evening the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, by now well-known to concert goers here and abroad, played the Siegfried Idyll with beauty and warmth, embuing it with the tenderly personal aura, with which it had been composed. A private Christmas and birthday gift in the form of a serenade to his wife Cosima, Wagner never intended it for public performance, but because of financial difficulties it was reluctantly released. Cosima wrote in her diary: "My secret treasure is becoming private property; may the joy it will give mankind be commensurate with the sacrifice I am making." And it is indeed.

The renouned soprano Phyllis Curtin, expert on eighteenth century as well as avant-garde music, demonstrated her proclivity for 19th century music as well, with a charming group at times, lugubrious, too, of Verdi's songs, composed early in his career. To further show the range of her vocal talent and technique, her half of the Prelude started with five of Charles Ives' songs as varied as the moods in musical content, dreamily reminiscent, and again ruggedly forceful.

Gunther Schuller, chairman of the composition department at the Berkshire Music Center, and soon to fulfill his appointment as ninth President of the New England Conservatory, was guest conductor for the evening's regular program at 9:00. A first performance of one of a cycle of three Dvorak's Overture, "Othello," Op. 93, (it was first called "Love" by Dvorak), shows the composer's concept realized by a slow, peaceful introduction interrupted by a sharp sound of ominous portent, with the nature theme from his other overtures introduced in sharp harmonies, the theme of Jealousy permeating all, and leading to a tragic close.

Undistinguished but still impeccably performed was Schubert's Unfinished Symphony, lyrically lovely as always. Quite opposite was the Ives Symphony No. 4, also a premiere performance at Tanglewood, which has been familiarized through Stokowski's recording, and introduction of it in its entirety in New York, only two years ago. At that time. Stokowski used the two auxiliary conductors suggested by the composer, which evidently makes the difference between clarity and the hodgepodge Mr. Schuller inflicted on the public, who altered the score for the expediency of one director, as he conducted it. To most of the audience, unfamiliar with Stokowski's interpretation, the performance was greatly pleasing.

An all-Wagner program Sunday presented his Prelude to "Die Meistersinger," controlled and coordinated by Mr. Leinsdorf, who used no scor througout the concert.

The tremendously dark an agitated music of "Die Walkure's" third act again wa complete in every detail, bu lacking a reral fire that shoulc consume one's aural attention. Egio Flagello, in "Wotan's Farewell" delivered his score with resonance, outlined by the orchestra's tones, as is consistent for this muic, which were never very hushed. We'd like to hear him in a concert or opera hall, for the full effect of what must be a very powerful voice, which seems to become dissipated in various parts of the Big Shed, according to some listeners. A sort of dance step occurred when Leinsdorf and Mr. Flagello attempted to leave the stage, gracefully executed!

For the finale of the Festival and the concert, portions of the final drama of the Ring were chosen by Mr. Leinsdorf, edited by him also for brevity, which led to a hit of horn "no-play." It was quickly remedied, but one wonders why no one improvised, as the amateur orchestra players are wont to do. The horns were magnificent, however, both on stage and off (excellently coordinated) and quite as exciting tonally as they should be.

An imposing figure, though not tall, with a commanding presence, soprano Marilyn Horne gave full voice and dramatic stature to the Immolation Scene and Conclusion, with every section distinct and apart, rather than joined together as a whole. We heard few soft tones from the orchestra, they could have been tired. or Leinsdorf just doesn't call for them, but the music needs the widest dynamic changes, for the drama Wagner has orchestrated, and so it leaves one not quite satisfied. The lack of ecstatic essence which the players themselves, with or without the director can eject, was missing. We think Leinsdorf isn't our kind of classic romantic; the purity is sacrificed for impressive refinements. But we still admire Wagner in any display, and thank Mr. Leinsdorf for a fitting farewell, which 8489 music lovers braved a promise of rain to attend. — M. deB. B.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900

AUG 21 1967 New England Newsclip

Whitestone

FAREWELL TO THE SEASON is made by soprano Marilyn Horne and conductor Erich Leinsdorf yesterday afternoon at the conclusion of the Boston Symphony's final 1967 Tanglewood concert. Some 8,500 heard the all-Wagner program.

Our Weather and Saratoga Prune Tanglewood's Gate

Attendance at the 24 concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood this summer totaled 170,000, down 12,000 from 1966.

The 1966 total was 4,000 less than 1965. These drops in attendance have coincided with the advent of the Saratoga Performing Arts Center and the most miserable summer weather in several years.

The Boston Pops concert drew 14,000 this year, the same as last, and Tanglewood on Parade had an audience of 7,800, up 800 from last year.

This was the 86th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which played a total 212 concerts in its winter and summer programs.

Eight Leaving

The Berkshire Music Center had 350 students this summer from throughout the United States, Canada and several foreign countries. And for the second consecutive year Boston University and the New England Conservatory of Music offered courses for credit in conjunction with the Center.

Five members of the BSO retired with the last note of the Wagnerian concert yesterday afternoon. They are Albert Bernard, Jean Cauhape, violists; Minot Beale, violinist; Henry Freeman and Irving Frankel, bass.

Three other players are also leaving the orchestra. Violinist Giora Bernstein will teach at Pomona College in California; Richard Kapuscinski, cellist, will teach at Oberlin College. Richard Sher, at 19 the BSO's youngest member, will become principal cellist of the St. Louis Symphony.

NEWS (e)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 98,600

AUG 21 1967 New England

Tanglewood Closes 30th Season

A program of Wagner wrapped up a week end of beautiful vocal concertizing and drew the final curtain on Tanglewood's 30th summer in fine style.

Putting an audience of more than 7000 rain-conscious optimists into a ceremonial mood with the Prelude to "Die Meistersinger," Erich Leinsdorf gave the old favorite a majestic punch that it somehow lacks with any lesser orchestra than the Boston Symphony.

With the thunder and lightning of Wagnerian mythology giving form and substance to the musical themes the entire audience was carried on a Valkyrie-like ride through the all-to-often underestimated music of the great German composer.

Singing in a basso profundo voice that matched Wotan's own, Metropolitan Opera bass Ezio Flagello used his talent as Kreisler used a Stradivarius.

In Wotan's Farewell from "Die Walkure," he moved the aria to fit a variety of emotional and oratorical necessities. The sad intervals; the mighty statements and the sustained majesty of the role was rivaled only by the brilliant underplay by the orchestra and its conductor.

Without a doubt the most beautiful Brunhilde ever to set foot on stage, Marilyn Horne was an artist that at least contributed physical as well as vocal believability to the role. Her interpretation of the transformed Valkyrie in "Gotterdammerung" was astounding.

Armed with a range to be envied by most, Miss Horne gave a value to Wagner that surpassed even that composer's demanding sense of artistic quality. Never was the Immolation Scene performed with such a sense of joy and willing sacrifice.

Wagner can be a terrible bore. If it is done even a bit poorly it can be a terrible tragedy. Neither artist nor orchestra allowed this to happen as the magic of Marilyn Horne's voice transfixed and transported the audience into the realms of German folklore.

The woman was no less than amazing. Her bearing and deportment left little doubt that her confidence and her talent were based on a love of what she was doing.

A steady rain fell on the tenacious crowd covering the lawns. Mesmerized by a performance few had ever dreamed would be delivered, the audience responded to the final notes as a single voice. The cheers did not start to diminish until at least 10 curtain calls were satisfied.

It was a delightful manner with which to end the 30th season at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, deep in the Berkshires.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

Albany Knickerbocker News
Monday, August 21, 1967

Tanglewood Ends Its Season in a Blaze of Glory

By EDWARD FRENCH

The program at Tanglewood for Saturday night consisted of one work, Giuseppe Verdi's Requiem Mass for Four solo voices, Chorus and Orchestra, composed in memory of Allessandro Manzoni, a celbrated author and patroit. NE

First let us say that Erich Leinsdorf, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the combined Tanglewood and Berkshire choirs and the four outstanding soloists, Marina Arroyo, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano, Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, Bass, joined forces to present one of the outstanding musical events of this, or any other season.

THOSE fortunate enough to be there, and the huge shed was filled with many more on the lawn, heard a stunning performance of this dramatic work.

This "Manzoni Requiem" seldom observes the sobriety of ecclesiastical music tradition, and contains little of contrapuntal austeriety. The music is frankly theatrical at times, but for all of Verdi's vivid pictorialism, his power of dramatic assault, his El Greco vision of the "Last Trump" and the terrible awakening of the dead, every phrase is musically directed in proportion to the next. In short a marvelously composed score.

As to performance, we are not likely to hear its equal for many a month. For once, the soloists all possessed the true "Verdi Voice" which means vocal organs of great range, richness, flexibility, and a beautiful legato.

WORTHY of special mention were the duets so exquisitely sung by Martina Arroyo, soprano, and Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano; Miss Arroyo having a real golden quality to her voice, and Miss Troyanos a rich silken texture to hers. The resulting blend was all that anyone could wish for Ezio Flagello has one of the most flexible and beautiful bass voices we have heard. Michele Molese has the true Italian tenor quality that rings through the auditorium in the forte passages.

The chorus which is equal to the soloists in importance in this work had a fine balance and beautiful tonal quality due in no small part to the painstaking care, devotion and skill of Charles Wilson who was in charge of the choral preparation.

The prime factor in the overall triumph of Saturday night's performance was the skill with which Mr. Leinsdorf controlled soloists, chorus and orchestra, His knowledge of vocal problems enabled his to give a most sympathetic and moving accompaniment to the soloists, the orchestra being vital, but never overpowering the singers.

AT THE conclusion of the Requiem, there was a fifteen-minute standing ovation given conductor, soloists, chorus, and orchestra for their overwhelming presentation of this great music.

At the Concert

On Sunday afternoon, this season's Tanglewood concerts came to a festive conclusion with an all-Wagner program.

The afternoon began with a stirring performance of the Prelude to "die Meistersingers." This was followed by excerpts from the third act of "die Walkure" which included the "Ride of the Valkyries" and "Wotans Farewell and Magic Fire Music," the "Wotan's Farewell" sung by Ezio Flagello whose voice had a clarion quality enabling it to rise above the orchestra without being forced.

AFTER intermission we heard excerpts from "Gotterdamerung" which included "Daybreak" Siegfried's Rhine Journey" "Prelude to Act II", "Siegfried's Death' and closing with "Brunhildes Immolation Scene" with Marilyn Horne as soloist.

Miss Horne proved to be an ideal choice for this music. She has a brilliant youthful voice of extra-ordinary range, always projected with intelligence, emotion and perfect dynamic control.

This was a weekend of some of the finest singing this listener has ever heard, a feast of vocal opulence through and throught.

Despite the threatening weather, more than 20,000 persons attended the three weekend concerts.

AMERICAN (e)
WATERBURY, CONN.
CIRC. 41,850

AUG 24 1967 New England Newsclip

SUN (e)
HUDSON, MASS.
CIRC. 5,700

AUG 23 1967 New England Newsclip

65

Signe's Speculum

By SIGNE DAYHOFF

The ride, Sunday, to Tanglewood was scenic although the sun obstinately stayed behind heavy clouds the entire two and one-half hour trip.

Our tickets were for the Wagner Concert which promised to be good and so we were not dismayed or dissuaded by the possibility of rain. The car parked on the sharply sloping hill, we trudged through the grass to the Lion Gate, one of the many entrances to Berkshire Festival Concert area.

Surrounded by a well-kept lawn lay the music shed, an enormous cement shell supported in front by columns. Under this the stage and a large portion of the audience are situated. However, listeners need not be confined to the patterned arrangement. They can loll on the grass with blankets or chairs and en joy the music in complete relaxation. Special acoustical materials make the music easily and clearly heard by all who attend. Sunday the crowds overflowed the shell onto the lawn, radiating 40 feet.

At 2:30 p.m., Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony began the Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg." This is humorous treatment of early guilds in Nurnberg, Germany. Singing contests to determine the "mastersingers" were important to the people. The music shows simple folk-style in force and placidity. One feels the attempted majesty of the people. Without the story, the music is sweeping, melodic, and a delight to the romantic ear.

Next were three pieces from another opera. "Die Walkure." In the Ride of the Valkyries, nine warrior maidens, daughters of Wotan, are assembling on a mountain summit. They arrive one by one, fully armed on winged horses, carrying, each across her saddle, the body of a slain hero whom she is bearing to Valhalla, hall of the gods. Musical storm clouds race across the sky, pierced by flashes of lightning. As those who have arrived call out to their missing sisters, the air is filled with eerie cries. The scene is tense, vivid, powerful, and masterly done.

In Wotan's Farewell, the god is angry with Brunhilda, his daughter, for having opposed divine authority and protected the unsanctified union of a hero and his love. He strips her of her godly attributes, to be left defenseless before the first mortal who claims her as a bride.

Bass soloist, Ezio Flagello, sang the part of the wrathful father who softens somewhat under the appeal of his now dominated daughter. His resonant interpretation portrayed his heart's crying out against what he must do. Following the aria comes the Magic Fire Music. To make certain that his favorite child will be chosen by a hero only, the god surrounds the sleeping girl with a ring of fire. One hears Fate moving darkly in the background against the flicker of the flames. The three drew tremendous applause.

The last entry in the program was of several musical moods from operas "Siegfried" and "Gotterdammerung." The presentations were lauded but it was not until the Immolation Scene from "Gotterdammerung" (Dusk of the Gods) that the audience went absolutely wild. Miss Marilyn Horne, soprano, sang this difficult aria in which Brunhilda emotionally reviews the world history of nymphs, giants, heroes, and mortals. As the last note of music was sounded, the shell was nearly shattered with the eruption of applause and barvos. Again and again Miss Horne was called back to the stage to receive standing ovations. The emotion of the music and the magnificance of the performance left the audience still applauring after the fifth call, even after the orchestra began to disperse.

It poured as we drove from the music shed but no one really seemed to care. Each was too busy recalling the thrilling, emotional, and universal music of Richard Wagner.

Berkshire Festival's Season Ends

In 1936 when the Boston Symphony Orchestra first performed in the Berkshires, it gave three concerts in a large tent before audiences totaling 15,000. In spite of a rainy summer, attendance for the 24 Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in 1967 was just over 170,000.

This summer the Boston Symphony concluded its 86th season with the final Berkshire Festival concert last Sunday afternoon. The 6,000 seat shed at Tanglewood which is the summer home of the Boston, was the scene of 24 concerts, six programs of chamber music, eight open rehearsals, two benefit concerts, and 24 performances by members of the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood's summer institute for musicians. These student performances included six programs which comprised the fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music.

This season brought such noted guest conductors to the podium, as Antonio Janigro, Rafael Kubelik, Jorge Mester, Seiji Ozwa, Gunther Schuller, and William Steinberg. The second and third weeks of the Festival were devoted to programs of Mozart, Vivaldi, and Bach, and works of Beethoven, Prokofiev, Brahms, Mendelssohn, Wagner, Schubert, Tchaikovsky, Bartok, Berlioz, Borodin, Colgrass, Dvorak, Franck, Glinka, Greig, Haydn, Ives, Ligeti, Martinu, Moussorgsky, Poulenc, Rachmaninoff, Rimsky-Korsakov, Schuller, Schumann, Sibelius, Smetna, Strauss, Stravinsky, Takemitsu, Verdi, and Webern were featured in concert to create a diversified and interesting season.

NEWS (e)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIR. 56,600
AUG 21 1967 New England

Tanglewood Closes 30th Season

A program of Wagner wrapped up a week end of beautiful vocal concertizing and drew the final curtain on Tanglewood's 30th summer in fine style.

Putting an audience of more than 7000 rain-conscious optimists into a ceremonial mood with the Prelude to "Die Meistersinger," Erich Leinsdorf gave the old favorite a majestic punch that it somehow lacks with any lesser orchestra than the Boston Symphony.

With the thunder and lightning of Wagnerian mythology giving form and substance to the musical themes the entire audience was carried on a Valkyrie-like ride through the all-to-often underestimated music of the great German composer.

Singing in a basso profundo voice that matched Wotan's own, Metropolitan Opera bass Ezio Flagello used his talent as Kreisler used a Stradivarius.

In Wotan's Farewell from "Die Walkure," he moved the aria to fit a variety of emotional and oratorical necessities. The sad intervals; the mighty statements and the sustained majesty of the role was rivaled only by the brilliant underplay by the orchestra and its conductor.

Without a doubt the most beautiful Brunhilde ever to set foot on stage, Marilyn Horne was an artist that at least contributed physical as well as vocal believability to the role. Her interpretation of the transformed Valkyrie in "Gotterdammerung" was astounding.

Armed with a range to be envied by most, Miss Horne gave a value to Wagner that surpassed even that composer's demanding sense of artistic quality. Never was the Immolation Scene performed with such a sense of joy and willing sacrifice.

Wagner can be a terrible bore. If it is done even a bit poorly it can be a terrible tragedy. Neither artist nor orchestra allowed this to happen as the magic of Marilyn Horne's voice transfixed and transported the audience into the realms of German folklore.

The woman was no less than amazing. Her bearing and deportment left little doubt that her confidence and her talent were based on a love of what she was doing.

A steady rain fell on the tenacious crowd covering the lawns. Mesmerized by a performance few had ever dreamed would be delivered, the audience responded to the final notes as a single voice. The cheers did not start to diminish until at least 10 curtain calls were satisfied.

It was a delightful manner with which to end the 30th season at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, deep in the Berkshires.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

Albany Knickerbocker News
Monday, August 21, 1967

SUN (e)
HUDSON, MASS.
CIRC. 5,700
AUG 23 1967 New England Newsclip

Signe's Speculum

By SIGNE DAYHOFF

The ride, Sunday, to Tanglewood was scenic although the sun obstinately stayed behind heavy clouds the entire two and one-half hour trip.

Our tickets were for the Wagner Concert which promised to be good and so we were not dismayed or dissuaded by the possibility of rain. The car parked on the sharply sloping hill, we trudged through the grass to the Lion Gate, one of the many entrances to Berkshire Festival Concert area.

Surrounded by a well-kept lawn lay the music shed, an enormous cement shell supported in front by columns. Under this the stage and a large portion of the audience are situated. However, listeners need not be confined to the patterned arrangement. They can loll on the grass with blankets or chairs and enjoy the music in complete relaxation. Special acoustical materials make the music easily and clearly heard by all who attend. Sunday the crowds overflowed the shell onto the lawn, radiating 40 feet.

At 2:30 p.m., Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony began the Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg." This is humorous treatment of early guilds in Nurnberg, Germany. Singing contests to determine the "mastersingers" were important to the people. The music shows simple folk-style in force and placidity. One feels the attempted majesty of the people. Without the story, the music is sweeping, melodic, and a delight to the romantic ear.

Next were three pieces from another opera. "Die Walkure." In the Ride of the Valkyries, nine warrior maidens, daughters of Wotan, are assembling on a mountain summit. They arrive one by one, fully armed on winged horses, carrying, each across her saddle, the body of a slain hero whom she is bearing to Valhalla, hall of the gods. Musical storm clouds race across the sky, pierced by flashes of lightning. As those who have arrived call out to their missing sisters, the air is filled with eerie cries. The scene is tense, vivid, powerful, and masterly done.

In Wotan's Farewell, the god is angry with Brunhilda, his daughter, for having opposed divine authority and protected the unsanctified union of a hero and his love. He strips her of her godly attributes, to be left defenseless before the first mortal who claims her as a bride.

Bass soloist, Ezio Flagello, sang the part of the wrathful father who softens somewhat under the appeal of his now dominated daughter. His resonant interpretation portrayed his heart's crying out against what he must do. Following the aria comes the Magic Fire Music. To make certain that his favorite child will be chosen by a hero only, the god surrounds the sleeping girl with a ring of fire. One hears Fate moving darkly in the background against the flicker of the flames. The three drew tremendous applause.

The last entry in the program was of several musical moods from operas "Siegfried" and "Gotterdammerung." The presentations were lauded but it was not until the Immolation Scene from "Gotterdammerung" (Dusk of the Gods) that the audience went absolutely wild. Miss Marilyn Horne, soprano, sang this difficult aria in which Brunhilda emotionally reviews the world history of nymphs, giants, heroes, and mortals. As the last note of music was sounded, the shell was nearly shattered with the eruption of applause and barvos. Again and again Miss Horne was called back to the stage to receive standing ovations. The emotion of the music and the magnificance of the performance left the audience still applauring after the fifth call, even after the orchestra began to disperse.

It poured as we drove from the music shed but no one really seemed to care. Each was too busy recalling the thrilling, emotional, and universal music of Richard Wagner.

Berkshire Festival's Season Ends

In 1936 when the Boston Symphony Orchestra first performed in the Berkshires, it gave three concerts in a large tent before audiences totaling 15,000. In spite of a rainy summer, attendance for the 24 Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in 1967 was just over 170,000.

This summer the Boston Symphony concluded its 86th season with the final Berkshire Festival concert last Sunday afternoon. The 6,000 seat shed at Tanglewood which is the summer home of the Boston, was the scene of 24 concerts, six programs of chamber music, eight open rehearsals, two benefit concerts, and 24 performances by members of the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood's summer institute for musicians. These student performances included six programs which comprised the fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music.

This season brought such noted guest conductors to the podium, as Antonio Janigro, Rafael Kubelik, Jorge Mester, Seiji Ozwa, Gunther Schuller, and William Steinberg. The second and third weeks of the Festival were devoted to programs of Mozart, Vivaldi, and Bach, and works of Beethoven, Prokofiev Brahms, Mendelssohn, Wagner, Schubert, Tchaikovsky, Bartok, Berlioz, Borodin, Colgrass, Dvorak, Franck, Glinka, Greig, Haydn, Ives, Ligeti, Martinu, Moussorgsky, Poulenc, Rachmaninoff, Rimsky-Korsakov, Schuller, Schumann, Sibelius, Smetna, Strauss, Stravinsky, Takemitsu, Verdi, and Webern were featured in concert to create a diversified and interesting season.

Tanglewood Ends Its Season in a Blaze of Glory

By EDWARD FRENCH

The program at Tanglewood for Saturday night consisted of one work, Giuseppe Verdi's Requiem Mass for Four solo voices, Chorus and Orchestra, composed in memory of Allessandro Manzoni, a celbrated author and patroit. NE

First let us say that Erich Leinsdorf, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the combined Tanglewood and Berkshire choirs and the four outstanding soloists, Marina Arroyo, soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano, Michele Molese, tenor, and Ezio Flagello, Bass, joined forces to present one of the outstanding musical events of this, or any other season.

THOSE fortunate enough to be there, and the huge shed was filled with many more on the lawn, heard a stunning performance of this dramatic work.

This "Manzoni Requiem" seldom observes the sobriety of ecclesiastical music tradition, and contains little of contrapuntal austeriety. The music is frankly theatrical at times, but for all of Verdi's vivid pictorialism, his power of dramatic assault, his El Greco vision of the "Last Trump" and the terrible awakening of the dead, every phrase is musically directed in proportion to the next. In short a marvelously composed score.

As to performance, we are not likely to hear its equal for many a month. For once, the soloists all possessed the true "Verdi Voice" which means vocal organs of great range, richness, flexibility, and a beautiful legato.

WORTHY of special mention were the duets so exquisitely sung by Martina Arroyo, soprano, and Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano; Miss Arroyo having a real golden quality to her voice, and Miss Troyanos a rich silken texture to hers. The resulting blend was all that anyone could wish for Ezio Flagello has one of the most flexible and beautiful bass voices we have heard. Michele Molese has the true Italian tenor quality that rings through the auditorium in the forte passages.

The chorus which is equal to the soloists in importance in this work had a fine balance and beautiful tonal quality due in no small part to the painstaking care, devotion and skill of Charles Wilson who was in charge of the choral preparation.

The prime factor in the overall triumph of Saturday night's performance was the skill with which Mr. Leinsdorf controlled soloists, chorus and orchestra, His knowledge of vocal problems enabled his to give a most sympathetic and moving accompaniment to the soloists, the orchestra being vital, but never overpowering the singers.

AT THE conclusion of the Requiem, there was a fifteen-minute standing ovation given conductor, soloists, chorus, and orchestra for their overwhelming presentation of this great music.

At the Concert

On Sunday afternoon, this season's Tanglewood concerts came to a festive conclusion with an all-Wagner program.

The afternoon began with a stirring performance of the Prelude to "die Meistersingers." This was followed by excerpts from the third act of "die Walkure" which included the "Ride of the Valkyries" and "Wotans Farewell and Magic Fire Music," the "Wotan's Farewell" sung by Ezio Flagello whose voice had a clarion quality enabling it to rise above the orchestra without being forced.

AFTER intermission we heard excerpts from "Gotterdamerung" which included "Daybreak" Siegfried's Rhine Journey" "Prelude to Act II", "Siegfried's Death' and closing with "Brunhildes Immolation Scene" with Marilyn Horne as soloist.

Miss Horne proved to be an ideal choice for this music. She has a brilliant youthful voice of extra-ordinary range, always projected with intelligence, emotion and perfect dynamic control.

This was a weekend of some of the finest singing this listener has ever heard, a feast of vocal opulence through and throught.

Despite the threatening weather, more than 20,000 persons attended the three weekend concerts.

AMERICAN (e)
WATERBURY, CONN.
CIRC. 41,850
AUG 24 1967 New England Newsclip

66

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,960
AUG 21 1967
New England Newsclip

Music Review

Finale at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE HISTORY books will show that Tanglewood 1967 closed with a program devoted solely to Wagner, but 8,500 people can attest that the final concert was one of the most deeply moving and thrilling events of the entire season.

* * *

Erich Leinsdorf led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in two major parts of "Die Walkure" and "Gotterdammerung," departing from "The Ring" only to use the prelude to "Meistersinger" as a start of the afternoon. For Wotan's Farewell, Ezio Flagello was the soloist and he personified the royalty of Valhalla in stature and voice. No other opera permits and invites performance in concert form so well as those of Wagner. The orchestral music is so descriptive and exudes such splendid luster that it is possibly more appreciable on stage than in the pit. And one is spared the slow-moving action of Wagner music-dramas by this presentation.

After intermission, the deep pathos of excerpts from "The Twilight of the Gods" was compounded by the magnificent delineation of the "Immolation" scene by Marilyn Horne, who infused a noble dignity into the character and delivered her impassioned message with vivid radiance. Wagner hardly needs further affirmation here as the apogee of musical utterance, but the Boston orchestra under Leinsdorf's baton achieved a level of expression yesterday afternoon which exerted the limits of emotional power on their entranced listeners and not a few found their lachrymal controls involuntarily released.

* * *

SATURDAY NIGHT Leinsdorf gave a performance of Verdi's Requiem which can only be spoken of in terms of magnificence. The BSO had the collaboration of the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus, prepared by Charles Wilson, and four dramatically impressive soloists: Martina Arroyo, soprano; Tatiana Troyanos, mezzo-soprano; Michele Molese, tenor; and Flagello, bass.

Marilyn Horne

One can never speak of the Verdi Mass, written to honor the memory of his friend, and one of Italy's leading poets and novelists, Alessandro Manzoni, without pointing out the theatrical elements which the composer retained in transferring his focus from the opera house to the church, but Verdi only used the language which came naturally to him. He could be piously and humbly reverent, as he was at the outset of the Requiem and Kyrie, but he also could be terrifyingly stern as in the Dies Irae. Leinsdorf was not one to minimize this opportunity. He released the orchestra and the chorus with their respective frightening chords and chromatically descending words with ponderous impact, and made the contrasts thrilling.

* * *

NOR WAS Verdi ever heedless of the possibility of operatic effects as, in the Tuba Mirum; he has a trumpet respond "in lontananza ed invisible," but the work is primarily an opera for four principals and Saturday's choice could not have been more fitting. It is the mezzo's assignment to sing the Liber Scriptus, and here Miss Troyanos was supremely and vocally effectual. Miss Arroyo joined her in the lovely duet of the Recordare and, as in her ensuing demanding tasks, magnetized the huge audience, not only by the quality of her mighty voice but by its skillful control and adaptation to her role.

Friday night, the baton was ceded to Gunther Schuller for a program which included one of the most controversial pieces of the season. Schuller began his program with the Dvorak overture to "Othello" and proceeded to the Schubert "Unfinished Symphony," but after intermission he gave the first Tanglewood performance of the Charles Ives Fourth Symphony.

* * *

THE FOUR movements were written over a long term of years and finally assembled without any relationship. The third movement is an orthodox fugue played in the most favorable registers of the strings and using horns and organ. When played more slowly and with consecration it is a deeply heartfelt piece.

The other movements are intricately involved in tangles of sound and all sorts of conflicts. When performed under other circumstances, the conductor has required two additional helpers to coordinate fragments of the orchestra which are assigned a pace not in agreement with the main body of musicians, but Schuller only enlisted the bow of concertmaster Joseph Silverstein, who on occasion waved it in measures of three beats while the other platoons marched in step of four beats. This cooperation was not completely successful, but one asks if the effect would have been any more telling if it had worked out more accurately.

* * *

IVES ASKS for an immense orchestra and writes a part for chorus. In the first movement they are asked to sing excerpts from "Watchman, what of the Night"; in the last movement they have only wordless lines to sound. Schuller did not use voices at all and had a trumpet supply the required lines.

Schuller deserves an A-plus for effort. This is something which everyone should experience at least once, like chocolate grasshoppers and other such delicacies. Ives, the man, deserves scrutiny as an innovator, original thinker, engineer, pioneer and possibly several other appellations.

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350
AUG 21 1967
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Festival Closes To Majestic Wagner Sound

BY R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra ended the 30th Berkshire Festival Sunday afternoon with the imperial majesty of the sound of Wagner.

Full Breadth Presented

There was no pussyfooting delicacy, no subtle nuance to confuse the breadth of Wagner's resonant sonority.

Wagner's music is, perhaps, the ultimate in its ability to recreate moods and atmosphere, so there was gloom as well as glow in the shed, but it was the doublebass section and the trombones and tubas that set the dominant tone.

The program opened with the prelude to "Die Meistersinger" and continued with three excerpts from Act 3 of "Die Walkure," the ride of the Valkyries, Wotan's fare well to Brunnhilde and the Magic Fire music.

Soloists Impressive

After intermission there were seven excerpts from "Gotterdammerung," daybreak Siegfried's Rhine journey, interlude from Act I, prelude to Act II, Siegfried's death, the immolation scene and the conclusion.

Ezio Flagello was soloist for Wotan's farewell and Marilyn Horne was Brunnhilde's voice for the immolation scene but, impressive as they were, it was the orchestra and Wagner's orchestral grandeur that filled the air and presumably the souls of the 8489 listeners.

Flagello is a big man with a big bass voice and many years of experience with the Metropolitan Opera in New York. His Wotan was both strong and compassionate as he revealed his torment because he must punish his daughter so severely.

Fits the Part

Marilyn Horne also carried out her assignment with a passion befitting a tragic goddess. She demonstrated a vocal range and control fully adequate for the part, and understanding of the grand style and certainly an appropriate physical stature.

Wagner's music has attracted a strong band of afficianados, however, and it might be that they would have wished to hear a Brunnhilde with more cosmic substance in her tones.

Anyway, it was the orchestra's day, and Leinsdorf helped it paint the Wagnerian scene with strong, dense, dark, fully saturated colors. The augmented brass section was never long out of hearing and the little woodwinds were swallowed.

Curtain of Realism

For a couple of hours the placid lawns of Tanglewood were in the shadow of the rolling, black, billowing thunderclouds of Valhalla. It was a dramatic curtain for the season.

In the meantime, the weather was typical of a season seriously affected by humidity and rain.

A shower failed to deter more than 8000 ticket buyers, but sprinkles during intermission drove hundreds from the lawn to the shed and 20 minutes after the concert there was thunder followed by a heavy downpour.

Rain all summer has been offered by orchestra officials as the reason the season's attendance for the 24 concerts is off 12,000 from last year.

In 1966, a record year, not one concert was damaged by rain, and attendance was 182,000. This year, rain was real or imminent at nearly every concert and attendance was 170,000.

Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
Sun-Telegraph
D. 252,291 SAT. 241,399
AUG 23 1967

Three SRO Audiences

Tanglewood Festival Enthusiasm Grows

By DONALD STEINFIRST
Post-Gazette Music Critic

TANGLEWOOD, Mass.—The Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood came to a close Monday afternoon with the final chords of Wagner's "Gotterdammerung."

It should be added that the music was followed by an enormous ovation. In fact, year-after-year festival-goers have told me that the traditionally tough festival audiences have never been so enthusiastic as they have been over the week-end.

Three sold out houses brought a total of over 20,000 persons to the 6,500 seat hall to say nothing of the hundreds who sat on the pacious lawns of the magnificent grounds and who picknicked while they listened to the music.

No doubt about it, Tanglewood has charms, quite aside from its musical programs, to lure tourist and native alike.

Verdi, Wagner for Finals

Not that the musical attractions weren't also present. Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra devoted the two final programs of the season to Verdi's Requiem and extracts from Wagner.

Leinsdorf's performance was a good one, thoroughly rehearsed, stylistically free, vocally and instrumentally co-ordinated and sung surpassingly well by all the members of the chorus and quarter.

I cannot recall a performance of the Requiem—or for that matter any of the large choral work—when all four singers were of such equal high level quality.

Martina Arroyo, soprano, was big in volume, high-grained and sumptuous and at the end, her "Libera Me" was enormously effective.

Tatiana Troyanos, the mezzo, is another young American singer, who having sung some roles here, went abroad for recognition. Miss Troyanos, with a full range voice, sang with resonance and extremely musically.

Michele Molese, a lyric tenor, new to the Boston Symphony, sang the "Ingemisco" with warmth and elegance and Ezio Flagello lent his deep bass voice easily to the rich music allotted him. A fair sized chorus from the center and the neighborhood sang with intensity.

The Wagner music included an indifferent "Meistersinger" Overture, excerpts from the Third Act of "Die Walkure" and from "Gotterdammerung."

Flagello sang the music of the Farewell with deep throughout the long narrative.

Immolation Scene

Leinsdorf chose the usual excerpts from "Gotterdammerung," "Daybreak," Siegfried's Rhine Tourney" an Interlude from Act One, the Prelude to Act Two and "Siegfried's Death" all leading to the final Immolation Scene with Marilyn Horne singing the music of "Brunnhilde."

Miss Horne was making her first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra but it will not be the last.

Her approach to the impassioned music of the Immolation was never fiery but it was deeply wrought.

At the end of the Scene she and Leinsdorf and the orchestra received at least ten curtain calls.

AMERICAN (e)
WATERBURY, CONN.
CIRC. 41,850
AUG 22 1967
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Festival Concluded

The final week of the 30th Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood came to a rousing conclusion last weekend with the performance on Sunday afternoon of a complete Wagner program made up of excerpts from three of his operas, "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg", "Die Walkure" and "Gotterdammerung".

The combined audience of 32,224 for the week witnessed the end of the Boston Symphony's 1967 season at its summer home at Tanglewood in the Berkshire hills.

Friday evening began with a Prelude Concert in the shed of Wagner's "Siegfried Idyll" played superbly by the cream of the Boston's musicians, the Boston Symphony Chamber Players.

Phyllis Curtin, noted Soprano and delightful personality, performed songs from Ives and Verdi, accompanied by Ryan Edwards at the piano. Miss Curtin is on the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center which is Tanglewood's training ground for young musicians, where she gives a Master Class in Voice, and teaches privately. Her charm and interest in her students carry over into her singing, and Friday evening's audience heard a rare treat.

The major concert Friday night was conducted by Gunther Schuller, chairman of the Composition Department of the Berkshire Music Center and newly appointed President of the New England Conservatory.

Saturday's concert was devoted completely to the performance of Verdi's requiem Mass for four solo voices Chorus and Orchestra. The soloists, Martina Arroyo, Soprano, Tatiana Troyanos, Mezzo-Soprano, Michele Molese, Tenor, and Ezio Glagello, Bass, were backed by the Tanglewood Choir and the Berkshire Chorus, prepared by Assistant Conductor Charles Wilson, and M. Lewis Spratlan. Played without Epartlin. Miss Arroyos' voice is magnificent, and can be powerful as well as angelic. Her performance Saturday evening was the highlight of a concert that, in its beauty defies description.

Sunday afternoons' Wagner concert was a perfect example of Erich Leinsdorf at his forte. Formerly conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Company, Leinsdorf shows a marked talent for conducting singers, especially singers who are performing the music of Wagner, one of Leinsdorf's greatest loves. The maestro was in his element on Sunday (although most music is his element,) and the performance was nothing short of brilliant. Ezio Flagello, leading basso of the Metropolitan Opera performed in excerpts from "Die Walkure," Act III, and Marilyn Horne, appearing for the first time with the Boston Symphony, sang excerpts from "Gotterdammerung." Miss Horne is a true Wagnerian soprano, and her performance was beautiful. Around the voices flowed the glorious strains of Wagner's instrumental music, brassy, colorful, mellow and exciting, a perfect finish for the summer season. "SCM"

TANGLEWOOD - ON - PARADE

67

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y.
SARATOGIAN
D. 10,500

AUG 4 1967

Tanglewood-on-Parade Program Slated Aug. 17

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Director of the Berkshire Music Center, has announced the schedule of events for Tanglewood - on-Parade Thursday, Aug. 17

The Tanglewood grounds will be open at 2 p.m. and at 2:15 p.m. the festivities will begin with a trumpet fanfare. The balance of the afternoon will be occupied by seven separate concerts and will conclude with a Gala Concert starting at 7:30 p.m. in the Music Shed.

The Gala Concert will open with performances by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Mozart's Overture from "Die Entfuehrung aus dem Serail", Dvorak's Symphony No. 9, "From the New World" and Saint-Saens' Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso, for which Itzhak Perlman will be violin soloist.

The conclusion of the Gala Concert will be a performance of Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture by the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center Orchestras with cannons and salute guns. The conclusion of the evening will be a display of foreworks. The Gala Concert will be broadcast live and in color over the NBC television Network.

The concerts scheduled for the afternoon include: a performance of the Boston University Tanglewood Young Artists Orchestra, Walter Eisenberg conductor, and Stanley Silverman, host (2:30 p.m. - Theatre), a song recital (3 p.m. - Theatre), a fanfare of outdoor music for winds (4:15- Main House Porch), a concert of chamber music (5 p.m. - Chamber Music Hall), a Composers' formus (5 p.m. - Theatre), a choral concert (6 p.m. - Main House Porch), and a Fanfare (7:20 - Shed) to open the Gala Concert. Programs for the afternoon's concerts will be announced soon.

Reserved seats are available at $6, $5, $4, and $3.50. Unreserved seats will be available the afternoon of Tanglewood-on-Parade at $2.50. On ticket is good for all of th day's events.

For ticket and program information: Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240. (Telephone: 413-637-1600).

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350

AUG 3 1967

New England Newsclip

Music, Music, Music

Eight Events Scheduled At Tanglewood Aug. 17

LENOX — Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Berkshire Music Center, has announced the schedule of events for Tanglewood-on-Parade Thursday, Aug. 17.

The Tanglewood grounds will open at 2 p. m., and at 2.15 festivities will begin with a trumpet fanfare. The balance of the afternoon will be filled with seven separate concerts and will conclude with a gala concert starting at 7.30 in the music shed.

The gala concert will include performances by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Mozart's overture from "Die Entfuehrung aus dem Serail," Dvorak's Symphony No. 9, "From the New World," and Saint-Saens' Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso, for which Itzhak Perlman wil lbe violin soloist. Concluding the concert will be a performance of Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture by the combined Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center orchestras, with cannons and salute guns.

The evening will close with a display of fireworks. The gala concert will be broadcast live and in color over the NBC television network.

Afternoon Concerts

The concerts scheduled for the afternoon include:

A performance of the Boston University Tanglewood Young Artists Orchestra, Walter Eisenberg, conductor, and Stanley Silverman, host; 2.30, theatre; song recital 3, theatre; fanfare of outdoor music for winds, 4.15, main house porch chamber music, 5, chamber music hall; composers' forum 5, theater; choral concert, 6 main house porch; and a fanfare, 7.20, shed; to open the gala concert. Programs for the afternoon's concerts will be announced in early August.

Ticket and program information is available from the festival ticket office. Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900

AUG 12 1967

New England Newsclip

Townspeople Asked To Wear Costumes To Tanglewood

LENOX — The bicentennial committee has urged all townspeople who plan to attend the nationally-televised "Tanglewood-on-Parade" program Thursday night to wear colonial costumes.

The committee said that the Tanglewood program girls will wear such costumes and said it would be evidence of the town's celebration if a large number of townspeople wear the type of costumes worn at the bicentennial ball and during bicentennial week.

The program will be televised live on NBC.

SYRACUSE
Herald Journal
D. 133,303

AUG 9 1967

ERICH LEINSDORF

Music festival Aug. 17

Erich Leinsdorfn music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Berkshire Music Center, has announced the schedule of events for Tanglewood-on-Parade Thursday, Aug. 17.

The Tanglewood grounds will open at 2 p.m. and festivities will begin at 2:15 p.m. with a trumpet fanfare. The balance of the afternoon will be occupied by seven separate concerts and will conclude with a gala concert starting at 7:30 p.m. in the Music Shed. The gala concert will open with performances by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Mozart's overture from "Die Entfuehrung aus dem Serail," Dvorak's Symphony No. 9, "From the New World" and Saint-Saens' Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso, for which Itzhak Perlman will be violin soloist.

The conclusion of the concert will be a performance of Tchaikovsky's "1812 Overture" by the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center Orchestras. The conclusion of the evening will be a display of fireworks.

The concerts scheduled for the afternoon include: Boston University Tanglewood Young Artists Orchestra, Walter Eisenberg conductor and Stanley Silverman, host at 2:30 p.m. in the Theater. There will be a song recital at 3 p.m. in the theater, a fanfare of outdoor music for winds at 4:15 p.m. at the main house porch, a concert of chamber music at 5 p.m. in the Chamber Music Hall, a composers' forum at 5 p.m. in the theatre, a choral concert at 6 at main house porch, and a fanfare at 7:20 in the shed to open the concert.

NEWS (E)
FRAMINGHAM, MASS.
CIRC. 18,650

AUG 4 1967

New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony Schedules Events At Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox — Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Berkshire Music Center, has announced the schedule of events for Tanglewood-on-Parade on Thursday, August 17. The Tanglewood grounds will open at 2 p.m. and at 2:15 p.m. the festivities will begin with a trumpet fanfare. The balance of the afternoon will be occupied by seven separate concerts and will conclude with a gala concert starting at 7:30 p.m. in the music shed. The gala concert will open with performances by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Mozart's Overture from "Die Entfuehrung aus dem Serail", Dvorak's Symphony No. 9, "From the New World" and Saint-Saens' Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso, for which Itshak Perlman will be violin soloist. The conclusion of the Gala Concert will be a performance of Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture by the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center Orchestras with cannons and salute guns. The conclusion of the evening will be a display of fireworks. The Gala Concert will be broadcast live and in color over the NBC television network.

The concerts scheduled for the afternooni nclude: a performance of the Boston University Tanglewood Young Artists Orchestra, Walter Eisenberg conductor, and Stanley Silverman, host (2:30 p.m. - Theatre), a song recital (3:00 - Theatre), a fanfare of outdoor music for winds (4:15 - Main House Porch), a concert of chamber music (5:00 - Chamber Music Hall), a Composers' Forum (5:00 - Theatre), a choral concert (6:00 - Main House Porch), and a Fanfare (7:20 - Shed) to open the gala concert.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Sunday, August 13, 1967

Boom at Tanglewood

NE

The Boston Symphony's assistant director, Charles Wilson, will turn "gunner" Thursday night—and with the help of earphones and closed circuit television, will fire the cannon as Tchaikowsky's "1812 Overture" reaches a crescendo at Tanglewood.

The cannon—and later fireworks—will signal the close of a full day of concerts starting at 2:15 p.m., climaxed in the evening with the combined orchestras of the Boston Symphony and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra.

The day has become known as "Tanglewood-On-Parade." All proceeds go to the Berkshire Music Center, an educational institution conducted throughout the summer months under the auspices of the Boston Symphony.

The cannon firing is kind of a lark—in fact members of the orchestra and staff spend more time talking about and planning the noisy exhibition than they do on the concert.

Wilson will conduct the music while watching it on a tiny TV set and listening to it through the earphones so as to be ready at the precise moment the music calls for the explosion.

Erich Leinsdorf will be on the podium conducting the combined orchestra in a program which will be colorcast over NBC-TV and carried on Albany's WAMC-FM.

The evening concert will include Mozart's Overture from "Die Entfuehrung aus dem Serail;" Dvorak's Symphony No. 9, "From the New World;" Saint-Saens' Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso with Itzhak Perlman, violinist; and the Overture.

The Record
HACKENSACK, N. J.
D. 137,868

AUG 7 1967

TANGLEWOOD FARE INCLUDES CONCERTS

Special To The Record

Lenox, Mass. — Erich Leinsdorf, director of the Berkshire Music Center, announces that the Tanglewood-on-Parade August 17 will feature seven separate concerts and conclude with a gala concert at 7:30 P. M. in the Music Shed.

The concert will open with performances by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Mozart's Overture from "Die Entfuehrung aus dem Serail", Dvorak's Symphony No. 9, "From the New World" and Saint-Saens' Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso, for which Itzhak Perlman will be violin soloist.

The conclusion of the concert will be a performance of Tchaikovsky's "1812 Overture" by the combined Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center Orchestras with cannons and saluate guns followed by a display of fireworks. The Concert will be broadcast live and in color over the NBC television Network.

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 192,400

AUG 10 1967

New England Newsclip

Tanglewood on parade

A trumpet fanfare at 2:15 p.m. on Thursday, Aug. 17, will begin the festivities of Tanglewood-on-Parade. Seven separate concerts are scheduled throughout the afternoon, leading towards a Gala Concert at 7:30 p.m. in the Music Shed. The evening event will feature Erich Leinsdorf conducting the Boston Symphony in Dvořák's "New World" Symphony.

Itzhak Perlman will be the violin soloist for the Saint-Saëns Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso. Then all of the Berkshire Music Center orchestras and ensembles which had played earlier will join the BSO in a performance of Tchaikovsky's "1812" Overture, complete with cannons and salute guns. A fireworks display will then follow. NBC-TV will carry the event live and in color.

TANGLEWOOD - ON - PARADE

67

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y.
SARATOGIAN
D. 10,500

AUG 4 1967

Tanglewood-on-Parade Program Slated Aug. 17

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Director of the Berkshire Music Center, has announced the schedule of events for Tanglewood-on-Parade Thursday, Aug. 17

The Tanglewood grounds will be open at 2 p.m. and at 2:15 p.m. the festivities will begin with a trumpet fanfare. The balance of the afternoon will be occupied by seven separate concerts and will conclude with a Gala Concert starting at 7:30 p.m. in the Music Shed.

The Gala Concert will open with performances by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Mozart's Overture from "Die Entfuehrung aus dem Serail", Dvorak's Symphony No. 9, "From the New World" and Saint-Saens' Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso, for which Itzhak Perlman will be violin soloist.

The conclusion of the Gala Concert will be a performance of Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture by the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center Orchestras with cannons and salute guns. The conclusion of the evening will be a display of foreworks. The Gala Concert will be broadcast live and in color over the NBC television Network.

The concerts scheduled for the afternoon include: a performance of the Boston University Tanglewood Young Artists Orchestra, Walter Eisenberg conductor, and Stanley Silverman, host (2:30 p.m. - Theatre), a song recital (3 p.m. - Theatre), a fanfare of outdoor music for winds (4:15- Main House Porch), a concert of chamber music (5 p.m. - Chamber Music Hall), a Composers' formus (5 p.m. - Theatre), a choral concert (6 p.m. - Main House Porch), and a Fanfare (7:20 - Shed) to open the Gala Concert. Programs for the afternoon's concerts will be announced soon.

Reserved seats are available at $6, $5, $4, and $3.50. Unreserved seats will be available the afternoon of Tanglewood-on-Parade at $2.50. On ticket is good for all of th day's events.

For ticket and program information: Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240. (Telephone: 413-637-1600).

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350

AUG 3 1967

New England Newsclip

Music, Music, Music

Eight Events Scheduled At Tanglewood Aug. 17

LENOX — Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Berkshire Music Center, has announced the schedule of events for Tanglewood-on-Parade Thursday, Aug. 17.

The Tanglewood grounds will open at 2 p. m., and at 2.15 festivities will begin with a trumpet fanfare. The balance of the afternoon will be filled with seven separate concerts and will conclude with a gala concert starting at 7.30 in the music shed.

The gala concert will include performances by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Mozart's overture from "Die Entfuehrung aus dem Serail," Dvorak's Symphony No. 9, "From the New World," and Saint-Saens' Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso, for which Itzhak Perlman wil lbe violin soloist. Concluding the concert will be a performance of Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture by the combined Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center orchestras, with cannons and salute guns.

The evening will close with a display of fireworks. The gala concert will be broadcast live and in color over the NBC television network.

Afternoon Concerts

The concerts scheduled for the afternoon include:

A performance of the Boston University Tanglewood Young Artists Orchestra, Walter Eisenberg, conductor, and Stanley Silverman, host; 2.30, theatre; song recital 3, theatre; fanfare of outdoor music for winds, 4.15, main house porch chamber music, 5, chamber music hall; composers' forum 5, theater; choral concert, 6 main house porch; and a fanfare, 7.20, shed; to open the gala concert. Programs for the afternoon's concerts will be announced in early August.

Ticket and program information is available from the festival ticket office. Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900

AUG 12 1967

New England Newsclip

Townspeople Asked To Wear Costumes To Tanglewood

LENOX — The bicentennial committee has urged all townspeople who plan to attend the nationally-televised "Tanglewood-on-Parade" program Thursday night to wear colonial costumes.

The committee said that the Tanglewood program girls will wear such costumes and said it would be evidence of the town's celebration if a large number of townspeople wear the type of costumes worn at the bicentennial ball and during bicentennial week.

The program will be televised live on NBC.

SYRACUSE
Herald Journal
D. 133,303

AUG 9 1967

ERICH LEINSDORF

Music festival Aug. 17

Erich Leinsdorfn music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Berkshire Music Center, has announced the schedule of events for Tanglewood-on-Parade Thursday, Aug. 17.

The Tanglewood grounds will open at 2 p.m. and festivities will begin at 2:15 p.m. with a trumpet fanfare. The balance of the afternoon will be occupied by seven separate concerts and will conclude with a gala concert starting at 7:30 p.m. in the Music Shed. The gala concert will open with performances by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Mozart's overture from "Die Entfuehrung aus dem Serail," Dvorak's Symphony No. 9, "From the New World" and Saint-Saens' Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso, for which Itzhak Perlman will be violin soloist.

The conclusion of the concert will be a performance of Tchaikovsky's "1812 Overture" by the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center Orchestras. The conclusion of the evening will be a display of fireworks.

The concerts scheduled for the afternoon include: Boston University Tanglewood Young Artists Orchestra, Walter Eisenberg conductor and Stanley Silverman, host at 2:30 p.m. in the Theater. There will be a song recital at 3 p.m. in the theater, a fanfare of outdoor music for winds at 4:15 p.m. at the main house porch, a concert of chamber music at 5 p.m. in the Chamber Music Hall, a composers' forum at 5 p.m. in the theatre, a choral concert at 6 at main house porch, and a fanfare at 7:20 in the shed to open the concert.

NEWS (E)
FRAMINGHAM, MASS.
CIRC. 18,650

AUG 4 1967

New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony Schedules Events At Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox — Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Berkshire Music Center, has announced the schedule of events for Tanglewood-on-Parade on Thursday, August 17. The Tanglewood grounds will open at 2 p.m. and at 2:15 p.m. the festivities will begin with a trumpet fanfare. The balance of the afternoon will be occupied by seven separate concerts and will conclude with a gala concert starting at 7:30 p.m. in the music shed. The gala concert will open with performances by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Mozart's Overture from "Die Entfuehrung aus dem Serail", Dvorak's Symphony No. 9, "From the New World" and Saint-Saens' Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso, for which Itshak Perlman will be violin soloist. The conclusion of the Gala Concert will be a performance of Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture by the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center Orchestras with cannons and salute guns. The conclusion of the evening will be a display of fireworks. The Gala Concert will be broadcast live and in color over the NBC television network.

The concerts scheduled for the afternooni nclude: a performance of the Boston University Tanglewood Young Artists Orchestra, Walter Eisenberg conductor, and Stanley Silverman, host (2:30 p.m. - Theatre), a song recital (3:00 - Theatre), a fanfare of outdoor music for winds (4:15 - Main House Porch), a concert of chamber music (5:00 - Chamber Music Hall), a Composers' Forum (5:00 - Theatre), a choral concert (6:00 - Main House Porch), and a Fanfare (7:20 - Shed) to open the gala concert.

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 192,400

AUG 10 1967

New England Newsclip

Tanglewood on parade

A trumpet fanfare at 2:15 p.m. on Thursday, Aug. 17, will begin the festivities of Tanglewood-on-Parade. Seven separate concerts are scheduled throughout the afternoon, leading towards a Gala Concert at 7:30 p.m. in the Music Shed. The evening event will feature Erich Leinsdorf conducting the Boston Symphony in Dvořák's "New World" Symphony.

Itzhak Perlman will be the violin soloist for the Saint-Saëns Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso. Then all of the Berkshire Music Center orchestras and ensembles which had played earlier will join the BSO in a performance of Tchalkovsky's "1812" Overture, complete with cannons and salute guns. A fireworks display will then follow. NBC-TV will carry the event live and in color.

The Record
HACKENSACK, N. J.
D. 137,868

AUG 7 1967

TANGLEWOOD FARE INCLUDES CONCERTS

Special To The Record

Lenox, Mass. — Erich Leinsdorf, director of the Berkshire Music Center, announces that the Tanglewood-on-Parade August 17 will feature seven separate concerts and conclude with a gala concert at 7:30 P. M. in the Music Shed.

The concert will open with performances by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Mozart's Overture from "Die Entfuehrung aus dem Serail", Dvorak's Symphony No. 9, "From the New World" and Saint-Saens' Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso, for which Itzhak Perlman will be violin soloist.

The conclusion of the concert will be a performance of Tchaikovsky's "1812 Overture" by the combined Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center Orchestras with cannons and saluate guns followed by a display of fireworks. The Concert will be broadcast live and in color over the NBC television Network.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Sunday, August 13, 1967

Boom at Tanglewood

NE

The Boston Symphony's assistant director, Charles Wilson, will turn "gunner" Thursday night—and with the help of earphones and closed circuit television, will fire the cannon as Tchaikowsky's "1812 Overture" reaches a crescendo at Tanglewood.

The cannon—and later fireworks—will signal the close of a full day of concerts starting at 2:15 p.m., climaxed in the evening with the combined orchestras of the Boston Symphony and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra.

The day has become known as "Tanglewood-On-Parade." All proceeds go to the Berkshire Music Center, an educational institution conducted throughout the summer months under the auspices of the Boston Symphony.

The cannon firing is kind of a lark—in fact members of the orchestra and staff spend more time talking about and planning the noisy exhibition than they do on the concert.

Wilson will conduct the music while watching it on a tiny TV set and listening to it through the earphones so as to be ready at the precise moment the music calls for the explosion.

Erich Leinsdorf will be on the podium conducting the combined orchestra in a program which will be colorcast over NBC-TV and carried on Albany's WAMC-FM.

The evening concert will include Mozart's Overture from "Die Entfuehrung aus dem Serail;" Dvorak's Symphony No. 9, "From the New World;" Saint-Saens' Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso with Itzhak Perlman, violinist; and the Overture.

68

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 SUN. 122,607

AUG 18 1967

'Tanglewood-on-Parade' An Exciting Treat for 9,000 Music Lovers

By ROBERT J. BARBER

The Boston Symphony Orchestra combined with the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra climaxed an exciting "Tanglewood - on - Parade" Thursday night with Tchaikovsky's "1812 Overture"—including the firing of cannon at the conclusion of the performance.

The gala day started at 2 p.m. with a Wagner program in the theater concert hall and continued all afternoon and evening before an estimated 9,000 music lovers.

Conductor Erich Leinsdorf took over the orchestra at 7:30 p.m. to open the evening concert with Mozart's overture from "Die Entfuehrung aus dem Serail," a sensitive composition and sensitively directed.

The explosive drama of the "1812 Overture" probably excited the audience the most, but it was Dvorak's "New World Symphony", which really made the "Parade" of Tanglewood.

His Ninth Symphony is his best known work and probably his most popular, and the orchestra played with it gusto and nostalgia.

It was only a stroke of fate that the masterpiece was ever composed. The "New World" would never have been written had it not been for a wealthy grocer's wife who decided to found an American conservatory of music and looked to Europe for its director.

And had she chosen the 28-year-old Sibelius instead of the 50-year-old Dvorak, the latter's last symphony would have been purely Czech. Both names had been suggested to her.

But she chose Dvorak and he subsequently developed an intense interest in native American music almost as soon as he arrived here. As a result, he composed a vivid picture of the "New World."

Dvorak also studied American Indian melodies and developed several ideas for setting "Hiawatha" to music. Unhappily the work never materialized.

Itzhak Perlman, a superb violinist, was the soloist for Saint-Saens' "Capriccioso," in the opening of the second half of the program. The "1812 Overture," which shows Tchaikovsky at his most patriotic, was performed by the combined Boston Symphony and the Music Center Orchestra—a total of 191 instrumentalists and they played it with magnificence.

The "New World" was brilliantly performed and conducted. The three quick movements captured the American scene perfectly: its sense of urgency and the hustle so typical of the U.S. city.

The Largo easily portrayed the vast panarama of the country's landscape and the serene expanse of the "wide open spaces."

Included in the afternoon program was a youth concert featuring the Boston University Tanglewood Young Artist Orchestra with Walter Eisenberg conducting.

The concert included compositions by Berlioz, Sibelius, Prokofiev, and Brahms.

An outdoor concert for brass and woodwinds featured the works of Gounod, Hindesmith, and Beethoven. There was also a chamber music program with pieces by Tchaikovsky and Enesco.

The "parade day" was also something of a social outing with the attendance reading like a part of "Who's Who."

The widow of the late Serge Koussevitzky was chairman of the event while serving with her were Mrs. Henry B. Lodge, Mrs. Silvio Conte, Mrs. Eric Leinsdorf, and Mrs. John Volpe.

CRASHING FINALE—Charles Wilson, bedecked with earphones and "conducting" with the aid of a television monitor, readies to sound the salute guns and cannon which augmented the Boston Symphony's rendition of Tchaikowsky's "1812 Overture" at Tanglewood Thursday night. Wilson, assistant director of the BSO, here rehearses for the guns' big moment. The concert was telecast live on NBC.

AMERICAN (e)
WATERBURY, CONN.
CIRC. 41,850

AUG 15 1967 New England Newsclip

Violinist Returning For Concert

Itzhak Perlman, violin soloist, who thrilled an audience of 6,316 at Tanglewood over the weekend with his brilliant, passionate and beautiful performance of Sibelius' "Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in D minor, Op. 47," will again perform in the Tanglewood-On-Parade Concert Thursday evening at 7:30.

He will play the "Saint-Saens: "Introduction and "Rondo Capriccioso" with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting.

Perlman, who made his first appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston last winter, is the musical product of both Israel and the United States.

Born in Tel Aviv in 1945, his parents having emigrated to Israel from Poland in the mid-1930s, he studied music at the Tel Aviv Academy of Music, giving concerts there and for the state broadcasting company.

In early childhood he was stricken with polio, therefore plays the violin in a seated position.

His first appearance in the United States was on the Ed Sullivan Show when he was 13. He was immediately accepted for study at the Juilliard School, New York, where he worked with Ivan Galamian and Dorothy DeLay.

He made his New York debut in 1963 at Carnegie Hall and the following year he won the coveted Leventritt Award. Last season he made his first major concert tour, playing with the Los Angeles, Minneapolis, Montreal, Honolula, St. Louis and Seattle orchestras.

He has recorded the "Sibelius" and "Prokofiev" (No. 2 in G minor) concertos with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, recently released by RCA Victor.

Perlman is a close relation to Dr. and Mrs. Leo Oken, long time residents of Waterbury.

SM

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350

AUG 17 1967 New England Newsclip

Tanglewood-on-Parade Concert Today at 2

LENOX — Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Berkshire Music Center, has announced complete programs for the concert for Tanglewood-on-Parade today from 2.15 until 9.30.

Fanfares to Open

The afternoon will open with three fanfares by Wagner at 2.15. At 2.30 the Boston University Tanglewood Young Artists Orchestra will perform works by Berlioz, Sibelius, Prokofiev and Brahms.

The afternoon continues with a song recital by members of the music center directed by Phyllis Curtin. At 4.15 there will be an outdoor winds concert.

There will be two events held jointly at 5. A concert of chamber music will feature works by Tchaikovsky and Brahms and a Tanglewood Composers' Forum will perform and discuss new works by Justin Connally, George Edwards, Anthony Gilbert, Robert Jenes and Harold Oliver.

At 6 there will be a choral concert of works by Bach, Byrd, Britten, Brahms, Beethoven, Edwin London and Jacob Druckman.

The afternoon's events will close with a fanfare at 7.20 which will also serve to open the gala concert, which begins at 7.30.

The gala concert will be broadcast live in color over television.

Mrs. John A. Volpe is an honorary member of the Tanglewood-on-Parade Committee as are: Mrs. Silvio O. Conte, wife of the U. S. representative; Mrs. Henry B. Cabot, wife of the President of the BSO; and Mrs. Leinsdorf.

Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, widow of the center's founder is chairman.

Tanglewood-on-Parade is a benefit for the center.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900

AUG 17 1967 New England Newsclip

Tanglewood-on-Parade Committee Named for Program Tonight

Committee members for Tanglewood-on-Parade this afternoon and evening are headed by Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky as chairman.

Honorary members are Mrs. John A. Volpe, wife of the governor; Mrs. Silvio O. Conte, wife of Congressman Conte; Mrs. Henry B. Cabot, wife of the president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; and Mrs. Erich Leinsdorf, wife of the BSO music director.

Berkshire County members of the committee are: Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton, Mrs. Albert Sterner of Richmond, Mrs. John Davis Hatch, Mrs. Stephen V. C. Morris and Mrs. John L. Senior of Lenox; Mrs. C. E. Jackson of Stockbridge; and Mrs. George W. Edman, Mrs. Paul K. Fodder, Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller, Mrs. John H. Rice, Mrs. Jay C. Rosenfeld and Mrs. Willem Willeke, all of Pittsfield.

Wives of musicians connected with Tanglewood on the committee are: Mrs. William Kroll, Mrs. Joseph Silverstein, Mrs. Louis Speyer and Mrs. Roger Voisin. Also Mrs. Thomas D. Perry Jr., wife of the BSO manager, and Mme. Anna de Leuchtenberg, Mrs. Koussevitzky's sister.

Activities began at 2:15 with three fanfares by Wagner. A concert by the Young Artists Orchestra followed at 2:30, with a song recital by members of the music center under the direction of Miss Phyllis Curtin. An outdoor winds concert is planned at 4:15.

A concert of chamber music of works by Tchaikovsky and Brahms and a Tanglewood composers' forum will be at 5. A choral concert will be held at 6, with the gala concert at 7:30. Fireworks will close the day's events

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350

AUG 18 1967 New England Newsclip

Tanglewood – It Was a Great Nine Hours

By R. C. HAMMERICH
Union Music Critic

LENOX — Between 2.15 and 9.30 Thursday at Tanglewood, sme 300 musicians presented nearly nine hours of music during seven overlapping concerts plus brass-fanfare preludes.

The event, billed as "Tanglewood-On-Parade" and gala concert, was the annual display of the musical wares of members of the Berkshire Music Center aided by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the benefit of the center.

It was warm and humid under a thin overcast when the gated opened at 2 to admit about 300 people. At 7.30, when there were 5000 in the great shed for the main event, the weather was still bland.

It made 40 television engineers and executives with $5 million in equipment, including five cameras, happy. They had been worried about the weather for the live broadcast to an estimated 20 million watchers at 198 stations over the country.

But for 12 members of the center, there was another mian event —the awarding of prizes by Erich Leinsdorf, music director. Thre of them are from Massachusetts.

In the order of announcement, they are:

Laura Kimble of San Carlos, California, Gregor Piatigorsky Prize for a cellist.

Douglas Bairstow of Dalton, oboeist, Benjamin H. Delson Memorial Prize.

Ann Golden of Canada and Queen Ann Alajia of Watertown, Adah Mase Curran prizes for voice.

Charles Van Tassel of Chicago, baritone, High Fidelity Magazine award to "Talented Member of Any Department."

Claudia Rantucci of Buffalo, violinist, and Makato Michii of Japan, doublebassist, Henry B. Cabot Awards.

Christopher Wolfe of Baltimore, clarinetist, and Mary Hagg Gallagher, of Ireland, violinist, Albert Spalding Prizes for instrumentalists.

George Edwards of Wellesley, Koussevitzky Tanglewood Composition Prize.

James Paul of Oberlin, Koussevitzky Memorial Conducting Prize and the Mrs. Eleanor Crane Memorial Prize.

Peter Chapman of Canada, trumpet player, C. D. Jackson prize.

Not long after the announcement of the prizes, Leinsdorf mounted the podium in the great shed at 7.30 to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra — some of the players squinting under the brilliant

See TANGLEWOOD
Page Twenty-two

SHOPPERS' NEWS
LYNNFIELD, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 5,600

AUG 31 1967 New England Newsclip

LOCAL YOUTH PARTICIPATE IN PROGRAM AT TANGLEWOOD

Peter Leonard, son of Mr. & Mrs. John Leonard, participated in the Berkshire Music Center's Tanglewood-On-Parade Program, August 17th. He has spent eight weeks at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. as a student in the Boston Univ. Program for High School Instrumentalists, studying and playing in ensembles directed by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Tanglewood-On-Parade featured performances by all the participating musical groups. Peter performed as a member of the French Horn section of the Boston Univ. Tanglewood Young Artists Orchestra with 50 other young players from all sections of the country.

The Program under the direction of Walter Eisenberg, Conductor of the Greater Boston Youth Symphony Orchestra, included:

Berlioz - Overture, "The Roman Carnival", Op. 9

Sibelius - Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 43 Finale: Allegro moderato.

Prokofiev - Peter and the Wolf, Op. 67.

Brahms - "Academic Festival" Overture, Op. 80.

Peter is a member of the Lynnfield High School Band under the direction of Michael E. Cooney, and a member of the Senior Class.

NEWS (e)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 98,600

AUG 18 1967 New England Newsclip

Seven Hours of Quality Music

By ARTHUR T. ANDREWES

Tanglewood on Parade is conceived each year as a showcase of the departmental productivity of the various musical divisions in the Berkshire Music Center. The Center is the educational wing of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

The day's events extended from 2:30 through 9:30 p.m. It was seven hours of quality musical performance in a setting that made converts out of the most skeptical. Not to be confused with the usual concert atmosphere, there was a festive mood that was not unlike that which surrounds a holiday outing.

Wagnerian fanfares initiated the program series with a dramatic call to Young Artist's Orchestra concert. These Boston University extension students played a schedule of Berlioz, Sibelius, Brahms and Prokfiev. Overlapping this concert was an exciting song recital that found the divas and concert singers of tomorrow performing all manner of works from opera and Gilbert and Sullivan, to the difficult German Lieder.

The location of the concert for brass and woodwinds was a disadvantage to the production. Set on the front porch of the Main House the lack of theatrical confinement meant the loss of certain subtle and sensitive woodwind sounds.

One of the most brilliant presentations of the afternoon took place in the Chamber Music Hall where an Octet by Enesco was preceded by a magnificent performance of the Tchaikovsky "Trio for Violin, Cello and Piano." No finer rendition or artistic interpretation of this piece could be asked.

With a composers forum of contemporary music and a choral concert the afternoon—early evening performances were drawn to a close and the attention of the audiences, drawn by particular interests, focused on the Music Shed and the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf.

The concert was no less than the usual high quality that marks the conduct of that great aggrregation. After an ordinary opening with Mozart's "Overture to the Abduction from the Seraglio," Leinsdorf moved to the well known "New World Symphony" by Dvorak.

Maestro Leinsdorf is endowed with a natural sensitivity. He is entitled to his own interpretation of the various works performed. However, there were passages in the Dvorak piece that required more strength and emotional outpouring than was present last night.

The accomplished artistry of Itzahk Perlman created quite a stir. And well it might. This virtuoso violinist threw the evening into high gear with his fantastic control and feeling. This type of quality musician should be seen more often during a Tanglewood season. His Saint-Saens piece and its encore left all his listeners breathlessly pleased.

The closing Tchaikovsky "1812 Overture" was performed with excellent musicianship and very little else. The combined student and professional orchestra was swelled to number 191. This doubled the sound but not the involvement.

One thing was proven quite conclusively last night. The boorish attitude of television's Edmund Newman from NBC was as valuable to the understanding and transmission of the concert as an air filled with static.

The National Broadcasting Company televised the final concert nationwide. The conduct of Newman in interviews and the manner with which he delivered program notes did more harm than good.

A very fine musical presentation was distorted and fragmented for millions of people by the manner in which a network bungled the job. When will the Boston Symphony stop trading reputation for commercial advertising?

Tanglewood on Parade

BANNER (e)
BENNINGTON, VT.
CIRC. 5,300

AUG 16 1967 New England Newsclip

Trumpet Fanfare, Fireworks For Tanglewood-on-Parade

LENOX, Mass. — Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Berkshire Music Center, has announced the schedule of events for Tanglewood-on-Parade on Thursday.

Tanglewood grounds will open at 2 p.m. and at 2:15 the festivities will begin with a trumpet fanfare. The balance of the afternoon will be occupied by seven separate concerts and will conclude with a gala concert starting at 7:30 in the Music Shed.

The concert will open with performances by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Mozart's Overture from "Die Entfuehrung aus dem Serail," Dvorak's Symphony No. 9, "From the New World" and Saint-Saens' "Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso," for which Itzhak Perlman will be violin soloist. Concluding will be a performance of Tchaikovsky's "1812 Overture" by the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center Orchestras with cannons and salute guns. A display of fireworks will end the evening. The gala concert will be broadcast live and in color over the NBC television.

Concerts scheduled for the afternoon include a performance of the Boston University Tanglewood Young Artists Orchestra, Walter Eisenberg conductor, and Stanley Silverman, host (2:30 theatre); a song recital (3 - theatre); a fanfare of outdoor music for winds (4:15 - Main House Porch); a concert of chamber music (5 - Chamber Music Hall); a Composers' Forum (5 - Theatre), a choral concert (6 - Main House Porch); and a Fanfare (7:20 - Shed) to open the evening concert.

Reserved seats are available at $6, $5, $4 and $3.50. Unreserved seats will be available the afternoon of Tanglewood-on-Parade at $2.50. One ticket is good for all of the day's events.

For ticket and program information: Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240. (Telephone: 413-637-1600).

TRANSCRIPT (e)
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
CIRC. 13,350

AUG 18 1967 New England Newsclip

Viewers All Over Country See Tanglewood Concert

An estimated 20 million television viewers focused their eyes on Lenox last night as 198 stations on the NBC network broadcast the "Gala Concert" at Tanglewood. The two-hour telecast was the final event of the annual "Tanglewood-On-Parade" day which began at 2:30.

Some of the musicians could be seen squinting under the brilliant TV lights during the performance. Forty television engineers and executives had brought $5 million worth of equipment, including five cameras to provide coverage.

At 7:30 the Berkshire Symphony Orchestra, with Erich Leinsdorf on the podium, began with Mozart's Overture from "The Abduction from the Seraglio" and Dvorak's "New World Symphony."

During an intermission, TV viewers were treated to a series of very light, but interesting, interviews between Edwin Newman and members of the orchestra.

After the intermission the BSO played the "Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso" by Saint-Saens with 22-year-old Itzhak Perlman as solo violinist.

For the final piece, Tchaikovsky's "1812-Overture," the orchestra was joined by the 90 students who studied at Tanglewood this summer. Eight cannons boomed on the lawn during the famous, loud finale. Thirty seconds of aerial fireworks were also set off for the TV cameras.

Total attendance for the day, which included separate concerts by each of the six performing departments in the center, was just under 8,000. During most of the afternoon there were as many people strolling about the grounds with ears open as listeners sitting still.

TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM (e)
HOLYOKE, MASS.
CIRC. 26,950

AUG 18 1967 New England Newsclip

69

8,000 On Hand To View Tanglewood-On-Parade

The annual celebration that is called Tanglewood - on - Parade took place Thursday, with nearly 8,000 people moving from lawns to the various auditoriums on the grounds during the afternoon and evening. A rousing climax was the evening concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, under the eyes of five television cameras filming it for live color broadcast. It ended at 9:30 with the 1812 Overture of Tchaikovsky, performed with real cannons and fireworks at the finale.

This spectacular way of presenting the 1812 Overture is coming to be a Berkshire Festival specialty and it is very exciting indeed. The earlier part of the program was less showy but also memorable as the young Israeli violinist Itzhak Perlman played the lovely Saint-Saens Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso. He was called back for many bows.

Before the intermission a rather hasty Overture from "Die Entfuehrung aus dem Serail" opened the program, revealing consciousness of the TV cameras and schedule. Half way through Dvorak's New World Symphony conductor Erich Leinsdorf and the orchestra seemed to find their pace. The last movement was splendid.

This was just part of an elaborate program of overlapping concerts, indoors and out, including fanfares, that exhibited the high talents of the students of the Berkshire Music Center, all of whom seem to be gifted singers or instrumentalists. There was also a session of the composers' forum, a youth concert by the Boston University Tanglewood Young Artists Orchestra, and even a talk on how the evening concert would be televised.

The occasion was also used for announcement of the 12 prize-winners of the Berkshire Music Center summer program. The 12 young artists so honored are Laura Kimble of San Carlos, Calif., 'cellist; Douglas Bairstow of Dalton, oboist; Ann Golden of Canada and Queen Ann Alajia of Watertown, vocalists; Charles Van Tassel of Chicago, baritone; Claudia Rantucci of Buffalo, violinist; Makato Michii of Japan, doublebassist; Christopher Wolfe of Baltimore, clarinetist; Mary Hagg Gallagher of Ireland, violinist; George Edwards of Wellesley, composition; James Paul of Oberlin, conducting, and Peter Champman of Canada, trumpet player.

The Berkshire Festival will continue for three more concerts, tonight, Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE (e)
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
CIRC. 14,250

AUG 22 1967 New England Newsclip

Tanglewood-On-Parade Ends With Traditional Bang

What must be one of the loudest performances of the Tchiakovsky "1812 Overture" on record, complete with fireworks, Eastover cannon and salute guns, was the traditional climax of the gala concert presented last night by the combined Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center orchestras as the final event of the annual program "Tanglewood-on-parade."

The proceedings began at 2:15 with a fanfare, and continued with a youth concert in the theatre-concert hall, a song recital in the chamber music hall, a program of outdoor music for brass and woodwinds on the porch of the main house, a chamber music concert, a composers' forum and a choral concert. All of the programs were designed to show off the accomplishments of the students at the Berkshire Music Center, and most of them were admirably presented. Especially gratifying was the choral concert on the main house porch, which included music of Bach, Byrd, Britten (with Hadley's Donna Klimoski as alto soloist), Brahms, Beethoven and Jacob Druckman, as well as three songs by Edwin London of Smith College.

It was the presentation by the Boston Symphony at 7:30 that was meant to be the high point of the day, however. The shed looked quite different for the occasion, largely because of the television lights and cameras (the entire concert was broadcast live), but the notable Boston Symphony sounded as superb as ever. The Mozart overture to the "Abduction of the Seraglio," was delightful: light, precise, and nicely drawn. It was a good choice for an opener, and the audience was as happy with the performance as the musicians were in playing the music of the master.

The Dvorak "Symphony No. 9" was also memorable. Written while the composer was visiting this country, and incorporating folk melodies (both from the new world and the old, by the way), it is a fine piece of music, and the orchestra did it splendid service. Conductor Erich Leinsdorf, who has a tendency towards relaxed tempi and who seems to prefer the expansive phrase to the impetus of the music's drama, did not (except for a slightly slow first movement) retard the pace, so that after a broad reading of the second movements (the familiar Largo), the Scherzo and the final movement were allowed to build to an exciting conclusion.

Unfortunately, from lesser but still marvelous Mozart and from eminently worthwhile Dvorak to the Saint-Saens and Tchiakovsky that completed the program was a precipitous falling off indeed. Saint-Saens' "Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso" does not even have the merit of being top-rank Saint-Saens, but Itzhak Perlman, violinist, and the combined orchestras took it all very seriously. Even they, however, hard as they worked, could not make something of nothing, although, as was demonstrated in the Tchaikovsky, the 191 musicians could make something ear-shattering out of just as little.

The audience was a very receptive one, and was indeed encouraged to applaud between movements of the symphony (Leinsdorf turned around to acknowledge it). It also went wild over everything else.

It is most curious, for neither the program itself (at least the last half of it) nor the behaviour of the spectators was typical of Tanglewood; and yet this is what was seen broadcast from coast to coast. It is sad to contemplate how taste and manners seem to disappear when a bathetic "pizzazz" takes their place, especially since the glimpse of Tanglewood that was offered to the nation was neither typical nor, finally, truthful. — B. D.

NEWS (e)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 98,600

AUG 18 1967 New England Newsclip

Seven Hours of Quality Music

By ARTHUR T. ANDREWES

Tanglewood on Parade is conceived each year as a showcase of the departmental productivity of the various musical divisions in the Berkshire Music Center. The Center is the educational wing of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

The day's events extended from 2:30 through 9:30 p.m. It was seven hours of quality musical performance in a setting that made converts out of the most skeptical. Not to be confused with the usual concert atmosphere, there was a festive mood that was not unlike that which surrounds a holiday outing.

Wagnerian fanfares initiated the program series with a dramatic call to Young Artist's Orchestra concert. These Boston University extension students played a schedule of Berlioz, Sibelius, Brahms and Prokfiev. Overlapping this concert was an exciting song recital that found the divas and concert singers of tomorrow performing all manner of works from opera and Gilbert and Sullivan, to the difficult German Lieder.

The location of the concert for brass and woodwinds was a disadvantage to the production. Set on the front porch of the Main House the lack of theatrical confinement meant the loss of certain subtle and sensitive woodwind sounds.

One of the most brilliant presentations of the afternoon took place in the Chamber Music Hall where an Octet by Enesco was preceded by a magnificent performance of the Tchaikovsky "Trio for Violin, Cello and Piano." No finer rendition or artistic interpretation of this piece could be asked.

With a composers forum of contemporary music and a choral concert the afternoon —early evening performances were drawn to a close and the attention of the audiences, drawn by particular interests, focused on the Music Shed and the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf.

The concert was no less than the usual high quality that marks the conduct of that great aggrregation. After an ordinary opening with Mozart's "Overture to the Abduction from the Seraglio," Leinsdorf moved to the well known "New World Symphony" by Dvorak.

Maestro Leinsdorf is endowed with a natural sensitivity. He is entitled to his own interpretation of the various works performed. However, there were passages in the Dvorak piece that required more strength and emotional outpouring than was present last night.

The accomplished artistry of Itzahk Perlman created quite a stir. And well it might. This virtuoso violinist threw the evening into high gear with his fantastic control and feeling. This type of quality musician should be seen more often during a Tanglewood season. His Saint-Saens piece and its encore left all his listeners breathlessly pleased.

The closing Tchaikovsky "1812 Overture" was performed with excellent musicianship and very little else. The combined student and professional orchestra was swelled to number 191. This doubled the sound but not the involvement.

One thing was proven quite conclusively last night. The boorish attitude of television's Edmund Newman from NBC was as valuable to the understanding and transmission of the concert as an air filled with static.

The National Broadcasting Company televised the final concert nationwide. The conduct of Newman in interviews and the manner with which he delivered program notes did more harm than good.

A very fine musical presentation was distorted and fragmented for millions of people by the manner in which a network bungled the job. When will the Boston Symphony stop trading reputation for commercial advertising?

Tanglewood on Parade

BANNER (e)
BENNINGTON, VT.
CIRC. 5,300

AUG 16 1967 New England Newsclip

Trumpet Fanfare, Fireworks For Tanglewood-on-Parade

LENOX, Mass. — Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Berkshire Music Center, has announced the schedule of events for Tanglewood-on-Parade on Thursday.

Tanglewood grounds will open at 2 p.m. and at 2:15 the festivities will begin with a trumpet fanfare. The balance of the afternoon will be occupied by seven separate concerts and will conclude with a gala concert starting at 7:30 in the Music Shed.

The concert will open with performances by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Mozart's Overture from "Die Entfuehrung aus dem Serail," Dvorak's Symphony No. 9, "From the New World" and Saint-Saens' "Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso," for which Itzhak Perlman will be violin soloist. Concluding will be a performance of Tchaikovsky's "1812 Overture" by the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center Orchestras with cannons and salute guns. A display of fireworks will end the evening. The gala concert will be broadcast live and in color over the NBC television.

Concerts scheduled for the afternoon include a performance of the Boston University Tanglewood Young Artists Orchestra, Walter Eisenberg conductor, and Stanley Silverman, host (2:30 theatre); a song recital (3 - theatre); a fanfare of outdoor music for winds (4:15 - Main House Porch); a concert of chamber music (5 - Chamber Music Hall); a Composers' Forum (5 - Theatre), a choral concert (6 - Main House Porch); and a Fanfare (7:20 - Shed) to open the evening concert.

Reserved seats are available at $6, $5, $4 and $3.50. Unreserved seats will be available the afternoon of Tanglewood-on-Parade at $2.50. One ticket is good for all of the day's events.

For ticket and program information: Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240. (Telephone: 413-637-1600).

TRANSCRIPT (e)
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
CIRC. 13,350

AUG 18 1967 New England Newsclip

Viewers All Over Country See Tanglewood Concert

An estimated 20 million television viewers focused their eyes on Lenox last night as 198 stations on the NBC network broadcast the "Gala Concert" at Tanglewood. The two-hour telecast was the final event of the annual "Tanglewood-On-Parade" day which began at 2:30.

Some of the musicians could be seen squinting under the brilliant TV lights during the performance. Forty television engineers and executives had brought $5 million worth of equipment, including five cameras to provide coverage.

At 7:30 the Berkshire Symphony Orchestra, with Erich Leinsdorf on the podium, began with Mozart's Overture from "The Abduction from the Seraglio" and Dvorak's "New World Symphony."

During an intermission, TV viewers were treated to a series of very light, but interesting, interviews between Edwin Newman and members of the orchestra.

After the intermission the BSO played the "Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso" by Saint-Saens with 22-year-old Itzhak Perlman as solo violinist.

For the final piece, Tchaikovsky's "1812 Overture," the orchestra was joined by the 90 students who studied at Tanglewood this summer. Eight cannons boomed on the lawn during the famous, loud finale. Thirty seconds of aerial fireworks were also set off for the TV cameras.

Total attendance for the day, which included separate concerts by each of the six performing departments in the center, was just under 8,000. During most of the afternoon there were as many people strolling about the grounds with ears open as listeners sitting still.

TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM (e)
HOLYOKE, MASS.
CIRC. 26,950

AUG 18 1967 New England Newsclip

69

8,000 On Hand To View Tanglewood-On-Parade

The annual celebration that is called Tanglewood - on - Parade took place Thursday, with nearly 8,000 people moving from lawns to the various auditoriums on the grounds during the afternoon and evening. A rousing climax was the evening concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, under the eyes of five television cameras filming it for live color broadcast. It ended at 9:30 with the 1812 Overture of Tchaikovsky, performed with real cannons and fireworks at the finale.

This spectacular way of presenting the 1812 Overture is coming to be a Berkshire Festival specialty and it is very exciting indeed. The earlier part of the program was less showy but also memorable as the young Israeli violinist Itzhak Perlman played the lovely Saint-Saens Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso. He was called back for many bows.

Before the intermission a rather hasty Overture from "Die Entfuehrung aus dem Serail" opened the program, revealing consciousness of the TV cameras and schedule. Half way through Dvorak's New World Symphony conductor Erich Leinsdorf and the orchestra seemed to find their pace. The last movement was splendid.

This was just part of an elaborate program of overlapping concerts, indoors and out, including fanfares, that exhibited the high talents of the students of the Berkshire Music Center, all of whom seem to be gifted singers or instrumentalists. There was also a session of the composers' forum, a youth concert by the Boston University Tanglewood Young Artists Orchestra, and even a talk on how the evening concert would be televised.

The occasion was also used for announcement of the 12 prize-winners of the Berkshire Music Center summer program. The 12 young artists so honored are Laura Kimble of San Carlos, Calif., 'cellist; Douglas Bairstow of Dalton, oboist; Ann Golden of Canada and Queen Ann Alajia of Watertown, vocalists; Charles Van Tassel of Chicago, baritone; Claudia Rantucci of Buffalo, violinist; Makato Michii of Japan, doublebassist; Christopher Wolfe of Baltimore, clarinetist; Mary Hagg Gallagher of Ireland, violinist; George Edwards of Wellesley, composition; James Paul of Oberlin, conducting, and Peter Champman of Canada, trumpet player.

The Berkshire Festival will continue for three more concerts, tonight, Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE (e)
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
CIRC. 14,250

AUG 22 1967 New England Newsclip

Tanglewood-On-Parade Ends With Traditional Bang

What must be one of the loudest performances of the Tchiakovsky "1812 Overture" on record, complete with fireworks, Eastover cannon and salute guns, was the traditional climax of the gala concert presented last night by the combined Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center orchestras as the final event of the annual program "Tanglewood-on-parade."

The proceedings began at 2:15 with a fanfare, and continued with a youth concert in the theatre-concert hall, a song recital in the chamber music hall, a program of outdoor music for brass and woodwinds on the porch of the main house, a chamber music concert, a composers' forum and a choral concert. All of the programs were designed to show off the accomplishments of the students at the Berkshire Music Center, and most of them were admirably presented. Especially gratifying was the choral concert on the main house porch, which included music of Bach, Byrd, Britten (with Hadley's Donna Klimoski as alto soloist), Brahms, Beethoven and Jacob Druckman, as well as three songs by Edwin London of Smith College.

It was the presentation by the Boston Symphony at 7:30 that was meant to be the high point of the day, however. The shed looked quite different for the occasion, largely because of the television lights and cameras (the entire concert was broadcast live), but the notable Boston Symphony sounded as superb as ever. The Mozart overture to the "Abduction of the Seraglio," was delightful: light, precise, and nicely drawn. It was a good choice for an opener, and the audience was as happy with the performance as the musicians were in playing the music of the master.

The Dvorak "Symphony No. 9" was also memorable. Written while the composer was visiting this country, and incorporating folk melodies (both from the new world and the old, by the way), it is a fine piece of music, and the orchestra did it splendid service. Conductor Erich Leinsdorf, who has a tendency towards relaxed tempi and who seems to prefer the expansive phrase to the impetus of the music's drama, did not (except for a slightly slow first movement) retard the pace, so that after a broad reading of the second movements (the familiar Largo), the Scherzo and the final movement were allowed to build to an exciting conclusion.

Unfortunately, from lesser but still marvelous Mozart and from eminently worthwhile Dvorak to the Saint-Saens and Tchiakovsky that completed the program was a precipitous falling off indeed. Saint-Saens' "Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso" does not even have the merit of being top-rank Saint-Saens, but Itzhak Perlman, violinist, and the combined orchestras took it all very seriously. Even they, however, hard as they worked, could not make something of nothing, although, as was demonstrated in the Tchaikovsky, the 191 musicians could make something ear-shattering out of just as little.

The audience was a very receptive one, and was indeed encouraged to applaud between movements of the symphony (Leinsdorf turned around to acknowledge it). It also went wild over everything else.

It is most curious, for neither the program itself (at least the last half of it) nor the behaviour of the spectators was typical of Tanglewood; and yet this is what was seen broadcast from coast to coast. It is sad to contemplate how taste and manners seem to disappear when a bathetic "pizzazz" takes their place, especially since the glimpse of Tanglewood that was offered to the nation was neither typical nor, finally, truthful. — B. D.

70

BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTRE PRE - SEASON 1967

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,200
MAR 4 1967
New England Newsclip

Music Center Lists Dates For Auditions

BOSTON — The Berkshire Music Center, the summer educational center for the advanced study of music maintained by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, has announced the locations of auditions for its 1967 fellowship program.

To qualify for full or associate fellowships at the eigth-week session of the Music Center all instrumentalists, singers and pianists must take part in the auditions. The minimum age for full fellows is 21 and 18 for associate fellows. The Music Center's Fellows take part in the orchestra and chamber music programs of the Center and may attend the concerts and rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival. This summer's session of the Berkshire Music Center opens on June 25 and continues through Aug. 19.

Audition Times

In New York auditions will be held at Carnegie Hall on the following days: April 12, 1 to 4 p.m. for strings; April 13, 1 to 4 p.m. for woodwinds; April 14, 1 to 4 p.m. for brass; and March 4 and April 15, 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. for instrumentalists, singers and pianists.

All Boston auditions will be held at Symphony Hall on March 30 from 1 to 4 p.m.

Percussion and harp auditions will be by appointment only. Further information may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass. 02115.

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350
APR 24 1967
New England Newsclip

Regional Roundup

Four Will Compose Music for August Tanglewood Series

The Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer educational center at Tanglewood in Lenox, and the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago have made four commissions for music to be performed at the center's festival of contemporary music in August.

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the music center, in announcing the commissions Sunday said that this summer the center and the Fromm Foundation will begin their second decade of joint participation in contemporary musical activities at Tanglewood.

One From U. S.

Commissions for 1967 have been awarded to Carlos Roque Alsina, 26, a native of Argentina who now lives in Berlin, John C. Eaton, 32, of Bryn Mawr, Pa., Jeffrey Levine, 24, of New York City and R. Murray Schafer, 34, of Sarnia, Ontario, Can.

Alsina, most recently a member of the Center of the Creative and Performing Arts at Buffalo's State University and assistant conductor of the Deutsche Opera Berlin, has been commissioned for an instrumental chamber work.

An orchestral music will be written by John Eaton, who has been awarded three Prix de Rome and two Guggenheim Fellowships.

Bass Player

Levine is bass player with the Contemporary Chamber Ensemble at Rutgers, where he is also lecturer in music. His commission also is for instrumental chamber music.

A choral piece will be written by Canadian composer Schafer, who since 1965 has been on the staff of Simon Fraser University, Burnaby, British Columbia.

This summer's festival of contemporary American music will take place from August 9 to August 17 with seven concerts scheduled. During this period the premieres of the newly-commissioned music will be given.

MERCURY (e)
MEDFORD, MASS.
CIRC. 8,200
APR 20 1967
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Art Center Scheduled

BOSTON—A professional art school is taking up residence at Tanglewood this summer thanks to the Berkshire Music Center and Boston University.

At the invitation of Erich Leinsdorf, director of the Center, Professor David Aronson (Brimstone Lane, South Sudbury) and other members of the Boston University Division of Art are establishing the summer art program. Aronson is a distinguished painter and sculptor.

The school will be conducted on two levels, basic and advanced, with each level providing instruction in drawing and painting. Six semester hours credit is given for each level.

The eight-week (June 25-Aug. 20) school is open to serious students of art in college and to exceptionally qualified high school students.

A series of visiting critics will join the summer school faculty in lectures, seminars and group critiques. They include painters Walter Murch and Jack Levine and Jack Tworkov, painter and chairman of the Yale University Art Department. Murch is an associate professor of art at Boston University's School of Fine and Applied Arts.

Each applicant is required to submit a portfolio of his work before May 1 to Boston University at Tanglewood, Division of Art, Boston University School of Fine and Applied Arts, 855 Commonwealth ave., Boston, Mass., 02215. Joseph Ablow is chairman of the Division of Art.

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800
APR 17 1967
New England Newsclip

MUSIC COURSES TO RESUME

A program for high school juniors who are gifted instrumentalists will be offered for the second summer at Tanglewood under the joint sponsorship of Boston University, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center from June 25 through Aug. 20.

The courses, which can be applied toward a Bachelor of Music degree at B.U., will include applied music, music theory, and orchestra and chamber music. The faculty will be drawn from the B. U. School of Fine and Applied Arts and from the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Information on the program may be obtained from Dr. Wilbur Fullbright, Boston University School of Fine and Applied Arts, 855 Commonwealth ave., Boston.

ITEM (e)
WAKEFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 6,600
APR 14 1967
New England Newsclip

Summer Music For H.S. Juniors

For the second summer, Boston University, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the Berkshire Music Center are pooling their academic and musical talents to offer a program aimed specifically at high school juniors who are gifted instrumentalists.

The courses at Tanglewood, which can be applied toward a Bachelor of Music degree at B.U. will include applied music, music theory and orchestra and chamber music. The faculty will be drawn from the B.U. School of Fine and Applied Arts and from the ranks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who also teach at B.U.'s School of Fine and Applied Arts.

The program begins June 25 and continues through Aug. 20 at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The applied music course will offer private instruction with Roman Totenberg, violinist, and Leslie Parnus, cellist as well as with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Music study classes will be led by Artin S. Arslanian, theorist, who will outline creative musicianship. The orchestra and chamber music will offer an intensive program in orchestra performance with conductor Walter Eisenberg.

Students will also have the cultural opportunity of attending rehearsals and concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and chamber music performances by the Berkshire Music Center.

The program is designed to be an extension and enrichment of previous study for high school students who have completed their junior year and will enter their senior year in September. Further information may be obtained from Dr. Wilbur Fullbright, B. U. School of Fine and Applied Arts, 855 Commonwealth ave, Boston.

SUNDAY TELEGRAM
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 104,900
MAY 14 1967
New England Newsclip

Music

Berkshire Center Plans 4 New Works

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

By comparison with past eras, three months is a considerable time for a composer to write a commissioned work for a specific occasion.

Four such compositions will be played at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, at the Festival of Contemporary Music, Aug. 8 and 9, 14 and 15.

Commissions are from the Berkshire Center and the Fromm Music Foundation in Chicago. Announcement came from Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony which maintains the Center as its summer educational project.

This is the 11th summer that the Center and Fromm Foundation have so collaborated. Concerning this happy union, Leinsdorf said, "Without the continued assistance of Paul Fromm, this little festival within a festival would not be possible." He was referring, of course, to the Berkshire Music Festival which will be held from June 30 through Aug. 20.

Commissions for 1967 have been awarded to Carlos Roque Alsina, 26, a native of Argentina for an instrumental chamber work; John C. Eaton, 32, Bryn Mawr, Pa., orchestral music; Jeffrey Levine, 24, New York City instrumental chamber music; R. Murray Schafer 34, Sarnia, Ontario, Canada, a choral piece.

COMMISSIONS — Twentieth century commissioning is a continuation of a practice that was virtually the main support of composers during the classic or Viennese era. Among those who benefited the most were Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven.

The least financial benefit was through publication. Mainly, the old masters wrote works that were frequently "dedicated" to the patron. This resulted in profitable goodwill and public or private performances.

A vastly different situation exists today and it completely removes the stigma of charity.

For example, Norman Dello Joio, chairman of the Music Educators National Conference Contemporary Music Project recently announced that 17 young composers have been awarded fellowships.

These are for a minimum sum of $5,500 each, administered under grants from the Ford Foundation. Serving as composers - in - residence in school systems, such composers have no specific teaching duties. During the year, they write original works for the bands, orchestras, choruses, and other ensembles in their host schools.

OPERATIC BLUES — Discussing the Metropolitan Opera's first season in its new home in Lincoln Center, Harold C. Schoenberg, music critic for the New York Times, presents a long list of liabilities and plenty of red ink.

Among the non-artistic nuisances were a threatened orchestral strike, machinery that did not work, productions that were canceled and rescheduled, and steps in front of the building on which persons tripped and brought law suits.

In addition were the astronomical deficit of $6.6 million dollars by the parent company, and deficit of $1,100,000 by the National Company which it sponsors.

All of which explains the nationwide musical poorhouse alarms. Boston music culture is asking for $5.5 million. In Philadelphia the asking is for $10 million.

In New York the proposed bite is $13 million, but it is for the Met Opera as for Leonard Bernstein's New York Philharmonic.

These requests are for contributions, in addition to the price of musical wares, the cost of a seat at the symphony or opera.

The extraordinary thing is that, in spite of increased ticket prices, it is "next to impossible" to get into the Met or symphony.

During its recent Boston season, the Boston Opera Association sponsoring the Met returned thousands of checks to prospective patrons because War Memorial Auditorium was sold out.

In a recent article, Delos Smith of UPI points out that a first-rate symphony conductor can't be had for less than $50,000 a year. Musicians generally cost a minimum of $14,000 a year. Executive salaries run high, sage hands and technicians.

Concerning musicians, Smith says, "Their skills are at least comparable to those of plumbers and electricians, and should be as well rewarded."

This Week In Music

TODAY

Berj Zamgochian, organist, dedication concert, Gilbert and Anna Chabot Memorial Organ, Assumption Preparatory School, Hebert Memorial Auditorium, 4 p.m. (tickets).

Honegger's "King David," First Unitarian Church Choir, 8 p.m. (free).

FRIDAY

"Finian's Rainbow," Worcester County Light Opera Club, Atwood Hall, Clark University, 8:15 p.m. (tickets). Repeated Saturday and Sunday evenings.

Temple Emanuel annual music festival, 8:15 p.m. (free).

70

BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTRE PRE - SEASON 1967

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (r)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,200
MAR 4 1967
New England Newsclip

Music Center Lists Dates For Auditions

BOSTON — The Berkshire Music Center, the summer educational center for the advanced study of music maintained by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, has announced the locations of auditions for its 1967 fellowship program.

To qualify for full or associate fellowships at the eigth-week session of the Music Center all instrumentalists, singers and pianists must take part in the auditions. The minimum age for full fellows is 21 and 18 for associate fellows. The Music Center's Fellows take part in the orchestra and chamber music programs of the Center and may attend the concerts and rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival. This summer's session of the Berkshire Music Center opens on June 25 and continues through Aug. 19.

Audition Times

In New York auditions will be held at Carnegie Hall on the following days: April 12, 1 to 4 p.m. for strings; April 13, 1 to 4 p.m. for woodwinds; April 14, 1 to 4 p.m. for brass; and March 4 and April 15, 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. for instrumentalists, singers and pianists.

All Boston auditions will be held at Symphony Hall on March 30 from 1 to 4 p.m.

Percussion and harp auditions will be by appointment only. Further information may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass. 02115.

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350
APR 24 1967
New England Newsclip

Regional Roundup

Four Will Compose Music for August Tanglewood Series

The Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer educational center at Tanglewood in Lenox, and the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago have made four commissions for music to be performed at the center's festival of contemporary music in August.

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the music center, in announcing the commissions Sunday said that this summer the center and the Fromm Foundation will begin their second decade of joint participation in contemporary musical activities at Tanglewood.

One From U. S.

Commissions for 1967 have been awarded to Carlos Roque Alsina, 26, a native of Argentina who now lives in Berlin, John C. Eaton, 32, of Bryn Mawr, Pa., Jeffrey Levine, 24, of New York City and R. Murray Schafer, 34, of Sarnia, Ontario, Can.

Alsina, most recently a member of the Center of the Creative and Performing Arts at Buffalo's State University and assistant conductor of the Deutsche Opera Berlin, has been commissioned for an instrumental chamber work.

An orchestral music will be written by John Eaton, who has been awarded three Prix de Rome and two Guggenheim Fellowships.

Bass Player

Levine is bass player with the Contemporary Chamber Ensemble at Rutgers, where he is also lecturer in music. His commission also is for instrumental chamber music.

A choral piece will be written by Canadian composer Schafer, who since 1965 has been on the staff of Simon Fraser University, Burnaby, British Columbia.

This summer's festival of contemporary American music will take place from August 9 to August 17 with seven concerts scheduled. During this period the premieres of the newly-commissioned music will be given.

ITEM (e)
WAKEFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 6,600
APR 14 1967
New England Newsclip

Summer Music For H.S. Juniors

For the second summer, Boston University, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the Berkshire Music Center are pooling their academic and musical talents to offer a program aimed specifically at high school juniors who are gifted instrumentalists.

The courses at Tanglewood, which can be applied toward a Bachelor of Music degree at B.U. will include applied music, music theory and orchestra and chamber music. The faculty will be drawn from the B.U. School of Fine and Applied Arts and from the ranks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who also teach at B.U.'s School of Fine and Applied Arts.

The program begins June 25 and continues through Aug. 20 at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The applied music course will offer private instruction with Roman Totenberg, violinist, and Leslie Parnus, cellist as well as with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Music study classes will be led by Artin S. Arslanian, theorist, who will outline creative musicianship. The orchestra and chamber music will offer an intensive program in orchestra performance with conductor Walter Eisenberg.

Students will also have the cultural opportunity of attending rehearsals and concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and chamber music performances by the Berkshire Music Center.

The program is designed to be an extension and enrichment of previous study for high school students who have completed their junior year and will enter their senior year in September. Further information may be obtained from Dr. Wilbur Fullbright, B. U. School of Fine and Applied Arts, 855 Commonwealth ave, Boston.

MERCURY (e)
MEDFORD, MASS.
APR 20 1967
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Art Center Scheduled

BOSTON—A professional art school is taking up residence at Tanglewood this summer thanks to the Berkshire Music Center and Boston University.

At the invitation of Erich Leinsdorf, director of the Center, Professor David Aronson (Brimstone Lane, South Sudbury) and other members of the Boston University Division of Art are establishing the summer art program. Aronson is a distinguished painter and sculptor.

The school will be conducted on two levels, basic and advanced, with each level providing instruction in drawing and painting. Six semester hours credit is given for each level.

The eight-week (June 25-Aug. 20) school is open to serious students of art in college and to exceptionally qualified high school students.

A series of visiting critics will join the summer school faculty in lectures, seminars and group critiques. They include painters Walter Murch and Jack Levine and Jack Tworkov, painter and chairman of the Yale University Art Department. Murch is an associate professor of art at Boston University's School of Fine and Applied Arts.

Each applicant is required to submit a portfolio of his work before May 1 to Boston University at Tanglewood, Division of Art, Boston University School of Fine and Applied Arts, 855 Commonwealth ave., Boston, Mass., 02215. Joseph Ablow is chairman of the Division of Art.

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800
APR 17 1967
New England Newsclip

MUSIC COURSES TO RESUME

A program for high school juniors who are gifted instrumentalists will be offered for the second summer at Tanglewood under the joint sponsorship of Boston University, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center from June 25 through Aug. 20.

The courses, which can be applied toward a Bachelor of Music degree at B.U., will include applied music, music theory, and orchestra and chamber music. The faculty will be drawn from the B. U. School of Fine and Applied Arts and from the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Information on the program may be obtained from Dr. Wilbur Fullbright, Boston University School of Fine and Applied Arts, 855 Commonwealth ave., Boston.

SUNDAY TELEGRAM
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 104,900
MAY 14 1967
New England Newsclip

Music — Berkshire Center Plans 4 New Works

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

By comparison with past eras, three months is a considerable time for a composer to write a commissioned work for a specific occasion.

Four such compositions will be played at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, at the Festival of Contemporary Music, Aug. 8 and 9, 14 and 15.

Commissions are from the Berkshire Center and the Fromm Music Foundation in Chicago. Announcement came from Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony which maintains the Center as its summer educational project.

This is the 11th summer that the Center and Fromm Foundation have so collaborated. Concerning this happy union, Leinsdorf said, "Without the continued assistance of Paul Fromm, this little festival within a festival would not be possible." He was referring, of course, to the Berkshire Music Festival which will be held from June 30 through Aug. 20.

Commissions for 1967 have been awarded to Carlos Roque Alsina, 26, a native of Argentina for an instrumental chamber work; John C. Eaton, 32, Bryn Mawr, Pa., orchestral music; Jeffrey Levine, 24, New York City instrumental chamber music; R. Murray Schafer 34, Sarnia, Ontario, Canada, a choral piece.

COMMISSIONS — Twentieth century commissioning is a continuation of a practice that was virtually the main support of composers during the classic or Viennese era. Among those who benefited the most were Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven.

The least financial benefit was through publication. Mainly, the old masters wrote works that were frequently "dedicated" to the patron. This resulted in profitable goodwill and public or private performances.

A vastly different situation exists today and it completely removes the stigma of charity.

For example, Norman Dello Joio, chairman of the Music Educators National Conference Contemporary Music Project recently announced that 17 young composers have been awarded fellowships.

These are for a minimum sum of $5,500 each, administered under grants from the Ford Foundation. Serving as composers - in - residence in school systems, such composers have no specific teaching duties. During the year, they write original works for the bands, orchestras, choruses, and other ensembles in their host schools.

OPERATIC BLUES — Discussing the Metropolitan Opera's first season in its new home in Lincoln Center, Harold C. Schoenberg, music critic for the New York Times, presents a long list of liabilities and plenty of red ink.

Among the non-artistic nuisances were a threatened orchestral strike, machinery that did not work, productions that were canceled and rescheduled, and steps in front of the building on which persons tripped and brought law suits.

In addition were the astronomical deficit of $6.6 million dollars by the parent company, and deficit of $1,100,000 by the National Company which it sponsors.

All of which explains the nationwide musical poorhouse alarms. Boston music culture is asking for $5.5 million. In Philadelphia the asking is for $10 million.

In New York the proposed bite is $13 million, but it is for the Met Opera as for Leonard Bernstein's New York Philharmonic.

These requests are for contributions, in addition to the price of musical wares, the cost of a seat at the symphony or opera.

The extraordinary thing is that, in spite of increased ticket prices, it is "next to impossible" to get into the Met or symphony.

During its recent Boston season, the Boston Opera Association sponsoring the Met returned thousands of checks to prospective patrons because War Memorial Auditorium was sold out.

In a recent article, Delos Smith of UPI points out that a first-rate symphony conductor can't be had for less than $50,000 a year. Musicians generally cost a minimum of $14,000 a year. Executive salaries run high, sage hands and technicians.

Concerning musicians, Smith says, "Their skills are at least comparable to those of plumbers and electricians, and should be as well rewarded."

This Week In Music

TODAY

Berj Zamgochian, organist, dedication concert, Gilbert and Anna Chabot Memorial Organ, Assumption Preparatory School, Hebert Memorial Auditorium, 4 p.m. (tickets).

Honegger's "King David," First Unitarian Church Choir, 8 p.m. (free).

FRIDAY

"Finlan's Rainbow," Worcester County Light Opera Club, Atwood Hall, Clark University, 8:15 p.m. (tickets). Repeated Saturday and Sunday evenings.

Temple Emanuel annual music festival, 8:15 p.m. (free).

ITEM (e)
LYNN, MASS.
CIRC. 34,350
APR 13 1967
New England Newsclip

Sights and Sidelights

BY THE SIGHTSEER

From A Hobby To A Business

Two former clubwomen, with a penchant for work, have turned a hobby into a successful business here in Lynn.

Mrs. Vivian Weisman, 32 Vine St., and Mrs. Esther Goldstein, 13 Seaside Ter., explain their start. "We were both active in several groups, and we seemed to have built up a reputation for sending out bulletins, newsletters and announcements."

They were so good at it that friends and neighbors called on them for help, too.

Now they have a bustling two-room office at 31 Exchange St., where as Vesta Mailing Service (a combination of their first names) they run a combination direct mail business and personalized gift service.

Both women have served as president of the Sisterhood at Congregation Anshai Sfard. Mrs. Weisman was formerly secretary to the program director at the Jewish Community Center on Market St. for 17 years, and Mrs. Goldstein was secretary to the executive director for 13 years.

Their office reflects the femininity of the business partners. A glass-front cabinet holds a display of some of the unusual custom-styled china pieces they design by hand. There are ashtrays, cigaret urns, anniversary plates, as well as colorful paper products and initialed champagne and brandy glasses.

Vivian is married to Paul Weisman and they have a 14-year-old daughter Ellen, who's a student at Cobbet Junior High. Esther and her husband Louis are the parents of two daughters, Marsha, 20, who attends Suffolk University, and Harriet, 16, a student at Lynn English High.

* * *

A SEARCH FOR GIFTED MUSICIANS who are juniors in high school is aimed at finding students for the special Boston University-sponsored program at Tanglewood this summer. The university, in conjunction with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center, will sponsor applied music study, both private and class, from June 25 through Aug. 21.

"We hope to provide an atmosphere of challenge from which will come the fullest realization that musicians are artists, by offering an intensive and protracted contact with actual performance on the highest level" says Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the music center.

High school juniors interested in the program may contact Dr. Wilbur Fullbright, Boston University School of Fine and Applied Arts, 855 Commonwealth Ave., Boston.

* * *

POTPOURRI — A former Lynn man, William J. Grattan, Jr., now a project developer, is receiving favorable comment in St. Petersburgh, Fla., for his proposed 94-unit rental apartment complex in that city. To be called Velvet Cloake, the waterfront apartment buildings in an Old English architectural and decorating theme will cost $1,200,000, including land, when completed by the end of this year. . . . Addressing Brown University, former CBS News President Fred W. Friendly recalled on WGBH-TV that his first broadcast, in 1937, was a five-minute biography of "the genius of General Electric, Charles P. Steinmetz" for a program he originally called, "Footprints in the Sands of Time" . . . Mexican Consul and Mrs. Jaime Pena-Vera of Swampscott entertained the Ambassador of Mexico, Hugo Margain, at a party at their home. Local guests included Dr. and Mrs. Charles Donovan, also of Swampscott.

SUNDAY TELEGRAM
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 104,900
MAY 7 1967
New England Newsclip

Music

New $300 Awards For Students

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

Young Artists Awards has new scholarships of $300 each available to young women students, residents of Massachusetts, for the pursuit of their music education.

Beginning next September, these new scholarships will be in addition to those already awarded and are subject to renewal by decision of the trustees.

For the first time since these awards were instituted in 1950, a scholarship will also be awarded to a young woman for study at the Berkshire Music Center, educational department of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Lenox. Auditions have already been held.

Audition Date

New candidates for the regular awards will be heard by a board of judges Thursday evening, June 8, at 45 West Hill Drive, Worcester. The judges will be announced shortly.

Recipients of these scholarships, under the terms of the anonymous trust, are to be "such female students of music who are residents of Massachusetts, and who are in need of financial assistance, as deemed by the trustees to be the most worthy and deserving of assistance."

All scholarships must be applied toward tuition in accredited institutions of musical learning. These may be anywhere in the United States. Each candidate must be working for a degree with a music major.

Age limits are freshman, not over 22 years of age; sophomore, 23; junior, 24; senior, 25. Scholarships are not available for graduate study.

Requests for audition forms can be obtained by writing to Raymond Morin, chairman, Young Artists Awards, 45 West Hill Drive, Worcester, 01609.

Auditions are by appointment only. Deadline for applications must be postmarked not later than midnight Wednesday, May 31.

Fields of Study

Applicants may major in piano, voice and any instrument of a symphony orchestra; also organ, music education, sacred music, public school music and music therapy.

Since 1950, some 85 young women have been assisted with their education in more than 30 musical institutions throughout the country.

Present scholarship holders are at Anna Maria College, Eastern Nazarene College, State College at Lowell, Atlantic Union College, University of Hartford, Evansville (Indiana) College, New England Conservatory of Music, Union University (Jackson, Tenn.), Wittenberg University (Springfield, Ohio) and Oberlin College.

SOAP FOR MAYER — Beethoven could have made excellent use of the money that will be derived from the auctioning of his shopping list in London on May 16.

He could also have used some of the soap that he bought as a gift for Johann Sebastian Mayer. Other items on the list were three pounds each of molded and ordinary candles.

In spite of rough going, Mayer and Beethoven remained friends. Mayer was a good actor, stage director and a terrible singer.

Mayer originated the role of Pizarro in Beethoven's opera "Fidelio." He was so bad at the premiere in 1805 that the audience howled.

The singer defended himself by saying, "Never would my brother-in-law have composed such nonsense." His brother-in-law was Mozart.

Anyhow, he remained a true friend to Beethoven and even arranged some benefit concerts after the "Fidelio" fiasco. Proof of Beethoven's goodwill was the gift of soap.

There's always the possibility that Beethoven gave Mayer the soap so he could wash out his singing mouth.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,200
JUN 17 1967
New England Newsclip

Berkshire Music Center Plans June 25th Opening

Sunday afternoon, June 25, at 2:30 p.m. will mark the opening of the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer program for the advanced study of music. This year's session, which has an enrollment of more than 400 students, will open with ceremonies in which the principal address will be delivered by Erich Leinsdorf. Joining him will be Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager.

Functions of the Center

In addition to seminars and regular music courses, participants in the Music Center session will take part in more than 30 concerts which are opened to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, those who make voluntary contributions for the support of the Center's activities. Of the total enrollment, 125 students will be members of the fellowship program which is designed to assist young performers. Its emphasis is on chamber music for advanced instrumentalists, singers, and composers.

Continuing a program inaugurated last year, Boston University's school of fine and applied arts and the New England Conservatory will provide college credit music courses and a theatre program carreid on in association with the Berkshire Theatre Festival in its operations at Tanglewood.

The opening exercises at Tanglewood will take place in the theatre, and the public is invited. Tea will afterwards be served in the Tanglewood Garden.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600
JUN 18 1967
New England Newsclip

Berkshire Music Center Opens Sunday, June 25

The Berkshire Music Center opens its 27th season at Tanglewood on June 25. Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony and its music center, will give the principal address. Ceremonies, which begin at 2:30, will include the singing of Randall Thompson's Alleluia by the student enrollment of 250.

Music Center faculties are headed by Joseph Silverstein, Gunther Schuller, Louis Speyer, Claude Frank and Boston Symphony players who teach instrumental music.

In addition, the music center is associated with Boston University and the New England Conservatory, which offers courses in music, acting, dance and art at Tanglewood.

Of the center's total enrollment, 125 will be members of the fellowship program. These young, professional musicians are continuing work in singing, playing, conducting and composition. The Tanglewood Institute is for laymen and amateurs. Both groups will give about 80 concerts during the eight-week season. Admission to these concerts is by donation to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Boston Symphony concerts are every Friday and Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon, June 29-Aug. 20.

The opening exercises of the music center are open to the public. A tea in the formal gardens will follow.

TRANSCRIPT (e)
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
CIRC. 13,500
JUN 19 1967
New England Newsclip

At Tanglewood

Berkshire Music Center To Begin Season Sunday

The Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer center for the advanced study of music, will begin its 27th session at Tanglewood in Lenox next Sunday afternoon with opening exercises at 2.30 in the theater.

During the week some 250 musicians will register for the eight week session held in conjunction with the orchestra's Berkshire Festival. Two programs inaugurated last year are being continued and expanded so as to bring the total enrollment to more than 400.

Boston University's School of Fine and Applied Arts and the New England Conservatory will include music courses for college credit at the Berkshire Music Center and a theater program carried on in association with the Berkshire Theatre Festival in their operations at Tanglewood. In addition, Boston University will inaugurate an eight week program in painting and drawing this summer.

Leinsdorf to Speak

Erich Leinsdorf will deliver the principal address at Sunday's exercises which include the traditional singing of Randall Thompson's Alleluia. This work written especially for the opening of the music center in 1940 and subsequently sung each year, will be conducted by Paul Calloway, organist and choirmaster of the Washington Cathedral and a member of the Berkshire Music Center faculty for the past three summers. Also joining in the opening exercises will be Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager.

Long time faculty members Joseph Silverstein and Gunther Schuller will return to the center as chairman of the faculty and head of the contemporary music activities respectively. Louis Speyer continues as assistant director of the music center. Claude Frank will serve as acting chairman of the Tanglewood Institute in the absence of Victor Babin who is on leave this session.

Fellowship Program

Of the music center's total enrollment 125 will be members of the fellowship program. The fellowship program is directed at those young musicians who have completed their training and are active performers. The program is designed to emphasize chamber music for advanced instrumentalists, singers and composers.

The Tanglewood Institute consisting of three seminars, each with an informational focus for its members, provides a program for the musical laymen teacher, student and non-performing musician in an environment where he may broaden his musical horizons.

Throughout the summer the participants in the music center will take part in more than 30 concerts and programs which are open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, those who make voluntary contributions for the support of the center's activities.

Sunday's exercises are open to the public and tea will be served in the Tanglewood garden immediately following the ceremonies.

72

Opening slated at Berkshire

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. — The Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer center for the advanced study of music will begin its 27th session here Sunday with opening exercises at 2:30 in the theater.

During the week some 250 musicians will register for the eight-week session held in conjunction with the orchestra's Berkshire Festival.

Two programs inaugurated last year are being expanded to bring the total enrollment to more than 400. Boston University's School of Fine and Applied Arts and the New England Conservatory will include music courses for college credit at the Berkshire Music Center and a theatre program carried on in association with the Berkshire Music Center and a theatre program carried on in association with the Berkshire Theatre Festival in their operations at Tanglewood.

In addition, Boston University will inaugurate an eight-week program in painting and drawing this summer.

Erich Leinsdorf will deliver the principal address at Sunday's exercises which include the traditional singing of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia." This work written especially for the opening of the music center in 1940 and sung each year, will be conducted by Paul Calloway, organist and choirmaster of the Washington Cathedral and a member of the Berkshire Music Center faculty for the past three summers.

Also joining in the opening exercises will be Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager.

Longtime faculty members Joseph Silverstein and Gunther Schuller will return to the center as chairman of the faculty and head of the contemporary music activities respectively. Louis Speyer continues as assistant director of the music center. Claude Frank will serve as acting chairman of the Tanglewood Institute in the absence of Victor Babin, who is on leave this session.

Of the Music Center's total enrollment, 125 will be members of the fellowship program directed at young musicians who have completed their training and are active performers. The program is designed to emphasize chamber music for advanced instrumentalists, singers and composers.

The Tanglewood Institute consisting of three seminars, each with an informational focus for its members, provides a program for the musical layman teacher, student and non-performing musician in an environment where he may broaden his musical horizons.

Throughout the summer the participants in the Music Center will take part in more than 30 concerts and programs which are open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, those who make voluntary contributions for the support of the center's activities.

SYRACUSE
Herald Journal
D. 133,303

JUN 21 1967

Leinsdorf Rained Out

Berkshire Center's Opening Is Stormy

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — More than 300 students of the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, expected to hear an inspiring, realistic talk by Erich Leinsdorf at the opening of the center's 27th session yesterday afternoon.

Among the students were 48 from 17 foreign countries.

Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony and director of the center, had prepared such an address. We received a copy.

He didn't give it.

As he was being introduced by Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony, one of tht Berkshire's famous storms broke.

Compares Situation

Leinsdorf likened the situation to another years ago when the start of such a storm coincided with the "Dies Irae" (Day of Judgment) theme in a work being performed by the orchestra.

That conductor may have kept going, but Leinsdorf gave up.

"I have nothing more to say," he shouted over the sound system. In United Nations' language he added, "and I waive the right for instantaneous translation."

Although the weather had been threatening, things went pretty well up to that point.

Perry said all the things necessary to make the students welcomed.

He introduced Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, widow of the famed Boston Symphony conductor who founded the center.

Recalls Husband's Career

Mrs. Koussevitzky recalled her late husband's early career when he sought recognition as a composer and had works published for the string bass.

She related Koussevitzky's complete lack of revenue from these pieces with his founding of a publishing house (Editions Russe), aid to young composers, through the Berkshire Center,

ERICH LEINSDORF

and commissioning of new works by the Koussevitzky Foundation.

Phyllis Curtin, Metropolitan Opera soprano and faculty member of the center, sang some emotion-ridden contemporary Spanish songs and Mozart's Alleluia. She was accompanied at the piano by Richard Corbett.

Students Sing Alleluia

Directed by Paul Callaway, the students sang the traditional Alleluia by Randall Thompson. It was composed for this occasion in 1940 and has been sung annually ever since at the Center's opening exercises.

This was a performance of the Alleluia not soon to be forgotten.

Its peaceful and eloquent message was punctuated with claps of thunder and a heavy percussion of rain on the theater-concert hall's flat roof.

According to his prepared remarks, Leinsdorf intended to give the students a combination of sound advice and good news.

Random Excerpts

A few random excerpts. . .

"Concerts of symphony and chamber music, as well as opera, have had a rapid rise in the last few years. More people come to hear and see. How far can we go with quantity before sacrificing quality?"

"Will the interest and curiosity of the public inspire our young composers to write music which is not alienated, and will pressures relieve our greatest worry — the acute shortage of fine orchestra players?"

In the area of advice, it was Leinsdorf's intention to say, "Don't insist that you are cut out to be a first tenor if the best chances offered to you are in the second tenor roles. Don't run your head against a wall of your own imagination."

Six Sessions Planned

It is Leinsdorf's plan to hold six sessions with the Berkshire Music Center orchestra, in the form of rehearsals, on music of many different styles.

The conductor feels that this will enable him "to gain a better understanding of the changing needs of the center's enrollment."

He recalls the opening sentence of "Theory of Harmony" by the eminent Austrian composer, Arnold Schoenberg, which reads:

"This book I have learned from my pupils."

TELEGRAM (m)
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 61,100

JUN 26 1967 New England Newsclip

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800

JUN 27 1967 New England Newsclip

ELLIOT NORTON WRITES:

25th Music Center Year Underway at Tanglewood

LENOX—IN COMPETITION WITH nature, which provided the booming obligato of a King Lear-size storm, the Berkshire Music Center of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, one of the great academies of the music world, was opened for the 25th summer season at Tanglewood Sunday.

Approximately 300 of more than 500 students, from 25 states of the union and 19 foreign countries, characterized by Boston Symphony manager Thomas D. Perry Jr., as "the cream of this and the next generation" took part as participants or as audience or as both, in the theater on the Tanglewood estate.

As participants, they sang the "Allelulia" of Randall Thompson, which has been sung at thse opening festivities every year since the beginning. As audience, they heard a welcome by Manager Perry, a brief but pleasant song recital by Phyllis Curtin of the Metropolitan Opera, an alumna and presently a member of the faculty of the center, and a pleasant reminiscence of her husband's part in founding the center by Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, widow of the late leader of the BSO.

Elliot Norton

They were to have heard an address by Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, but nature intervened. A lashing, booming thunderstorm all but blew down the theater when he got up to speak and he decided good-naturedly that it would be impossible to try to out shout the elements.

Wrote Down His Thoughts

Fortunately, he had written down in advance what he had in mind to say, so some of his thoughts can be passed along at this time and in this space.

He wanted to tell the students and faculty and the friends of music that "both composer and performer face a critical situation in the world of music, today." The nature of the double crisis, is, he believes, "complicated" but the essence of it would seem to be this: the public is not much interested in new music, which appeals only to professional musicians and critics, and the musician, for his part often finds himself ill-equipped for "the contemporary school" of music.

By way of advice to the students, Mr. Leinsdorf had intended to point out that "the professional world of music is very shorthanded today." But not every aspirant is likely to find in it the niche, or the fame, of which he dreams.

In order to make a good life in music, capable students should make up their minds to adjust their dreams to the facts. The great conductor believes:

"Don't insist that you are cut out to be a first tenor if the best chances offered you are in second tenor roles," is his practical advice. "Don't run your head against a wall of your imagination."

Value of Broad Education

Mr. Leinsdorf believes that all ambitious young musicians, whatever their specialty, should get the broadest possible musical education in order to be able to take advantage of any kind of opportunity which may open up. For the aspirant who learns everything he can there may be unexpected openings which could lead eventually to fulfillment.

In other words — if it is possible to interpret his remarks broadly — those who aim at high achievement in a particular aspect of music, as for instance opera singing or instrumental playing, would do well to go beyond this, to learn, for example, how to read scores, to understand "the many styles of composition."

Boston University's Tanglewood program and a comparable program by the New England Conservatory are getting under way also at Tanglewood, bringing in an additional two hundred students not only in music, but in drama and dance, too.

Boston University's faculty, utilizing the theater of the nearby Windsor Mountain School, welcomed a group of young playwrights Sunday night and prepared to read, discuss and to produce with professional actors under directors from Broadway, a series of original dramas. Harold Clurman, one of the founders of the group theater, critic and director, is in charge of this activity which, it is hoped, will serve the theater of the country in an area where help is seriously needed.

Tanglewood Music Center Opens Sunday for Its 27th Season

LENOX, Mass. — The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer center for the advanced study of music, will begin its 27th session here next Sunday with opening exercises at 2:30 p.m. in the theatre.

During the week some 250 musicians will register for the eight-week session held in conjunction with the orchestra's Berkshire Festival. Two programs inaugurated last year are being continued and expanded so as to bring the total enrollment to more than 400.

Boston University's School of Fine and Applied Arts and the New England Conservatory will include music courses for college credit at the music center and a theatre program carried on in association with the Berkshire Theatre Festival in their operations at Tanglewood. In addition, Boston University will inaugurate an eight week program in painting and drawing this summer.

Erich Leinsdorf will deliver the principal address at Sunday's exercises which include the traditional singing of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia." This work written especially for the opening of the music center in 1940 and subsequently sung each year, will be conducted by Paul Calloway, organist and choirmaster of the Washington Cathedral and a member of the music center faculty for the past three summers. Also joining in the opening exercises will be Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager.

Long time faculty members Joseph Silverstein and Gunther Schuller will return to the center as chairman of the faculty and head of contemporary music activities respectively. Louis Speyer continues as assistant director of the center. Claude Frank will serve as acting chairman of the Tanglewood Institute in the absence of Victor Babin who is on leave this session.

Of the center's total enrollment, 125 will be members of the Fellowship Program, directed at young musicians who have completed their training and are active performers.

The program is designed to emphasize chamber music for advanced instrumentalists, singers and composers.

The institute consisting of three seminars, each with an informational focus for its members, provides a program for the musical laymen teacher, student and non - performing musician in an environment where he may broaden his musical horizons.

Throughout the summer the participants in the music center will take part in more than thirty concerts and programs which are open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, those who make voluntary contributions for the support of the center's activities.

Sunday's exercises are open to the public and tea will be served in the Tanglewood garden immediately following the ceremonies.

BANNER (e)
BENNINGTON, VT.
CIRC. 5,300

JUN 19 1967 New England Newsclip

TRANSCRIPT (e)
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
CIRC. 13,500

JUN 27 1967 New England Newsclip

Music Center Opens Session At Tanglewood

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center opened its 27th session at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon with opening exercises in the theatre. Thomas D. Perry Jr. manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, brought the orchestra's greetings to the more than 300 students registered for the first portion of the center's summer program.

The administration of the Berkshire Music Center revealed that a total of 421 students will study in a variety of programs offered here. The Music Center itself already has enrolled 99 Fellowship students and an additional 108 in the Tanglewood Institute.

In the course of the summer the Boston University at Tanglewood and New England Conservatory programs will bring an additional 204 students to Tanglewood. The students come from 25 states and 45 are from 19 foreign countries.

72

Opening slated at Berkshire

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. — The Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer center for the advanced study of music will begin its 27th session here Sunday with opening exercises at 2:30 in the theater.

During the week some 250 musicians will register for the eight-week session held in conjunction with the orchestra's Berkshire Festival.

Two programs inaugurated last year are being expanded to bring the total enrollment to more than 400. Boston University's School of Fine and Applied Arts and the New England Conservatory will include music courses for college credit at the Berkshire Music Center and a theatre program carried on in association with the Berkshire Music Center and a theatre program carried on in association with the Berkshire Theatre Festival in their operations at Tanglewood.

In addition, Boston University will inaugurate an eight-week program in painting and drawing this summer.

Erich Leinsdorf will deliver the principal address at Sunday's exercises which include the traditional singing of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia." This work written especially for the opening of the music center in 1940 and sung each year, will be conducted by Paul Calloway, organist and choirmaster of the Washington Cathedral and a member of the Berkshire Music Center faculty for the past three summers.

Also joining in the opening exercises will be Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager.

Longtime faculty members Joseph Silverstein and Gunther Schuller will return to the center as chairman of the faculty and head of the contemporary music activities respectively Louis Speyer continues as assistant director of the music center. Claude Frank will serve as acting chairman of the Tanglewood Institute in the absence of Victor Babin, who is on leave this session.

Of the Music Center's total enrollment, 125 will be members of the fellowship program directed at young musicians who have completed their training and are active performers. The program is designed to emphasize chamber music for advanced instrumentalists, singers and composers.

The Tanglewood Institute consisting of three seminars, each with an informational focus for its members, provides a program for the musical layman teacher, student and nonperforming musician in an environment where he may broaden his musical horizons.

Throughout the summer the participants in the Music Center will take part in more than 30 concerts and programs which are open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, those who make voluntary contributions for the support of the center's activities.

SYRACUSE
Herald Journal
D 133,303

JUN 21 1967

Leinsdorf Rained Out

Berkshire Center's Opening Is Stormy

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — More than 300 students of the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, expected to hear an inspiring, realistic talk by Erich Leinsdorf at the opening of the center's 27th session yesterday afternoon.

Among the students were 48 from 17 foreign countries.

Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony and director of the center, had prepared such an address. We received a copy.

He didn't give it.

As he was being introduced by Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony, one of tht Berkshire's famous storms broke.

Compares Situation

Leinsdorf likened the situation to another years ago when the start of such a storm coincided with the "Dies Irae" (Day of Judgment) theme in a work being performed by the orchestra.

That conductor may have kept going, but Leinsdorf gave up.

"I have nothing more to say," he shouted over the sound system. In United Nations' language he added, "and I waive the right for instantaneous translation."

Although the weather had been threatening, things went pretty well up to that point.

Perry said all the things necessary to make the students welcomed.

He introduced Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, widow of the famed Boston Symphony conductor who founded the center.

Recalls Husband's Career

Mrs. Koussevitzky recalled her late husband's early career when he sought recognition as a composer and had works published for the string bass.

She related Koussevitzky's complete lack of revenue from these pieces with his founding of a publishing house (Editions Russe), aid to young composers through the Berkshire Center,

ERICH LEINSDORF

and commissioning of new works by the Koussevitzky Foundation.

Phyllis Curtin, Metropolitan Opera soprano and faculty member of the center, sang some emotion-ridden contemporary Spanish songs and Mozart's Alleluia. She was accompanied at the piano by Richard Corbett.

Students Sing Alleluia

Directed by Paul Callaway, the students sang the traditional Alleluia by Randall Thompson. It was composed for this occasion in 1940 and has been sung annually ever since at the Center's opening exercises.

This was a performance of the Alleluia not soon to be forgotten.

Its peaceful and eloquent message was punctuated with claps of thunder and a heavy percussion of rain on the theater-concert hall's flat roof.

According to his prepared remarks, Leinsdorf intended to give the students a combination of sound advice and good news.

Random Excerpts

A few random excerpts. . .

"Concerts of symphony and chamber music, as well as opera, have had a rapid rise in the last few years. More people come to hear and see. How far can we go with quantity before sacrificing quality?"

"Will the interest and curiosity of the public inspire our young composers to write music which is not alienated, and will pressures relieve our greatest worry — the acute shortage of fine orchestra players?"

In the area of advice, it was Leinsdorf's intention to say, "Don't insist that you are cut out to be a first tenor if the best chances offered to you are in the second tenor roles. Don't run your head against a wall of your own imagination."

Six Sessions Planned

It is Leinsdorf's plan to hold six sessions with the Berkshire Music Center orchestra, in the form of rehearsals, on music of many different styles.

The conductor feels that this will enable him "to gain a better understanding of the changing needs of the center's enrollment."

He recalls the opening sentence of "Theory of Harmony" by the eminent Austrian composer, Arnold Schoenberg, which reads:

"This book I have learned from my pupils."

TELEGRAM (m)
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 61,100

JUN 26 1967

New England Newsclip

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800

JUN 27 1967

New England Newsclip

ELLIOT NORTON WRITES:

25th Music Center Year Underway at Tanglewood

LENOX—IN COMPETITION WITH nature, which provided the booming obligato of a King Lear-size storm, the Berkshire Music Center of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, one of the great academies of the music world, was opened for the 25th summer season at Tanglewood Sunday.

Approximately 300 of more than 500 students, from 25 states of the union and 19 foreign countries, characterized by Boston Symphony manager Thomas D. Perry Jr., as "the cream of this and the next generation" took part as participants or as audience or as both, in the theater on the Tanglewood estate.

As participants, they sang the "Allelulia" of Randall Thompson, which has been sung at thse opening festivities every year since the beginning. As audience, they heard a welcome by Manager Perry, a brief but pleasant song recital by Phyllis Curtin of the Metropolitan Opera, an alumna and presently a member of the faculty of the center, and a pleasant reminiscence of her husband's part in founding the center by Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, widow of the late leader of the BSO.

Elliot Norton

They were to have heard an address by Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, but nature intervened. A lashing, booming thunderstorm all but blew down the theater when he got up to speak and he decided good-naturedly that it would be impossible to try to out shout the elements.

Wrote Down His Thoughts

Fortunately, he had written down in advance what he had in mind to say, so some of his thoughts can be passed along at this time and in this space.

He wanted to tell the students and faculty and the friends of music that "both composer and performer face a critical situation in the world of music, today." The nature of the double crisis, is, he believes, "complicated" but the essence of it would seem to be this: the public is not much interested in new music, which appeals only to professional musicians and critics, and the musician, for his part often finds himself ill-equipped for "the contemporary school" of music.

By way of advice to the students, Mr. Leinsdorf had intended to point out that "the professional world of music is very shorthanded today." But not every aspirant is likely to find in it the niche, or the fame, of which he dreams.

In order to make a good life in music, capable students should make up their minds to adjust their dreams to the facts. The great conductor believes:

"Don't insist that you are cut out to be a first tenor if the best chances offered you are in second tenor roles," is his practical advice. "Don't run your head against a wall of your imagination."

Value of Broad Education

Mr. Leinsdorf believes that all ambitious young musicians, whatever their specialty, should get the broadest possible musical education in order to be able to take advantage of any kind of opportunity which may open up. For the aspirant who learns everything he can there may be unexpected openings which could lead eventually to fulfillment.

In other words — if it is possible to interpret his remarks broadly — those who aim at high achievement in a particular aspect of music, as for instance opera singing or instrumental playing, would do well to go beyond this, to learn, for example, how to read scores, to understand "the many styles of composition."

Boston University's Tanglewood program and a comparable program by the New England Conservatory are getting under way also at Tanglewood, bringing in an additional two hundred students not only in music, but in drama and dance, too.

Boston University's faculty, utilizing the theater of the nearby Windsor Mountain School, welcomed a group of young playwrights Sunday night and prepared to read, discuss and to produce with professional actors under directors from Broadway, a series of original dramas. Harold Clurman, one of the founders of the group theater, critic and director, is in charge of this activity which, it is hoped, will serve the theater of the country in an area where help is seriously needed.

Tanglewood Music Center Opens Sunday for Its 27th Season

LENOX, Mass. — The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer center for the advanced study of music, will begin its 27th session here next Sunday with opening exercises at 2:30 p.m. in the theatre.

During the week some 250 musicians will register for the eight-week session held in conjunction with the orchestra's Berkshire Festival. Two programs inaugurated last year are being continued and expanded so as to bring the total enrollment to more than 400.

Boston University's School of Fine and Applied Arts and the New England Conservatory will include music courses for college credit at the music center and a theatre program carried on in association with the Berkshire Theatre Festival in their operations at Tanglewood. In addition, Boston University will inaugurate an eight week program in painting and drawing this summer.

Erich Leinsdorf will deliver the principal address at Sunday's exercises which include the traditional singing of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia." This work written especially for the opening of the music center in 1940 and subsequently sung each year, will be conducted by Paul Calloway, organist and choirmaster of the Washington Cathedral and a member of the music center faculty for the past three summers. Also joining in the opening exercises will be Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager.

Long time faculty members Joseph Silverstein and Gunther Schuller will return to the center as chairman of the faculty and head of contemporary music activities respectively. Louis Speyer continues as assistant director of the center. Claude Frank will serve as acting chairman of the Tanglewood Institute in the absence of Victor Babin who is on leave this session.

Of the center's total enrollment, 125 will be members of the Fellowship Program, directed at young musicians who have completed their training an are active performers.

The program is designed to emphasize chamber music for advanced instrumentalists, singers and composers.

The institute consisting of three seminars, each with an informational focus for its members, provides a program for the musical laymen teacher, student and non - performing musician in an environment where he may broaden his musical horizons.

Throughout the summer the participants in the music center will take part in more than thirty concerts and programs which are open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, those who make voluntary contributions for the support of the center's activities.

Sunday's exercises are open to the public and tea will be served in the Tanglewood garden immediately following the ceremonies.

BANNER (e)
BENNINGTON, VT.
CIRC. 5,300

JUN 19 1967

New England Newsclip

TRANSCRIPT (e)
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
CIRC. 13,500

JUN 27 1967

New England Newsclip

Music Center Opens Session At Tanglewood

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center opened its 27th session at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon with opening exercises in the theatre. Thomas D. Perry Jr. manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, brought the orchestra's greetings to the more than 300 students registered for the first portion of the center's summer program.

The administration of the Berkshire Music Center revealed that a total of 421 students will study in a variety of programs offered here. The Music Center itself already has enrolled 99 Fellowship students and an additional 108 in the Tanglewood Institute. In the course of the summer the Boston University at Tanglewood and New England Conservatory programs will bring an additional 204 students to Tanglewood. The students come from 25 states and 45 are from 19 foreign countries.

PRE-SEASON POPS

TIMES (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
CIRC. 38,850

JUN 19 1967

New England Newsclip

Music In Review

Rain Mars Boston Pops Concert At McCoy Stadium

Although the weather was unkind to the Boston Pops Orchestra, the audience and the sponsors Sunday evening at McCoy Stadium, the 75 musicians and their leader Arthur Fiedler brought joy and starry-eyed enthusiasm to an audience that seemed few in number in the expansive grandstand.

Sponsored by the Pawtucket Indians, Inc., to bring to Pawtucket the best in musical programs, this event was literally a "washout" because the management announced after intermission, when it was unwise for the orchestra to continue under a leaking canopy that drenched some of the instruments, that ticket stubs would be exchanged for any of the future programs.

But to this reviewer, and to most of the audience, one hour of Boston Pops music in a "live" performance is a thrill; a beauty of sound and expression that surpasses any recorded or amplified programs even on stereo. The stillness of the listeners under that leaden sky was a tribute to the musicians.

Promptly at 8, Maestro Fiedler hurried from the club house door across the plywood walk over the muddy on-deck area to the temporary stage on the infield, turning once to acknowledge the applause of greeting from the stands. His musicians applauded, too, and some shouted "Bravo" to him.

With only a brief nod to the stands, he raised the baton and the eager musicians came in on the downbeat of Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance March" and played it with all its shading and coloring that evokes visions of grand pageantry.

Then, in spite of chilled fingers and dampened strings, the solo cellist sounded perfectly in the opening strains of Rossini's tone poem, "William Tell Overture." The capricious winds and whirling dust devils of the approaching storm, were vividly depicted in the woodwinds, and the tempest roared in the brasses and the thunder crashed in the percussion, slowly receding down the valley until the reverberations became too distant to hear. The sun shone and the bird bestirred and became merry as the English horn, with the flute in obligato, sang its beautiful solo leading into the leaping, galloping finale that is so familiar to those who remember the "Lone Ranger" theme.

There was the swaying, undulating cadences of Strauss' "Beautiful Danube Waltz" played with the courtly grace that only the Boston Pops brings to it, followed by Anderson's "Irish Suite" that opens with the "Irish Washerwoman" jig, continues with the "Minstrel Boy" ballad, the "Last Rose of Summer" ode, and climaxing with the "Rakes of Mallow" reel. But this was anti-climax because the pools of water in the sagging canopy dripped on the players and instruments. Some re-adjusted their seats, the tympanist covered his kettledrums with folds of toweling, and cellists and bass violists wiped the water from their fiddles, and a horn palyer raised an umbrella.

Listeners in the front of the grandstand began moving back into the covered portion as more rain fell, and it began to appear that confusion would take over. But this grand orchestra completed the "Rakes of Mallow" with fire and verve that earned them a rousing ovation.

If there was disappointment because of a curtailed program, there also was gaiety and gratification among the audience for having heard an hour of superbly performed music.

HERALD NEWS (e)
FALL RIVER, MASS.
CIRC. 40,250

JUN 13 1967

New England Newsclip

BOSTON POPS CONDUCTOR Arthur Fiedler, (right) signs autographs for three members of the Neighborhood Youth Corps on their recent field trip to Boston concert. The corps members are, (from left) James Buchanan, Yvonne Cote and Margaret Boute.

Youth Corps Members Attend Concert

Twenty - two Neighborhood Youth Corps enrolees attended a concert by the Boston Pops Orchestra at Symphony Hall in Boston last week.

The cultural field trip was the first of the season planned by the Youth Corps.

Several members of the group met Pops conductor Arthur Fiedler and singer Kate Smith who was in the audience.

A varied musical program was presented including marches by John Philip Sousa, "Ave Maria," Strauss's Overture to "The Gypsy Baron," the "Grand Zoological Fantasia" by Saint-Saens and a George M. Cohan medley.

Among the surprise selections were "Tijuana Taxi," "Exodus," and "High Noon."

After the concert the NYC group visited Prudential Tower and viewed Boston from the observation deck on the 50th story.

The participating enrollees were Michael Andrade, Joseph Barreto, James Botelho, James Buchanan, Thomas Bruce.

Rene Gagne, Rita Medeiros, Louis McMahon, Isabel Raposo, Janice Waskiel.

Margaret Buote, Gwen Wilson, Jeannine Miller, Paul McGuire, Lorraine Tavares.

Brenda Brassard, Gail Dolan, Pauline Huey, William Doyle, Ann Marie Moniz.

Yvonne Cote and Madeline Silvia.

The youths were accompanied by work supervisor Joseph Santiago and Youth Corps counselors Barbara Wolstenholme, William Bradbury, William Coady, William Lynch, and Francis Ferrance.

JEWISH TIMES
BROOKLINE, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 9,500

JUL 27 1967

New England Newsclip

Brandeis Alumni 'Pops Night' On WCRB

The Brandeis University Alumni Association "Night at Pops" with the Boston Pops Orchestra conducted by Arthur Fiedler will be on radio July 30 and August 6 over stations of the C R Network in New England. The concert will be heard on WCRB-AM & FM in the Greater Boston area and WCRQ, Providence, R.I., Sunday, July 30, beginning at 5:05 p.m. WCRX, Springfield, will carry the program Sunday, August 6 also beginning at 5:05 p.m.

The concert, part of the Spring season of the Boston Pops Orchestra at Symphony Hall in Boston, features a young Brandeis University student and a member of the Israel Philharmonic as soloists. Miss Berry Hauck, who will be a senior at the University next year, will play two movements of the Viola Concerto in G by Georg Telemann. Miss Hauck has soloed previously with the Greater Boston Youth Symphony Orchestra and served as concert mistress of the Brandeis Orchestra. Tel Aviv born Ilan Rogoff will play Robert Schumann's "Piano Concerto in A Minor" in the other featured performance. A member of the Israel Philharmonic since he was 12, Mr. Rogoff came to the United States last Fall and played in the first of the Boston Symphony Youth Concerts for 1966/67, conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson.

The second intermission of the Boston Pops concert broadcast will pay tribute to the late Irving Fine, noted American composer who was professor of music and Chairman of the Creative Arts Department at Brandeis at the time of his death in July of 1962.

ITHACA, N. Y.
JOURNAL
D. 16,500

JUN 12 1967

Music

Boston Pops, Barton Hall

BOSTON POPS ORCHESTRA
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

PROGRAM:

Delibes: Procession of Bacchus from "Sylvia"

Handel-Harty: Suite from "The Water Music"

Brahms: Academic Festival Overture

Tchkowsky: Capriccio Italien

Strauss: Voices of Spring, Waltzes

Bernstein: Selections from "West Side Story"

Herman: Mame

Ortolani and Olivero: More

Stephens(Winchester Cathedral

Merrick-Bennet: Look Sharp, Be Sharp

A glance at the program will tell the uninitiated most of what he wants to know about the Boston Pops Orchestra, which was presented by the Cornell Senior Class Council at Barton Hall Sunday night. The rest is that they are a first-rate orchestra, and Mr. Fiedler a first-rate conductor. He enjoys conducting Tijuana Taxi quite as much as the Academic Festival Overture, and makes us enjoy it as well.

Hampered by the environment — a huge room, crowded to the point that the performers are invisible, does not inspire a listener to devote his full attention to music, any music — the audience extracted a great deal of fun from the performance; this is no mean feat for an orchestra. Handel's Water Music sounded exceedingly polished and urbane (although distant at times, as the strings are less absorbed by the presence of many people than the brass instruments).

The Academic Festival Overture has the special hazard of an opening passage which is both low in pitch and pianissimo in volume; and although I was listening, the work began for me with the second phrase. Luckily, Brahms doesn't do this anywhere else in the overture; and we were free to sit back and enjoy the rest of it, in which the composer so skillfully works in traditional German university songs, ending with a much glorified Gaudeamus.

The Tchaikowsky Capriccio was likewise very well done, with its bleak and sombre tones played off against the sudden flashes of bright sunlight and melody, despite a certain perturbing lack of formal cohesiveness.

After that time-tested favorite, the Strauss waltz, came the medley from "West Side Story." Mr. Bernstein's music retains its freshness astonishingly; its once startling swing has become tempered with long familiarity and not suffered for it one bit. The other show tunes which Mr. Fiedler conducted are probably much better known than their names are; especially enjoyable was the perky arrangement of "More."

The physical surroundings left many listerners, I am certain, with a doubt which had nothing to do with the quality of the actual performance — one questioned the aesthetic validity of a medium which is deprived of any visual enjoyment, or even stimulus, when the listener's vision is totally blocked by other listeners. Even canned music is not communicated in such a vacuum!

But this was not Mr. Fiedler's fault. Feet began tapping, shoulders bouncing, with the very beginning of the Bernstein score. They didn't stop until "Far Above Cayuga's Waters" concluded a snappy group of encores including Tijuana Taxi, Lara's Theme from Doctor Zhivago, The Stars and Stripes march by Sousa — with three piccolo soloists, if you please, and — the most nefarious, the unkindest cut of all — Batman.

NINA SOBELMAN

JEWISH TIMES
BROOKLINE, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 9,500

JUN 21 1967

New England Newsclip

HISTADRUT POPS CONCERT--Over 2,700 persons attended the 39th Annual Israel Histadrut Night with Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops Orchestra on Thursday evening, June 8 at Symphony Hall, to celebrate Israel's 19th Anniversary and the 46th Anniversary of The Histadrut. Appeals for aid to Israel and for contributions to the Israel Emergency Fund were made in addresses by former Governor of Pennsylvania, George M. Leader, and by Histadrut General Co-Chairman Leon Steinberg, Esq. Shown at the concert are (left to right): Wendell Berman, Histadrut Concert chairman; Arthur Fiedler, and former Governor of Pennsylvania, George M. Leader.

PRE-SEASON POPS

73

TIMES (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
CIRC. 38,850

JUN 19 1967

New England Newsclip

Music In Review

Rain Mars Boston Pops Concert At McCoy Stadium

Although the weather was unkind to the Boston Pops Orchestra, the audience and the sponsors Sunday evening at McCoy Stadium, the 75 musicians and their leader Arthur Fiedler brought joy and starry-eyed enthusiasm to an audience that seemed few in number in the expansive grandstand.

Sponsored by the Pawtucket Indians, Inc., to bring to Pawtucket the best in musical programs, this event was literally a "washout" because the management announced after intermission, when it was unwise for the orchestra to continue under a leaking canopy that drenched some of the instruments, that ticket stubs would be exchanged for any of the future programs.

But to this reviewer, and to most of the audience, one hour of Boston Pops music in a "live" performance is a thrill; a beauty of sound and expression that surpasses any recorded or amplified programs even on stereo. The stillness of the listeners under that leaden sky was a tribute to the musicians.

Promptly at 8, Maestro Fiedler hurried from the club house door across the plywood walk over the muddy on-deck area to the temporary stage on the infield, turning once to acknowledge the applause of greeting from the stands. His musicians applauded, too, and some shouted "Bravo" to him.

With only a brief nod to the stands, he raised the baton and the eager musicians came in on the downbeat of Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance March" and played it with all its shading and coloring that evokes visions of grand pageantry.

Then, in spite of chilled fingers and dampened strings, the solo cellist sounded perfectly in the opening strains of Rossini's tone poem, "William Tell Overture." The capricious winds and whirling dust devils of the approaching storm, were vividly depicted in the woodwinds, and the tempest roared in the brasses and the thunder crashed in the percussion, slowly receding down the valley until the reverberations became too distant to hear. The sun shone and the bird bestirred and became merry as the English horn, with the flute in obligato, sang its beautiful solo leading into the leaping, galloping finale that is so familiar to those who remember the "Lone Ranger" theme.

There was the swaying, undulating cadences of Strauss' "Beautiful Danube Waltz" played with the courtly grace that only the Boston Pops brings to it, followed by Anderson's "Irish Suite" that opens with the "Irish Washerwoman" jig, continues with the "Minstrel Boy" ballad, the "Last Rose of Summer" ode, and climaxing with the "Rakes of Mallow" reel. But this was anti-climax because the pools of water in the sagging canopy dripped on the players and instruments. Some re-adjusted their seats, the tympanist covered his kettledrums with folds of toweling, and cellists and bass violists wiped the water from their fiddles, and a horn palyer raised an umbrella.

Listeners in the front of the grandstand began moving back into the covered portion as more rain fell, and it began to appear that confusion would take over. But this grand orchestra completed the "Rakes of Mallow" with fire and verve that earned them a rousing ovation.

If there was disappointment because of a curtailed program, there also was gaiety and gratification among the audience for having heard an hour of superbly performed music.

HERALD NEWS (e)
FALL RIVER, MASS.
CIRC. 40,250

JUN 13 1967

New England Newsclip

BOSTON POPS CONDUCTOR Arthur Fiedler, (right) signs autographs for three members of the Neighborhood Youth Corps on their recent field trip to Boston concert. The corps members are, (from left) James Buchanan, Yvonne Cote and Margaret Boute.

Youth Corps Members Attend Concert

Twenty - two Neighborhood Youth Corps enrolees attended a concert by the Boston Pops Orchestra at Symphony Hall in Boston last week.

The cultural field trip was the first of the season planned by the Youth Corps.

Several members of the group met Pops conductor Arthur Fiedler and singer Kate Smith who was in the audience.

A varied musical program was presented including marches by John Philip Sousa, "Ave Maria," Strauss's Overture to "The Gypsy Baron," the "Grand Zoological Fantasia" by Saint-Saens and a George M. Cohan medley.

Among the surprise selections were "Tijuana Taxi," "Exodus," and "High Noon."

After the concert the NYC group visited Prudential Tower and viewed Boston from the observation deck on the 50th story.

The participating enrollees were Michael Andrade, Joseph Barreto, James Botelho, James Buchanan, Thomas Bruce.

Rene Gagne, Rita Medeiros, Louis McMahon, Isabel Raposo, Janice Waskiel.

Margaret Buote, Gwen Wilson, Jeannine Miller, Paul McGuire, Lorraine Tavares.

Brenda Brassard, Gail Dolan, Pauline Huey, William Doyle, Ann Marie Moniz.

Yvonne Cote and Madeline Silvia.

The youths were accompanied by work supervisor Joseph Santiago and Youth Corps counselors Barbara Wolstenholme, William Bradbury, William Coady, William Lynch, and Francis Ferrance.

ITHACA, N. Y.
JOURNAL
D. 16,500

JUN 12 1967

Music

Boston Pops, Barton Hall

BOSTON POPS ORCHESTRA
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

PROGRAM:

Delibes: Procession of Bacchus from "Sylvia"

Handel-Harty: Suite from "The Water Music"

Brahms: Academic Festival Overture

Tchkowsky: Capriccio Italien

Strauss: Voices of Spring, Waltzes

Bernstein: Selections from "West Side Story"

Herman: Mame

Ortolani and Olivero: More

Stephens(Winchester Cathedral

Merrick-Bennet: Look Sharp, Be Sharp

A glance at the program will tell the uninitiated most of what he wants to know about the Boston Pops Orchestra, which was presented by the Cornell Senior Class Council at Barton Hall Sunday night. The rest is that they are a first-rate orchestra, and Mr. Fiedler a first-rate conductor. He enjoys conducting Tijuana Taxi quite as much as the Academic Festival Overture, and makes us enjoy it as well.

Hampered by the environment — a huge room, crowded to the point that the performers are invisible, does not inspire a listener to devote his full attention to music, any music — the audience extracted a great deal of fun from the performance; this is no mean feat for an orchestra. Handel's Water Music sounded exceedingly polished and urbane (although distant at times, as the strings are less absorbed by the presence of many people than the brass instruments).

The Academic Festival Overture has the special hazard of an opening passage which is both low in pitch and pianissimo in volume; and although I was listening, the work began for me with the second phrase. Luckily, Brahms doesn't do this anywhere else in the overture; and we were free to sit back and enjoy the rest of it, in which the composer so skillfully works in traditional German university songs, ending with a much glorified Gaudeamus.

The Tchaikowsky Capriccio was likewise very well done, with its bleak and sombre tones played off against the sudden flashes of bright sunlight and melody, despite a certain perturbing lack of formal cohesiveness.

After that time-tested favorite, the Strauss waltz, came the medley from "West Side Story." Mr. Bernstein's music retains its freshness astonishingly; its once startling swing has become tempered with long familiarity and not suffered for it one bit. The other show tunes which Mr. Fiedler conducted are probably much better known than their names are; especially enjoyable was the perky arrangement of "More."

The physical surroundings left many listerners, I am certain, with a doubt which had nothing to do with the quality of the actual performance — one questioned the aesthetic validity of a medium which is deprived of any visual enjoyment, or even stimulus, when the listener's vision is totally blocked by other listeners. Even canned music is not communicated in such a vacuum!

But this was not Mr. Fiedler's fault. Feet began tapping, shoulders bouncing, with the very beginning of the Bernstein score. They didn't stop until "Far Above Cayuga's Waters" concluded a snappy group of encores including Tijuana Taxi, Lara's Theme from Doctor Zhivago, The Stars and Stripes march by Sousa — with three piccolo soloists, if you please, and — the most nefarious, the unkindest cut of all — Batman.

NINA SOBELMAN

JEWISH TIMES
BROOKLINE, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 9,500

JUL 27 1967

New England Newsclip

Brandeis Alumni 'Pops Night' On WCRB

The Brandeis University Alumni Association "Night at Pops" with the Boston Pops Orchestra conducted by Arthur Fiedler will be on radio July 30 and August 6 over stations of the C R Network in New England. The concert will be heard on WCRB-AM & FM in the Greater Boston area and WCRQ, Providence, R.I., Sunday, July 30, beginning at 5:05 p.m. WCRX, Springfield, will carry the program Sunday, August 6 also beginning at 5:05 p.m.

The concert, part of the Spring season of the Boston Pops Orchestra at Symphony Hall in Boston, features a young Brandeis University student and a member of the Israel Philharmonic as soloists. Miss Berry Hauck, who will be a senior at the University next year, will play two movements of the Viola Concerto in G by Georg Telemann. Miss Hauck has soloed previously with the Greater Boston Youth Symphony Orchestra and served as concert mistress of the Brandeis Orchestra. Tel Aviv born Ilan Rogoff will play Robert Schumann's "Piano Concerto in A Minor" in the other featured performance. A member of the Israel Philharmonic since he was 12, Mr. Rogoff came to the United States last Fall and played in the first of the Boston Symphony Youth Concerts for 1966/67, conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson.

The second intermission of the Boston Pops concert broadcast will pay tribute to the late Irving Fine, noted American composer who was professor of music and Chairman of the Creative Arts Department at Brandeis at the time of his death in July of 1962.

JEWISH TIMES
BROOKLINE, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 9,500

JUN 21 1967

New England Newsclip

HISTADRUT POPS CONCERT--Over 2,700 persons attended the 39th Annual Israel Histadrut Night with Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops Orchestra on Thursday evening, June 8 at Symphony Hall, to celebrate Israel's 19th Anniversary and the 46th Anniversary of The Histadrut. Appeals for aid to Israel and for contributions to the Israel Emergency Fund were made in addresses by former Governor of Pennsylvania, George M. Leader, and by Histadrut General Co-Chairman Leon Steinberg, Esq. Shown at the concert are (left to right): Wendell Berman, Histadrut Concert chairman; Arthur Fiedler, and former Governor of Pennsylvania, George M. Leader.

74

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SPENCER MIDDLE
Thursday, July 27, 1967

Al Hirts at NYS Fair

"The world's greatest trumpet player" is coming to the 1967 New York State Fair in Syracuse.

Al Hirt has been signed to appear in free Entertainment Center shows on Thursday and Friday, August 31-September 1, according to Bernard W. Potter, Director.

The Fair opens Tuesday, August 29 and continues through Labor Day, Monday, September 4.

Hirt, often referred to as the "King", will do three shows daily at 10:30 a. m., 2:30 p. m. and 6:30 p. m.

Although a native of New Orleans, the city where jazz was born, Hirt's interest in the trumpet asserted itself toward the classics initially.

With his rise in fame, came attention from the critics. From the start, they had a difficult time classifying just exactly what it was that Al Hirt elicited from the trumpet.

His initial recordings for RCA Victor were highly successful. Such titles as "Al (He's the king) Hirt," "Horn-a-Plenty" "Cotton Candy," and "Sugar Lips" are continuing best sellers.

Hirt had the opportunity to perform with the Boston Pops, which is part of the world's most popular classical orchestra–the Boston Symphony. The music they made was nothing like Bourbon Street had ever heard.

HAIRENIK WEEKLY
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,400
0-47
JUN 22 1967
New England Newsclip

Capacity House Attends 15th Armenian Pops Nite

BOSTON, Mass., June 9—An absolute sellout house this evening hailed musical proceedings at Boston's Symphony Hall marking the Fifteenth Annual Armenian Night at the Boston Pops, sponsored by the Friends of Armenian Culture Society.

Rouben Gregorian, guest conductor, joined Arthur Fiedler, the regular Pops series director, in presenting a program of music again, as annually, highlighted by the rendition of the ethereal "Hayr Mer", the "Lord's Prayer", as found in the ancient Armenian liturgical literature.

The program included for the first time in America a performance of Soviet Armenian composer Aroutounian's Dance Suite, as still another in the series of American "firsts" chalked up by the Armenian Night series.

The Suite includes a Men's Dance, Narineh's Dance, and a Fast Dance. At the best, the composition seems to be poor Khatchatourian, although compositionally it has some interesting new thoughts.

The Men's Dance is built around a vaguely familiar Armenian theme done very loudly but very happily. Narineh's Dance is in the ballade form, with the reeds carrying the brunt of the message, while the Fast Dance takes one back to the Gayane and the spirit of the Saber Dance.

Leo Litwin was the piano soloist in the Shostakovich Number Two Concerto, and the usual happy Pops fare was served the capacity audience which again was singularly appreciative of a fine evening of cultural activity in the distinctive Boston Pops tradition.

Mr. Gregorian conducted beautifully, and was especially impressive in his guidance of the new Aroutounian which we understand was done with very little conductor-orchestra rehearsals.

Proceeds of the concert as usual were announced as benefitting the FACS organization's popular Armenian Radio Hour Series, heard each Sunday morning at 9:30 a.m. over WCRB (AM-FM).

Organist Berj Zamkochian, as Mr. Gregorian a member of the FACS Board, joined the orchestra in the rendition of the Hai Merr, in which the standing audience participated, singing the refrain of this ancient hymn to a transliteration found on the specially printed programs prepared by the FACS for the event.

HERALD TRAVELER (M)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 210,000
AUG 15 1967
New England Newsclip

Boston Pops In Concert At Expo 67

At the invitation of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts Arthur Fiedler and members of the Boston Pops will play a special concert at Expo 67 Monday evening, Aug. 21.

The day has been set by the Commonwealth as its salute to Canada with the concert as the feature of the Massachusetts activities at Expo. Gov. John Volpe will attend the concert and have several Canadian officials as his guests.

Since the Expo program follows the close of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Tanglewood season by one day most members of the Pops will fly directly to Montreal from the Berkshires. Fiedler will travel from California where he is conducting this summer.

Pianist Earl Wild will perform Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1. The first portion of the concert will include the Introduction to Act III from Wagner's "Lohengrin"; Offenbach's Overture to "Orpheus; in Hades"; Londonderry Air; and Ravel's Bolero. Also chosen are selections from "The Sound of Music" by Rodgers; Coleman's Tijuana Taxi; and Winchester Cathedral by Stephens.

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 19,400
JUL 27 1967
New England Newsclip

'Pops' to play at Expo

By a staff writer of The Christian Science Monitor

Boston

The Boston Pops Orchestra, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, will be a top attraction when Massachusetts Day is celebrated at Expo 67 in Montreal Monday, August 21.

Gov. John A. Volpe announced the event at his regular press conference. He was flanked by Talcott M. Banks, vice-president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Stuart D. Hemsley, Canadian Consul General, when he made the announcement.

The Governor plans to lead a sizable delegation of state leaders and others to the event.

The orchestra's appearance is but one part of the Massachusetts celebration at the fair.

Plans are being completed by Theodore W. Schulenberg, State Commissioner of Commerce and Development, and Lawrence J. Flynn, deputy commissioner.

A reception for the Massachusetts delegation, with Governor Volpe as guest of honor, will be staged by the Gillette Company, Ltd., of Canada.

The "Pops" will play at Expo's Palace of Nations.

JEWISH NEWS
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 6,850
AUG 3 1967
New England Newsclip

Brandeis Alumni 'Night At Pops' Sunday On Radio Station WCRX

The Brandeis University Alumni Association "Night at Pops" with the Boston Pops Orchestra conducted by Arthur Fiedler will be presented over Radio Station WCRX, Springfield this Sunday, August 6 at 5:05 p.m.

The concert, part of the Spring season of the Boston Pops Orchestra at Symphony Hall in Boston, features a young Brandeis University student and a member of the Israel Philharmonic as soloists. Miss Betty Hauck, who will be a senior at the University next year, will play two movements of the Viola Concerto in G by George Telemann. Miss Hauck has soloed previously with the Greater Boston Youth Symphony Orchestra and served as concert mistress of the Brandeis Orchestra.

Tel Aviv born Ilan Rogoff will play Robert Schumann's "Piano Concerto in A Minor" in the other featured performance. A member of the Israel Philharmonic since he was 12, Mr. Rogoff came to the United States last fall and played in the first of the Boston Symphony Youth Concerts for 1966/67, conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson.

Waitress, Mother of 8, Singing Sensation at Pops

A singing waitress made her debut at the Boston Pops Concert in Symphony Hall last night and the attractive mother of eight children captivated the audience.

Mrs. Ann Hayward, 41, of 187 Neponset ave., Dorchester, had, until last night, confined her vocal talent to "just humming along" while waiting on table.

But, last night, at Old Timers Night, Mrs. Hayward, radiant and charming, appeared on stage wearing her pink uniform, and with a brogue belted out "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling" and "God Bless America" as if she had been a professional singer all her life.

Conductor Harry Ellis Dickson, admitted the appearance of one of the Pops waitresses as a featured vocalist was "a first" for the famed concerts in their 82 seasons. He described Ann's lilting Irish voice as "beautiful."

Mrs. Hayward's talent—she had sung only at mothers' clubs affairs and social engagements—would have perhaps never been discovered, if the other waitresses had not called it to the attention of Conductor Dickson. After listening to their pleas, he gave her an audition.

The final analysis—he was pleased and so were 1500 patrons of the Pops last night. Conductor Dickson announced that Mrs. Hayward would be a regular star at the annual Old Timers Night.

Mrs. Hayward, whose children were at home and husband at work, made only one other comment. "I don't deserve all of this." Would you believe she does? . . . the professionals think so.

Mrs. Ann Hayward of Neponset ave., Dorchester, Leads Singing as Harry Ellis Dickson Directs Pops
Record American Photo. Frank [illegible]

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800
JUN 24 1967
New England Newsclip

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800
JUN 15 1967
New England Newsclip

Northeastern University Night at Pops

ARTHUR FIEDLER,
Conductor

Introduction to Act III, from "Lohengrin" Wagner
"Classical" Symphony, Op. 25 Prokofiev
Capriccio Italien Tchaikovsky
Conducted by William Tesson

Northeastern University Alma Mater
Piano Concerto in E major No. 1, for Two Pianos Mendelssohn
Soloists: Reginald Hachey and Roland Nadeau
First Performance in Boston

Selection from "West Side Story" Bernstein
More, from "Mondo Cane" Ortolani & Olievieno
Hello, Dolly! Herman

14

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SPENCER NEEDLE
Thursday, July 27, 1967

Al Hirts at NYS Fair

"The world's greatest trumpet player" is coming to the 1967 New York State Fair in Syracuse.

Al Hirt has been signed to appear in free Entertainment Center shows on Thursday and Friday, August 31-September 1, according to Bernard W. Potter, Director.

The Fair opens Tuesday, August 29 and continues through Labor Day, Monday, September 4.

Hirt, often referred to as the "King", will do three shows daily at 10:30 a. m., 2:30 p. m. and 6:30 p. m.

Although a native of New Orleans, the city where jazz was born, Hirt's interest in the trumpet asserted itself toward the classics initially.

With his rise in fame, came attention from the critics. From the start, they had a difficult time classifying just exactly what it was that Al Hirt elicited from the trumpet.

His initial recordings for RCA Victor were highly successful. Such titles as "Al (He's the king) Hirt," "Horn-a-Plenty" "Cotton Candy," and "Sugar Lips" are continuing best sellers.

Hirt had the opportunity to perform with the Boston Pops, which is part of the world's most popular classical orchestra–the Boston Symphony. The music they made was nothing like Bourbon Street had ever heard.

HAIRENIK WEEKLY
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,400
0-47
JUN 22 1967
New England Newsclip

Capacity House Attends 15th Armenian Pops Nite

BOSTON, Mass., June 9—An absolute sellout house this evening hailed musical proceedings at Boston's Symphony Hall marking the Fifteenth Annual Armenian Night at the Boston Pops, sponsored by the Friends of Armenian Culture Society.

Rouben Gregorian, guest conductor, joined Arthur Fiedler, the regular Pops series director, in presenting a program of music again, as annually, highlighted by the rendition of the ethereal "Hayr Mer", the "Lord's Prayer", as found in the ancient Armenian liturgical literature.

The program included for the first time in America a performance of Soviet Armenian composer Aroutounian's Dance Suite, as still another in the series of American "firsts" chalked up by the Armenian Night series.

The Suite includes a Men's Dance, Narineh's Dance, and a Fast Dance. At the best, the composition seems to be poor Khatchatourian, although compositionally it has some interesting new thoughts.

The Men's Dance is built around a vaguely familiar Armenian theme done very loudly but very happily. Narineh's Dance is in the ballade form, with the reeds carrying the brunt of the message, while the Fast Dance takes one back to the Gayane and the spirit of the Saber Dance.

Leo Litwin was the piano soloist in the Shostakovich Number Two Concerto, and the usual happy Pops fare was served the capacity audience which again was singularly appreciative of a fine evening of cultural activity in the distinctive Boston Pops tradition.

Mr. Gregorian conducted beautifully, and was especially impressive in his guidance of the new Aroutounian which we understand was done with very little conductor-orchestra rehearsals.

Proceeds of the concert as usual were announced as benefitting the FACS organization's popular Armenian Radio Hour Series, heard each Sunday morning at 9:30 a.m. over WCRB (AM-FM).

Organist Berj Zamkochian, as Mr. Gregorian a member of the FACS Board, joined the orchestra in the rendition of the Hai Merr, in which the standing audience participated, singing the refrain of this ancient hymn to a transliteration found on the specially printed programs prepared by the FACS for the event.

HERALD TRAVELER (M)
BOSTON, MASS.
AUG 15 1967
New England Newsclip

Boston Pops In Concert At Expo 67

At the invitation of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts Arthur Fiedler and members of the Boston Pops will play a special concert at Expo 67 Monday evening, Aug. 21.

The day has been set by the Commonwealth as its salute to Canada with the concert as the feature of the Massachusetts activities at Expo. Gov. John Volpe will attend the concert and have several Canadian officials as his guests.

Since the Expo program follows the close of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Tanglewood season by one day most members of the Pops will fly directly to Montreal from the Berkshires. Fiedler will travel from California where he is conducting this summer.

Pianist Earl Wild will perform Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1. The first portion of the concert will include the Introduction to Act III from Wagner's "Lohengrin"; Offenbach's Overture to "Orpheus; in Hades"; Londonderry Air; and Ravel's Bolero. Also chosen are selections from "The Sound of Music" by Rodgers; Coleman's Tijuana Taxi; and Winchester Cathedral by Stephens.

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
JUL 27 1967
New England Newsclip

'Pops' to play at Expo

By a staff writer of The Christian Science Monitor

Boston

The Boston Pops Orchestra, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, will be a top attraction when Massachusetts Day is celebrated at Expo 67 in Montreal Monday, August 21.

Gov. John A. Volpe announced the event at his regular press conference. He was flanked by Talcott M. Banks, vice-president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Stuart D. Hemsley, Canadian Consul General, when he made the announcement.

The Governor plans to lead a sizable delegation of state leaders and others to the event.

The orchestra's appearance is but one part of the Massachusetts celebration at the fair.

Plans are being completed by Theodore W. Schulenberg, State Commissioner of Commerce and Development, and Lawrence J. Flynn, deputy commissioner.

A reception for the Massachusetts delegation, with Governor Volpe as guest of honor, will be staged by the Gillette Company, Ltd., of Canada.

The "Pops" will play at Expo's Palace of Nations.

JEWISH NEWS
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 6,850
AUG 3 1967
New England Newsclip

Brandeis Alumni 'Night At Pops' Sunday On Radio Station WCRX

The Brandeis University Alumni Association "Night at Pops" with the Boston Pops Orchestra conducted by Arthur Fiedler will be presented over Radio Station WCRX, Springfield this Sunday, August 6 at 5:05 p.m.

The concert, part of the Spring season of the Boston Pops Orchestra at Symphony Hall in Boston, features a young Brandeis University student and a member of the Israel Philharmonic as soloists. Miss Betty Hauck, who will be a senior at the University next year, will play two movements of the Viola Concerto in G by George Telemann. Miss Hauck has soloed previously with the Greater Boston Youth Symphony Orchestra and served as concert mistress of the Brandeis Orchestra.

Tel Aviv born Ilan Rogoff will play Robert Schumann's "Piano Concerto in A Minor" in the other featured performance. A member of the Israel Philharmonic since he was 12, Mr. Rogoff came to the United States last fall and played in the first of the Boston Symphony Youth Concerts for 1966/67, conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson.

Waitress, Mother of 8, Singing Sensation at Pops

A singing waitress made her debut at the Boston Pops Concert in Symphony Hall last night and the attractive mother of eight children captivated the audience.

Mrs. Ann Hayward, 41, of 187 Neponset ave., Dorchester, had, until last night, confined her vocal talent to "just humming along" while waiting on table.

But, last night, at Old Timers Night, Mrs. Hayward, radiant and charming, appeared on stage wearing her pink uniform, and with a brogue belted out "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling" and "God Bless America" as if she had been a professional singer all her life.

Conductor Harry Ellis Dickson, admitted the appearance of one of the Pops waitresses as a featured vocalist was "a first" for the famed concerts in their 82 seasons. He described Ann's lilting Irish voice as "beautiful."

Mrs. Hayward's talent—she had sung only at mothers' clubs affairs and social engagements—would have perhaps never been discovered, if the other waitresses had not called it to the attention of Conductor Dickson. After listening to their pleas, he gave her an audition.

The final analysis—he was pleased and so were 1500 patrons of the Pops last night. Conductor Dickson announced that Mrs. Hayward would be a regular star at the annual Old Timers Night.

Mrs. Hayward, whose children were at home and husband at work, made only one other comment. "I don't deserve all of this." Would you believe she does? . . . the professionals think so.

Mrs. Ann Hayward of Neponset ave., Dorchester, Leads Singing as Harry Ellis Dickson Directs Pops
Record American Photo. Frank [illegible]

RECORD-AMERICAN (m)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800
JUN 24 1967

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800
JUN 15 1967
New England Newsclip

Northeastern University Night at Pops

ARTHUR FIEDLER, Conductor

Introduction to Act III, from "Lohengrin" — Wagner
"Classical" Symphony, Op. 25 — Prokofiev
Capriccio Italien — Tchaikovsky
Conducted by William Tesson

Northeastern University Alma Mater
Piano Concerto in E major No. 1, for Two Pianos — Mendelssohn
Soloists: Reginald Hachey and Roland Nadeau
First Performance in Boston

Selection from "West Side Story" — Bernstein
More, from "Mondo Cane" — Ortolani & Olievieno
Hello, Dolly! — Herman

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

KINGSTON FREEMAN
Wednesday, May 24, 1967

Fiedler Announces August 8 Program For Boston Pops

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS — Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, has announced the program he will play for the annual Boston Pops Tanglewood concert on August 8. The concert for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension Fund will be entirely devoted to the music of George Gershwin. works.

Mr. Fiedler will begin the concert with an American in Paris followed by Gershwin's Piano Concerto in F with Mr. Wild as soloist. The concert suite from "Porgy and Bess" will be heard in the middle portion of the concert with Mr. Wild returning for a performance with the Orchestra of Rhapsody in Blue. Mr. Fiedler will close the August 8 program with Strike Up the Band.

The all-Gershwin program will be Mr. Fiedler's 14th Tanglewood appearance and will commemorate the 30th anniversary of the celebrated American composer's death.

All seats in the Music Shed will be reserved for the Boston Pops at Tanglewood concert. Box seats are available at $6.50 and other reserved locations in the Shed are $6.50, $6, $5.50, $4. Mail orders are now being received at the Festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass. 02115. A stamped self-addressed envelope should be included with all mail orders. The Festival Ticket Office at Tanglewood will open for the sale of tickets for all Berkshire Festival events on June 19.

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 50,766

AUG 7 1967

Boston Symphony, Pops Groups at Tanglewood

Three Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts, an appearance of Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops and the first five concerts in the Fifth Festival of Contemporary American Music take place this week at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

* * *

The annual appearance of Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops at Tanglewood will be at 8 p.m. tomorrow. Earl Wild will be the guest pianist for an all-Gershwin evening. The program will open with "An American in Paris," continuing with the "Concerto in F for piano and orchestra" and an orchestral suite from "Porgy and Bess." Wild will be heard again in the famous "Rhapsody in Blue for piano and orchestra" and the concert will close with "Strike Up the Band."

Erich Leinsdorf will have Itzhak Perlman as the guest violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for its 9 p.m. Friday program. Perlman will perform the Sibelius "Violin Concerto." The balance of the program will include Moussorgsky's "Khovanchina Prelude" and the Tchaikovsky "Symphony number 6."

John Browning will present a recital of piano music by Chopin, Rachmaninoff and Scriabin at the Weekend Prelude program Friday at 7 p.m.

William Steinberg will be the guest conductor for the 8 p.m. Saturday program consisting of Glinka's "Kamarinskaya," Borodin's "Symphony number 2" and Tchaikovsky's "Manfred Symphony."

Browning will perform the Prokofiev "Piano Concerto number 1" and the Rachmaninoff "Paganini Rhapsody" at 2:30 p.m. Sunday. Leinsdorf will also lead the orchestra in a performance of Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As."

* * *

The regular open rehearsal will be held at 10:30 a.m. Saturday.

The Fifth Festival of Contemporary Music will include programs at 8 p.m. Wednesday and Thursday; electronic music Saturday at 2:30 p.m.; and concerts at 10 a.m. and 8 p.m. Sunday.

Information on all Tanglewood events may be obtained by writing Festival Ticket Office, Lenox, Mass.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SARATOGA SARATOGIAN
Monday, June 5, 1967

Fiedler to Conduct At Tanglewood

BOSTON — Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, has announced the program he will play for the annual Boston Pops at Tanglewood concert on Aug. 8. The concert for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension Fund will be entirely devoted to the music of George Gershwin. Earl Wild will be piano soloist in two of the Gershwin works.

Fiedler will begin the concert with An American in Paris followed by Gershwin's Piano Concerto in F with Wild as soloist. The concert suite from "Porgy and Bess" will be heard in the middle portion of the concert with Wild returning for a performance with the Orchestra of Rhapsody in Blue. Fiedler will close the Aug. 8 program with Strike Up the Band.

The all-Gershwin program will be Fiedler's 14th Tanglewood appearance and will commemorate the 30th anniversary of the celebrated American composer's death.

All seats in the Music Shed will be reserved for the Boston Pops at Tanglewood concert. Box seats are available at $6.50 and other reserved locations in the Shed are $6.50, $6, $5.50, $5, $4.50, $4. Mail orders are now being received at the Festical Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass. 02115. A stamped self-addressed envelope should be included with all mail orders.

The Festival Ticket Office at Tanglewood will open for the sale of tickets for all Berkshire Festival Events June 19.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Tuesday, August 8, 1967

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops Orchestra are presenting an all-Gershwin program at 8 tonight in the annual pension fund concert of the Boston symphony orchestra at Tanglewood. Earl Wild will be the guest pianist.

The program will open with "An American in Paris," and include the "Concerto in F for piano and orchestra," an orchestral suite from "Porgy and Bess," the famous "Rhapsody in Blue for piano and orchestra" and "Strike Up the Band."

Fiedler will also appear at 8:30 p.m. on Saturday as guest conductor of the Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra in the amphitheater at the Institute with Walter Hendle, musical director of the Chautauqua Symphony as soloist in the Grieg "Piano Concerto." Also programmed are music by Berlioz, von Weber, Khachaturian and Bernstein.

* * *

The Fifth Festival of Contemporary Music is being held this week at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., with programs tomorrow, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday. Two more concerts of the Festival have been planned for next week, Monday and Tuesday at 8 p.m. The Festival is under the joint sponsorship of The Berkshire Music Center and the Fromm Music Foundation in Chicago.

The programs are at 8 p.m. tomorrow and Thursday with Gunther Schuler conducting the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra tomorrow and Iva Dee Hiatt conducting a concert by the Tanglewood Choir Thursday. An unusual concert of electronic music will be presented at 2:30 p.m. in the Formal Gardens. Concerts Sunday will be at 10 a.m. and 8 p.m.

CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL
D. 4,000

JUL 28 1967

Arthur Fiedler Brings All Gershwin Program To Tanglewood On August 8

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass. — For his annual appearance at Tanglewood Arthur Fielder will conduct an all-Gershwin program with the Boston Pops Orchestra in the Music Shed on August 8. The Pops concert is for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Pension Fund which pays about a quarter million dollars each year to retired players or their widows.

Mr. Fiedler has announced that pianist Earl Wild will perform two well known Gershwin works for piano and orchestra at the August 8 concert. The program will begin with an American in Paris continuing with the Concerto in F for Piano and Orchestra, and an orchestral suite from "Porgy and Bess." Mr. Wild will be heard again in the famous Rhapsody in Blue for Piano and Orchestra, and the concert will close with Strike Up the Band.

Traveling is something on which Arthur Fiedler thrives and to keep his commitment at Tanglewood he will fly from California where he has been conducting a series of concerts, and return there the day following the Pops concert here. As a traveling conductor Fiedler has appeared in every American state and in many foreign countries. Shortly after his Tanglewood concert he will go to Japan to rehearse with a Japanese orchestra prior to touring with it around the the United States in the early autumn.

Tickets for the Boston Pops at Tanglewood concert may be obtained from the Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240.

PRESS (e)
BRISTOL, CONN.
CIRC. 15,900

JUL 22 1967
New England Newsclip

Fiedler — All Gershwin Program At Tanglewood On August 8

For his annual appearance at Tanglewood Arthur Fiedler will conduct an all-Gershwin program with the Boston Pops Orchestra in the Music Shed on August 8. The Pops concert is for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Pension Fund which pays about a quarter million dollars each year to retired players or their widows.

Mr. Fiedler has announced that pianist Earl Wild will perform two well known Gershwin works for piano and orchestra at the August 8 concert. The program will begin with An American in Paris continuing with the Concerto in F for Piano and Orchestra, and an orchestral suite from "Porgy and Bess". Mr. Wild will be heard again in the famous Rhapsody in Blue for Piano and Orchestra, and the concert will close with Strike rp the Band.

Tickets for the Boston Pops at Tanglewood concert may be obtained from the Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240.

NEWS-TIMES (e)
DANBURY, CONN.
CIRC. 27,200

JUL 15 1967
New England Newsclip

Boston Pops Orchestra Due At Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass. — For his annual appearance at Tanglewood, Arthur Fiedler will conduct an all-Gershwin program with the Boston Pops Orchestra in the Music Shed on Aug. 8. The concert is for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Pension Fund which pays about a quarter million dollars each year to retired players or their widows.

Mr. Fiedler has announced that pianist Earl Wild will perform two well-known Gershwin works for piano and orchestra. The program will begin with "An American in Paris," continuing with the Concerto in F for Piano and Orchestra, and an orchestral suite from "Porgy and Bess." Wild will be heard again in the famous Rhapsody in Blue for Piano and Orchestra, and the concert will close with "Strike Up the Band."

Shortly after his Tanglewood concert, Fiedler will go to Japan to rehearse with a Japanese orchestra prior to touring with it around the United States in the early autumn.

ITEM (e)
WAKEFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 6,600

JUL 17 1967
New England Newsclip

Arthur Fiedler To Direct Aug. 8 Tanglewood Event

For his annual appearance at Tanglewood, Arthur Fiedler will conduct an all-Gershwin program with the Boston Pops Orchestra in the Music Shed on Aug. 8. The Pops concert is for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Pension Fund which pays about a quarter million dollars each year to retired players or their widows.

Mr. Fiedler has announced that pianist Earl Wild will perform two well known Gershwin works for piano and orchestra at the Aug. 8 concert. The program will begin with an American in Paris continuing with the Concerto in F for Piano and Orchestra, and an orchestral suite from "Porgy and Bess." Mr. Wild will be heard again in the famous Rhapsody in Blue for Piano and Orchestra, and the concert will close with Strike Up the Band.

Tickets for the Boston Pops at Tanglewood concert may be obtained from the Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240.

NEWS (e)
NAUGATUCK, CONN.
CIRC. 5,400

JUL 15 1967
New England Newsclip

All-Gershwin Entertainment

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass. - For his annual appearance at Tanglewood Arthur Fiedler will conduct an all-Gershwin program with the Boston Pops Orchestra in the Music Shed on August 8. The Pops concert is for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Pension Fund which pays about a quarter million dollars each year to retired players or their widows.

Mr. Fiedler has announced that pianist Earl Wild will perform two well known Gershwin works for piano and orchestra at the August 8 concert. The program will begin with An American in Paris continuing with the Concerto in F for Piano and Orchestra, and an orchestral suite from "Porgy and Bess." Mr. Wild will be heard again in the famous Rhapsody in Blue for Piano and Orchestra, and the concert will close with Strike Up the Band.

Traveling is something on which Arthur Fiedler thrives and to keep his commitment at Tanglewood he will fly from California where he has been conducting a series of concerts, and return there the day following the Pops concert here. As a traveling conductor Fiedler has appeared in every American state and in many foreign countries. Shortly after his Tanglewood concert he will go to Japan to rehearse with a Japanese orchestra prior to touring with it around the United States in the early autumn.

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350

MAY 25 1967
New England Newsclip

Fiedler Plans All-Gershwin Lenox Concert

LENOX — Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, announced that the annual Boston Pops at Tanglewood concert here August 8 will consist entirely of music by George Gershwin. Earl Wild will be piano soloist in two of the Gershwin works.

Fiedler will begin the concert with "An American in Paris" followed by Gershwin's Piano Concerto in F with Wild as soloist. The concert suite from "Porgy and Bess" will be heard in the middle portion of the concert. The soloist will return for a performance with the orchestra of "Rhapsody in Blue." Fiedler will close the program with "Strike Up the Band."

The all-Gershwin program will be Fiedler's 14th Tanglewood appearance and will commemorate the 30th anniversary of the celebrated American composer's death.

76

KINGSTON, N. Y.
FREEMAN
D. 18,000

JUL 17 1967

Arthur Fiedler Brings All-Gershwin Program to Tanglewood on August 8

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass.—For his annual appearance at Tanglewood Arthur Fiedler will conduct an all-Gershwin program with the Boston Pops Orchestra in the Music Shed on August 8. The Pops concert is for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Pension Fund which pays about a quarter million dollars each year to retired players or their widows.

Mr. Fiedler has announced that pianist Earl Wild will perform two well known Gershwin works for piano and orchestra at the August 8 concert. The program will begin with an American in Paris continuing with the Concerto in F for Piano and Orchestra, and an orchestral suite from "Porgy and Bess." Mr. Wild will be heard again in the famous Rhapsody in Blue for Piano and Orchestra, and the concert will close with Strike Up the Band.

Traveling is something on which Arthur Fiedler thrives and to keep his commitment at Tanglewood he will fly from California where he has been conducting a series of concerts, and return there the day following the Pops concert here. As a traveling conductor Fiedler has appeared in every American state and in many foreign countries. Shortly after his Tanglewood concert he will go to Japan to rehearse with a Japanese orchestra prior to touring with it around the United State in the early autumn.

Tickets for the Boston Pops at Tanglewood concert may be obtained from the Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY UNION STAR
Wednesday, May 24, 1967

Boston Bops In Gershwin Music Aug. 8

Arthur Fiedler will conduct the Boston Pops Orchestra in a program of George Gershwin's music during the annual Boston Pops concert Aug. 8 at Tanglewood for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund.

Earl Wild will be piano soloist for the orchestra's performance of "Piano Concerto in F" and "Rhapsody in Blue." Also to be performed are "An American In Paris," the concert suite from "Porgy and Bess" and "Strike Up the Band."

Ticket information is available at the Festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass. The ticket office at Tanglewood will open June 19.

BERKSHIRE COURIER
GT. BARRINGTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,400

JUL 20 1967

New England Newsclip

Pops Concert At Tanglewood To Be All-Gershwin

LENOX – Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, has announced an all-Gershwin program for the annual Boston Pops at Tanglewood concert Aug. 8.

The concert, for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund, will feature Earl Wild as piano soloist in two of the works.

Fiedler will begin the concert with "An American in Paris", followed by Gershwin's Piano Concerto in F with Wild as soloist. The concert suite from "Porgy and Bess" will be heard in the middle portion of the concert, with Wild returning as soloist for "Rhapsody in Blue." The program will close with "Strike Up the Band."

The all-Gershwin program will be Fiedler's 14th Tanglewood appearance and will commemorate the 30th anniversary of the celebrated American composer's death. All seats in the Music Shed will be reserved for the concert.

HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE (e)
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
CIRC. 14,200

MAY 24 1967

New England Newsclip

All Gershwin Pops Program This Summer

Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, has announced the program he will play for the annual Boston Pops at Tanglewood concert on Aug. 8. The concert for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund will be entirely devoted to the music of George Gershwin. Earl Wild will be piano soloist in two of the Gershwin works.

Mr. Fiedler will begin the concert with An American in Paris followed by Gershwin's Piano Concerto in F with Mr. Wild as soloist. The concert suite from "Porgy and Bess" will be heard in the middle portion of the concert with Mr. Wild returning for a performance with the orchestra of Rhapsody in Blue. Mr. Fiedler will close the program with Strike Up the Band.

The all-Gershwin program will be Mr. Fiedler's 14th Tanglewood appearance and will commemorate the 30th anniversary of the celebrated American composer's death.

All seats in the music shed will be reserved for the concert.

Jamestown Post-Journal
JAMESTOWN, N. Y.
D. 29,160

AUG 9 1967

WILL BE GUEST SATURDAY:

Fiedler To Conduct Chautauqua Orchestra

Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, will be guest conductor of the Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra in the Amphitheater Saturday at 8:30 p.m.

Special artist that night will be Walter Hendl, musical director of the Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, who will play the Grieg Piano Concerto.

In a combination of classics and symphonic arrangements of popular works, Mr. Fiedler also has programmed "Clair di Lune," by Berlioz, Weber's Overture to "Oberon," Berlioz "Rakoczy March," Khachaturian's "Gayne" ballet suite, and selections from "Westside Story," by Bernstein.

ARTHUR FIEDLER

The musicianship and personal magnetism of Arthur Fiedler have made his name synonymous with the Boston Pops Orchestra since 1930 when he was appointed its eighteenth conductor. An innovator of musical ideas, in 1924 he formed the Boston Sinfonietta, a "small symphony" of his mucial colleagues, with which he won a glowing reputation for a series of programs in Boston.

Five years later, the young man of music had sold another idea to the Boston patrons of music—a series of summer concerts to be held on the banks of the Charles River and to be open to the public. Thus the Esplanade Concerts originated. Jointly financed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and public-spirited citizens and business firms, they have drawn crowds of 20,000 listeners in one night.

When the post of conductor of the Boston Pops became open, this young and talented musician was the natural choice. Since 1930 he has continued as Pops conductor bringing to the orchestra a fame which has startled even Bostonians. Through his canny programming, sponsoring of American music and his ability to ferret out wonderful but forgotten light music, the Boston Pops moved into the circle of champions. Their many hit recordings for RCA Victor and winter tours throughout the United States have created Boston Pops fans far beyond the confines of Boston.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

KINGSTON FREEMAN
Monday, July 17, 1967

Arthur Fiedler Brings All-Gershwin Program to Tanglewood on August 8

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass.—For his annual appearance at Tanglewood Arthur Fiedler will conduct an all-Gershwin program with the Boston Pops Orchestra in the Music Shed on August 8. The Pops concert is for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Pension Fund which pays about a quarter million dollars each year to retired players or their widows.

Mr. Fiedler has announced that pianist Earl Wild will perform two well known Gershwin works for piano and orchestra at the August 8 concert. The program will begin with an American in Paris continuing with the Concerto in F for Piano and Orchestra, and an orchestral suite from "Porgy and Bess." Mr. Wild will be heard again in the famous Rhapsody in Blue for Piano and Orchestra, and the concert will close with Strike Up the Band.

Traveling is something on which Arthur Fiedler thrives and to keep his commitment at Tanglewood he will fly from California where he has been conducting a series of concerts, and return there the day following the Pops concert here. As a traveling conductor Fiedler has appeared in every American state and in many foreign countries. Shortly after his Tanglewood concert he will go to Japan to rehearse with a Japanese orchestra prior to touring with it around the United State in the early autumn.

Tickets for the Boston Pops at Tanglewood concert may be obtained from the Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240.

ATHENS, GA.
BANNER-HERALD
D. 7,500 S. 8,000

JUN 18 1967

ARTHUR FIEDLER TO CONDUCT. . .

POPS AT TANGLEWOOD

Poughkeepsie Journal
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
D. 34,306 SUN. 37,584
AUG 5 1967
Buffalo

Boston Pops Slates Concert at Tanglewood

The Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood, Mass., will include a performance on Tuesday by the Boston Pops at 8 p.m.

Arthur Fiedler, conductor for the Boston Pops, will feature Earl Wild as his guest pianist for the all Gershwin concert. The program will begin with "An American in Paris," followed by "The Concerto in F" for piano and orchestra, and an orchestral suite from "Porgy and Bess." Wild will also be heard in "Rhapsody in Blue" for piano and orchestra. The concert will conclude with "Strike Up the Band."

Guest Soloist

On Friday, Itzhak Perlman will be the guest soloist and will perform the "Sibelius Violin Concerto." Erich Leinsdorf, music director for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct Moussorgsky's "Khovanchina Prelude" and Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 6" for the remainder of the program. This performance will begin at 9 p.m. and will be preceded by a piano recital by John Browning at 7 p.m.

William Steinberf willl be the guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Saturday at 8 p.m. The program will consist of Glinka's "Kamarinskaya," Borodin's Symphony No. 2 and Tchaikovsky's "Manfred Symphony."

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30, pianist John Browning will perform the "Prokofiev Piano Concerto No. 1," and Rachmaninoff's "Paganini Rhapsody." Leinsdorf will also lead the orchestra in a performance of Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As."

Performances at Tanglewood this weekend include the original 1805 version of Beethoven's "Fidelio" at 8 p.m. tonight. Tomorrow afternoon at 2:30, Leinsdorf will perform the Boston Symphony in the "Academic Festival Overture," the "Symphony No. 3" and the violin concert for which Joseph Silverstein will be soloist.

Aug 4 '67
Transcript (e)
North Adams
Mass.

The annual appearance of Arthur Fiedler and The Boston Pops at Tanglewood will be on Tuesday evening Mr. Fiedler will have pianist Earl Wild as his guest for an all Gershwin fare. The program will begin with "An American In Paris" continuing with "The Concerto in F for Piano and orchestra" and the orchestral suite from "Porgy And Bess". Mr. Wild will be heard again in the famous "Rhapsody In Blue" for piano and orchestra, and the concert will close with "Strike Up The Band."

The Regular Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday at 10.30 a.m.

ARTHUR FIEDLER

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

Albany Knickerbocker News
Wednesday, August 9, 1967

5 Encores for 13,800

By EDWARD FRENCH

At the Concert

LAST NIGHT was fun night at Tanglewood, the occasion being the annual pension fund benefit concert given by the Boston Pops Orchestra under the direction of the veteran Arthur Fiedler with Earl Wild as the solo pianist.

This popular combination presenting an all-Gershwin program drew the largest crowd of the season, s record 13,800 filling the huge shed and spilling all over the lawn.

A brisk performance of "An American in Paris" st the tempo for the evening, puttinghe audience in a happy foot-tapping mood.

THIS WAS followed by the "Concerto in F for Piano and Orchestra with Earl Wild giving a fine performance of the solo part.

After intermission the orchestra played Robert Russell Bennett's "Porgy and Bess," a Symphonic Picture for Orchestra." which reminded us again that this score contains some of Gershwin's loveliest music.

Then Earl Wild joined forces with the orchestra in an exceptionally fine performance of Gershwins best known work, the "Rhapsodie in Blue." The printed program came to a close with a spirited "Strike Up the Band."

HOWEVER, THE audience had other ideas about this and refused to leave until five encores were played. These, to the crowd's delight, included such "Pops" standbys as "Cabaret," "Lara's Theme" from "Doctor Zhivago," 'tia Juana Taxi,' a richly scored arrangement of "Winchester Cathedral," and finally a performance of John Philip Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever," still the most exciting march of them all, which sent the crowd home in the best of spirits.

The "Boston Pops Orchestra" has a draw all of ist own, very different from the regular patrons of the Tanglewood weekend concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. We think last night's crowd had more fun, and the orchestra's pension fund is considerably enriched.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 SUN. 122,607
AUG 9 1967
Buffalo

Pops at Tanglewood: An All-Gershwin Treat

By ROBERT J. BARBER

George Gershwin was 19 when he wrote "Swanee," and when he died at 39 in 1937 he had split the musical world wide open. There were those who hated his music and those who love it. There were few in between.

Gershwin's music was returned to Tanglewood Tuesday night by Arther Fiedler and the Boston Pops and the nearly 14,000 persons attending were given a concert of all Gershwin works which proved once and for all that his music is here to stay.

From the time Feidler brought down his baton to start "An American in Paris" to the final note of "Strike Up the Band" it was obvious that the evening was one of the most successful of the season.

Gershwin started playing the piano professionally when he was 16 by plugging his own songs in music stores. As a student, he was desultory. He did, however, manage in later years to study under pianist Edward Kilenyi and Joseph Schillinger to organize his technique.

But it was his melodic talent, and genius for rhythmic invention rather than his studies, that made him a genuinely important American composer.

POPS CONDUCTOR — Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, which gave its annual Tanglewood concert Tuesday night. Pianist Earl Wild joined the famed orchestra in an all-Gershwin program.

Earl Wild, a splendid pianist, was the soloist Tuesday night for the "Concerto in F" and the "Rhapsody in Blue." He proved once again that Gershwin's contemporaries — and even some left today — were wrong about the young American's work.

The only complaint concerning the concerto might lie in the fact that the orchestra was a little too much for it. But Wild held his own, bringing tremendous ovations between movements.

Gershwin probably reached his milestone when, in 1924, he wrote "Rhapsody in Blue" the piece most of the thousands came to hear.

They were not disappointed. The "Pops" seldom leaves an audience unhappy. The crowd might have stayed all night if the orchestra had been prepared for such an event, despite threatening rain and slight sprinkling during the intermission.

Gershwin wrote "Rhapsody" for piano and jazz orchestra in which he applied the jazz idiom to an essentially classical form. It has remained his most important composition.

But he returned to the more popular form in 1928 with the introduction of "An American in Paris."

And, in the meantime, he had started that great opera, "Porgy and Bess," which was greeted with gusto Tuesday night but received a cool reception in 1935 when it was first staged in Boston.

It took Europe, South America and Russia to recognize the opera's value, and it has become an American classic. It was treated as such at Tanglewood by the orchestra and the audience. "Porgy" was the first American opera to tour Russia. Tuesday night's performance was described as a "symphonic picture for orchestra" arragned by Robert Russell Bennett.

"An American in Paris" remains this reviewer's favorite with its gayety and melancholy, its bursts of exuberance, its gentle tingles, and blasts of horns magnified by sudden delicate strings.

The whole performance was brilliantly conducted by Fiedler and the familiar tunes of "Bess You Is My Woman Now," "I Got Plenty Of Nuthin'," and many others, were all woven into one lovely and familiar picture.

The Brooklyn born Gershwin, son of a Russian immigrant, jammed into his brief years so many successful musicals before he began to really take jazz and classical music seriously, that one has to leave it to the imagination what he might have accomplished had he lived longer.

STAR
WINCHESTER, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 5,450
AUG 3 1967
New England Newsclip

B.S.O. on TV

A full-length concert by the Boston Pops highlights the sixth week of live broadcasts from the 1967 Berkshire Festival on WGBH-FM.

Conducted by Arthur Fiedler, the Pops program takes place Tuesday, August 8 at 8 p.m. direct from the Tanglewood Shed and features pianist Earl Wild in George Gershwin's Rhapsody in Blue and Concerto in F.

Three Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts will also be heard during the week, on Sunday, August 6 at 2:30 p.m. when Erich Leinsdorf conducts music of Johannes Brahms, on Friday, August 11 at 9 p.m. with Israeli violinist Itzhak Perlman performing Sibelius' Violin Cincerto, and on Saturday, August 12 at 8 p.m. when William Steinberg will be guest conductor.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y.
TIMES HERALD RECORD
D. 33,000
AUG 8 1967
Buffalo

Boston Pops at Berkshire

The seventh and busiest week of the Berkshire Festival includes three Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts, an appearance of Arthur Fiedler and The Boston Pops and the first five concerts in the Fifth Festival of Contemporary American Music.

For the Berkshire Festival concert on Friday evening (Aug. 11, 9:00 PM) Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will have Itzhak Perlman as guest soloist. Mr. Perlman will perform the Sibelius Violin Concerto with the orchestra. For the balance of the program Mr. Leinsdorf wll conduct Moussorgsky's Khovanchina Prelude and Tchakiovsky's Symphony No. 6.

John Browning will present a recital of piano music by Chopin, Rachmaninoff and Scriabin for the now traditional Weekend Prelude on Friday evening (Aug. 11, 7:00 PM).

William Steinberg will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony on Saturday evening (Aug. 12, 8:00 PM) in a program consisting of Glinka's Kamarinskaya, Borodin's Symphony No. 2 and Tchaikovksy's Manfred Symphony.

The annual appearance of Arthur Fiedler and The Boston Pops at Tanglewood will be on Tuesday evening (Aug. 8, 8:00 P.M.) Mr. Fiedler will have pianist Earl Wild as his guest for an all Gershwin evening.

POPS AT TANGLEWOOD

Poughkeepsie Journal
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
D. 34,306 SUN. 37,584
AUG 5 1967

Boston Pops Slates Concert at Tanglewood

The Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood, Mass., will include a performance on Tuesday by the Boston Pops at 8 p.m.

Arthur Fiedler, conductor for the Boston Pops, will feature Earl Wild as his guest pianist for the all Gershwin concert. The program will begin with "An American in Paris," followed by "The Concerto in F" for piano and orchestra, and an orchestral suite from "Porgy and Bess." Wild will also be heard in "Rhapsody in Blue" for piano and orchestra. The concert will conclude with "Strike Up the Band."

Guest Soloist

On Friday, Itzhak Perlman will be the guest soloist and will perform the "Sibelius Violin Concerto." Erich Leinsdorf, music director for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct Moussorgsky's "Khovanchina Prelude" and Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 6" for the remainder of the program. This performance will begin at 9 p.m. and will be preceded by a piano recital by John Browning at 7 p.m.

William Steinberf willl be the guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Saturday at 8 p.m. The program will consist of Glinka's "Kamarinskaya," Borodin's Symphony No. 2 and Tchaikovsky's "Manfred Symphony."

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30, pianist John Browning will perform the "Prokofiev Piano Concerto No. 1," and Rachmaninoff's "Paganini Rhapsody." Leinsdorf will also lead the orchestra in a performance of Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As."

Performances at Tanglewood this weekend include the original 1805 version of Beethoven's "Fidelio" at 8 p.m. tonight. Tomorrow afternoon at 2:30, Leinsdorf will perform the Boston Symphony in the "Academic Festival Overture," the "Symphony No. 3" and the violin concert for which Joseph Silverstein will be soloist.

Aug 4 '67
Transcript (E)
North Adams
Mass.

The annual appearance of Arthur Fiedler and The Boston Pops at Tanglewood will be on Tuesday evening Mr. Fiedler will have pianist Earl Wild as his guest for an all Gershwin fare. The program will begin with "An American In Paris" continuing with "The Concerto in F for Piano and orchestra" and the orchestral suite from "Porgy And Bess". Mr. Wild will be heard again in the famous "Rhapsody In Blue" for piano and orchestra, and the concert will close with "Strike Up The Band."

The Regular Open Rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held on Saturday at 10.30 a.m.

ARTHUR FIEDLER

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

Albany Knickerbocker News
Wednesday, August 9, 1967

5 Encores for 13,800

By EDWARD FRENCH

At the Concert

LAST NIGHT was fun night at Tanglewood, the occasion being the annual pension fund benefit concert given by the Boston Pops Orchestra under the direction of the veteran Arthur Fiedler with Earl Wild as the solo pianist.

This popular combination presenting an all-Gershwin program drew the largest crowd of the season, s record 13,800 filling the huge shed and spilling all over the lawn.

A brisk performance of "An American in Paris" st the tempo for the evening, puttinghe audience in a happy foot-tapping mood.

THIS WAS followed by the "Concerto in F for Piano and Orchestra with Earl Wild giving a fine performance of the solo part.

After intermission the orchestra played Robert Russell Bennett's "Porgy and Bess," a Symphonic Picture for Orchestra." which reminded us again that this score contains some of Gershwin's loveliest music.

Then Earl Wild joined forces with the orchestra in an exceptionally fine performance of Gershwins best known work, the "Rhapsodie in Blue." The printed program came to a close with a spirited "Strike Up the Band."

HOWEVER, THE audience had other ideas about this and refused to leave until five encores were played. These, to the crowd's delight, included such "Pops" standbys as "Cabaret," "Lara's Theme" from "Doctor Zhivago," 'tia Juana Taxi,' a richly scored arrangement of "Winchester Cathedral," and finally a performance of John Philip Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever," still the most exciting march of them all, which sent the crowd home in the best of spirits.

The "Boston Pops Orchestra" has a draw all of ist own, very different from the regular patrons of the Tanglewood weekend concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. We think last night's crowd had more fun, and the orchestra's pension fund is considerably enriched.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71 635 SUN. 122,607
AUG 9 1967

Pops at Tanglewood: An All-Gershwin Treat

By ROBERT J. BARBER

George Gershwin was 19 when he wrote "Swanee," and when he died at 39 in 1937 he had split the musical world wide open. There were those who hated his music and those who love it. There were few in between.

Gershwin's music was returned to Tanglewood Tuesday night by Arther Fiedler and the Boston Pops and the nearly 14,000 persons attending were given a concert of all Gershwin works which proved once and for all that his music is here to stay.

From the time Feidler brought down his baton to start "An American in Paris" to the final note of "Strike Up the Band" it was obvious that the evening was one of the most successful of the season.

Gershwin started playing the piano professionally when he was 16 by plugging his own songs in music stores. As a student, he was desultory. He did, however, manage in later years to study under pianist Edward Kilenyi and Joseph Schillinger to organize his technique.

But it was his melodic talent, and genius for rhythmic invention rather than his studies, that made him a genuinely important American composer.

POPS CONDUCTOR — Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, which gave its annual Tanglewood concert Tuesday night. Pianist Earl Wild joined the famed orchestra in an all-Gershwin program.

Earl Wild, a splendid pianist, was the soloist Tuesday night for the "Concerto in F" and the "Rhapsody in Blue." He proved once again that Gershwin's contemporaries — and even some left today — were wrong about the young American's work.

The only complaint concerning the concerto might lie in the fact that the orchestra was a little too much for it. But Wild held his own, bringing tremendous ovations between movements.

Gershwin probably reached his milestone when, in 1924, he wrote "Rhapsody in Blue" the piece most of the thousands came to hear.

They were not disappointed. The "Pops" seldom leaves an audience unhappy. The crowd might have stayed all night if the orchestra had been prepared for such an event, despite threatening rain and slight sprinkling during the intermission.

Gershwin wrote "Rhapsody" for piano and jazz orchestra in which he applied the jazz idiom to an essentially classical form. It has remained his most important composition.

But he returned to the more popular form in 1928 with the introduction of "An American in Paris."

And, in the meantime, he had started that great opera, "Porgy and Bess," which was greeted with gusto Tuesday night but received a cool reception in 1935 when it was first staged in Boston.

It took Europe, South America and Russia to recognize the opera's value, and it has become an American classic. It was treated as such at Tanglewood by the orchestra and the audience. "Porgy" was the first American opera to tour Russia. Tuesday night's performance was described as a "symphonic picture for orchestra" arragned by Robert Russell Bennett.

"An American in Paris" remains this reviewer's favorite with its gayety and melancholy, its bursts of exuberance, its gentle tingles, and blasts of horns magnified by sudden delicate strings.

The whole performance was brilliantly conducted by Fiedler and the familiar tunes of "Bess You Is My Woman Now," "I Got Plenty Of Nuthin'," and many others, were all woven into one lovely and familiar picture.

The Brooklyn born Gershwin, son of a Russian immigrant, jammed into his brief years so many successful musicals before he began to really take jazz and classical music seriously, that one has to leave it to the imagination what he might have accomplished had he lived longer.

STAR
WINCHESTER, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 5,450
AUG 3 1967
New England Newsclip

B.S.O. on TV

A full-length concert by the Boston Pops highlights the sixth week of live broadcasts from the 1967 Berkshire Festival on WGBH-FM.

Conducted by Arthur Fiedler, the Pops program takes place Tuesday, August 8 at 8 p.m. direct from the Tanglewood Shed and features pianist Earl Wild in George Gershwin's Rhapsody in Blue and Concerto in F.

Three Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts will also be heard during the week, on Sunday, August 6 at 2:30 p.m. when Erich Leinsdorf conducts music of Johannes Brahms, on Friday, August 11 at 9 p.m. with Israeli violinist Itzhak Perlman performing Sibelius' Violin Cincerto, and on Saturday, August 12 at 8 p.m. when William Steinberg will be guest conductor.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y.
TIMES HERALD RECORD
D. 33,000
AUG 8 1967

Boston Pops at Berkshire

The seventh and busiest week of the Berkshire Festival includes three Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts, an appearance of Arthur Fiedler and The Boston Pops and the first five concerts in the Fifth Festival of Contemporary American Music.

For the Berkshire Festival concert on Friday evening (Aug. 11, 9:00 PM) Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will have Itzhak Perlman as guest soloist. Mr. Perlman will perform the Sibelius Violin Concerto with the orchestra. For the balance of the program Mr. Leinsdorf wll conduct Moussorgsky's Khovanchina Prelude and Tchakiovsky's Symphony No. 6.

John Browning will present a recital of piano music by Chopin, Rachmaninoff and Scriabin for the now traditional Weekend Prelude on Friday evening (Aug. 11, 7:00 PM).

William Steinberg will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony on Saturday evening (Aug. 12, 8:00 PM) in a program consisting of Glinka's Kamarinskaya, Borodin's Symphony No. 2 and Tchaikovksy's Manfred Symphony.

The annual appearance of Arthur Fiedler and The Boston Pops at Tanglewood will be on Tuesday evening (Aug. 8, 8:00 P.M.) Mr. Fiedler will have pianist Earl Wild as his guest for an all Gershwin evening.

18

SPRINGFIELD HERALD
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
BI-WEEKLY CIRC. 111,000

AUG 13 1967 New England Newsclip

TANGLEWOOD

By DEAN RADIN

13,862 ATTEND SPECIAL GERSHWIN CONCERT

The largest audience recorded at Tanglewood this year enjoyed Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops in a special Pension Fund Concert for the Orchestra.

The program opened with Gershwin's famous "An American in Paris." The trumpets blared, the tympany thumped, and the cymbols clashed with the end of Gershwins musical portrait.

Lively Piano Concerto

Following an approving, but straggeled applause, the "Concerto in F, for Piano and Orchestra" with soloist Earl Wild began. The piano concerto, just as lively as "An American in Paris," contrasted the somber 17th and 18th century music from former Tanglewood Concerts. Earl Wild played like Gershwin was a part of the piano, compelling Mr. Wild to give a little flair here, and a little dare there Arthur Fieldler conducted with a style that Gershwin himself would have been proud of.

Gershwin Concert

Continued from Page 21

Pleasing and Beautiful

"Porgy and Bess," performed after the intermission, was pleasingly familiar with its dramatic "Bess, You Is My Woman Now," its catchy "I Got Plenty o' Nothing," and its logical "It Ain't Necessarily So" passages. The performance was arranged by Robert Russell Bennett.

Curious Finales

The "Rhapsody in Blue, for Piano and Orchestra" with soloist Earl Wild followed the crashing climax of "Porgy and Bess." The "Rhapsody in Blue" is considered by many to be one of Gershwin's greatest pieces. All of Gershwin's curious classical phrases were executed superbly again by Earl Wild at the piano. Gershwin composed many of his pieces with suprise endings, that is, finale-sounding phrases suddenly interrupted by a slow passage.

Success with Rumbles

The whole Pops concert was a success in view of the Pension Fund, but the constant rumble of voices on the grounds made it difficult to enjoy the concert fully.

Boston Pop Facts

The Pops, or Promenade Concerts, as they were originally termed, began on July 11, 1865. The Pops was established to provide a longer season for the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Approximately 90 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra perform in the Pops. The principal players of the B.S.O. generally do not play during Pops season. There have been 17 previous conductors for the Boston Pops, and Arthur Fiedler has conducted since 1930.

Gershwin Concert

Continued from Page 22

Arthur Fiedler Facts

Arthur Fiedler was born in Boston, Massachusetts, on December 17, 1894. His parents were originally from Austria. Mr. Fiedler's father, Emanuel, was the first violinist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for 25 years before he retired. Arthur Fiedler, at age 20, became the youngest member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Fiedler has many honorary degrees and honors including being decorated by the French government as Officier de l'Instruction Publique, and being dubbed a Duke by the Knights of Carrousel, Charlotte, N. C.

Tanglewood-On-Parade

On Thursday, August 17, 1967, a benefit for the Berkshire Music Center will be performed by the members of the Berkshire Music Center. There will be continuous performances from 2:15 to 7:30, with a Shed Gala Concert at 7:30 performed by the B.S.O. The program includes Tchaikowsky's 1812 Overture with cannon and salute guns. There will be a display of fireworks over the lake at the close of the concert. The Gala Concert will be broadcast live.

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 95,000

AUG 7 1967 New England Newsclip

Gershwin program

Earl Wild, pianist, will be featured Tuesday night with Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops at Tanglewood in a Gershwin program. The concert will benefit the orchestra's pension fund.

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350

AUG 9 1967 New England Newsclip

13,862 at Tanglewood Pour Adulation on Arthur Fiedler

By M. DICKEY DRYSDALE

LENOX —Suburban middle class America moved here en masse Tuesday night in body and spirit as Arthur Fiedler, the Boston Pops, George Gershwin and Tanglewood blended into a mix which was never dull and occasionally exhilarating.

Huge Audience

The annual pops concert in the music shed was popular in every sense — in the number and variety of the huge audience of 13,862, in the adulation poured upon Fiedler when he appeared on stage, and in the music itself — all of it Gershwin.

The crowd on the lawn had extended 50 yards out from the shed by an hour before concert time and eventually filled the entire space back to the row of evergreens 100 yards from the concert hall. Nearer the front were family groups and young people with lunches and card games, while the outskirts of the crowd was mostly made of groups of young people — many of high school age or younger.

It was a highly unsophisticated occasion, and the orchestra responded in kind. From the jaunty opening of "An American in Paris" to the final "Strike up the Band," it was the beat, the pulse that dominated, often to the exclusion of subtlety.

American Stamp

In fact, the music and the performance it received seemed descriptive of the audience and the event as a whole. The hard-driving, syncopated, loud core of the music echoed the neon cacophony of Main St., while the most sentimental and naive of melodies provided a less than convincing idealization to the whole.

The unescapable impression was of exultation and vitality of a peculiarly American stamp untroubled by traditional niceities.

The performance by the pops and pianist Earl Wild also emphasized motion, dynamics and bazzazz, and it all might have been too much for another audience or another occasion.

Frantic Quality

"American in Paris" had a frantic quality which was partly a result of the sheer size of the orchestra and partly of the harshness of the brass section, which was allowed to play without respect to the dynamics of the rest of the orchestra.

Pianist Wild was soloist in the concerto for Piano in F and in "Rhapsody in Blue." He had plenty of technique, flair and dash, and his power sometimes almost overcame the orchestra.

However if one looked behind the flashy execution, the blurred hands and the dazzling percussiveness, one would perhaps complain that something deeper was lacking. Especially in the rhapsody, which after all does have a coherent scheme, Wild seemed to consider the music as a sequence of tricks and gimmicks on which he could test his virtuosity. This lack of taste, combined with a frequent lack of coordination with the orchestra, frequently was almost appalling.

Delightful Atmosphere

The audience, however, couldn't have cared less and applauded ecstatically, especially after the rhapsody. After all, the music primarily was a backdrop for most of them — a delightful atmosphere in which to enjoy the whole occasion — an evening at Tanglewood.

Rounding off the Gershwin program was a medley from "Porgy and Bess" arranged by Robert Russell Bennet, an arrangement of "Strike Up the Band." Fiedler was not permitted to stop when he had finished the program, of course, and responded to the audience's cheers with "Pops Extras" such as "Winchester Cathedral" and the theme from "Dr. Zhivago."

After the concert, the audience reluctantly picked itself up from the seats or the lawn and wandered away, smiling, singing, whistling. A group of girls started up a chorus of summer camp songs. Families picked up uneaten bananas and grapes and chicken legs and put them back in the portable cooler.

Everyone had a grand time but it was not a night in which serious lovers of Gershwin could see their hero in the guise of musical genius rather than popular lyricist.

TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM (e)
HOLYOKE, MASS.
CIRC. 26,000

AUG 10 1967 New England Newsclip

The Boston Pops orchestra continues to draw crowds who just love the music conductor Arthur Fiedler gives them. For the annual Pops concert at Tanglewood Tuesday night, he gave them an all-Gershwin program, and 13,800 people poured into the Music Shed and all over the grounds to hear and cheer it. The Music Shed holds about 6,000 people; the rest filled up the spreading lawns outside. Piano soloist Earl Wild played the concerto for piano in F and the ever popular Rhapsody in Blue. For encores the Pops deserted Gershwin and gave, as is customary, current popular favorites — the Lara theme from Dr. Zhivago this time. The Pops concert is for people who like hum tunes while they's listening and no one minds much because Fiedler always drowns them out. It also often serves as a first taste at Tanglewood for people who go back for the heavier fare of the Boston Symphony orchestra later in the season.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900

AUG 9 1967 New England Newsclip

Gershwin Packs 'em in at the Pops

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

CLOSE TO 14,000 Gershwin-lovers converged on Tanglewood last night for the annual Pension Fund concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Arthur Fiedler, conducting the Boston Pops, wowed the greatest crowd of the season with all the best of Gershwin, including "An American in Paris," the Concerto in F and the "Rhapsody in Blue," in both of which Earl Wild was the exciting piano soloist.

* * *

GERSHWIN'S appeal grows each year. The bewitching rhythms, the pungent harmonies, the seductive tunes, and, especially, his bombastic but tremendously appealing orchestration have a captivating appeal and an almost psychedelic effect. Gershwin requires a big orchestra, using saxophones, mandolins, harps, tuba and augmented brass sections and their total employment at times has the solid impact of a tree trunk.

* * *

EARL WILD plays with tremendous insight. He has remarkably sturdy fingers but for all the power he uses, there is an incredible absence of thumping. He must be one of a very few pianists who can make himself heard against the mass of sound coming from the accompanying orchestra without resorting to a bare display of force. His sense of rhythm in all the varieties in which Gershwin reveled was unfailing and definitive.

The Porgy and Bess symphonic picture for orchestra by Robert Russell Bennett tortured the loved melodies and twisted the popular and familiar musical anecdotes until they were drained of their original juice.

* * *

GERSHWIN runs the gamut from his unaffected little songs to his lush and wonderfully but happily vulgar and highly seasoned, almost acrid, discords. Fiedler's motto evidently is to let the wind-instrument players, so long as they are sitting there, blow to their full content. For the 6,000 within the great Shed, there could have been none who could complain of faint or dim effort; for the near 8,000 on the adjacent lawns there must have been airwaves to reach everyone amply.

As was the case last year, all the camps in the vicinity were well represented. But their deportment, so far as could be judged from the front of the Shed, was splendidly counselor-controlled and self-disciplined. This should rank high in the records of such events.

OAKHURST, N.J.
HOME NEWS
W. 2,000

AUG 17 1967

Boston Pops Presents 30th Concert At Tanglewood

By CARL RICHARDS

LENOX, Mass. - A delightful, unique experience for any music lover is the Boston Philharmonic, playing amidst the beautiful and graceful setting of Tanglewood.

Acoustics; surprisingly, are as good if not better than most concert breathtaking.

Because of its location, there is a fair amount of thunder, lightning and rain, which seems to enhance rather than detract from the shed, a great triangular affair, and the specially constructed stage canopy. One of the critics at the time discussed the storm, saying "Kussevitky surrounded to the elements . . . even the French horns were shipping water."

As much as any of us who like classical symphony music listen and thrill to our hi-fi or stereo, etc., there is nothing as satisfying as the genuine, direct sound. Seeing each section, instrument and musician, as individuals and as a group, is impossible to merely visualize.

It has been some time since we had seen Erich Leinsdorf, and like good wine, he has with age not only improved but mellowed; his interpretation is even more powerful.

His rendition, with Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir, of the Bartok Concerto for two pianos and percussion, and particularly Poulenc's Concerto in D for two pianos and orchestra were a treat.

Beautifully played, they are not the usual concert fare. Poulenc had not intended this to be much more than a pleasing diversion but it brought a great response from the audience.

The next evening Seiji Ozawa, the brillient young Japanese conductor, who Japanese conductor, who incidentally, might affectionately well be daubed a Japanese Beatle, directed The Berlioz Symphonie Fantastique with such brilliance and fire that he only had every one on the edge of their seats during the entire performance. He received a standing ovation which brought he and the orchestra up for repeated bows which probably broke all records.

Two lesser known works, Takemitsui's Requiem for String Orchestra and Ligeti's Atmospheres were equally brilliant, and while not as enthusiastically received, earned a new respect for not only Ozawa, but the orchestra as well.

We didn't stay for the Sunday afternoon concert but it was a familiar Schumann, Mendelssohn, Stravinsky (The Fire Bird Suite) one which we are sure that the orchestra romped through blitely and with dispatch. We would have liked to hear the main theme of the suite but had to be content ourselves with a recording at home that evening.

It was thirty years ago this August 12th that the first official concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival was held at Tanglewood, it's official home. The 210 acre estate was turned over in 1936 to Dr. Koussevitzky, the than permanent conductor of the Boston Philharmonic, by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and Miss Mary Aspinwall. Dr. Koussevitzky turned the deed over to the Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Previously, three concerts had been held in 1934 and 35 by the New York Philharmonic under the direction of Henry Hadley at the Dan Hanna Farm in Stockbridge. In 1936 the Boston Symphony took over with Dr. Koussevitzky conducting at the Tent in Holmwood, the former Vanderbilt estate.

As noted before, on opening night it rained so hard that it prompted immediate action. A fund raising drive was started, resulting in the present music shed at Tanglewood, which was dedicated at the fifth Festival. It was not until 1959 that the Talbot Memorial Stage Canopy was installed in the Music Shed. At this time Charles Munch was the director of the orchestra. It was in 1940 that the Berkshire Music Center was founded. This provided a center where young musicians could continue their professional training and add to their orchestra experience, under the guidance of eminent musicians of the orchestra as teachers.

Situated on the grounds is a replica of the Hawthorne Cottage which was presented to the orchestra by the National Federation of Music Clubs. Parking facilities on the grounds are excellent and traffic is handled with exceptional speed and alacrity. There is also a cafeteria on the grounds which is open Tuesday and Friday evenings, and on Sunday box lunches are served.

The shed itself will hold 6,000 people in the main portion and about 2,000 in the side wings. Beautiful lawns surrounding the shed provide space for those who wish to relax as they listen. Accoustically, one can hear the complete range and sound of the music anywhere in the shed or on the grounds. The regular concerts are on Friday at nine and Saturday evening at eight and on Sunday afternoon at two thirty.

On Friday evenings there is a prelude concert at seven which that evening's ticket holders may attend. Rehearsal of the orchestra on the grounds may be attended by the public on Saturday mornings.

Besides the regular concerts there are performances by the Boston Pops under the direction of Arthur Fiedler. August will also feature the fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music. These concerts will involve the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra and the Tanglewood Choir. Aside from Tanglewood, the area abounds in activity. There is the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival at Lee, The Music Barn and The Music Inn, The South Mountain Concerts, and Summer Theater and Summer Theater groups.

There are museums and historical sights of interest of particularly interest is a visit to the Clark Museum at Williams College in nearby Williamsport.

TELEGRAM (m)
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 62,350

AUG 10 1967 New England Newsclip

Music: Boston Pops Concert At Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Effervescent music of George Gershwin and efficient conducting by Arthur Fiedler made a whopping success of the Boston Pops concert Tuesday night at Tanglewood.

The annual event to benefit the Boston Symphony's pension fund drew an audience of 13,828.

Earl Wild was a competent piano soloist in Concerto in F and Rhapsody in Blue. Orchestral pieces were the symphonic poem, "An American in Paris," Robert Russell Bennet's symphonic picture based on "Porgy and Bess," and Green's arrangement of "Strike up the Band."

It was highly desirable that this pops night at Tanglewood be an audience pleaser. The last two summers they were moderate to poor.

Two summers ago, Duke Ellington was piano solist but could scarcely be heard over the orchestra. Last summer, saxophonist Stan Getz gave the premier of a new concerto by Emil Sauter. It didn't get off the ground.

Fiedler played it safe this time. Gershwin's music may sound like fading echoes of the 20's and 30's to some, but still has a large, avid following.

Earning Bows

As usual, subtle orchestral balances were not Fielder's deepest concern on Tuesday night. He encouraged brasses and percussion to dominate, thereby earning bows for solo trumpeter Roger Voisin and everyone in the hardware department.

Fielder kept an alert eye on the score and used most of his energy keeping time. But he was also pretty active cueing details and it was clear that most interpretive matters had been settled at rehearsals.

Wild's performances were neither great nor pedestrian. Within a limited range, it was good Gershwin. Concerto in F was the better of the two. By and large, it had honesty, was properly emotional and technically adequate.

The second movement had to be started twice, the second time after the audience finally quieted down.

Pianist and orchestra did all they could to make a wow of the finale. Results were percussing, explosive at times, and doled out at full momentum.

Rarely Played

Wild indulged in some caprices in the "Rhapsody in Blue," along with some obvious clinkers. What made it distinctive were passages from the original score that are rarely played.

"American in Paris" was moved along briskly, with time out for uncomplaining blues and boulevard gossip. It was excellent Gershwin, just coarse enough when needed with plenty of oomph and blaring brasses.

Best of all, Fielder didn't try to refine the work, but used imagination by bringing out a little counterpoint in unexpected quarters.

The "Porgy and Bess" music received excellent orchestral treatment. Street vendor chants were immaculately i toned by solo instruments.

Real sportin' life swagg permeated "There's a Bo Leavin' for New York" and ' Got Plenty O' Nuthin." "Sum mertime" was a beautiful inte lude in muted strings.

SUNDAY REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 115,950

AUG 20 1967 New England Newsclip

Music Beat

Stan Getz at Tanglewood

By SKITCH HENDERSON

The Victor Company has, for the last few years, been putting together combinations that are sometimes uncomfortable, sometimes magnificent in spots, but seldom really rewarding considering the effort put forth.

Unbelievable Title

I recently came across a new album with the unbelievable title, "Stan Getz and Arthur Fiedler at Tanglewood." Upon first glance I was very sceptical because the first title was "The Girl From Ipanema." No, matter how sympathetic we might be, the sound of Bossa Nova really belongs to the small tight quintet or sextet playing at your local hangout.

Fresh Approach

I nevertheless listened to it because it was number one on the A side. I was surprised that Mr. Getz hadn't explored all the possibilities, but his approach is very fresh. The orchestra simply outweighs him and I don't think you would turn this in for the original.

Next on the album is a piece called the "Tanglewood Concerto." If we are to observe the literal meaning of the word "concerto," this title is a little ostentatious, but the overall music is unique.

The piece, as I would call it, is written by Eddie Sauter, (Remember the Sauter-Finnegan Band? Same fellow.) Some of the orchestral writing is brilliant. Even though the tenor saxophone is not the most comfortable instrument in this form, Stan Getz gives everybody a lesson.

Wise Decision

You don't have to be a jazz or a classical music fan to enjoy this album. I think it would be a wise decision for any music teacher to play this purely as an example of what can be done combining the standard repertoire and the modern player.

I have been a friend and fan of Stan's since the days of the original herd presided over by Woody Herman. He has never made it easy for himself. With his group, he sweated out the college circuit and the less-than-pleasant one-night stands for many years. The emergence of the Bossa Nova changed all that. Overnight, the combination of sublety of rhythm plus the warmth of Stan's playing made an impression not only here in America but all over the world.

I remember working on many television shows with Stan while he was trying to figure out a way to take advantage of this great popularity. Through it all, no matter how many times the personnel changed, he remained head and shoulders above the average small group sound.

Somber Mood

I particularly remember one Tonight Show when he was in a somber mood. He had been booked to play a next-to-closing spot which the producer insisted could not be any longer than three minutes. Why producers always arrive at this figure I don't know, but that seems to be their common denominator of how long anybody can listen to music.

Stanley simply ignored everybody around him including the frantic signaling of the stage manager and proceded to play two choruses of "Here's That Rainy Day." He upset all the clock watchers, but due to his great concentration it somehow caught on with the audience. When he finished, the curtain closed. We were off the air only about a minute and a half, but my trip backstage to compliment him was in vain. He simply disappeared.

Social Secretaries

At the White House they told me recently that one of the social secretaries hears from him occasionally, and all he wants to do is join the Army and fight in Vietnam. This might give you an idea of the complexities of this artist. They, of course, have suggested that he take the group and entertain the troops musically but he says that "Ipanema" hangs too heavily over his head.

Since the days of Sidney Bechet, I don't think we have had a local saxophone hero that we could talk about, but if I were going to elect anybody to this Hall of Fame, it would be Stanley. Despite his moods, his complexities, and despite the huge Boston Pops Orchestra, he speaks the truth.

Give a listen when you have a chance.

SUN (e)
LOWELL, MASS.
CIRC. 46,350

AUG 19 1967 New England Newsclip

Music

Music Floods New England In Summertime

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL — Musically speaking, New England is one of the most active sections of the nation during the summer months.

There are festivals and numerous educational centers. Both contribute much to the musical scene in general, but possibly those who gain the most from all of this are the countless students who seek to further the performing talents they posess in such fields as instrumentation and singing.

Arthur Fiedler

At the Berkshire Festival in Lenox, the summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra, students from all over the world gather to further their knowledge. There are classes in conducting, piano, the various string instruments, composition and arranging.

Though the teaching element holds a bright spot at the beautiful center located in the scenic splendor of western Massachusetts, highlight occurs in the numerous concerts given by the celebrated orchestra. Erich Leinsdorf graciously invites world famous conductors to share the podium with him, and also provides the finest talent in the individual fields of instrumentation for the many thousands of people who visit Lenox each summer.

One of the highlights of the orchestral part of the Festival is Pops Night, an evening instituted by the foresight and genius of Arthur Fiedler. The Festival chorus also makes a tremendous contribution to this major seasonal artistic fiesta.

In Newport, R. I., the Metropolitan Opera this year instituted a Verdi Opera Festival. This, in the years to come could provide this country with one of the most brilliant opera festivals anywhere in the entire world. On a less glamorous note, but making a fine contribution to the arts are the Folk Music and Jazz festivals, these are also held in Newport.

At Dartmouth college, New Hampshire has within its boundaries a festival more concerned with the field of musical education. Original compositions representing every field of musical endeavor are commissioned, and this year has been the most successful to date.

AT IPSWICH, the New England Conservatory of Music conducts summer school and also provides concerts featuring both students and artists of international repute. This is the second season of the Castle Hill series, and at no time in the history of this magnificent estate have so many people gathered to enjoy events offering opera, ballet, recitals in piano, violin and voice, chamber music, jazz and folk lore.

At Manchester, Vermont, the South Vermont Art and Music festival is held. For several years this community has provided visitors from many parts of the world with concerts and art exhibits that are highly regarded throughout the entire field.

In nearby Methuen, the Summer Organ series is held in the world famous Methuen Memorial Organ hall. Organists of the most brilliant talent are listed among the performguests. This summer series is the most famous in the nation, and many of the best known of the young organists today received their training in Methuen where the Andover Organ series was founded several years ago by Arthur Howes of the Peabody Institute of Music.

This year will mark the 108th anniversary of the Worcester Music Festival. The 1967 edition will open on October 23, and close on Saturday evening, October 28. Resident symphony orchestra will be the Detroit, Sixten Ehrling, musical director. The famous Worcester Festival chorus will again be directed by Alfred Nash Patterson. Guest soloists will include, Jane Marsh, operatic soprano, Misha Dichter, pianist, Mischa Mishakoff, violinist, concert master of the Detroit Symphony; Joan Marie Moynagh, soprano, and Metropolitan Opera tenor, Richard Tucker. Senator Edward W. Brooke will be narrator in a performance of Aaron Copland's "Lincoln Portrait." The Holy Cross college glee club will appear in a program. Conductor of the group is Joseph F. Mulready, Jr., and soloists include tenors, Calvin Hastings and William Mitchell.

OAKHURST, N. J.
HOME NEWS
W. 2,000

AUG 17 1967

Boston Pops Presents 30th Concert At Tanglewood

By CARL RICHARDS

LENOX, Mass. - A delightful, unique experience for any music lover is the Boston Philharmonic, playing amidst the beautiful and graceful setting of Tanglewood.

Acoustics; surprisingly, are as good if not better than most concert breathtaking.

Because of its location, there is a fair amount of thunder, lightning and rain, which seems to enhance rather than detract from the shed, a great triangular affair, and the specially constructed stage canopy. One of the critics at the time discussed the storm, saying "Kussevitky surrounded to the elements . . . even the French horns were shipping water."

As much as any of us who like classical symphony music listen and thrill to our hi-fi or stereo, etc., there is nothing as satisfying as the genuine, direct sound. Seeing each section, instrument and musician, as individuals and as a group, is impossible to merely visualize.

It has been some time since we had seen Erich Leinsdorf, and like good wine, he has with age not only improved but mellowed; his interpretation is even more powerful.

His rendition, with Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir, of the Bartok Concerto for two pianos and percussion, and particularly Poulenc's Concerto in D for two pianos and orchestra were a treat.

Beautifully played, they are not the usual concert fare. Poulenc had not intended this to be much more than a pleasing diversion but it brought a great response from the audience.

The next evening Seiji Ozawa, the brillient young Japanese conductor, who Japanese conductor, who incidentally, might affectionately well be daubed a Japanese Beatle, directed The Berlioz Symphonie Fantastique with such brilliance and fire that he only had every one on the edge of their seats during the entire performance. He received a standing ovation which brought he and the orchestra up for repeated bows which probably broke all records.

Two lesser known works, Takemitsui's Requiem for String Orchestra and Ligeti's Atmospheres were equally brilliant, and while not as enthusiastically received, earned a new respect for not only Ozawa, but the orchestra as well.

We didn't stay for the Sunday afternoon concert but it was a familiar Schumann, Mendelssohn, Stravinsky (The Fire Bird Suite) one which we are sure that the orchestra romped through blitely and with dispatch. We would have liked to hear the main theme of the suite but had to be content ourselves with a recording at home that evening.

It was thirty years ago this August 12th that the first official concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival was held at Tanglewood, it's official home. The 210 acre estate was turned over in 1936 to Dr. Koussevitzky, the than permanent conductor of the Boston Philharmonic, by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and Miss Mary Aspinwall. Dr. Koussevitzky turned the deed over to the Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Previously, three concerts had been held in 1934 and 35 by the New York Philharmonic under the direction of Henry Hadley at the Dan Hanna Farm in Stockbridge. In 1936 the Boston Symphony took over with Dr. Koussevitzky conducting at the Tent in Holmwood, the former Vanderbilt estate.

As noted before, on opening night it rained so hard that it prompted immediate action. A fund raising drive was started, resulting in the present music shed at Tanglewood, which was dedicated at the fifth Festival. It was not until 1959 that the Talbot Memorial Stage Canopy was installed in the Music Shed. At this time Charles Munch was the director of the orchestra. It was in 1940 that the Berkshire Music Center was founded. This provided a center where young musicians could continue their professional training and add to their orchestra experience, under the guidance of eminent musicians of the orchestra as teachers.

Situated on the grounds is a replica of the Hawthorne Cottage which was presented to the orchestra by the National Federation of Music Clubs. Parking facilities on the grounds are excellent and traffic is handled with exceptional speed and alacrity. There is also a cafeteria on the grounds which is open Tuesday and Friday evenings, and on Sunday box lunches are served.

The shed itself will hold 6,000 people in the main portion and about 2,000 in the side wings. Beautiful lawns surrounding the shed provide space for those who wish to relax as they listen. Accoustically, one can hear the complete range and sound of the music anywhere in the shed or on the grounds. The regular concerts are on Friday at nine and Saturday evening at eight and on Sunday afternoon at two thirty.

On Friday evenings there is a prelude concert at seven which that evening's ticket holders may attend. Rehearsal of the orchestra on the grounds may be attended by the public on Saturday mornings.

Besides the regular concerts there are performances by the Boston Pops under the direction of Arthur Fiedler. August will also feature the fourth Festival of Contemporary American Music. These concerts will involve the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra and the Tanglewood Choir. Aside from Tanglewood, the area abounds in activity. There is the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival at Lee, The Music Barn and The Music Inn, The South Mountain Concerts, and Summer Theater and Summer Theater groups.

There are museums and historical sights of interest of particularly interest is a visit to the Clark Museum at Williams College in nearby Williamsport.

TELEGRAM (m)
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 62,350

AUG 10 1967 New England Newsclip

Music: Boston Pops Concert At Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Effervescent music of George Gershwin and efficient conducting by Arthur Fiedler made a whopping success of the Boston Pops concert Tuesday night at Tanglewood.

The annual event to benefit the Boston Symphony's pension fund drew an audience of 13,828.

Earl Wild was a competent piano soloist in Concerto in F and Rhapsody in Blue. Orchestral pieces were the symphonic poem, "An American in Paris," Robert Russell Bennet's symphonic picture based on "Porgy and Bess," and Green's arrangement of "Strike up the Band."

It was highly desirable that this pops night at Tanglewood be an audience pleaser. The last two summers they were moderate to poor.

Two summers ago, Duke Ellington was piano solist but could scarcely be heard over the orchestra. Last summer, saxophonist Stan Getz gave the premier of a new concerto by Emil Sauter. It didn't get off the ground.

Fiedler played it safe this time. Gershwin's music may sound like fading echoes of the 20's and 30's to some, but still has a large, avid following.

Earning Bows

As usual, subtle orchestral balances were not Fielder's deepest concern on Tuesday night. He encouraged brasses and percussion to dominate, thereby earning bows for solo trumpeter Roger Voisin and everyone in the hardware department.

Fielder kept an alert eye or the score and used most of his energy keeping time. But he was also pretty active cueing details and it was clear that most interpretive matters had been settled at rehearsals.

Wild's performances were neither great nor pedestrian. Within a limited range, it was good Gershwin. Concerto in F was the better of the two. By and large, it had honesty, was properly emotional and technically adequate.

The second movement had to be started twice, the second time after the audience finally quieted down.

Pianist and orchestra did all they could to make a wow of the finale. Results were percussing, explosive at times, and doled out at full momentum.

Rarely Played

Wild indulged in some caprices in the "Rhapsody in Blue," along with some obvious clinkers. What made it distinctive were passages from the original score that are rarely played.

"American in Paris" was moved along briskly, with time out for uncomplaining blues and boulevard gossip. It was excellent Gershwin, just coarse enough when needed with plenty of oomph and blaring brasses.

Best of all, Fielder didn't try to refine the work, but used imagination by bringing out a little counterpoint in unexpected quarters.

The "Porgy and Bess" music received excellent orchestral treatment. Street vendor chants were immaculately i toned by solo instruments.

Real sportin' life swagg permeated "There's a Bo Leavin' for New York" and ' Got Plenty O' Nuthin." "Sum mertime" was a beautiful inte lude in muted strings.

SUNDAY REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 115,950

AUG 20 1967 New England Newsclip

Music Beat

Stan Getz at Tanglewood

By SKITCH HENDERSON

The Victor Company has, for the last few years, been putting together combinations that are sometimes uncomfortable, sometimes magnificent in spots, but seldom really rewarding considering the effort put forth.

Unbelievable Title

I recently came across a new album with the unbelievable title, "Stan Getz and Arthur Fiedler at Tanglewood." Upon first glance, I was very sceptical because the first title was "The Girl From Ipanema." No matter how sympathetic we might be, the sound of Bossa Nova really belongs to the small tight quintet or sextet playing at your local hangout.

Fresh Approach

I nevertheless listened to it because it was number one on the A side. I was surprised that Mr. Getz hadn't explored all the possibilities, but his approach is very fresh. The orchestra simply outweighs him and I don't think you would turn this in for the original.

Next on the album is a piece called the "Tanglewood Concerto." If we are to observe the literal meaning of the word "concerto," this title is a little ostentatious, but the overall music is unique.

The piece, as I would call it, is written by Eddie Sauter. (Remember the Sauter-Finnegan Band? Same fellow.) Some of the orchestral writing is brilliant. Even though the tenor saxophone is not the most comfortable instrument in this form, Stan Getz gives everybody a lesson.

Wise Decision

You don't have to be a jazz or a classical music fan to enjoy this album. I think it would be a wise decision for any music teacher to play this purely as an example of what can be done combining the standard repertoire and the modern player.

I have been a friend and fan of Stan's since the days of the original herd presided over by Woody Herman. He has never made it easy for himself. With his group, he sweated out the college circuit and the less-than-pleasant one-night stands for many years. The emergence of the Bossa Nova changed all that. Overnight, the combination of subtlety of rhythm plus the warmth of Stan's playing made an impression not only here in America but all over the world.

I remember working on many television shows with Stan while he was trying to figure out a way to take advantage of this great popularity. Through it all, no matter how many times the personnel changed, he remained head and shoulders above the average small group sound.

Somber Mood

I particularly remember one Tonight Show when he was in a somber mood. He had been booked to play a next-to-closing spot which the producer insisted could not be any longer than three minutes. Why producers always arrive at this figure I don't know, but that seems to be their common denominator of how long anybody can listen to music.

Stanley simply ignored everybody around him including the frantic signaling of the stage manager and proceeded to play two choruses of "Here's That Rainy Day." He upset all the clock watchers, but due to his great concentration it somehow caught on with the audience. When he finished, the curtain closed. We were off the air only about a minute and a half, but my trip backstage to compliment him was in vain. He simply disappeared.

Social Secretaries

At the White House they told me recently that one of the social secretaries hears from him occasionally, and all he wants to do is join the Army and fight in Vietnam. This might give you an idea of the complexities of this artist. They, of course, have suggested that he take the group and entertain the troops musically but he says that "Ipanema" hangs too heavily over his head.

Since the days of Sidney Bechet, I don't think we have had a local saxophone hero that we could talk about, but if I were going to elect anybody to this Hall of Fame, it would be Stanley. Despite his moods, his complexities, and despite the huge Boston Pops Orchestra, he speaks the truth.

Give a listen when you have a chance.

SUN (e)
LOWELL, MASS.
CIRC. 46,350

AUG 19 1967 New England Newsclip

Music

Music Floods New England In Summertime

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL — Musically speaking, New England is one of the most active sections of the nation during the summer months.

There are festivals and numerous educational centers. Both contribute much to the musical scene in general, but possibly those who gain the most from all of this are the countless students who seek to further the performing talents they posess in such fields as instrumentation and singing.

Arthur Fiedler

At the Berkshire Festival in Lenox, the summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra, students from all over the world gather to further their knowledge. There are classes in conducting, piano, the various string instruments, composition and arranging.

Though the teaching element holds a bright spot at the beautiful center located in the scenic splendor of western Massachusetts, highlight occurs in the numerous concerts given by the celebrated orchestra. Erich Leinsdorf graciously invites world famous conductors to share the podium with him, and also provides the finest talent in the individual fields of instrumentation for the many thousands of people who visit Lenox each summer.

One of the highlights of the orchestral part of the Festival is Pops Night, an evening instituted by the foresight and genius of Arthur Fiedler. The Festival chorus also makes a tremendous contribution to this major seasonal artistic fiesta.

In Newport, R. I., the Metropolitan Opera this year instituted a Verdi Opera Festival. This, in the years to come could provide this country with one of the most brilliant opera festivals anywhere in the entire world. On a less glamorous note, but making a fine contribution to the arts are the Folk Music and Jazz festivals, these are also held in Newport.

At Dartmouth college, New Hampshire has within its boundaries a festival more concerned with the field of musical education. Original compositions representing every field of musical endeavor are commissioned, and this year has been the most successful to date.

AT IPSWICH, the New England Conservatory of Music conducts summer school and also provides concerts featuring both students and artists of international repute. This is the second season of the Castle Hill series, and at no time in the history of this magnificent estate have so many people gathered to enjoy events offering opera, ballet, recitals in piano, violin and voice, chamber music, jazz and folk lore.

At Manchester, Vermont, the South Vermont Art and Music festival is held. For several years this community has provided visitors from many parts of the world with concerts and art exhibits that are highly regarded throughout the entire field.

In nearby Methuen, the Summer Organ series is held in the world famous Methuen Memorial Organ hall. Organists of the most brilliant talent are listed among the performguests. This summer series is the most famous in the nation, and many of the best known of the young organists today received their training in Methuen where the Andover Organ series was founded several years ago by Arthur Howes of the Peabody Institute of Music.

This year will mark the 108th anniversary of the Worcester Music Festival. The 1967 edition will open on October 23, and close on Saturday evening, October 28. Resident symphony orchestra will be the Detroit, Sixten Ehrling, musical director. The famous Worcester Festival chorus will again be directed by Alfred Nash Patterson. Guest soloists will include, Jane Marsh, operatic soprano, Misha Dichter, pianist, Mischa Mishakoff, violinist, concert master of the Detroit Symphony; Joan Marie Moynagh, soprano, and Metropolitan Opera tenor, Richard Tucker. Senator Edward W. Brooke will be narrator in a performance of Aaron Copland's "Lincoln Portrait." The Holy Cross college glee club will appear in a program. Conductor of the group is Joseph F. Mulready, Jr., and soloists include tenors, Calvin Hastings and William Mitchell.

80

TUESDAY NIGHT CHAMBER CONCERTS

BACK FROM RUSSIA are the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, four members of whom are shown in performance. Left to right, they are Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Burton Fine, Jules Eskin and Joseph Silverstein. The Players will present their second concert in the United States since their tour through the U.S.S.R. Tuesday evening, July 25, at 8 in the theatre at Tanglewood.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900

JUL 5 1967

New England Newsclip

Music Review

BSO Chamber Players

By JAY ROSENFELD

THE FIRST of the Tuesday evening chamber music series in the theatre at Tanglewood was played last night by the Boston Symphony Chamber Players. Comprised of the first chair men of the various sections of the orchestra, fresh from a successful tour of Europe with many concerts in the Soviet Union, they presented a program in which the string and wind players each had two opportunities. They used them skillfully, although the material varied from the pleasant to that unsurpassed piece of all time, the Schubert "Trout" quintet.

* * *

VIOLINIST Joseph Silverstein, cellist Jules Eskin and pianist Claude Frank did the Mozart Trio in E Major (K. 542). This is not one of Mozart's most impressive works. The piano alone states the theme in each of the three movements and it is all more inoffensively amusing than striking. The same three artists were joined by violist Burton Fine and double bass Henry Portnoi in the Schubert quintet. The superior individual competence of the artists, as in many other similar situations, sometimes lures them in virtuoso directions when less venturesome methods would suffice. There is no gainsaying that the performance delighted the audience.

* * *

TWO QUINTETS for wind instruments brought out splendid performances from flute Doriot Dwyer, oboe Ralph Gomberg, clarinet Gino Cioffi, bassoon Sherman Walt and French horn James Stagliano. They first played an E flat quintet, Opus 88, No. 2 of Anton Reicha, a composer born in Prague who became a friend and colleague of his exact contemporary, Beethoven, when he went to Bonn at the age of 18 and whom he later rejoined in Vienna.

The catalogue of Reicha's works is incredibly long. There are 24 compositions for this combination of instruments alone but they are rarely played today and the reason becomes apparent when one hears the piece played last night. His tremendous output is more remarkable for strange combinations of instruments than for abundance of ideas. The tonal beauty achieved last night, however, was luscious and rich.

* * *

gram and at the end of the Reicha scherzo, at a moment when the bassoon was descending to its most rewarding register, a great explosion — it could have been a Fourth of July bomb or a clap of thunder — occurred. The bassoon had been by Walt, the explosion by Gewalt.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900

JUL 12 1967

New England Newsclip

Music Review

Soprano Phyllis Curtin

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

A RECITAL by soprano Phyllis Curtin in the theatre at Tanglewood last night was the second offering of the announced chamber music series. Above all, Miss Curtin showed herself last night as an artist. Her voice has always been a source of enormous delight to her audiences in opera, with orchestra and in recital, but last night's program was outstanding in its unique concentration on songs from a single period of French music.

She first sang songs composed by Gabriel Fauré and Claude Debussy to six poems by Paul Verlaine. All these Frenchmen were of about the same generation and the two composers were prompted at about the same time to essay the transfer of the delicate verses of Verlaine to music. The opportunity to compare the versions side by side was rare and illuminating, and Miss Curtin eschewed all show and glitter and kept to the fastidious restraint and extremely disciplined vocalism of which she is so highly capable and which, in this case, was so eminently suitable.

Neither the poems of Verlaine nor of Charles van Lerberghe, all 10 of which Fauré had to put to music and which Miss Curtin sang after the intermission, are verses of passion or urgent drama. It was thus a phenomenon of great artistic sacrifice to choose not one line in which she might have taken flight, given all her vocal and musical gifts. She maintained a fitting purity of style and an effective use of nuance within the range the two composers demand.

* * *

THERE WAS a quality in much of the performance of a Melisande. Indeed Debussy dedicated his "Ariettes publiees" sometime later to Mary Garden, who was the first to sing one of the title roles of his only opera. Fauré's version of "C'est l'Extase" was a touching lament as Miss Curtin sang it. Debussy's "Il pleure dans mon coeru," and "En sourdine", from the first set of "Fetes Galantes," were exquisitely sung.

In the Fauré songs on Van Lerberghe's poems, there was further remarkable vocalism and artistry. Miss Curtin, for instance, sang the "Prima Verba" with great simplicity and austerity. She injected a contrasting inner glow to the succeeding "Roses Ardentes." Indeed, every song had character.

The piano accompaniment of Ryan Edwards was convincing yet discreet, and added an extra measure to one of the most highly courageous and commendable artistic efforts Tanglewood may hear this season.

SUNDAY REGISTER
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
CIRC. 119,550

JUL 16 1967

New England Newsclip

Boston, Warsaw Concerts on Educational Channels

The Boston Symphony and the Warsaw Philharmonic will present two evening concerts on Channels 24, 71, and 53.

A complete concert version of Mozart's famous opera, "The Magic Flute," will be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood on Tuesday, July 18, at 8:30 p.m. Erich Leinsdorf conducts the orchestra, the Tanglewood Choir, and a distinguished group of soloists.

On Thursday, July 20, at 8:30 p.m. the Warsaw Philharmonic will perform Shostakovich's Symphony No 5. Witold Rowicki conducts the Philharmonic in a telecast concert recorded in Hartford during the orchestra's tour of North America in 1964. Also included on the program is the polka from "The Stone Guest," one of 16 operas by the 19th-century Polish composer, Stanislaw Moniuszko.

Gino Cioffi, clarinet with the BSO Chamber Players, is pictured outside Philharmonic Hall in Odessa with Russian clarinet students.

To Russia, With Pens And Music

By Herbert Weissenstein

After a seven-week tour through England, West Germany, and the Soviet Union, the Boston Symphony Chamber Players return to the Berkshires for a concert at Tanglewood on July 4th. They come filled with tales of lost baggage and troublesome guides, but most of all with their sense of continual elation over the warm receptions they received everywhere they played.

Although the two concerts in England and the four in West Germany proved successful with critics and audience alike, the Chamber Players have the most to recount about their 19 concerts and 6 open rehearsals in the Soviet Union. A total of some 19,000 attended these concerts, with 46 encores played for the demanding audiences. It was estimated that in addition to the rhythmic applause, which is a traditional Russian way of expressing great appreciation, some 150 bouquets of flowers from listeners were presented to the Chamber Players.

Their open rehearsals were likewise successful. They were attended by many music students, who afterwards mingled with the Boston group for musical conversations and demonstrations.

* * *

The Players' immense musical success was occasionally offset by typical minor tour problems. Musicians seem always to have difficulty staying with their instruments on tour — and it was no different in Russia. The Russian airliners encountered problems in finding room for the large tour trunks of the Chamber Players, although assurances had been given that space could easily be found. In addition, the customs officials took a day off for Russian V-E day, which coincided with the long-awaited moment of the trunks' arrival.

By hastily rearranging programs and playing in street clothes, however the Chamber Players were able to present their opening concert after only one postponement. When at last they were reunited with their baggage in Chernovtsy, one of them recalled at a party given in their honor that, "We were all rather limp but still grinning."

The Players maintained a sense of humor throughout their difficulties. When Harry Kraut, assistant manager of the Boston Symphony and manager of the tour finally lost all patience with a guide, his sputtering fit of anger had to be laboriously translated by an interpreter. The onlooking players could hardly contain their glee at seeing their annoyed manager at the mercy of the language barrier.

* * *

During preparations for the tour, the Players learned that one of the scarcest commodities in Russia were ball point pens that work. In anticipation, they took along a large stock of ball points inscribed with the symbol of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to present to people as souvenirs. The Players also presented admirers with RCA Victor recordings of their music.

In each city visited, the Chamber Players conducted classes for the young Russian music students, either at the conservatories or in their hotel rooms. In preparation for these sessions, the Players spent the past winter polishing their Russian.

At Kiev, where there is a large conservatory, the Players first gathered with the faculty in the Rector's Office, then met separately with professors and students. For his class, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the BSO, played the first violin of the orchestra part of the Beethoven Violin Concerto with the conservatory professor, while the Russian students each in turn performed the solo portion.

Following their visit to the Ukraine, the Chamber Players departed with a large gift collection of Ukrainian music presented to them by appreciative Russian musicians.

Those members of the Chamber Players on the tour included Joseph Silverstein, violin; Burton Fine, viola; Jules Eskin, cello; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; James Stagliano, French horn. All these are the principal players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Also from the Orchestra were Lois Schaefer, flute; Matthew Ruggiero, bassoon, and Henry Portnoi, bass. On the tour, the Players were also joined by the young American pianist Richard Goode.

HERBERT WEISSENSTEIN is with the press department of the BSO at Tanglewood.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900

JUL 1 1967

New England

Programs from Russian and German concerts.

WEEKEND PRELUDES

81

Tanglewood The Beautiful, Home Of Boston Symphony

By RUTH HUTCHISON
Globe-Times Arts Editor

The festival tour that began with last week's report on this page continued in Tanglewood, which really was headquarters for the project. Just before the gates opened early that Friday evening, young people carrying musical instruments were coming through — they are attending the Berkshire Music Center to acquire professional training and artistic experience under the guidance of eminent musicians and teachers.

The Center was established at Tanglewood in 1940 and Erich Leinsdorf has been its director since 1963, in addition to his duties as conductor of the resident Boston Symphony Orchestra. All the resources of the Symphony are at the service of the Music Center, which has various performing groups, including an orchestra, chorus and choir.

Average enrollment at the Music Center is 250 and fortunate indeed are the young people in the performance department who hold fellowships. They came down from Hawthorne House and the various buildings devoted to them and their work, as the waiting thousands streamed through the gates, across the lawn, along the walks and under the towering trees of Tanglewood, making their way toward the Music Shed.

Began With A Storm

Tanglewood was founded in 1936 as a result of two previous summers of concerts in a tent, with a howling thunderstorm putting an end to that kind of accommodations. The 210 - acre state between Lenox and Stockbridge was presented by its owners to the Boston Symphony as a site for the festival and two years later Berkshire residents raised funds to build the Music Shed, which accommodates 6,037. Nowadays the festival is visited by a quarter - million people each summer.

The shed's original plans were drawn up by Eliel Saarinen, and the Talbot Memorial stage canopy, added in 1959, was designed by Eero Saarinen and Associates.

Lieder Program

On the first evening we were there, there was an early "prelude" program in the shed — Hanne-Lore Kuhse, leading dramatic soprano of the Berlin State Opera, in Lieder by Schubert, Schumann, Brahms and Strauss. Fraulein Kuhse was accompanied by Jonathan Dudley, who was sympathetic and self - effacing but very good. The singer has a tremendous range and her high C's are effortless. Sometimes her final, low notes were a bit sketchy, but it must be hard for an opera singer of her power to practice such restraint.

She sang such favorites as as Schubert's "An die Musik" and "Die Forelle," Schumann's "Mondnacht," and "Staendchen" by Brahams. The audience warmed to her at once and the rapport was pleasurable.

Meantime, thousands of people were making themselves comfortable on the lawn outside the shed as the Boston symphony tuned up for its all-Beethoven program that was to follow. William Steinberg, conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony, was to be guest conductor.

Bethlehemites in the audience were determined to like him, even though they remembered with chagrin the night last winter in Johnston Hall when, for encore, Steinberg launched his orchestra into "The Stars and Stripes Forever" and strode offstage; leaving the orchestra and audience to their own devices. Steinberg might have a poor opinion of Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, but Bethlehem, home of the 67 - year - old Bach Choir, could afford to be magnanimous. After all, Steinberg was only a year old when the Bach Choir began, so . . .

Brilliant Beethoven

Symphony No. 8 in F. major, Op. 93, proceeded smoothly, with the Allentown contingent in the audience sure that important components of the orchestra were Gottfried Wilfinger, first violin, and Robert Karol, viola, both from Allentown. This was brilliant Beethoven and in the succeeding Piano Concerto No. 3 in C. minor, Op. 37, it became almost brittle, as soloist Theodore Lettvin seemed sometimes to be setting his own pace.

Steinberg was keeping, we thought, a cautionary finger on the soloist, and all was going stunning when a real, rip-snorting Berkshire thunderstrom rolled in and put out the lights. There was plenty of illumination — lightning — but it was fitful. The music went straight on, orchestra and soloist not in the least disconcerted. One suspects that Steinberg went right on conducting, but who knows?

Symphony No. 5 in C. minor, Op. 67, proceeded without incident, except that it became more a shared experience than might have been expected before the storm. . .

Incidentally, Tanglewood caters a very good box lunch, complete with Boston Symphony match packs, and the most popular spot on the grounds — after the shed, of course — is G. Schirmer's, where they do a land office business in records, scores and books. All kinds of books, by the way; people who attend music festivals can read too.

Berkshire Playhouse

Next day there was an interval of experimental theater at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge — of which, perhaps, the less said the better. Billed as the world premier of a comedy by Lewis John Carlino titled "The Exercise," the play made us feel that we'd as soon have waited until the following week when the company was to play "Dracula."

The intent had been to "lift the Berkshire Playhouse out of summer - stock mediocrity" and "The Exercise" is one of this year's originals supposed to turn the trick.

There are two in the cast, Anne Jackson and Lou Antonio. The plot is as old as the hills and has been spelled out in a three - letter word hit - play in recent years. Anne Jackson is very good indeed but she couldn't pull it off alone and she didn't get much help from Antonio.

Afterward, we were all tongue-tied for hourse — lest when we opened our mouths nothing but four - letter words would come forth. And they would have fallen on barren ground.

We doubt if "The Exercise" makes Broadway — not, at any rate, without a lot of re-writing.

Beethoven Opera

Tanglewood that night took away the bad taste with a concert production of the Beethoven opera, "Fidelio." This time Erick Leinsdorf conducted his own orchestra. The libretto was adapted from the original 1805 performance — and the rather substantial Hanne-Lore Kuhse played Leonore - Fidelio. Fortunately, no effort was made to present the opera in costume.

But even though Kuhse was a hardly - believable young man, it mattered little, for her voice was the thing, and it is glorious. George Shirley was Florestan — a youthful tenor who has sung with the Metropolitan Opera for six seasons and who combines a fine voice with a pleasing presence. It would have been good to hear more of him.

Another notable was Tom Krause, Finnish baritone, also rather young, and also very good. Earlier this year he sang in the Mass in B. Minor at Tanglewood. The half - dozen other singers were entirely competent and made the musical tale of love in a Spanish prison sung in German somehow believable to Americans.

All of this Leinsdorf took in stride, maneuvering orchestra, soloists, Tanglewood Choir and Berkshire Chorus through their paces with ease, confidence and economy of gestures. He was imperturbable.

Last Concert

One more goody was in order before the Lehigh Valley group left for home and that was the all - Brahms program of Sunday afternoon. It began disarmingly with the Academic Festival Overture, using four student songs, with trumpets giving out the first, bassoons introducing the third, and the full orchestra winding up with "Gaudeamus Igitur." It was fun, and the orchestra appeared to enjoy the relaxation. However, there was nothing sloppy about the presentation.

After intermission came the Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 77, with Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, as soloist. He was entirely competent and highly meticulous — but no virtuoso. But it was good to note that he was so capable and that Leinsdorf selected him as soloist. It was hard to tell who seemed most pleased after it was over — Leinsdorf, Silverstein or his confreres in the orchestra. A great orchestra and a great director.

Festival tour, anyone?

BETHLEHEM, PA.
GLOBE-TIMES
D. 30,500
AUG 18 1967

The Knickerbocker News
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 55,425
JUL 8 1967

Music

TANGLEWOOD — Erich Leinsdorf conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra in all-Mozart programs at 8 p.m. today and 2:30 p.m. tomorrow. Phyllis Curtin, Metropolitan Opera soprano, is soloist at the Chamber Music Concert at 8 p.m. Tuesday. Next Friday's weekend prelude at 7 p.m. is Bach organ music, with E. Power Biggs. The Friday night program features works of Vivaldi.

SPRINGFIELD HERALD
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
BI-WEEKLY CIRC. 111,000
JUL 9 1967
New England Newspapers

Tanglewood

By DEAN RADIN

THE 30th ANNUAL BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL AT TANGLEWOOD OPENED LAST FRIDAY EVENING, BEGINNING WITH THE POPULAR WEEKEND PRELUDE AT 7:00 P.M.

The prelude included Beethoven's Sonata in F Major, Op. 10, No. 2; Six Themes with Variations, Op. 105; Ten Themes with Variations, Op. 107; and Prokofiev's Prelude, Op. 12, No. 7; March, Op. 12, No. 1; and Piano Sonata No. 3 in A Minor, Op. 28.

The Beethoven selections were performed lightly and expressively by soloist Malcolm Frager, pianist, and assisted by Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flutist.

Malcolm Frager is a familiar soloist at Tanglewood appearing in his fifth consecutive season with the Boston Symphony Orchestra this summer. Frager was born in St. Louis in 1935. He graduated from Columbia University in New York magna cum laude. Later he studied at the American Conservatory at Fontaine bleau and the Marlboro Music School. He debuted in New York in 1952 and since then has toured extensively throughout the world. Music awards won include the Edgar M. Levintritt Award and the Queen Elisabeth of Belgium in 1960.

The Prokofiev pieces were soloed by Mr Frager with outstanding intellectual interpretation and gaiety. His rippling rhythmic cadenzas and galloping glissandos throughout the theme accentuated the unique style found in many of Prokofiev's noted works.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900
JUL 27 1967
New England Newspapers

CLAUDE FRANK AND LILIAN KALLIR, duo-pianists, will present a program of the Brahms Liebeslieder waltzes with singers drawn from the Berkshire Music Center choral departments at the Tanglewood weekend prelude Friday, July 28, at 7 p.m. Both Mr. Frank and Miss Kallir (in private life husband and wife) are members of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center and have been soloists with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for Berkshire Festival concerts.

SYRACUSE
Herald Journal
D. 133,303
JUL 25 1967

Frager to play in SU series

After performing for his fifth consecutive season at the Berkshire Music Festival with the Boston Symphony, pianist Malcolm Frager makes his initial Syracuse appearance tomorrow at 8:30 p.m. in Crouse College Auditorium, Syracuse University.

Frager's concert is part of the summer series of the School of Music.

He will open his program with Beethoven's Sonata in F Major, Opus 10, No. 2, followed by Schumann's Sonata in G Minor, Opus 2. After intermission, the pianist will perform Brahms' Waltzes, Opus 39; Prokofieff's Preludes, Opus 12, No. 7 and March, Opus 12, No. 1. He will conclude with another Prokofieff composition, the Allegro Tempestoso from Sonata No. 3, Opus 28, known as "From Old Notebooks."

MALCOLM FRAGER

Won 2 Awards

Frager is at present the first and only artist who has won both the Concours de la Reine Elisabeth in Brussels, Belgium, and the Edgar M. Leventritt Competition in this country. These came six years ago.

A Phi Beta Kappa and magna cum laude graduate of Columbia University in 1957, he speaks seven languages, including Russian. He toured the Soviet Union in 1963, playing 25 sold out performances, 11 of which were in Moscow. It was in Moscow, too, that he played four, two-piano recitals with Soviet pianist Vladimir Ashkenazy. Last season, the duo repeated these concerts in several major U.S. cities, including New York.

1st Recital at 6

The 32-year-old musician played his first recital in St. Louis at the age of six and four years later soloed with that city's symphony orchestra. At 14, he went to New York City to study.

Frager's first musical award was the Prix d'Excellence at the American Conservatory in Fountainebleau, France. Then came top honors at the Geneva International Piano Competition in 1955, the Michaels Memorial Music Award in Chicago in 1956, and the Career Award of the National Society of Arts and Letters in Los Angeles in 1958.

After winning the Brussels prize, the pianist was invited by then President Dwight Eisenhower to perform at the White House for the king and queen of Denmark.

Browning's Prelude

John Browning, young pianist who is scheduled to play Rachmaninoff and Prokofiev with the orchestra Sunday afternoon, opened the prelude program at 7 with Chopin's monumental Sonata in B Flat Minor, Op. 35 (the one with the famous funeral march).

He followed it with two of Rachmaninoff's Etudes - Tableaux and seven short piano works by the 19th century mystic Scriabin.

The atmosphere began with a sort of cool romanticism with Chopin and moved subtly through the expansiveness of Rachmaninoff to the nearly ultimate romanticism of Scriabin.

Browning's immaculate fingering stood him in good stead through the lushness of the thick scoring, but the heaviness of his foot on the sustaining pedal was less appropriate during the Chopin than it was with Scriabin.

It is difficult to overplay Scriabin, and Friday his piano pieces came across wth a wealth of expressive variety.

The best moments preceding Scriabin's subdued passion came during the graceful scherzo and the dramatic funeral march of Chopin.

82

FESTIVAL OF CONTEMPORARY AMERICAN MUSIC

PRESS (e)
BRISTOL, CONN.
CIRC. 15,900
AUG 5 1967 New England Newsclip

Music Critics Annual Tanglewood Conclave

Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be the site of the Music Critics Association annual conference from August 9 through 13 during the seventh week of the Orchestra's Bernshire Festival. Thirty critics from throughout the United States and Canada will attend the Tanglewood meetings.

Miles Kastendieck, Conference Chairman, has announced that discussions will be held on "The State of Music Criticism" and "The State of Contemporary Music" in addition to general and business sessions.

Among those participating in the conference in addition to the Critics will be: John Browning, pianist; Paul Fromm, President of the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago; Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Lawrence K. Miller, Editor of the Berkshire Eagle; Thomas D. Perry, Jr., Manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; George Perle, Gunther Schuller, and Roger Sessions, all members of the Berkshire Music Center's composition faculty; and Roger Stevens, Chairman of the National Council on the Arts.

During their stay at Tanglewood the music critics will attend several concerts of the Berkshire Music Center's Festival of Contemporary American Music and three Berkshire Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 192,400
AUG 1 1967 New England Newsclip

Piece for Syn-Ket

The première of John Eaton's Concert Piece for Syn-Ket and Symphony Orchestra will take place at Tanglewood on Aug. 9. Gunther Schuller will conduct the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in this work commissioned by the Fromm Foundation at Mr. Schuller's suggestion.

The composer will be soloist on the Syn-Ket, an electronic instrument that makes possible the spontaneous and "live" performance of electronic sounds heretofore available only by elaborate and extensive pre-recording techniques in a sound laboratory. This new instrument was developed in Rome by the composer and an engineer, Paul Ketoff.

It has been featured by Mr. Eaton this past year in solo and chamber music concerts. The Tanglewood première will be the first use of the Syn-Ket with full orchestra.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 885,000 SUN. 1,500,000
AUG 10 1967 Bagbellen

TANGLEWOOD OPENS MODERNS' FESTIVAL

Special to The New York Times

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 9—The annual Festival of Contemporary American Music and the annual conference of the Music Critics Association began together at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood tonight.

The center's orchestra gave the first performance of John Eaton's Concert Piece for Synket and orchestra, commissioned for the festival. The composer played the Syn-ket, an electronic instrument on which the performer can produce his own electronic sounds directly, without having to prerecord them on tape in a sound laboratory.

Works by Bernstein, Finney and Gunther Schuller were also given, with Mr. Schuller conducting.

The second event of the seven-concert festival will be a choral program led by Iva Dee Hiatt tomorrow.

The critics will hold meetings for three days, starting tomorrow. Music criticism and contemporary music will be the subject matter. Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony, and Thomas D. Perry Jr., its manager, will be among the discussants, along with Roger Stevens, chairman of the National Foundation on the Arts and members of the music center faculty.

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350
AUG 5 1967 New England Newsclip

Music Critics to Hold Conference in Lenox

Tanglewood, the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be the site of the Music Critics Association annual conference from August 9 through 13. Thirty critics from throughout the United States and Canada will attend.

Miles Kastendieck is conference chairman. Discussions will be held on "The state of music criticism" and "The state of contemporary music."

Druing their stay in Lenox the music critics will attend several concerts at the center.

At Tanglewood Festival Features Electronic Music

Boston Globe Thursday, August 10, 1967

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

LENOX — The annual Festival of Contemporary American Music sponsored at Tanglewood by the Berkshire Music Center and the Fromm Foundation began Wednesday evening with a concert by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, Gunther Schuller conducting.

The first of four finew pieces commissioned by the Fromm Foundation to be played during the course of the Festival had its premier at this concert, John Eaton's concert piece the Syn-Ket and Symphony Orchestra.

The Syn-Ket, an invention of a Roman sound engineer named Paul Ketoff, is an instant electronic music machine, a device that makes most of the sonorous materials of electronic music available for live performance, rather than on prerecorded tape.

Eaton's concert piece, than, is one that combines electronic with instrumental sound, with the difference that the possibilities of flexibility, of variation from one accosion to another, are available for the electronic half of the dialogue as well.

Eaton is probably best known as a jazz composer and pianist, but his concert piece is not related to that part of his career. He was trained at Princeton, where he studied with Milton Babbit and Roger Sessions.

Eaton has made the very phenomenon of bringing the electronic and conventional world together the main issue of his piece.

In his program note, he speaks of the problem of teaching the Syn-Ket how to sing, and one can almost imagine a kind of senario for the piece involving the taming of the device from "whirring machine" to "a simple and uneffected singer" (Eaton's words).

He has approached his task with humor, and imagination that works in a lively way in matters of structure as well as of sonority, and with ingenuity.

The orchestra, for example, is divided into halves tuned a quarter tone apart, something that enriches the melodic vocabulary of the work interestingly, and which also offers an effective approach towards bringing the instruments into a closer liaison with the electronic part of the score.

Eaton's concert piece has life, individuality and high spirits.

Schuller also conducted his own "Triplum". Here, too, sonorous materials generate structure; the main point of the piece, as it were, being the three-part division of the orchestra, into its primary voices of strings, woodwinds and brass.

As often with Schuller the virtuosity of the orchestral writing is impressive, and there are some interesting, fresh sounds along with many that are effective in familiar ways.

From the point of view of expression, the dark and densely polyphonic final section makes the most impact.

The concert opened with the concerto for percussion and orchestra by Ross Lee Finney, and included also the serenade by Leonard Bernstein, with Joseph Silverstein as violin soloist.

NEWS (E)
FRAMINGHAM, MASS.
CIRC. 13,150
AUG 10 1967 New England Newsclip

Contemporary American Music at Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox — Erich Leinsdorf, director of the Berkshire Music Center, has announced the full schedule of concerts which will take place during the six day Festival of Contemporary American Music at Tanglewood, August 9-15. This Festival within a festival will be presented by the Berkshire Music Center in cooperation with the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago, which has gained an international reputation for its encouragement of contemporary composition and performance and has actively supported the Music Center's contemporary music program since 1956.

The six-day Festival will serve primarily to focus attention on four selected young American composers, each of whom has achieved recognition within a certain area but none of whom has yet achieved a broad reputation. The Berkshire Music Center has commissioned these composers in cooperation with the Fromm Music Foundation. In addition to the four commissioned works, all of which will have their world premieres during the Festival, an additional work not especially commissioned for this Festival will have its premiere. For the first time the Festival has expanded its geographic range to include composers from Argentina and Canada.

The Festival will also serve to open the celebration of the 25th Anniversary of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation which has commissioned many now well-known works during its quarter century of activity. The Festival will incorporate performances of four works commissioned by the Koussevitzky Foundation into its programs.

TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM (e)
HOLYOKE, MASS.
CIRC. 20,930
AUG 10 1967 New England Newsclip

Modern Music Festival At Tanglewood

The musical compositions of four young North and South American composers are being performed at Tanglewood this week during the six-day Festival of Contemporary American Music.

They are Carlos Roque Alrina, in Berlin, John C. Eaton, 32, of 26, an Argentinian now resident Bryn Mawr, Pa., Jeffrey Levine, 24, of New York and Rutgers U., and R. Murray Schafer of Sarnia, Ont., Canada, and Simon Fraser U.

Evening concerts were given Wednesday and Thursday, and there will be concerts Saturday afternoon, Sunday morning and evening, and Monday and Tuesday evenings. They are open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, those who contribute to the support of the Center.

The Berkshire Music Center orchestra the Tanglewood Choir, and students and faculty members of the Berkshire Music Center perform in this Festival, which also includes works of many other contemporary composers.

The Saturday afternoon concert will be devoted to electronic music. Tuesday night the program will be given over to the Group for Contemporary Music at Columbia University.

These concerts are jointly sponsored by the Berkshire Music Center, directed by Erich Leinsdorf, and the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago.

82

FESTIVAL OF CONTEMPORARY AMERICAN MUSIC

PRESS (e)
BRISTOL, CONN.
CIRC. 15,900
AUG 5 1967
New England Newsclip

Music Critics Annual Tanglewood Conclave

Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be the site of the Music Critics Association annual conference from August 9 through 13 during the seventh week of the Orchestra's Bernshire Festival. Thirty critics from throughout the United States and Canada will attend the Tanglewood meetings.

Miles Kastendieck, Conference Chairman, has announced that discussions will be held on "The State of Music Criticism" and "The State of Contemporary Music" in addition to general and business sessions.

Among those participating in the conference in addition to the Critics will be: John Browning, pianist; Paul Fromm, President of the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago; Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Lawrence K. Miller, Editor of the Berkshire Eagle; Thomas D. Perry, Jr., Manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; George Perle, Gunther Schuller, and Roger Sessions, all members of the Berkshire Music Center's composition faculty; and Roger Stevens, Chairman of the National Council on the Arts.

During their stay at Tanglewood the music critics will attend several concerts of the Berkshire Music Center's Festival of Contemporary American Music and three Berkshire Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 192,400
AUG 1 1967
New England Newsclip

Piece for Syn-Ket

The première of John Eaton's Concert Piece for Syn-Ket and Symphony Orchestra will take place at Tanglewood on Aug. 9. Gunther Schuller will conduct the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in this work commissioned by the Fromm Foundation at Mr. Schuller's suggestion.

The composer will be soloist on the Syn-Ket, an electronic instrument that makes possible the spontaneous and "live" performance of electronic sounds heretofore available only by elaborate and extensive pre-recording techniques in a sound laboratory. This new instrument was developed in Rome by the composer and an engineer, Paul Ketoff.

It has been featured by Mr. Eaton this past year in solo and chamber music concerts. The Tanglewood première will be the first use of the Syn-Ket with full orchestra.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 885,000 SUN. 1,500,000
AUG 10 1967

TANGLEWOOD OPENS MODERNS' FESTIVAL

Special to The New York Times

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 9—The annual Festival of Contemporary American Music and the annual conference of the Music Critics Association began together at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood tonight.

The center's orchestra gave the first performance of John Eaton's Concert Piece for Synket and orchestra, commissioned for the festival. The composer played the Syn-ket, an electronic instrument on which the performer can produce his own electronic sounds directly, without having to prerecord them on tape in a sound laboratory.

Works by Bernstein, Finney and Gunther Schuller were also given, with Mr. Schuller conducting.

The second event of the seven-concert festival will be a choral program led by Iva Dee Hiatt tomorrow.

The critics will hold meetings for three days, starting tomorrow. Music criticism and contemporary music will be the subject matter. Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony, and Thomas D. Perry Jr., its manager, will be among the discussants, along with Roger Stevens, chairman of the National Foundation on the Arts and members of the music center faculty.

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
AUG 5 1967
New England Newsclip

Music Critics to Hold Conference in Lenox

Tanglewood, the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be the site of the Music Critics Association annual conference from August 9 through 13. Thirty critics from throughout the United States and Canada will attend.

Miles Kastendieck is conference chairman. Discussions will be held on "The state of music criticism" and "The state of contemporary music."

Druing their stay in Lenox the music critics will attend several concerts at the center.

Boston Globe
Thursday, August 10, 1967

At Tanglewood
Festival Features Electronic Music

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

LENOX — The annual Festival of Contemporary American Music sponsored at Tanglewood by the Berkshire Music Center and the Fromm Foundation began Wednesday evening with a concert by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, Gunther Schuller conducting.

The first of four finew pieces commissioned by the Fromm Foundation to be played during the course of the Festival had its premier at this concert, John Eaton's concert piece the Syn-Ket and Symphony Orchestra.

The Syn-Ket, an invention of a Roman sound engineer named Paul Ketoff, is an instant electronic music machine, a device that makes most of the sonorous materials of electronic music available for live performance, rather than on prerecorded tape.

Eaton's concert piece, than, is one that combines electronic with instrumental sound, with the difference that the possibilities of flexibility, of variation from one accosion to another, are available for the electronic half of the dialogue as well.

Eaton is probably best known as a jazz composer and pianist, but his concert piece is not related to that part of his career. He was trained at Princeton, where he studied with Milton Babbit and Roger Sessions.

Eaton has made the very phenomenon of bringing the electronic and conventional world together the main issue of his piece.

In his program note, he speaks of the problem of teaching the Syn-Ket how to sing, and one can almost imagine a kind of senario for the piece involving the taming of the device from "whirring machine" to "a simple and uneffected singer" (Eaton's words).

He has approached his task with humor, and imagination that works in a lively way in matters of structure as well as of sonority, and with ingenuity.

The orchestra, for example, is divided into halves tuned a quarter tone apart, something that enriches the melodic vocabulary of the work interestingly, and which also offers an effective approach towards bringing the instruments into a closer liaison with the electronic part of the score.

Eaton's concert piece has life, individuality and high spirits.

Schuller also conducted his own "Triplum". Here, too, sonorous materials generate structure: the main point of the piece, as it were, being the three-part division of the orchestra, into its primary voices of strings, woodwinds and brass.

As often with Schuller the virtuosity of the orchestral writing is impressive, and there are some interesting, fresh sounds along with many that are effective in familiar ways.

From the point of view of expression, the dark and densely polyphonic final section makes the most impact.

The concert opened with the concerto for percussion and orchestra by Ross Lee Finney, and included also the serenade by Leonard Bernstein, with Joseph Silverstein as violin soloist.

NEWS (E)
FRAMINGHAM, MASS.
AUG 10 1967
England Newsclip

Contemporary American Music at Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox — Erich Leinsdorf, director of the Berkshire Music Center, has announced the full schedule of concerts which will take place during the six day Festival of Contemporary American Music at Tanglewood, August 9-15. This Festival within a festival will be presented by the Berkshire Music Center in cooperation with the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago, which has gained an international reputation for its encouragement of contemporary composition and performance and has actively supported the Music Center's contemporary music program since 1956.

The six-day Festival will serve primarily to focus attention on four selected young American composers, each of whom has achieved recognition within a certain area but none of whom has yet achieved a broad reputation. The Berkshire Music Center has commissioned these composers in cooperation with the Fromm Music Foundation. In addition to the four commissioned works, all of which will have their world premieres during the Festival, an additional work not especially commissioned for this Festival will have its premiere. For the first time the Festival has expanded its geographic range to include composers from Argentina and Canada.

The Festival will also serve to open the celebration of the 25th Anniversary of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation which has commissioned many now well-known works during its quarter century of activity. The Festival will incorporate performances of four works commissioned by the Koussevitzky Foundation into its programs.

TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM (e)
HOLYOKE, MASS.
AUG 10 1967
England Newsclip

Modern Music Festival At Tanglewood

The musical compositions of four young North and South American composers are being performed at Tanglewood this week during the six-day Festival of Contemporary American Music.

They are Carlos Roque Alrina, in Berlin, John C. Eaton, 32, of 26, an Argentinian now resident Bryn Mawr, Pa., Jeffrey Levine, 24, of New York and Rutgers U., and R. Murray Schafer of Sarnia, Ont., Canada, and Simon Fraser U.

Evening concerts were given Wednesday and Thursday, and there will be concerts Saturday afternoon, Sunday morning and evening, and Monday and Tuesday evenings. They are open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, those who contribute to the support of the Center.

The Berkshire Music Center orchestra the Tanglewood Choir, and students and faculty members of the Berkshire Music Center perform in this Festival, which also includes works of many other contemporary composers.

The Saturday afternoon concert will be devoted to electronic music. Tuesday night the program will be given over to the Group for Contemporary Music at Columbia University.

These concerts are jointly sponsored by the Berkshire Music Center, directed by Erich Leinsdorf, and the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago.

83

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY UNION STAR
Thursday, August 10, 1967

Tanglewood Presents New, Exciting Sound

By CORAL CROSMAN

The Festival of Contemporary American Music, a series of seven concerts, opened last night at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., with some exciting sounds produced by a very competent Berkshire Music Center Orchestra.

Under the baton of Gunther Schuller, president of the New England Conservatory and head of Contemporary Music Activities at the center, the orchestra, made up of Tanglewood's talented summer music students, began with Ross Lee Finney's "Concerto for Percussion and Orchestra." This is a stimulating work. Percussive nothwithstanding, with scoring to keep the kettledrummer and other percussionists on their toes, the three-movement work is sustained by some rather lyric and haunting passages that are carried by the strings and other orchestra voices.

Contemporary

On a first hearing, this concerto seems particularly accessible, and the mood it creates (if one may take the liberty of saying so) hits the contemporary vein. One could imagine empty city streets bathed in blue fluorescent light, glittering modern laundromats and depersonalized "fishbowl" hamburger stands. But this is subjective and the composition, as an excitig total, should be left to the minds and imaginations of those who hear it—whether the approach be analytical, abstract, or filled with allusions to everyday experience.

Leonard Bernstein was on the roster of contemporary composers with his "Serenade for Solo Violin, String Orchestra, Harp and Percussion." Concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and chairman of the center facutly, Joseph Silverstein, gave a moving solo performance in this. In five parts, this composition sounds like the man who scored "West Side Story." The most moving of the sections, this reviewer felt, was the fourth, "Agathon." It is lyrical in style and embodies a depth of feeling. The last, entitled "Socrates: Alcibiades," calls up particularly well the rakish image of the latter Greek character, full of gusto and robust impudence.

New Sound

A McLuhanesque touch was added with the third selection, John Easton's "Concert Piece for Syn-Ket and Symphony Orchestra," a debut performance. The Syn-Ket is a kind of electronic switchboard over which the composer himself, with longish blonde hair and back to audience, labored intently. The work sounds a bit like a seasick orchestra heard over ship-to-shore radio with lots of interference, but in all fairness to this "new" sound, one feels one should hear more of it. Certain whoops and squawks elicited subdued chuckling from the audience which was on the whole politely appreciative and even enthusiastic.

Concluding the program was the conductor's "Triplum," a difficult work to evaluate on a first hearing due to the complexity of the interplaying voices. One is too tempted to say the lines sound discontinuous whereas with further acquaintance they might not at all. The piece does build in excitement to reach a dramatic climax and a stupendous double forte finish.

It is a thrilling experience to watch this attractive young body of musicians who produce a very fine sound indeed. Music in the contemporary vein is a refreshing stimulus. Tanglewood's smaller theater is an ideal setting for this Friends of Music at Tanglewood series. A second concert featuring the Tanglewood Choir will be presented tonight at 8.

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350
AUG 9 1967
New England Newsclip

Festival of Contemporary Music at Tanglewood

LENOX — Erich Leinsdorf, director of the Berkshire Music Center, has announced the full schedule of concerts which will take place during the six-day Festival of Contemporary American Music at Tanglewood, today through Aug. 15.

Festival Within Festival

This festival within a festival will be presented by the Berkshire Music Center in cooperation with the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago, which has gained an international reputation for its encouragement of contemporary composition and performance and has actively supported the Music Center's contemporary music program since 1956.

The six-day festival will serve primarily to focus attention of four selected young American composers, each of whom has achieved recognition within a certain area but none of whom has yet achieved a broad reputation.

The Berkshire Music Center has commissioned these composers in cooperation with the Fromm Music Foundation. In addition to the four commissioned works, all of which will have their world premieres during the Festival, an additional work not especially commissioned for this Festival will have its premiere. For the first time the Festival has expanded its geographic range to include composers from Argentina and Canada.

The new compositions will be presented in a series of seven concerts at Tanglewood, today at 8 in the theater, Thursday at 8 in the theater, Saturday at 2.30 in the gardens, Sunday at 10 a. m. and 8 p. m. in the theater, Monday at 8 in the theater and next Tuesday at 8 in the theater.

The performers for the various events will be drawn from the performance department of the Berkshire Music Center, and will also include faculty and guest artists.

Open to Friends

The performances will be open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, those who make contributions to the support of the Center.

The four composers whose works will be featured are now in residence at Tanglewood and assisting in the preparation of their works. They are: Carlos Roque Alsina, 26, a native of Argentina, who now resides in Berlin; John C. Eaton, 32, Bryn Mawr, Pa.; Jeffrey Levine, 24, New York City; and R. Murray Schafer, 34, Sarnia, Ontario, Can.

Served Arts Center

Alsina recently was a member of the Center of the Creative and Performing Arts at Buffalo's State University and assistant conductor of the Deutsche Oper Berlin. John Eaton has been awarded three Prix de Rome and two Guggenheim Fellowships. Levine is bass player with the Contemporary Chamber Ensemble at Rutgers where he is also lecturer in music. Murray Schafer has been on the staff of Simon Fraser University since 1965.

The festival also will serve to open the celebration of the 25th anniversary of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation which has commissioned many now well-known works during its quarter century of activity. The festival will incorporate performances of four works commissioned by the Koussevitzky Foundation into its programs.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SOUTHAMPTON PRESS
Thursday, August 10, 1967

Acheson to Attend Critics Conference

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has invited the members of the Music Critics Association, of which Marcus W. Acheson III of Southampton is one, to attend a Music Critics Conference at Tanglewood August 9 to 13. This will coincide with the association's annual meeting.

The program for the conference will include as speakers the orchestra's conductor, Erich Leinsdorf; composer Gunther Schuller; and chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts, Roger L. Stevens. The conference will be taking place during the annual Festival of Contemporary American Music sponsored at Tanglewood by the Fromm Foundation. Scheduled for performance are several premieres of world significance.

One important matter for discussion will be the editorial policy of "Overview," the projected national monthly digest of music criticism, for which the Music Critics Association has received a one year technical assistance grant of $67,200 from the National Endowment.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900
AUG 10 1967
New England Newsclip

Music Review

Festival of American Music Opens

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE FIRST concert of the Festival of Contemporary American Music presented at Tanglewood last night by the Berkshire Music Center in cooperation with the Fromm Music Foundation was full of novelty and variety.

Leonard Bernstein's Serenade for solo violin, played by Joseph Silverstein, violinist, with a string orchestra, harp and percussion, was the most hoary-aged work on the program. It was a Koussevitzky Music Foundation commission and first played at Venice, way back in 1954. Everything else heard last night was less than 12 months old. Ross Lee Finney's concerto for percussion and orchestra dates from last November; John Eaton's concert Piece for Syn-Ket and symphony orchestra was commissioned by the Fromm Foundation and was played for the first time last night; Gunther Schuller's Triplum was a 1967 Lincoln Center Festival commission.

* * *

BERNSTEIN'S serenade was the only piece of the evening in which some of the less sophisticated members of the Berkshire Music Center orchestra found opportunity to keep time by tapping a foot. Everthing else was less mensurable and of a nature in which the pigments "ran" and became indistinguishable with their adjacent ones.

Eaton's Piece for Syn-Ket was the only electronic music of the evening. The Syn-Ket resembles a telephone switchboard in a small hotel and last night all the calls were out-going. It is capable of making all sorts of whistling sounds, in ascending or descending flights, it can utter reiterated tappings, and its birdcalls are wonderful. Eaton gave the orchestra idioms to sound which echoed, or vice versa, the sounds he himself, produced sitting at the "keyboard."

* * *

IN THIS and in Schuller's music, the strings are assigned less importance than they used to carry in the music of previous generations. The string parts are individually boring for the performers. In Schuller's Triplum the first violin section has one tone it plays for the whole first page of its part, or so it would seem from the audience, and they were called upon to sound at indeterminate intervals. Whether this be cause or effect, it may be of significance to support the proposition that the orchestra, as we know it, is on the way to being discarded.

Eaton tunes half of his orchestra a quarter-tone lower and thereby generates a harmonic acerbity which conveys a pleasant masochistic impact. Finney places a percussionist in each corner of his orchestra, as though in sentry boxes. Bernstein's Serenade is divided into five sections, each one with a dedication to a character from Plato's Symposium. Bernstein has Plato address his teacher, Socrates, with a humble and simple verse of poetic song; the unprincipled Alcibiades he portrays with a pugnacious rhythm and trenchant attack; he exposes Aristophanes' mocking banter and satire of the effeminate Agathon with muted doublestops, beautifully played by Silverstein, and identifies each one with an extremely apt sketch.

* * *

THE MUSIC Critics Association is holding its annual convention at Tanglewood this week and the place and time have been chosen to coincide with the Fromm concerts. The registration of the visiting critics took place yesterday afternoon after which they were the guests for a reception and a buffet supper of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Tanglewood Chamber Music Hall. Their first business session took place this morning. There was a panel discussion on "The State of Music Criticism." Erich Leinsdorf spoke for the performer; Roger Stevens, chairman of National Council of the Arts for the sponsor; Lawrence Miller, editor of The Eagle, for the newspaper, and Thomas Perry, for the manager of the orchestra.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY UNION STAR
Thursday, August 10, 1967

Tanglewood Presents New, Exciting Sound

By CORAL CROSMAN

The Festival of Contemporary American Music, a series of seven concerts, opened last night at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., with some exciting sounds produced by a very competent Berkshire Music Center Orchestra.

Under the baton of Gunther Schuller, president of the New England Conservatory and head of Contemporary Music Activities at the center, the orchestra, made up of Tanglewood's talented summer music students, began with Ross Lee Finney's "Concerto for Percussion and Orchestra." This is a stimulating work. Percussive nothwithstanding, with scoring to keep the kettledrummer and other percussionists on their toes, the three-movement work is sustained by some rather lyric and haunting passages that are carried by the strings and other orchestra voices.

Contemporary

On a first hearing, this concerto seems particularly accessible, and the mood it creates (if one may take the liberty of saying so) hits the contemporary vein. One could imagine empty city streets bathed in blue fluorescent light, glittering modern laundromats and depersonalized "fishbowl" hamburger stands. But this is subjective and the composition, as an excitig total, should be left to the minds and imaginations of those who hear it—whether the approach be analytical, abstract, or filled with allusions to everyday experience.

Leonard Bernstein was on the roster of contemporary composers with his "Serenade for Solo Violin, String Orchestra, Harp and Percussion." Concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and chairman of the center facutly, Joseph Silverstein, gave a moving solo performance in this. In five parts, this composition sounds like the man who scored "West Side Story." The most moving of the sections, this reviewer felt, was the fourth, "Agathon." It is lyrical in style and embodies a depth of feeling. The last, entitled "Socrates: Alcbiades," calls up particularly well the rakish image of the latter Greek character, full of gusto and robust impudence.

New Sound

A McLuhanesque touch was added with the third selection, John Easton's "Concert Piece for Syn-Ket and Symphony Orchestra," a debut performance. The Syn-Ket is a kind of electronic switchboard over which the composer himself, with longish blonde hair and back to audience, labored intently. The work sounds a bit like a seasick orchestra heard over ship-to-shore radio with lots of interference, but in all fairness to this "new" sound, one feels one should hear more of it. Certain whoops and squawks elicited subdued chuckling from the audience which was on the whole politely appreciative and even enthusiastic.

Concluding the program was the conductor's "Triplum," a difficult work to evaluate on a first hearing due to the complexity of the interplaying voices. One is too tempted to say the lines sound discontinuous whereas with further acquaintance they might not at all. The piece does build in excitement to reach a dramatic climax and a stupendous double forte finish.

It is a thrilling experience to watch this attractive young body of musicians who produce a very fine sound indeed. Music in the contemporary vein is a refreshing stimulus. Tanglewood's smaller theater is an ideal setting for this Friends of Music at Tanglewood series. A second concert featuring the Tanglewood Choir will be presented tonight at 8.

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350
AUG 9 1967
New England Newsclip

Festival of Contemporary Music at Tanglewood

LENOX — Erich Leinsdorf, director of the Berkshire Music Center, has announced the full schedule of concerts which will take place during the six-day Festival of Contemporary American Music at Tanglewood, today through Aug. 15.

Festival Within Festival

This festival within a festival will be presented by the Berkshire Music Center in cooperation with the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago, which has gained an international reputation for its encouragement of contemporary composition and performance and has actively supported the Music Center's contemporary music program since 1956.

The six-day festival will serve primarily to focus attention of four selected young American composers, each of whom has achieved recognition within a certain area but none of whom has yet achieved a broad reputation.

The Berkshire Music Center has commissioned these composers in cooperation with the Fromm Music Foundation. In addition to the four commissioned works, all of which will have their world premieres during the Festival, an additional work not especially commissioned for this Festival will have its premiere. For the first time the Festival has expanded its geographic range to include composers from Argentina and Canada.

The new compositions will be presented in a series of seven concerts at Tanglewood, today at 8 in the theater, Thursday at 8 in the theater, Saturday at 2.30 in the gardens, Sunday at 10 a. m. and 8 p. m. in the theater, Monday at 8 in the theater and next Tuesday at 8 in the theater.

The performers for the various events will be drawn from the performance department of the Berkshire Music Center, and will also include faculty and guest artists.

Open to Friends

The performances will be open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, those who make contributions to the support of the Center.

The four composers whose works will be featured are now in residence at Tanglewood and assisting in the preparation of their works. They are: Carlos Roque Alsina, 26, a native of Argentina, who now resides in Berlin; John C. Eaton, 32, Bryn Mawr, Pa.; Jeffrey Levine, 24, New York City; and R. Murray Schafer, 34, Sarnia, Ontario, Can.

Served Arts Center

Alsina recently was a member of the Center of the Creative and Performing Arts at Buffalo's State University and assistant conductor of the Deutsche Oper Berlin. John Eaton has been awarded three Prix de Rome and two Guggenheim Fellowships. Levine is bass player with the Contemporary Chamber Ensemble at Rutgers where he is also lecturer in music. Murray Schafer has been on the staff of Simon Fraser University since 1965.

The festival also will serve to open the celebration of the 25th anniversary of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation which has commissioned many now well-known works during its quarter century of activity. The festival will incorporate performances of four works commissioned by the Koussevitzky Foundation into its programs.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SOUTHAMPTON PRESS
Thursday August 10, 1967

Acheson to Attend Critics Conference

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has invited the members of the Music Critics Association, of which Marcus W. Acheson III of Southampton is one, to attend a Music Critics Conference at Tanglewood August 9 to 13. This will coincide with the association's annual meeting.

The program for the conference will include as speakers the orchestra's conductor, Erich Leinsdorf; composer Gunther Schuller; and chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts, Roger L. Stevens. The conference will be taking place during the annual Festival of Contemporary American Music sponsored at Tanglewood by the Fromm Foundation. Scheduled for performance are several premieres of world significance.

One important matter for discussion will be the editorial policy of "Overview," the projected national monthly digest of music criticism, for which the Music Critics Association has received a one year technical assistance grant of $67,200 from the National Endowment.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (c)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 20,900
AUG 10 1967
New England Newsclip

Music Review

Festival of American Music Opens

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE FIRST concert of the Festival of Contemporary American Music presented at Tanglewood last night by the Berkshire Music Center in cooperation with the Fromm Music Foundation was full of novelty and variety.

Leonard Bernstein's Serenade for solo violin, played by Joseph Silverstein, violinist, with a string orchestra, harp and percussion, was the most hoary-aged work on the program. It was a Koussevitzky Music Foundation commission and first played at Venice, way back in 1954. Everything else heard last night was less than 12 months old. Ross Lee Finney's concerto for percussion and orchestra dates from last November; John Eaton's concert Piece for Syn-Ket and symphony orchestra was commissioned by the Fromm Foundation and was played for the first time last night; Gunther Schuller's Triplum was a 1967 Lincoln Center Festival commission.

* * *

BERNSTEIN'S serenade was the only piece of the evening in which some of the less sophisticated members of the Berkshire Music Center orchestra found opportunity to keep time by tapping a foot. Everthing else was less mensurable and of a nature in which the pigments "ran" and became indistinguishable with their adjacent ones.

Eaton's Piece for Syn-Ket was the only electronic music of the evening. The Syn-Ket resembles a telephone switchboard in a small hotel and last night all the calls were out-going. It is capable of making all sorts of whistling sounds, in ascending or descending flights, it can utter reiterated tappings, and its birdcalls are wonderful. Eaton gave the orchestra idioms to sound which echoed, or vice versa, the sounds he himself, produced sitting at the "keyboard."

* * *

IN THIS and in Schuller's music, the strings are assigned less importance than they used to carry in the music of previous generations. The string parts are individually boring for the performers. In Schuller's Triplum the first violin section has one tone it plays for the whole first page of its part, or so it would seem from the audience, and they were called upon to sound at indeterminate intervals. Whether this be cause or effect, it may be of significance to support the proposition that the orchestra, as we know it, is on the way to being discarded.

Eaton tunes half of his orchestra a quarter-tone lower and thereby generates a harmonic acerbity which conveys a pleasant masochistic impact. Finney places a percussionist in each corner of his orchestra, as though in sentry boxes. Bernstein's Serenade is divided into five sections, each one with a dedication to a character from Plato's Symposium. Bernstein has Plato address his teacher, Socrates, with a humble and simple verse of poetic song; the unprincipled Alcibiades he portrays with a pugnacious rhythm and trenchant attack; he exposes Aristophanes' mocking banter and satire of the effeminate Agathon with muted doublestops, beautifully played by Silverstein, and identifies each one with an extremely apt sketch.

* * *

THE MUSIC Critics Association is holding its annual convention at Tanglewood this week and the place and time have been chosen to coincide with the Fromm concerts. The registration of the visiting critics took place yesterday afternoon after which they were the guests for a reception and a buffet supper of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Tanglewood Chamber Music Hall. Their first business session took place this morning. There was a panel discussion on "The State of Music Criticism." Erich Leinsdorf spoke for the performer; Roger Stevens, chairman of National Council of the Arts for the sponsor; Lawrence Miller, editor of The Eagle, for the newspaper, and Thomas Perry, for the manager of the orchestra.

84

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY UNION STAR
Tuesday, August 15, 1967

Berkshire Chamber Units Evoke Moods

By CORAL CROSMAN

Chamber groups from the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra played five modern works at the sixth concert of the Festival of Contemporary American Music at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Monday night.

Departing from traditional harmonies and structures, the pieces evoked moods in their own language, musical sequences of sound often interrupted by silence between brief outbursts of notes, sometimes seeming hesitant and unsure, and using instruments in unorthodox ways on occasion. In the opening number, scored for seven players, the pianist stood up. This was in order to reach the strings of the grand piano which he struck and plucked. String instruments were also used percussively as players tapped their wooden frames. The composition, by Gerardo Gandini, was subdued and quiet, evoking a picture of empty piers by moonlight, which was legitimate as the composer who labeled the work "hecha sombra y altura," subtitled it "Musica Nocturna." This was the first performance of the composition.

A Schenectady resident, Brian Fennelly, was the composer of the second work, a "Wind Quintet." Fennelly says of his composition in the program notes, "Linear, timbral, or dynamic considerations predominate over the projection of harmonic elements, which are essentially static." Much appears to be transpiring in the composition, in which the bassoonist carries some long musical lines.

A "Duo for Violin and Piano" by Roger Sessions becomes literally a "duel" as the piano and violin parts, quite separate in nature, are played against each other. The violin section is more fluid and lyrical while the piano is often played percussively. The effect, however, gives a sense of life and movement to the work. The instruments never seem hesitant or unsure. The work has a dynamic quality. Sessions, who was present, was given a lengthy ovation.

Stanley Silverman, composer of "Piano," played the guitar in the presentation of his work. It is intended as a lamentation for the loss of a loved one or head of state. Silverman conducted the final work on the program, Chou Wen-Chung's "Pien," in which glass wind chimes are added to a chamber group consisting of two Flutes, English horn, clarinet, bassoon, French horn, two trumpets, two trombones, piano, and requiring four percussionists. The structure of the work is given an involved technical description in the program notes which tells the listener essentially that the piece is set up according to a strict formal pattern.

A first hearing of much of this music leaves one with the feeling that it was all over very quickly, that one heard various intervals played and sounds evoked, but the sequences are not always convincing, not always cohering, not always absolute according to a pattern of musical logic. But if they are part of a new musical logic, they must be heard attentively. Any formal structure, any device is forgivable if the product resulting is essentially music, a heard aesthetic experience that awakens feeling and stimulates the mind. The final concert in the series is tonight at 8 in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood.

NEWS (e)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 98,600
AUG 9 1967
New England Newsclip

Pictured is Miss Iva Dee Hiatt, Smith College choral director, rehearsing the Tanglewood Choir for tomorrow night's concert in Lenox. See story on following page.

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
AUG 11 1967

'Gita' Has Appeal, but Is Obvious

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

The ARTS

LENOX — The second of this year's Fromm Foundation Commissions to be performed at the Tanglewood Festival of Contemporary American Music was "Gita" by R. Murray Schafer, a 34-year-old Canadian teacher from Vancouver.

It is a setting in Sanskrit of 10 verses from the Bhagavad Gita. A mixed chorus sings a text about the necessities of obtaining serenity and the hazards of anger, desire and egoism.

A brass nonet makes violent outbursts of interference against these meditations, and there is also a taped track that at different times contributes both to the musical continuum set up by the chorus and to the attempted destruction of it, once, in the latter function, by introducing a bit of Renaissance polyphony theologically as well as musically violently at odds with its surroundings.

To judge by its reception here, "Gita" has audience appeal. The idea is catching, and the gestures are unmistakeable in their intent and are forcefully made.

I did not, however, find the actual translation into music of all this very interesting, and one could describe the work as obvious and be both just and polite.

Of the other works on the program, the oldest, Wallingford Riegger's "Study in Sonority" was by far the most impressive.

Composed in 1927, when Riegger was 42, it is a manifestation of that extraordinary vigor that possessed American music between the wars, and knowledge of so much of which was blotted out by the fashionable preoccupation with neo-classism and Americana.

"Study in Sonority" is a work for ten violins, chromatic, dissonant, astonishingly inventive in its way of converting the limitations of the sonorous media into advtntages at every turn, and excitingly skillfull in composing with motivic material that is as restrictive as the scoring.

It is a dramatic and intensely expressive piece of music, fascinatingly virtuosic from the instrumental point of view besides.

"Hex" by Emmanuel Ghent, the 42-year-old composer from Montreal, is a kind of chamber concerto for trumpets with string and woodwind ensemble and electric tape.

Some of the tape-instrumental dialogue is amazing, at least by virtue of its speed, but much of the piece, and particularly a long middle section without instruments, showed that the "new sounds" that so recently were fresh, have opened up still another kind of vocabulary for boring composers to be boring in.

At its best, which is modest, "Hex" is a simple-minded sort of entertainment.

In "The Ode of Shang," two Confucian odes in Ezra Pound's translations, Seymour Shifrin gives the chorus a simply-made triadic music to sing, and surrounds it with an accompaniment of piano and percussion that is subtle and continuously interesting.

Its cleanness and integrity command respect, and its euphony gives pleasure.

Edwin London's "Washington Miscellany," settings for female chorus a cappella of animate versions by the first President on promises, time and potatoes, is another of those works in which amusing ideas on how one might write such a piece are unmatched by an ability to compose music of interest.

The choral madrigals of Jacob Druckman offered only musical commonplaces.

Iva Dee Hiatt conducted the choral performances, which, except for some obscure veterans from the Tanglewood choir, seemed very effective; Gunther Schuller conducted a group of Berkshire Music Center violinists in the superb performance of Riegger's "Study."

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

BUFFALO EVENING NEWS
Saturday, August 12, 1967

Music Critics Planning To Publish Magazine

By JOHN P. DWYER
Buffalo Evening News Music Critic

TANGLEWOOD, Mass.—The national group called the Music Critics Association, representing many large newspapers and a number of smaller ones, is going into the publishing business, with a music magazine. It's the prime topic here, in the annual meeting.

Though it doesn't pose a threat to the weekly news magazines or the daily press, the new monthly publication seeks to close a gap in American music journalism, and provide a service which doesn't exist, as of now.

It is to be titled "Overview," and a fairly surprising fund of $67,000, for a starter, has been provided by the National Endowment for the Arts, a cultural arm of the federal government whose chairman is Broadway producer Robert Stevens.

* * *

IT'S SURPRISING, because it's the first venture money the critics have seen in more than a decade as a national group.

The government isn't in the picture at all, we should add, except for the dollar package, and this is warranted by the non-profit nature of the magazine, and its cultural service. It will be supervised entirely by the critics.

Right now, if you wanted to get a wide view of what's being written about music, you'd have to buy about eight magazines with music sections, a half-dozen quarterlies, a number of special and "little" magazines, and more than a dozen daily papers in the major music centers.

"Overview" will collect music articles from all printed sources. In general, it will not originate stories, but will reprint them from English-language journalism at large, and also provide translations from other languages.

* * *

THUS, IN ONE publication the reader interested in music may get a broad view of the current writing on the subject. Far from competing, then, with the existing press, it will provide added exposure, with appropriate credits. Eventual circulation of 20,000 is projected.

The project makes this meeting a particularly important one, and it is further distinguished by the presence of noted figures in many aspects of music.

Taking part in various discussions have been conductor Erich Leinsdorf of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and manager Thomas Perry, composers Gunther Schuller and Roger Sessions, concert pianist John Browning, editor Lawrence K. Miller of the Berkshire Eagle, co-host of the affair; music patron Paul Fromm, founder of the significant Fromm Fellowships in music, and Mr. Stevens, sometimes wearing his second hat as chairman of the government's National Council on the Arts. Soprano Phyllis Curtin was the lovely and gifted added panelist.

* * *

THE CRITICS' MEETING is also timed with the Berkshire Festival's annual Festival of Contemporary Music, several concerts and a number of premieres.

Panel topics have included The State of Music Criticism (perfectly awful); A Possible Solution (hardly any); The State of Contemporary Music (unspeakable) and, still to come, a Critics Free-for-All, or open forum.

This finale should be lively and fairly unmanageable, from the piquant circumstance that each individual critic has a tendency to think of all other critics as grand chaps but, in a word, faulty.

NEWS (e)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 98,600

AUG 9 1967

New England Newsclip

85

Smith Choral Director Will Conduct Tanglewood Choir Tomorrow

The west barn at Tanglewood, on a remote corner of the estate in Lenox seethed with the voices of 38 professional singers on a breezy, rainy August morning. Iva Dee Hiatt, Smith College choral director, was rehearsing the Tanglewood Choir for a concert to be given tomorrow in the Tanglewood Theatre, during the fourth annual Festival of Contemporary American Music.

Fine Arts

Miss Hiatt had commented earlier, "This summer's work at Tanglewood is one of the most exciting artistic experiences I've ever had; I'm directing superbly trained singers who are learning extremely difficult new material."

Indeed it sounded difficult as the choir wrestled with a work entitled "Gita" by the Canadian composer R. Murray Schafer. Based on texts from the Hindu Bhagavad Gita, it is written for 32 solo voices, nine brass instruments and tape, and is being sung in Sanscrit. The men seemed to be coming off better and the elated Miss Hiatt silenced the group with her quick double hand clap, exclaiming, "Basses, I wish I could throw each of you a kiss!" Amid the laughter, one of the men loudly announced "You can!"

The attractive Miss Hiatt, who has trained some of the country's most outstanding collegiate singing groups at Smith, is a person of boundless energy thoroughly steeped in music. She works her singers and herself hard, conducting with verve, attacking each trouble spot with a drive for perfection, lacing instructions with humor and praise where due.

Her well-protected soprano rises above the singing voices to urge them on, her slender, supple hands indicating every shading from forte to pianissimo in forceful or delicate passages; a flick of her index finger toward the ceiling stresses pitch, toward her ear emphasizes enunciation and toward her waistline draws attention to disphragmatic breathing. A tenor commented, "She works as hard as any conductor I've ever seen, and she is surely the clearest conductor I know."

The choir seemed to relax a bit when the "Gita" was put away and they turned to the "Odes of Shang" by Seymour Shifrin, who is professor of composition at Brandeis University. This work, easier to read, is based on texts from a fifth century, B.C., Chinese collection of temple and altar odes, with accompaniment of piano, bells, drums, winds and chimes. The "Gita" and "Odes" will be on tomorrow's program along with "Four Madrigals on Elizabethan Texts" by Jacob Druckmann, professor of composition at the Juilliard School of Music. The concert will close with an instrumental selection from "Washington Miscellany" by Edwin London of the Smith College faculty.

After rehearsal, Miss Hiatt enjoyed a cigaret and a cup of tea. "Works such as these are certainly not typical programming for college groups," she reflected. How does she compare working with professionals to working with students? "For me," she said, "watching and fostering the development of young musicians is the most rewarding experience." Could any of this summer's music be sung by college groups? Only the most advanced, she conceded; the problem is one of time required, which is just not available to college students.

The Tanglewood Choir has worked daily on Bach's B Minor Mass, Beethoven's Fidelio and Verdi's Requiem in addition to the contemporary material. "I don't like the new works," confided one soprano. "I want to sing notes." But other singers reported, with varying degrees of enthusiasm, that singing this contemporary music is both worthwhile and literally required of a 20th century musician.

"That's why I'm here," said Miss Hiatt, "to grow. I may be a little more at home with music of other periods because of my years of training in that literature; but I've come to Tanglewood this summer to expand my musical knowledge and conducting experience and, after taking six weeks to prepare it, I find I love this music. I hope many people will come to here us tomorrow. For those who can't come in person, the program will be broadcast live at 8 p. m. on educational stations."

No stranger to Tanglewood, Miss Hiatt in past summers has taught conducting and prepared choruses for conductors such as Charles Munch, Pierre Monteux, Leonard Bernstein, and Erich Leinsdorf. In September Miss Hiatt will return to Smith College after a year's sabbatical leave which took her on a study and pleasure tour of European music centers. What is her next challenge? Preparing the Smith College Glee Club for its European tour with the Princeton Glee Club, scheduled for next summer.

THE DAVE BRUBECK QUARTET—Paul Desmond, alto sax; Joe Morello, drums; Gene Wright, bass and Dave Brubeck, piano (left to right) will perform at 3 p.m. tomorrow at the Berkshire Music Barn in Lenox, Mass. The Modern Jazz Quartet will appear Sunday at 8:30 p.m. Tickets for the performances are available at the Ten Eyck Record Shop in Albany.

'67
Knickerbocker News July 14

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Friday, July 14, 1967

Brubeck Quartet Set At Music Barn Sat.

LENOX, Mass. — Two of the greatest groups in the contemporary jazz world — the Dave Brubeck Quartet and Modern Jazz Quartet — appear here at Berkshire Music Barn this weekend. The Brubeck concert is Saturday at 3:30 p.m. while MJQ appears Sunday at 8:30 p.m.

*

The Brubeck Quartet comprises Paul Desmond, alto sax, Eugene Wright, bass, and Joe Morello, drums, in addition to Brubeck on the piano. In Down Beat and Playboy popularity polls through the years, each of the four has placed first or near the top.

Modern Jazz Quartet has been appearing at this Berkshire musical retreat since 1955. Pianist-composer John Lewis, vibraharpist Milt Jackson, bassist Percy Heath and drummer Connie Kay, have become celebrated favorites not only in the Berkshires, but around the world.

At the Potting Shed a northern Italian supper club on Music Barn grounds, Don McLean, Sonny Terry and Brownie McGhee appear through Aug. 6.

* * *

Vocalist Bill Henderson and Jose Manuel Ortega will reappear Aug. 8 through Aug. 20. In addition, the Music Inn Jazz Trio featuring Toshiko appear through Aug. 20.

Tickets for Music Barn concerts may be obtained at the box office here, England Brothers in Pittsfield, Peeble's Jewel Shop in North Adams, Jenifer House in Great Barrington, Ten Eyck Record Shop in Albany or Music in the Round in Springfield.

DAYTON DAILY NEWS
DAYTON, OHIO
D. 155,541 SUN. 203,904

AUG 11 1967

Far-Out Composers Get Hearing at Tanglewood

By BETTY DIETZ KREBS
Daily News Fine Arts Editor

LENOX, Mass. — The complaint of the modern composer is heard again and again. He can't get a hearing.

Things are different here in the heart of the Berkshires. Part of the celebrated Tanglewood festival which draws thousands to this sprawling, magnificent acreage is the four-year-old festival of contemporary music.

As a forum for new directions and ideas in music—composer-conductor Gunther Schuller's word—it is probably the American composer's dream. On the other hand the concert that featured a mixture of electronic music and a text in sanskrit drew some 300 while Tuesday's popular Arthur Fielder program of Gershwin packed 13,000 into the vast music shed.

THIS WAS an open-minded audience that had the courage to laugh when it felt like it and Smith college Prof. Edwin London gave them the chance with his brief imaginative settings.

Quotes by George Washington. Imagine, if you will, a wild, gay, satyric choral piece on the letter he wrote to Thomas Jefferson in 1795: "Of all the improving and emeliorating corps, none is equal to potatoes on stiff and hard bound land."

It was an audience that tittered a little on what it assumed to be a bit of electronic tomfoolery by composer Emmanuel Ghent. The instrumentalists were wired for sound—taking their cues by earphone from Conductor Lawrence Foster off-stage.

THE TAPE with which and to which they played was filled with snorts, spurts, bubbles, bursts and gurgles. And when a noise like the sound of a Wright-Patterson Air Force base wind tunnel stretched out endlessly, a young Korean violinist seemed to look skyward instinctively.

THE audience members watched each other in fascination. In the earlier works performed by the wonderfully responsive Tanglewood choir and instrumentalists drawn from the music center, many listened while keeping their eyes glued to the program notes.

One of the reasons performances of such complex and demanding music are possible here is the very presence of so many young musicians who can assimilate it in a limited number of rehearsals.

NEWS (e)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 93,600

AUG 9 1967

New England Newsclip

85

Smith Choral Director Will Conduct Tanglewood Choir Tomorrow

The west barn at Tanglewood, on a remote corner of the estate in Lenox seethed with the voices of 38 professional singers on a breezy, rainy August morning. Iva Dee Hiatt, Smith College choral director, was rehearsing the Tanglewood Choir for a concert to be given tomorrow in the Tanglewood Theatre, during the fourth annual Festival of Contemporary American Music.

Fine Arts

Miss Hiatt had commented earlier, "This summer's work at Tanglewood is one of the most exciting artistic experiences I've ever had; I'm directing superbly trained singers who are learning extremely difficult new material."

Indeed it sounded difficult as the choir wrestled with a work entitled "Gita" by the Canadian composer R. Murray Schafer. Based on texts from the Hindu Bhagavad Gita, it is written for 32 solo voices, nine brass instruments and tape, and is being sung in Sanscrit. The men seemed to be coming off better and the elated Miss Hiatt silenced the group with her quick double hand clap, exclaiming, "Basses, I wish I could throw each of you a kiss!" Amid the laughter, one of the men loudly announced "You can!"

The attractive Miss Hiatt, who has trained some of the country's most outstanding collegiate singing groups at Smith, is a person of boundless energy thoroughly steeped in music. She works her singers and herself hard, conducting with verve, attacking each trouble spot with a drive for perfection, lacing instructions with humor and praise where due.

Her well-protected soprano rises above the singing voices to urge them on, her slender, supple hands indicating every shading from forte to pianissimo in forceful or delicate passages; a flick of her index finger toward the ceiling stresses pitch, toward her ear emphasizes enunciation and toward her waistline draws attention to disphragmatic breathing. A tenor commented, "She works as hard as any conductor I've ever seen, and she is surely the clearest conductor I know."

The choir seemed to relax a bit when the "Gita" was put away and they turned to the "Odes of Shang" by Seymour Shifrin, who is professor of composition at Brandeis University. This work, easier to read, is based on texts from a fifth century, B.C., Chinese collection of temple and altar odes, with accompaniment of piano, bells, drums, winds and chimes. The "Gita" and "Odes" will be on tomorrow's program along with "Four Madrigals on Elizabethan Texts" by Jacob Druckmann, professor of composition at the Juilliard School of Music. The concert will close with an instrumental selection from "Washington Miscellany" by Edwin London of the Smith College faculty.

After rehearsal, Miss Hiatt enjoyed a cigaret and a cup of tea. "Works such as these are certainly not typical programming for college groups," she reflected. How does she compare working with professionals to working with students? "For me," she said, "watching and fostering the development of young musicians is the most rewarding experience." Could any of this summer's music be sung by college groups? Only the most advanced, she conceded; the problem is one of time required, which is just not available to college students.

The Tanglewood Choir has worked daily on Bach's B Minor Mass, Beethoven's Fidelio and Verdi's Requiem in addition to the contemporary material. "I don't like the new works," confided one soprano. "I want to sing notes." But other singers reported, with varying degrees of enthusiasm, that singing this contemporary music is both worthwhile and literally required of a 20th century musician.

"That's why I'm here," said Miss Hiatt, "to grow. I may be a little more at home with music of other periods because of my years of training in that literature; but I've come to Tanglewood this summer to expand my musical knowledge and conducting experience and, after taking six weeks to prepare it, I find I love this music. I hope many people will come to here us tomorrow. For those who can't come in person, the program will be broadcast live at 8 p. m. on educational stations."

No stranger to Tanglewood, Miss Hiatt in past summers has taught conducting and prepared choruses for conductors such as Charles Munch, Pierre Monteux, Leonard Bernstein, and Erich Leinsdorf. In September Miss Hiatt will return to Smith College after a year's sabbatical leave which took her on a study and pleasure tour of European music centers. What is her next challenge? Preparing the Smith College Glee Club for its European tour with the Princeton Glee Club, scheduled for next summer.

THE DAVE BRUBECK QUARTET—Paul Desmond, alto sax; Joe Morello, drums; Gene Wright, bass and Dave Brubeck, piano (left to right) will perform at 3 p.m. tomorrow at the Berkshire Music Barn in Lenox, Mass. The Modern Jazz Quartet will appear Sunday at 8:30 p.m. Tickets for the performances are available at the Ten Eyck Record Shop in Albany.

'67
Knickerbocker News July 14

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Friday, July 14, 1967

Brubeck Quartet Set At Music Barn Sat.

LENOX, Mass. — Two of the greatest groups in the contemporary jazz world — the Dave Brubeck Quartet and Modern Jazz Quartet — appear here at Berkshire Music Barn this weekend. The Brubeck concert is Saturday at 3:30 p.m. while MJQ appears Sunday at 8:30 p.m.

* * *

The Brubeck Quartet comprises Paul Desmond, alto sax, Eugene Wright, bass, and Joe Morello, drums, in addition to Brubeck on the piano. In Down Beat and Playboy popularity polls through the years, each of the four has placed first or near the top.

Modern Jazz Quartet has been appearing at this Berkshire musical retreat since 1955. Pianist-composer John Lewis, vibraharpist Milt Jackson, bassist Percy Heath and drummer Connie Kay, have become celebrated favorites not only in the Berkshires, but around the world.

At the Potting Shed a northern Italian supper club on Music Barn grounds, Don McLean, Sonny Terry and Brownie McGhee appear through Aug. 6.

* * *

Vocalist Bill Henderson and Jose Manuel Ortega will reappear Aug. 8 through Aug. 20. In addition, the Music Inn Jazz Trio featuring Toshiko appear through Aug. 20.

Tickets for Music Barn concerts may be obtained at the box office here, England Brothers in Pittsfield, Peeble's Jewel Shop in North Adams, Jenifer House in Great Barrington, Ten Eyck Record Shop in Albany or Music in the Round in Springfield.

DAYTON DAILY NEWS
DAYTON, OHIO
D. 155,541 SUN. 203,904

AUG 11 1967

Far-Out Composers Get Hearing at Tanglewood

By BETTY DIETZ KREBS
Daily News Fine Arts Editor

LENOX, Mass. — The complaint of the modern composer is heard again and again. He can't get a hearing.

Things are different here in the heart of the Berkshires. Part of the celebrated Tanglewood festival which draws thousands to this sprawling, magnificent acreage is the four-year-old festival of contemporary music.

As a forum for new directions and ideas in music—composer-conductor Gunther Schuller's word—It is probably the American composer's dream. On the other hand the concert that featured a mixture of electronic music and a text in sanskrit drew some 300 while Tuesday's popular Arthur Fielder program of Gershwin packed 13,000 into the vast music shed.

THIS WAS an open-minded audience that had the courage to laugh when it felt like it and Smith college Prof. Edwin London gave them the chance with his brief imaginative settings.

Quotes by George Washington. Imagine, if you will, a wild, gay, satyric choral piece on the letter he wrote to Thomas Jefferson in 1795: "Of all the improving and emeliorating corps, none is equal to potatoes on stiff and hard bound land."

It was an audience that tittered a little on what it assumed to be a bit of electronic tomfoolery by composer Emmanuel Ghent. The instrumentalists were wired for sound—taking their cues by earphone from Conductor Lawrence Foster off-stage.

THE TAPE with which and to which they played was filled with snorts, spurts, bubbles, bursts and gurgles. And when a noise like the sound of a Wright-Patterson Air Force base wind tunnel stretched out endlessly, a young Korean violinist seemed to look skyward instinctively.

THE audience members watched each other in fascination. In the earlier works performed by the wonderfully responsive Tanglewood choir and instrumentalists drawn from the music center, many listened while keeping their eyes glued to the program notes.

One of the reasons performances of such complex and demanding music are possible here is the very presence of so many young musicians who can assimilate it in a limited number of rehearsals.

86

HERALD (e)
MANCHESTER, CONN.
CIRC. 14,150
AUG 14 1967
New England Newsclip

Most Critics Unimpressed With Contemporary Music

By JOHN GRUBER

Apathy and boredom, sometimes combined with laughter, were the general reactions of the music critics assembled in convention, to the Festival of Contemporary Music held at Tanglewood under the joint sponsorship of the Berkshire Music Center and the Fromm Music Foundation.

This failed to please the sponsors, the composers, or the performers, yet it was evident that in general the professional music critic (along with the public) could hardly care less about much of the music offered.

There were variations in opinion from Tom Sherman of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, who was thoroughly antagnoistic to the music presented, to Tom Willis of the Chicago Tribune, who championed new music enthusiastically. Still, the fact remains that most of the critics were unimpressed by what they heard.

This seemingly biased attitude is not so strange as it may seem on the surface. Aside from the contemporary works occasionally inserted in today's programs, the music usually presented has been winnowed for years to separate the wheat from the chaff. There was as much chaff in olden days as there is today and it would bore critics and audiences alike were it presented today.

The festival is still going on, so I cannot report on all the music offered, of course. Of four works commissioned for the festival, I heard two, one of which was interesting and the other disappointing. Neither was great.

Chronologically, John Eaton's "Concert Piece for Syn-Ket and Symphony Orchestra" came first with the composer at the electronic solo instrument and Gunther Schuller conducting the orchestra.

The orchestra was divided into two sections, one of which was tuned a quarter-tone below the other, while much was made (in the program notes) of the fact that the Syn-Ket could produce 'microtones."

Mr. Eaton seemed to be laboring under the illusion that his work was the "first piece which combines an instrument capable of performing 'live' the material of electronic music with symphony orchestra." Sometime before Mr. Eaton was born (in 1935), there was an electronic instrument called the "Theremin" which did just that.

Its inventor floated around this country and Europe for a while but the whole thing eventually sank without a trace. I was surprised that, with all the electronic progress in the interno more sophisticated.

It is not the invention of the composer but the work of a man named Paul Ketoff. The composition itself was extremely difficult to perform and taxing for attentive listening. It was the one that particularly provoked Tom Sherman's ire My own reaction was considerably less bitter. I thought it much ado about nothing.

vening years, the Syn-Ket was

The other commissioned work I heard was "Gita" by R. Murray Schafer, a Canadian. This was a choral work with a wind ensemble of chamber proportions for accompaniment. Iva Dee Hiatt, from Smith College, conducted in a most energetic and athletic manner that was oddly at variance with the peaceful character of lyrics and music.

"Gita" represented the composer's musical reaction to about ten verses from the Bhagavad Gita and was sung in the original Sanskrit. Just why, I am uncertain; an English translation was provided as well as a phonetic rendering of the actual text.

To assess the value of the music would require a thorough empathy with the Indian philosophy it sets forth, which is quite contrary to Western ideas. My reaction was that this might have been a gentle, artistic protest to our involvement in Vietnam, and if so it was in excellent taste.

The music was not wildly extreme, and in fact the composer quoted Heinrich Schuetz (unless my ears deceived me) in an effort to emphasize the generally religious character of the music. (In case you don't recognize the name, Schuetz was an early composer whose religious works have received representation in Manchester through the efforts of David Almond and the Concordia Lutheran Church.)

I am not sure that the performance was all that the composer might have desired. I wanted to talk with him the next day, but I couldn't locate him. There were a number of questions he might have answered, but they had to remain questions.

There were two other works commissioned for the festival which I did not hear, as well as a number of works I did hear. Of the latter, Wallingford Riegger's "Study in Sonority" was the most impressive, but this was not new; in fact, it is 40 years old. Just why it was included, under the circumstances, is not clear.

There was much electronic music, in fact a whole concert of it on Saturday afternoon, as well as numbers interspersed elsewhere. Like previous examples of this genre I have encountered, the appeal seems to be intellectual rather than emotional. The professional critics seemed to be divided on the question of emotionalism vs. intellectualism in music. Consequently there was no unanimity of evaluation.

NEWS (e)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 98,000
AUG 15 1967
New England Newsclip

The program of contemporary music offered as the sixth in a series sponsored each year by the Fromm Music Foundation was received by an enthusiastic audience at Tanglewood last night.

The newest generation of musical probers shared the concert billing with Roger Sessions and the result was amazing. The state of affairs, so rapidly changing its countenance, saw the music of modernist Sessions as being almost traditional and conventional in the presence of newer thrusts by more experimental composers.

The field of contemporary musical composition or performance is certainly not a game for amateurs. The full time attention to the changes in musical approach and artistic delivery is an absolute essential to success.

These innovators are creating a new language through a search for methods of breaking loose from the traditional restrictions which hamper the development of music. There is a feeling that perhaps the standard scale is too restrictive.

This idea was pressed by Busoni and Schonberg early in the century. The important point is that the ranks have grown from a scattered, noncommunicating group of pioneers to a large community of well informed enthusiasts who relate to one another's activity as a matter of course.

The aim of the modern contemporaries is simply to release the future generations from the stifling bonds of traditionalism based on audience ignorance and artistic limitations in the symphonic organizations.

Perhaps the interested musicians in Springfield might organize a society similar to Schonberg's "Society for Private Musical Performances". Unless all the possibilities for expanding cultural horizons are realized in a city of this size, it is guilty of being culturally incomplete.

Novice listeners of contemporary music quite often do not enjoy the sounds because they approach the music form with a mind oriented to the western musical style of a hundred years ago. Anyone who is truly interested in music must realize that the greatest portion of the world's population does not adhere to the westerner's myopic musical rulebook.

If anything, the trend toward freer forms is a move in the direction of an internationalization of artistic sound.

During the course of this concert series it has become all too obvious that the days of the semi professional musician are numbered.

So many new ways are being found to increase the phonic potential of conventional instruments that the ability to handle the instrument according to present day standards will be far below the minimal requirements for handling the future compositions of this age.

Before anyone can renounce a trend in a creative field a thorough understanding of what is being attempted must be established by the detractor. Unfortunately, for the opposition, many of the people who go to criticize return only to praise.

NEWS (e)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 98,000
AUG 14 1967
New England Newsclip

By ARTHUR T. ANDREWES

CONTEMPORARY MUSIC AT TANGLEWOOD

Fine Arts

Electronic Music Concert

Fine Arts

The use of electronic devices to create certain sound factors and patterns has come to the world of music through the dubiously sincere resources of industry.

In a natural setting for the enjoyment of sound for the sake of sound well over 300 listeners sat or reclined on the lawns at Tanglewood to absorb the vibrations that were emitted from four strategically placed speakers.

On Saturday, eight selections by seven composers warbled, screamed and pounded the afternoon atmosphere with a mixture of warmth, deliberate declaration and cacaphony.

There are some very interesting results from the distortion, cutting, erasing and editing of taped electronic source materials mixed with well doctored natural sounds.

The danger in this particular adventure to new horizons is that it represents an abandonment of music. With some humour and much serious aggressiveness, the "creators" of the content of Saturday afternoon's affair departed totally from what the average person might consider music.

Dr. Harry Olson, director of a nationally famous acoustical research center and a prominent physicist, is quoted as denying the future for any musical instruments. He claims that electronically sourced sound makes all heretofore useful instruments obsolete.

It seems that the music world is in some danger of having scientists and dial twisters become the judges of the art. This is as absurd as some of the silly sounds created by their machines.

It is true that music must be created for the time it is performed. Modern composers must create for today. However, it is best to leave music defined as "organized sound developed to give aethetic experience," rather than as a well organized collection of noise designed to create a chaotic quandry.

Concerts of this type should be attended if only to find out what steps the scientists are taking to wipe out another art form that resists the great Machinal.

New Use for the Traditional

The Fromm Foundation has gifted the Tanglewood season with a series of Contemporary Music Concerts established to display the works by modernistic composers who seek an outlet for their creations.

The music expressed at the concert on Sunday morning created a feeling of boredom and genuine excitement. During the course of two hours some of the most adventuresome composition and orchestration drew the respectful attention of a large gathering in the Tanglewood theater.

Just as in art we are on the verge of a new language. It is true that people like Edgar Varese and Webern created music in this style many years ago. However, each generation composes under a different set of trials, social differences and artistic freedoms.

The result of this search for new criterias in the world of music is delightful, rewarding, and truly educational. The need for qualified musicianship during the performance of such exhausting works is undeniable.

New ideas and a high level of creative artistry make boring trends short lived, replaced by truly superior music that carves more decisive shapes into musical tradition. Nothing is more disturbing than the total satisfaction with the old standards.

New uses of the traditional instruments make their value more pronounced. The introduction of subtle humour makes the unorthodox approach all the more human. If people would listen first rather than make cultural decisions based on biased hearsay the growth of music and musicianship would be a rapid process.

Disallowed is the electronic gadget, the dime store gimmickery, or the disrespectful contrivance. These composers approach the creation of new voices with a sincere urgency.

The average member of the audience is so steeped in safe traditionalism that he fears venturing into something different. Added to this tragedy is the hesitance on the part of symphony orchestras to perform this type of composition due to its lack of commercial box office value.

One concert experience like that offered at Tanglewood during the contemporary series will win over the average music lover. If there is to be any tomorrow in music; if this generation is not to be credited as musically dead, then the efforts to step into new experiences must be encouraged.

The musicians on stage during Sunday's concert experienced some truly rewarding moods and sounds. From the attention and the applause, they were not alone.

86

HERALD (e)
MANCHESTER, CONN.
CIRC. 14,150
AUG 14 1967
New England Newsclip

Most Critics Unimpressed With Contemporary Music

By JOHN GRUBER

Apathy and boredom, sometimes combined with laughter, were the general reactions of the music critics assembled in convention, to the Festival of Contemporary Music held at Tanglewood under the joint sponsorship of the Berkshire Music Center and the Fromm Music Foundation.

This failed to please the sponsors, the composers, or the performers, yet it was evident that in general the professional music critic (along with the public) could hardly care less about much of the music offered.

There were variations in opinion from Tom Sherman of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, who was thoroughly antagnoistic to the music presented, to Tom Willis of the Chicago Tribune, who championed new music enthusiastically. Still, the fact remains that most of the critics were unimpressed by what they heard.

This seemingly biased attitude is not so strange as it may seem on the surface. Aside from the contemporary works occasionally inserted in today's programs, the music usually presented has been winnowed for years to separate the wheat from the chaff. There was as much chaff in olden days as there is today and it would bore critics and audiences alike were it presented today.

The festival is still going on, so I cannot report on all the music offered, of course. Of four works commissioned for the festival, I heard two, one of which was interesting and the other disappointing. Neither was great.

Chronologically, John Eaton's "Concert Piece for Syn-Ket and Symphony Orchestra" came first with the composer at the electronic solo instrument and Gunther Schuller conducting the orchestra.

The orchestra was divided into two sections, one of which was tuned a quarter-tone below the other, while much was made (in the program notes) of the fact that the Syn-Ket could produce 'microtones."

Mr. Eaton seemed to be laboring under the illusion that his work was the "first piece which combines an instrument capable of performing 'live' the material of electronic music with symphony orchestra." Sometime before Mr. Eaton was born (in 1935), there was an electronic instrument called the "Theremin" which did just that.

Its inventor floated around this country and Europe for a while but the whole thing eventually sank without a trace. I was surprised that, with all the electronic progress in the interno more sophisticated.

It is not the invention of the composer but the work of a man named Paul Ketoff. The composition itself was extremely difficult to perform and taxing for attentive listening. It was the one that particularly provoked Tom Sherman's ire My own reaction was considerably less bitter. I thought it much ado about nothing.

vening years, the Syn-Ket was

The other commissioned work I heard was "Gita" by R. Murray Schafer, a Canadian. This was a choral work with a wind ensemble of chamber proportions for accompaniment. Iva Dee Hiatt, from Smith College, conducted in a most energetic and athletic manner that was oddly at variance with the peaceful character of lyrics and music.

"Gita" represented the composer's musical reaction to about ten verses from the Bhagavad Gita and was sung in the original Sanskrit. Just why, I am uncertain; an English translation was provided as well as a phonetic rendering of the actual text.

To assess the value of the music would require a thorough empathy with the Indian philosophy it sets forth, which is quite contrary to Western ideas. My reaction was that this might have been a gentle, artistic protest to our involvement in Vietnam, and if so it was in excellent taste.

The music was not wildly extreme, and in fact the composer quoted Heinrich Schuetz (unless my ears deceived me) in an effort to emphasize the generally religious character of the music. (In case you don't recognize the name, Schuetz was an early composer whose religious works have received representation in Manchester through the efforts of David Almond and the Concordia Lutheran Church.)

I am not sure that the performance was all that the composer might have desired. I wanted to talk with him the next day, but I couldn't locate him. There were a number of questions he might have answered, but they had to remain questions.

There were two other works commissioned for the festival which I did not hear, as well as a number of works I did hear. Of the latter, Wallingford Riegger's "Study in Sonority" was the most impressive, but this was not new; in fact, it is 40 years old. Just why it was included, under the circumstances, is not clear.

There was much electronic music, in fact a whole concert of it on Saturday afternoon, as well as numbers interspersed elsewhere. Like previous examples of this genre I have encountered, the appeal seems to be intellectual rather than emotional. The professional critics seemed to be divided on the question of emotionalism vs. intellectualism in music. Consequently there was no unanimity of evaluation.

NEWS (e)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 9..000
AUG 15 1967
New England Newsclip

The program of contemporary music offered as the sixth in a series sponsored each year by the Fromm Music Foundation was received by an enthusiastic audience at Tanglewood last night.

The newest generation of musical probers shared the concert billing with Roger Sessions and the result was amazing. The state of affairs, so rapidly changing its countenance, saw the music of modernist Sessions as being almost traditional and conventional in the presence of newer thrusts by more experimental composers.

The field of contemporary musical composition or performance is certainly not a game for amateurs. The full time attention to the changes in musical approach and artistic delivery is an absolute essential to success.

These innovators are creating a new language through a search for methods of breaking loose from the traditional restrictions which hamper the development of music. There is a feeling that perhaps the standard scale is too restrictive.

This idea was pressed by Busoni and Schonberg early in the century. The important point is that the ranks have grown from a scattered, noncommunicating group of pioneers to a large community of well informed enthusiasts who relate to one another's activity as a matter of course.

The aim of the modern contemporaries is simply to release the future generations from the stifling bonds of traditionalism based on audience ignorance and artistic limitations in the symphonic organizations.

Perhaps the interested musicians in Springfield might organize a society similar to Schonberg's "Society for Private Musical Performances". Unless all the possibilities for expanding cultural horizons are realized in a city of this size, it is guilty of being culturally incomplete.

Novice listeners of contemporary music quite often do not enjoy the sounds because they approach the music form with a mind oriented to the western musical style of a hundred years ago. Anyone who is truly interested in music must realize that the greatest portion of the world's population does not adhere to the westerner's myopic musical rulebook.

If anything, the trend toward freer forms is a move in the direction of an internationalization of artistic sound.

During the course of this concert series it has become all too obvious that the days of the semi professional musician are numbered.

So many new ways are being found to increase the phonic potential of conventional instruments that the ability to handle the instrument according to present day standards will be far below the minimal requirements for handling the future compositions of this age.

Before anyone can renounce a trend in a creative field a thorough understanding of what is being attempted must be established by the detractor. Unfortunately, for the opposition, many of the people who go to criticize return only to praise.

NEWS (e)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 98,000
AUG 14 1967
New England Newsclip

By ARTHUR T. ANDREWES

CONTEMPORARY MUSIC AT TANGLEWOOD

Fine Arts

Electronic Music Concert

Fine Arts

The use of electronic devices to create certain sound factors and patterns has come to the world of music through the dubiously sincere resources of industry.

In a natural setting for the enjoyment of sound for the sake of sound well over 300 listeners sat or reclined on the lawns at Tanglewood to absorb the vibrations that were emitted from four strategically placed speakers.

On Saturday, eight selections by seven composers warbled, screamed and pounded the afternoon atmosphere with a mixture of warmth, deliberate declaration and cacaphony.

There are some very interesting results from the distortion, cutting, erasing and editing of taped electronic source materials mixed with well doctored natural sounds.

The danger in this particular adventure to new horizons is that it represents an abandonment of music. With some humour and much serious aggressiveness, the "creators" of the content of Saturday afternoon's affair departed totally from what the average person might consider music.

Dr. Harry Olson, director of a nationally famous acoustical research center and a prominent physicist, is quoted as denying the future for any musical instruments. He claims that electronically sourced sound makes all heretofore useful instruments obsolete.

It seems that the music world is in some danger of having scientists and dial twisters become the judges of the art. This is as absurd as some of the silly sounds created by their machines.

It is true that music must be created for the time it is performed. Modern composers must create for today. However, it is best to leave music defined as "organized sound developed to give aethetic experience," rather than as a well organized collection of noise designed to create a chaotic quandry.

Concerts of this type should be attended if only to find out what steps the scientists are taking to wipe out another art form that resists the great Machinal.

New Use for the Traditional

The Fromm Foundation has gifted the Tanglewood season with a series of Contemporary Music Concerts established to display the works by modernistic composers who seek an outlet for their creations.

The music expressed at the concert on Sunday morning created a feeling of boredom and genuine excitement. During the course of two hours some of the most adventuresome composition and orchestration drew the respectful attention of a large gathering in the Tanglewood theater.

Just as in art we are on the verge of a new language. It is true that people like Edgar Varese and Webern created music in this style many years ago. However, each generation composes under a different set of trials, social differences and artistic freedoms.

The result of this search for new criterias in the world of music is delightful, rewarding, and truly educational. The need for qualified musicianship during the performance of such exhausting works is undeniable.

New ideas and a high level of creative artistry make boring trends short lived, replaced by truly superior music that carves more decisive shapes into musical tradition. Nothing is more disturbing than the total satisfaction with the old standards.

New uses of the traditional instruments make their value more pronounced. The introduction of subtle humour makes the unorthodox approach all the more human. If people would listen first rather than make cultural decisions based on biased hearsay the growth of music and musicianship would be a rapid process.

Disallowed is the electronic gadget, the dime store gimmickery, or the disrespectful contrivance. These composers approach the creation of new voices with a sincere urgency.

The average member of the audience is so steeped in safe traditionalism that he fears venturing into something different. Added to this tragedy is the hesitance on the part of symphony orchestras to perform this type of composition due to its lack of commercial box office value.

One concert experience like that offered at Tanglewood during the contemporary series will win over the average music lover. If there is to be any tomorrow in music; if this generation is not to be credited as musically dead, then the efforts to step into new experiences must be encouraged.

The musicians on stage during Sunday's concert experienced some truly rewarding moods and sounds. From the attention and the applause, they were not alone.

TELEGRAM (m)
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 62,350
AUG 17 1967
New England Newsclip

87 elegram Thur. Aug. 17, 1967

Music: Contemporary Fete at Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Only time will tell what was accomplished by the Berkshire Music Center's 5th annual festival of contemporary music at Tanglewood that ended Tuesday night.

Seven programs were presented during the week with the cooperation of the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago.

No matter how objectionable or aggravating some of it may be, contemporary music is here and can't be ignored. How long it will endure is a moot question.

Unless history reverses itself, only 10 per cent of this era's music will survive. Some 37 works were performed in the seven concerts. Supposedly, 3.7 per cent has a chance.

We pointed this out to Paul Fromm, Chicago philanthropist whose generosity made the festival possible.

"Even if it's one per cent, I'll be satisfied," he said.

Although it was called an "American Festival" 10 of the 31 composers were foreign-born. Programs were given in the Tanglewood Theater.

No more interested audiences have attended concerts here. Few persons walked out. Applause ranged from polite to enthusiastic. Many times it was impossible to tell whether performance or music was being applauded.

Every work received thoughtful listening, no matter how provocative. That attitude was highly desirable. Nothing in music can succeed without comparison.

It is significant, though, that on Monday night, Roger Sessions Duo for Violin and Piano received the most applause. Because it was written 25 years ago, the work is now "old as the hills."

Another well-received "old timer" was Milton Babbitt's Composition for Four Instruments, written in 1948.

True enough, the Sessions duo was exceptionally well-played by violinist Paul Zukofsky and pianist Yugi Takahashi, two center students.

Sessions' piece was composed in an era when melody was still one of music's commodities. As such, it sounded like an oddity in this series. It is difficult to play, rewarding in sound, has motivation and interest content.

Most of the other works lent themselves more readily to description than evaluation.

Of course, many contemporary composers feel that they are doomed to receive posthumous recognition. But they ignore that the 90 per cent of failures from the past never did.

Most of the outlandishly competetive works had many of the same traits. Some were simply titled Duet Serenade, Quartet, Quintet. Others sheltered their hollowness with mysterious implications such as "Hecha Sombra y Altura," "Plahn," "Pien," "Junctures" and "Janissary Music."

Program notes contained such brow-wrinkling phrases as "Complementary modes in opposite registal movement," "Differing attitudes toward the basic compositional material," and "Expanding and contracting intervallic cells."

Much of it was "plink, plank, plunk" for varying numbers of instruments, in the course of which explosive sound clusters punctuated the fracas, and pages were turned, indicating reliance on scores.

Piano strings were plucked while other instruments made isolated, eerie sounds and noises. Generally, each performer was given his own path to follow.

Program notes sounded intellectual. Composers and performers were fiercely serious. Titles seem philosophic and profound. Surroundings and circumstances of performance were impressive.

HERALD NEWS (e)
FALL RIVER, MASS.
CIRC. 40,250
MAY 18 1967
New England Newsclip

Three Workshops of Music Planned for Cape in Summer

Summer residents and other visitors interested in music will find something new on Cape Cod this summer.

The Cape Cod Conservatory of Music and Arts in Barnstable, with divisions in Falmouth and Orleans, has expanded its summer session to include three workshops under the leadership of men widely known in New England's world of music.

Emil Kornsand, for many years a first violinist with the Boston Symphony and other major orchestras, and formerly head of the violin department at Klindworth-Scharwenka Conservatory in Berlin, will conduct a Workshop for Strings from Aug. 24 through Aug. 30.

Alfred Nash Patterson of Boston, founder and director of the famous Chorus Pro Musica and also music director of the oldest music festival in America in Worcester, will lead a workshop on building and training the choir and chorus for a week beginning Aug. 7. For several summers until this year Patterson has prepared choruses for the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood.

Willem A. Valkenier, long principal horn for the Boston Symphony and teacher at leading colleges of music in the East, is to conduct a Workshop for Wind Instruments on the Cape for the week of July 31.

Leslie Moore, director of the Cape Cod Conservatory, says each workshop will embrace technical coaching, conducting, analysis, score-reading, repertoire, rehearsal methods, ensemble, and interpretation.

The conservatory's regular summer session, with individual and class instruction in a wide variety of subjects, begins on July 10 and ends Sept. 2. Inquiry may be directed to the conservatory at Box 637, Barnstable.

THE KANSAS CITY STAR
KANSAS CITY, MO.
D. 335,705 SUN. 392,378
AUG 17 1967

Music Editor Of The Star To Critics Post

John Haskins, The Star's music editor, has been elected secretary of the National Music Critics association. The annual meeting of the association last week at Tanglewood, Mass., was held during a festival of contemporary American music presented as part of the Berkshire festival. It was attended by 33 music critics representing metropolitan newspapers of wide geographic distribution.

Mr. Haskins

Other officers of the association, elected for two-year terms: Boris E. Nelson (Toledo Blade), president; John P. Dwyer (Buffalo Evening News), Alfred Frankenstein (San Francisco Chronicle), Miles Kastendieck (Christian Science Monitor), vice-presdients; Irving Lowens (Washington Evening Star), treasurer; Robert Finn (Cleveland Plain Dealer), Claude Ginsgras (Montreal La Presse), Beverly Wolter (Winston-Salem Journal-Sentinal), members of the executive board.

During the 4-day meeting, the assembled critics were addressed by Roger Stevens, chairman of the National Foundation on the Arts; Paul Fromm, president of the Fromm Music Foundation; Erich Leinsdorf, musical director of the Boston Symphony; Lawrence K. Miller, editor of the Berkshire Eagle; composers Roger Sessions, Gunther Schuller and George Perle; and Phyllis Curtin, soprano, of the Berkshire Music Center faculty.

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 177,750
MAY 18 1967
New England Newsclip

Contemporary music

The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood and the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago have awarded four commissions for music to be performed at a Festival of Contemporary American Music, Aug. 9-17. Carlos Roque Alsina and Jeffrey Levine will do an orchestral composition, and R. Murray Schafer a choral one. The music will be premièred during the seven concerts of the festival.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900
AUG 17 1967
New England Newsclip

Music Review

Contemporary American Music Fete

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE FROMM Music Foundation, Paul Fromm, president, made it possible again this year for the Berkshire Music Center to present a Festival of Contemporary American Music at Tanglewood. The Festival involved many agencies which had the services and counsel of their respective leaders, including the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, music director, the BMC, of which Joseph Silverstein is chairman of the faculty, and the Fellowship Program of Contemporary Music Activities, of which Gunther Schuller is head and Stanley Silverman is assistant.

The Fromm Foundation sponsored seven programs, starting last Wednesday, August 9th, and ending Tuesday evening with a concert by the Group for Contemporary Music at Columbia University, of which the directors are Harvey Sollberger and Charles Wuorinen.

* * *

SOME 39 compositions were played, of which all but eight were written as recently as 1960, and they offered a comprehensive exhibit of the direction of American music. There were several factors immediately and consistently evident. The instrumentation varied, but the writing technique adhered to a style which must have bewildered anyone who still thinks of music in terms of melodies or themes, harmonies and tempo.

Every composer's pedigree was a formidable array of degrees from our most honored academic institutions, grants from the best commissions and contact and study with our most revered authorities, and if some of the sounds they asked the performers to convey to the audiences were unusual, they deserved to be heard with the same respect that was patently exerted in their creation.

* * *

THE INSTRUMENTS, strings and piano, wind, brass, reeds and percussion, sounded few of the effects heard when performing 19th century and earlier music and that would be the most vulnerable point of disagreement if one were to disparage their efforts. This perverted use of the common instruments is the least justifiable of the elements of this new wave. A single isolated pizzicato or harmonic on a violin or cello could be sounded as well if not better on a recorder or a plucked instrument.

Thus what comes through as most valid in this connotation are those "compositions" " electronically-produced sounds, or such an exhibit as the Janissary Music of Wuorinen written to be played by a single percussionist. This Janizary music is intended to be crude and noisy and this it was, precisely.

Such sounds can arouse excitement, even to a degree of frenzy in the case of so-called native dances. On the other hand Three Madrigals of George Crumb for soprano, bass viol and vibraphone were effective in creating moods, due in great part to the singing of Phyllis Bryn-Julson, one of the few outstanding performers of the Festival. Indeed, the level of execution was not at all sufficiently high and the question arises whether the music requires excellence as a necessary goal.

* * *

AN INDICATION of the character of some of the music is revealed by the employment of a conductor for small ensembles, as, for example, the Stefan Wolpe quartet for oboe, cello, piano and percussion. Anyone watching but not hearing this performance might have thought that the conductor had a Mahler score before him, so emotionally did his shoulders move, but all he was calling for was a fistful of piano keys or a burst of percussive explosion, and these resulted only in errorful and uncoordinated borborygmic and carminative blasts.

The spasmodic, even spastic, use of instruments is a strange phenomenon. This pattern appeared almost without deviation in almost every composition, to a degree that it became the most serious indictment of the Festival, monotony, yet the response from those in the audience who were on the same wave length belies the reaction of those who are uninitiated and uninformed.

* * *

CERTAIN METHODS of producing novel sounds were effected by a percussionist striking his sticks on the strings of a bass viol while the proper player of that instrument executed indeterminate glissandos. The gnomic spelunking of the insides of a piano were mainly amusing.

The Fromm Foundation gave commissions to four composers. John Eaton's concert piece for Syn-Ket and orchestra introduces a new electronic instrument; R. Murray Schafer's Gita for choir is a setting of the Indian scriptural Bhagavid Gita and was sung in the original Sanskrit; Carlos Alsina's "Auftrag" (a commission) for nine instruments; and Julius Levine's "Chamber Setting No. 2" for 10 instruments and prerecorded electronic tape.

* * *

THE FROMM Foundation deserves more gratitude than seems to have been shown it for the magnanimous concentration it has showered on Tanglewood. This has been one of the only forward-looking manifestations of the season. New standards of appreciation are required, however, as the old ones no longer are adequate and this pioneering spirit deserves encouragement and nourishment.

88

Chicago Tribune
THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER
D. 840-746 SUN. 1,178,515

AUG 20 1967

Tanglewood's New Music Festival Offers Variety

By Thomas Willis

TANGLEWOOD, NEAR LENOX, MASS. — A visitor walking by the glassed-in green room which adjoins the entrance gate of the Boston Symphony orchestra's summer home here could be pardoned for a double take. One of the events which brought him to the Berkshires was the Fromm Foundation's Festival of Contemporary American Music, but the composition which the gentleman at the piano was playing was "The Palms."

In case the esoteric regions of Protestant church music have eluded you, "The Palms" in an adaptation of "Le Rameaux" by Jean-Baptiste Faure. Mr. Faure, it must be added, was no relation to his namesake, Gabriel, whose art songs are of a different class. "The Palms" author was a turn-of-the-century operatic baritone, and his music sounds like it. Neither the sentiment nor the soupy chords in the accompaniment were what one expected to find in such a setting.

As it turned out, the man at the piano was a visitor, too, and his performance probably was gratification of the old "They laughed when I sat down to play . . ." desire. The festival itself was of a different order.

Paul Fromm, the Chicago wine importer, has been collaborating with the Berkshire Music center for these presentations of new music since 1963. The week-long confrontation of composer, performer, and audience has offered a variety of experience and composition styles. This year's programs held first performances and Fromm commissions by R. Murray Shafer, Jeffrey Levine, John Eaton, and Carlos Roque Alsina.

• • •

Other composers represented on the seven concerts were Ross Lee Finney, Leonard Bernstein [the same Serenade played by James Buswell at Ravinia two weeks ago], Gunther Schuller, Seymour Shifrin, Wallingford Riegger, Emmanuel Ghent, Edwin London, Jacob Druckman, Bulent Arel, Ivo Malec, Milton Babbitt, Luciano Berio, Mario Davidovsky, Vladimir Ussachevsky, George Crumb, Peter Phillips, William Kraft, Stanley Persky, Ursula Mamlok, Milton Babbitt, Alcides Lanza, George Perle, Salvatore Martirano, Gerardo Gandini, Brian Fennelly, Roger Sessions, Stanley Silverman, Chou Wen-Chung, Harvey Sollberger, Charles Wuorinen, Stefan Wolpe, and Edgard Varese. The last named was represented by the first performance of an adaptation by Mr. Schuller of "Nocturnal," a 1961 composition based on a text from Anais Nin's "House of Incest" and never finished.

• • •

The length of the list is a worthwhile reminder of the amount of music being composed in this country today. Far from being a wasteland or a stepchild of Europe, America shows every sign of developing a vigorous new voice of her own in the musical Babel. The languages spoken may be strange to ears hardened by systems and scales, but the force and skill of some of the new men is impressive.

• • •

Three of the new works seem especially worthwhile as indicators of the direction things are going.

"Hex," by Emmanuel Ghent, is scored for a dozen instruments and three tape channels of electronic sound. The instruments function as independent entities and the solo trumpet plays a key role. There is no conductor, but all the performers are linked to the tape by headphones, and a special channel, unheard by the audience, gives them synchronizing signals and other instructions. The resulting independence of sound from visual cuing lent an added dimension of surprise; for much of its length, the work managed to sound improvised and highly structured at the same time.

• • •

John Eaton's Concert Piece for Syn-Ket and Symphony Orchestra also featured an electronic performer. In this case, it was a machine whose console resembled a spaceman's, complete with flashing lights, knobs, and sliding switches. The Syn-Ket, invented by Paul Ketoff, sounds like the child of a theremin and a mocking bird. Placed in a fabric of microtones—antiphonal orchestras tuned a quarter tone apart—it created some interesting combinations of feedback and regenerative trills, cheeps, and cycles. Much of the time, the composer at the console appeared to be improvising, and it was obvious that the new machine had a touch-and-go temperament. Given time, it could prove to be an expressive novelty.

[Continued on page 10]

Festival at Tanglewood Offers Variety

[Continued from page 9]

R. Murray Schafer's "Gita" is of a different order of experience, and may be of lasting significance. It is scored for brass ensemble, chorus, and tape. The text is from the Bhagavad Gita, and part of the English translation is worth quoting both as literature and as indication of the composer's point of view:

"He who is without affection on any side, who does not rejoice or loathe as he obtains good or evil, his intelligence is firmly set in wisdom. . . . When a man dwells in his mind on the objects of a sense, attachment to them is produced. From attachment springs desire and from desire comes anger. From anger arises bewilderment, from bewilderment loss of memory, and from loss of memory, the destruction of intelligence and from the destruction of intelligence he perishes.

"But a man of disciplined mind, who moves among the objects of sense, with the senses under control and free from attachment and aversion, he attains purity of spirit."

The chances are, however, the reader might envision the combination of listed performers and the quoted text, you would come out with a diametrically opposite attitude from that of the composer. The tape, for example, is never assertive in the conventional "electronic organ" beeps and thuds. The voices fragment the text in atmospheric ways — leaving the words to communicate as words in program notes and in performer attitudes. The vocal sound clusters in chromatic heaps, some of them ad lib. The brasses enter sporadically—a little like the intrusive winds in Ives' "The Unanswered Question" and are gradually overpowered by the sinuous tape and hypnotic iteration of ancient syllables. At the moment where peace is attained, two measures of a Heinrich Schuetz Psalm are heard from the tape; as understated climax it is one of the most effective moments I have heard in a new score.

These new works were only a few among many, and I was not able to hear them all. For all their many differences in attitude and technique, those I heard left a definite impression of growth potential. Honegger's cynical dictum "Music is dying not of anemia, but of plethora" may not be true after all.

The festival also was attended by members of the Music Critics association, invited to Tanglewood for its annual meeting. There were confrontations with performers, composers, and other critics during the closed sessions, and discussion of future plans. Most of these centered on the forthcoming digest of criticism, temporarily named Overview, which the association is initiating with the aid of a $67,200 grant from the National Endowment for the Arts. Target date for the first issue is September, 1969.

ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH
D. 349,508 SUN. 566,562

AUG 20 1967

Writing Music 'Because It's There'

By THOMAS B. SHERMAN

LENOX, MASS.

CONTEMPORARY MUSIC is in a state of crisis like contemporary painting, literature, politics, sociology and economics. So writers are likely to refer to the "plight of the American composer" without realizing that composers are no worse off than creative or interpretive artists in any field. Actually the personal situation of the American composer is not bad at all. None of them are starving, hundreds of them are getting their music published and a smaller though considerable number are represented on the programs of symphony orchestras, opera houses, chamber music groups and choral societies.

Many composers earn the greater part of their livelihood by teaching at colleges and universities; but the agency that has brought the composer and public together is the Foundation. The rise of the Foundation and its influence on American culture is a fascinating subject worthy of close examination. In this context, however, it is sufficient to say that it has arisen and stands ready to bestow large sums ot money on any deserving project.

The Fromm Music Foundation is one of these. It was instituted in 1927 by Paul Fromm of Chicago and the consequences of some of its benefactions were visible and audible recently at the Berkshire Music Festival, Lenox, Massachusetts.

The Festival of Contemporary Music ran parallel to the Berkshire Music Center and summer season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The contrast between the programs of the Boston Orchestra directed by Erich Leinsdorf and the concerts of contemporary music could hardly have been more striking.

The symphony programs were traditional. They celebrated the great figures of the past. The contemporary American music discarded the controlling principles observed by most of the great masters of a past up to and including the first quarter of the twentieth century.

John C. Eaton's composition was a "Concert Piece for Syn-Ket and Symphony Orchestra" and the Syn-Ket, an electronic instrument activated by a console, was manipulated by the composer. In order to be certain that nothing would be extruded that even faintly resembled the intervals of the diatonic scale Mr. Eaton divided the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in halves and tuned the second section a quarter-tone lower than the first. Thus he insured a continuous flow of microtonal melody — melody that follows a succession of tones each narrower than the intervals of chromatic scale.

The piece as a whole was therefore an adventure in a new kind of sound. To speak of consonance to a modern composer is like speaking of gravity to an astronaut. As for the Syn-Ket itself it wails, whistles and murmurs but its hollow noises have little in common with instruments generally used.

The aggregate of sound discharged into the atmosphere of the Festival Chamber Music Hall was indeed fascinating. Its unfamiliarity was such that it seemed to be following no organizational plan of any kind; but obviously such a judgment must be subject to revision.

The same attitude of suspended judgment would be appropriate for all the contemporary works that I heard. They were arresting acoustical experiences but their inner logic, if any, was not perceptible.

Leinsdorf

Many composers were represented including Ross Lee Finney, Seymour Shuffrin, Emanuel Ghent, Edwin London, James Druckman and George Crumb. Each had his special qualities but their differences were less obvious than their similarities since they were usually atonal and rhythmically irregular.

At a meeting between three composers and some 25 music critics who were attending the festival the question of intelligibility arose. Was it essential to the performance of new music that some sort of understanding between the composer and his audiences should exist?

The composers — Roger Sessions, Gunther Schuller and George Perle — considered the question irrelevant. How could a composer think of an audience when it was possible that he might encounter 20 kinds of audience and each different in its susceptibility and knowledge? Mr. Sessions said that he composed because the music was "there" — that is to say in his mind, his heart and his bones — and the act of composing was a natural function as flying is natural to a bird.

That was an honest answer. A composer should never be required to temper and shape his music to the known responses of the public. Yet it seems quite evident that the gulf between the public and the creative artist in music is wider and deeper at the moment than at any time in history.

The great innovators of the past — Gluck, Wagner, Berlioz — were roundly denounced by many critics and many members of the public. Composers and their adherents frequently divided into rival camps even though their supporters were frequently more vociferous in praise or blame than the composer's themselves. But at no time in the past was the special language of experimental music so obscure that the listener could not detect at first hearing any of its basic principles.

The chromaticism of Wagner may have seemed ridiculous to many. "Tristan and Isolde" was abandoned temporarily by one opera house after 65 rehearsals. But Wagner became a figure of eminence in his own life-time and established a theater dedicated to the performances of his operas.

By comparison Arnold Schoenberg's exploitation of the 12-tone scale reached only a small segment of the public in the course of some 40 years. His genius was admitted. His early works were enthusiastically received and admired. But his later works, so far as the general music public was concerned, were simply acoustical phenomena. They seem beautiful but static and impressionistic. He is still a controversial, "far out" composer.

If music is to be considered a social art some kind of understanding must exist between composer and public. This is not to say that the composer must consult the mass taste. But when he seeks or even allows a public performance of his works, it is only reasonable to expect that the orthography, the grammar and the syntax he uses should be accessible to the public that hears him.

As may be readily understood the performance of works by the composers named and others represented at the Berkshire Festival were extraordinarily difficult.

The Tanglewood Choir, directed by Iva Dee Hiatt deserved all the applause that it received. Perhaps some part of this enthusiasm was undoubtedly a tribute to the composers but the choir, nevertheless, was alert, finely disciplined and though mistakes would not have been recognizable, their self-assurance was evident in their freedom and responsiveness.

Finally I should mention the Serenade for Violin, String Orchestra, Harp and Percussion by Leonard Bernstein. It was in all its aspects a contemporary work but it lay well within the framework of tonality and was therefore a continuation rather than a departure from the main stream of Western music. The solo violinist, Joseph Silverstein, was the most relaxed individual in the hall.

SUNDAY JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
CIRC. 200,250

AUG 20 1967

New England Newsclip

Insights and Outsights

By EDWIN SAFFORD

Music Critic's Role Today

AT THE RISK OF talking myself out of something I ask a question lurking in certain recesses: is a music critic really necessary? Of course you could ask if a critic of any stripe is necessary, but we are dealing in specifics here. Assuming music criticism can be specific.

Many do believe him necessary, music critics in particular. And since he is a social animal, like other social animals he clans up with his own kind to form group therapy clubs, in his case the Music Critics Association.

Last weekend the MCA concluded its annual conference, this year held at Tanglewood, that lovely highland summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra surrounded by a coronet of Berkshire mountains near Lenox, Mass. By excellent arrangement the meeting occurred during part of the Festival of Contemporary American Music sponsored by the Berkshire Music Center in cooperation with the Fromm Music Foundation, and performed mostly by students at the center.

Thus 31 music critics, nearly all from the northeast but coming also from as far away as Winston-Salem and Tucson, had opportunity to hear what they so infrequently have opportunity to hear, the music of their own time. As well as to exchange ideas about their—I was going to say craft—occupation.

To the latter end there were the usual agonized reappraisals, comparisons of working conditions, observations and ripostes. In four seminars and one business meeting you constantly heard "Who are we? Where are we going? Should we be philosophers, missionaries, taste-makers, simply reporters, or a multi-hatted combination of all?" No firm conclusions were forthcoming so I expect everybody went home to continue patterns already established.

I do have favorite comments I feel have usefulness, however, if only by implication. They reflect on the music of our time. Composer George Perle, talking about composer job-hunters just after World War II and now—if you were avant-garde then, forget it; if you are not avant-garde currently, forget it. Twenty plus years have made the difference and we must both accept and live with the fact.

Paul Fromm, not a composer, performer, or music critic, but founder and president of the Fromm Foundation, cited what he called the fallacy of art appealing to everybody, noted composers are writing music for an audience 50 per cent of which is 25 years old or younger, and somewhat contradicting a newspaper editor present, said critics should "write to have meaning not just to general readers but to the profession." (He also said there is no excuse for an orchestra not having enough time for rehearsals to perform new music and the money for them.)

One critic full of years and annoyance pointed his finger at a composer in contemporary idioms: "Have you ever been in love? There is no soul in this music!"

There are some remembered expressions, inspired to a great extent by the music performed. In the programs I heard most controversy rose from pieces by John Eaton, Emmanuel Ghent, R. Murray Schafer, and an outdoor, 360-degree stereophonic concert of electronic works, the latter including readily accessible pieces by Luciano Berio and Vladimir Ussachevsky.

Someone suggested during the conference that, instead of first performances, people who do such things should commission second and third performances of new music. In former times this was not so necessary. But in our era our ears are not experienced enough beyond Berg, perhaps Schoenberg, perhaps Webern, to grasp easily all the technical and tonal experimentation presently going on because the chance to hear is so minimal. As a consequence a majority of public and performers are musical illiterates insofar as today is concerned.

Add to the assemblage this man, the music critic. For the most part he is as ignorant and dismayed about this music as the public for whom he writes, some of whom, the young people who in conservatories and universities are learning it, will fast outdistance him in knowledgeability.

To help him partially MCA is, on a $67,200 National Foundation on the Arts and the Humanities study grant, planning a magazine. The working title is Overview and it will be a digest of criticism written principally in this country but also from abroad. Through it the critic may be able to keep abreast of the times in names and reports. But he will have to hear, actively and repeatedly hear, preferably in the concert hall not from recordings, how contemporary composition sounds. Otherwise he will remain ignorant and dismayed, and the question of his being really necessary really will need no answer.

* * *

NOTES: The 108th Worcester Music Festival, said to be the oldest of its kind in the country, occurs the week of Oct. 23-28, in Memorial Auditorium, Worcester. Featured this year is the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, Sixten Ehrling conducting. Guest artists with the orchestra are Richard Tucker, singing arias from French and Italian operas, and Sen. Edward W. Brooke, R-Mass, who will narrate Aaron Copland's Lincoln Portrait.

SUNDAY TELEGRAM
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 107,550

JUL 23 1967

New England Newsclip

Music

Music Critics Assn. To Have New Journal

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

A new and unique music journal with a prospective circulation of 25,000 is to be published by the Music Critics Assoccation.

The association has been awarded a technical assistance grant of $67,200 by the National Endowment for the Arts in order to plan for and develop Overview, a monthly digest of musical criticism.

Irving Lowens, music critic of the Washington Evening Star, has been appointed chairman of the board of directors of the projected magazine.

Additional members of the board are Dr. Boris E. Nelson, music critic of the Toledo Blade and director of fine arts at the University of Toledo, and Dr. Miles Kastendieck, former music critic of the New York World-Journal-Tribune.

Critics Criteria

Other board members will be announced at the association's annual convention, to be held at Tanglewood Aug. 9-13.

Overview will succeed Critics Criteria, until now the official publication of the Music Critics Association.

Unlike Criteria, Overview will publish no original articles. The journal intends to reprint, digest and abstract reviews and articles about music with special emphasis on the works and careers of American composers and performers.

In order to insure its independence, Overview will accept no advertising. Financial support will be sought from the professional world of music, private foundations, and National Endowment of the Arts.

After a careful study of the matter, the Music Critics Association concluded that heretofore there has been no central source of information about American music and music in America.

The lacuna that Overview hopes to fill will be of service to purchasers of talent, including orchestras, opera companies, impresarios and organized concert groups.

Notably in the case of local organizations preparing concert series, there will be a thorough source of information about attractions, other than the garnished, biased reviews that are offered program committees.

It is expected that Overview will also have strong appeal to concertgoers, high-fidelity enthusiasts, amateurs, teachers, critics, and those whose career and business interests require them to keep abreast of musical developments.

TRENDS AND FACTORS — Speaking of amateurs, American Music Conference has just relased a brochure that makes glowing predictions about the future of instrumental music in this country.

The basic premise is that there is to be an increasing awareness of the need to prepare for a life filled with nonworking time.

Fostering this idea will be continued support of the idea that music lessons are almost a birthright of every American child. Some may be hard to convince.

The AMC optimistically claims that youngsters will continue to surprise their elders with their musical capacities and abilities. More and more families will include instruments and music lessons among basic personal and family needs.

And to lessen the "chore" aspect of lessons, it is expected that electronics will help speed up the learning process in the beginner stage and add interesting new dimensions to playing.

What a pity that the master composers didn't have access to such resources while writing all that music that will be electronically learned in a hurry.

THIS WEEK — Friday and Saturday nights, Mario Maya and his company of Flamenco dancers will perform on the Castle Hill Festival series on the grounds of the Crane Estate in Ipswich. The festival is sponsored by the New England Conservatory of Music.

The New York City Ballet today begins its concluding week at Saratoga (N.Y.) Performing Arts Center. Evenin performances, beginning 8:30, will include "Wester Symphony," ' Afternoon of Faun," "Bugaku," "Ray monda Variations," "Balle Imperial," "La Valse" an "la Sonnambula."

Eugene Ormandy and th Philadelphia Orchestra begi their four weekends of co certs at Saratoga on Thur day, Aug. 3, with Van Cliburn as soloist in Rachmaninoff' Second Piano Concerto.

Les Grands Ballets Can diens will hold forth at Ja cob's Pillow Dance Festiva Lee, Tuesday through Satu day. Evening performance (8:40) are Tuesday, Wedne day, Friday and Saturda Matinees at 3 are Thursday Friday and Saturday.

90

MUSIC: Critics at Lenox

By IRVING LOWENS
Music Critic of The Star

Tanglewood is much more than the Boston Symphony Orchestra in summer dress. The orchestra's appearances in the 6,000-seat Music Shed are, of course, invariably well attended and are frequently quite memorable. But to my mind, it is the proliferation of musical activities around the Berkshire Music Center rather than the formal week-end concerts which makes any visit to Tanglewood a particularly fascinating experience.

Between Aug. 9 and 13, I was one of some 35-odd music critics who gathered at Tanglewood near Lenox, Mass., for the annual conference of the National Music Critics Association. At the discussion sessions—closed to the public—there was a considerable amount of free-swinging talk, soul-searching and self-analysis. Everything was off the record, and as a consequence, some pretty good arguments took place.

Two excellent examples of business as usual were the panels on "The State of Music Criticism," in which Erich Leinsdorf, Roger L. Stevens, Thomas D. Perry, Jr. (manager of the Boston Orchestra) and Lawrence K. Miller (editor of the respected Berkshire Eagle) told the critics what they were supposed to be doing, and on "The State of Contemporary Music," in which composers George Perle, Roger Sessions and Gunther Schuller, singer Phyllis Curtin, and philanthropist Paul Fromm told the critics how ignorant they were. The latter discussion evoked from one critic an impassioned attack on electronic music and from another an equally impassioned defence of the avant-garde.

Cram Course For Critics

Actually, most music critics are well aware of how little they know about what younger composers are writing these days, and an awareness of the necessity for a postgraduate cram course in listening was one of the big reasons why the Music Critics Association decided to come to Tanglewood at just the time they did. The fact that the opening of the Critics conference and the first concert of the annual Festival of Contemporary American Music took place on the same day was not a coincidence — it was planned that way.

GUNTHER SCHULLER

This week-long festival within a festival has been going on at Tanglewood ever since 1963, thanks to the generous support of the Fromm Music Foundation and the vision of Erich Leinsdorf. In some respects, the Tanglewood "confrontation with contemporary music" is of crucial importance. Gunther Schuller, the distinguished composer who is now president of the New England Music Conservatory and who heads the Tanglewood contemporary music activities, sums up the manifold purposes of the festival in this way:

"It provides a forum for new ideas and directions in music, and as such has become one of the most important annual events in the vital task of keeping the lines of communication open between composer and public. It also reaffirms the position that music can only survive in our society through the careful nurturing of the creative mind.

"But creation (composition) and re-creation (performance) are inextricably linked: the one cannot survive without the other. The emphasis on museum policies possible in the other arts, particularly the visual arts, can only lead to attrition in music for the very simple reason that, unlike a painting which exists and can be viewed at leisure, a composition has to be performed in order to exist. It ceases to exist, except as a memory, the moment the performance has ended.

Commitment to Music

"It therefore becomes the obligation of every performing musician to keep the life stream of music—composition—going and moving forward. The young men and women who come to Tanglewood, performing in addition to baroque and 19th-century music a wide variety of contemporary music, are meeting this challenge as a part of their professional commitment to music in all its breadth and depth."

As members of the professional music community, music critics have no less a commitment to music "in all its breadth and depth" than performers. Their challenge is no less difficult—they must listen to the new with the same sympathy as they listen to the old; they must understand the most advanced idioms of today with the same clarity as they understand the dynamics of sonata-form and fugue.

Erich Leinsdorf put it very well when he explained that "it is the task of a music center (which can rely on specialized groups—both performing and listening, which can count on a special mood or relaxed concentration during the summer months, which can play for groups of people who do not come to us tired from a working day), to present all schools of contemporary music—experimental, improvisational, electronic, for example. We hope that over man, Sollberger, Ussachevsky, Varèse, Wen-Chung, Wolpe, and Wuorinen, a list

See LOWENS, Back Page

divided into halves ... quarter tone apart, though I daresay the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra of 1992 will find this as easy as the present one does the Bartok Concerto. Even peering, as one had to, through a somewhat foggy performance, it was clear that here was a piece with fresh and lively ideas about combining electronic and instrumental music, the microtonal orchestra being a good example, and full of verve and humor.

Shafer and Levine, also Ghent in his "Hex" (1966), used electronic sounds in more conventional ways, but their music, as well as that by the seven composers represented on an all-electronic concert, showed that the electronic sounds serve a great variety of compositional styles and purposes, and that to many composers they have become an altogether natural extension of music's timbral and rhetorical possibilities.

Most of the new music was serial, some of it too complex (obscure?) for me to put together on one hearing, some of it obvious. Very few pieces sounded mechanical, though not really heard by their composers. A few com-

IN ENGLISH!
Woman
UNDER 21 ADMITTED

ed, glad to be informed ... some of what is happening, occasionally thoroughly engaged by this piece or that, also sometimes bored, cross, bewildered. It is also important to bear in mind that several works that seemed tiresome heard at a festival under saturation conditions would have appeared fresher,, and would have made its individual communication with more impact if heard under other conditions.

A word, finally, about performance, first to say that performance level was generally high, second to regret that even so there is never enough time to prepare everything as it should be prepared, and third, to commend particularly the achievement of a few persons, the always impressive conducting of Gunther Schuller, that of Lawrence Foster, the young assistant conductor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic, the remarkable playing by the violinist Paul Zukofsky, the outstanding sensitive work of the pianist Craig Sheppard, the contributions also of bassoonist Kazuyoshi Asano and soprano Phyllis Bryn-Julson.

er's "Gita" for chorus, brass ... formal gardens, was devoted to electronic music. Somehow, the taped sounds appeared much less formidable in the open air, and even the tots present listened to the strange sounds attentively and with keen appreciation. I found myself especially impressed by the humor of Kenneth Gaburo's "Lemon Drops" (1965) and "For Harry" (1966), by the strength of Bulent Arel's "Stereo Electronic Music No. 1" (1961), and by the liquid poetry of Luciano Berio's "Homaggio a Joyce" (1958).

...on Concerts

All in all, I found the Tanglewood Festival of Contemporary American Music a mind-stretching, difficult, exhilarating experience. It is the kind of inundation in the sounds of today that all music critics should be subjected to periodically, and I hope that some way will be found to ensure the presence of at least some members of the craft at each future festival.

The Sunday Star
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D.N. 351,015
AUG 20 1967

THE KANSAS CITY STAR
KANSAS CITY, MO.
D. 335,705 SUN. 392,378
AUG 20 1967

Music in Mid-America

A few random reflections on the 1967 meeting of the Music Critics Association . . . see below

By John Haskins
(The Star's Music Editor)

LENOX, MASS.—THE MUSIC CRITICS ASSOCIATION, having tried various formats for its annual meeting, settled this year for a tried-and true formula—go where the action is. 33 members of the association, representing a wide geographical distribution of metropolitan newspapers, gathered at Tanglewood on August 9 through 13 as guests of the Boston Symphony. There the action consisted, so far as their trade is concerned, of three concerts by the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf and guest conductor William Steinberg, and four concerts of the Fromm Foundation-sponsored Festival of Contemporary American Music.

When they were not listening to music, they listened to talk, their own and that of panels gathered together for their meeting. Roger Stevens, chairman of the National Foundation on the Arts, was one of the panelists; so was Paul Fromm, president of the Fromm Music Foundation, a great benefactor of contemporary American music who sponsors, among other things, a ten-day festival annually at Tanglewood; Erich Leinsdorf, musical director of the Boston Symphony (who introduced Roger Stevens as "the official culture of the United States"), also was a panelist, as were composers George Perle, Gunther Schuller and Roger Sessions, editor Lawrence K. Miller (Berkshire Eagle), and singer Phyllis Curtin.

THE PANELS DEALT with the state of music criticism (there was general agreement that music criticism is in a state); with the state of contemporary music (also in a state, according to the more conservative members of the profession); with the plans to establish "Overview," a new journal of critical opinion backed by a substantial grant-in-aid; and most stimulating of all, a free-for-all session presided over by the resident critic, Jay Rosenfeld (Berkshire Eagle).

Music critics, by the nature of their trade, tend to be an opinionated group, and they are seldom overcome with shyness when it comes to expressing opinion. Thus, in the final free-for-all session, considerable heat as well as some light was generated when discussion turned on the question of critical attitude. The standard positions were taken, and defended—the music critic is a journalist engaged in the practice of comparative shopping in the arts, seeing that his readers get their money's worth; the critic is a philosopher, intent on establishing and maintaining the highest standards; the critic is as much an artist as those he reviews, though he works in a different medium, and much too rapidly for sober assessment; the critic normally is far closer to being a juror than a judge. While nothing really conclusive emerged from all the talk, it was as much fun as a college bull session. Through one participant's whimsical mind kept running a quotation from that great music critic, George Bernard Shaw: "Musical critiques, like sermons, tend not to improve; they are seldom discussed, and never contradicted."

THE POSITIVE accomplishment of the 1967 Music Critics association meeting at Tanglewood came in the discussion of the projected magazine, "Overview." Irving Lowens (Washington Evening Star) and Roger Stevens (Chairman, National Foundation on the Arts) led the discussion. The point was made that as of now there exists no publication which gives a clear idea of what music criticism is like in the United States, and specifically, what is the difference between a critic writing for a New York audience and one who writes for a Chicago, New Orleans, or San Francisco audience.

"Overview" should give a running account of how American critics rate against each other and against an ideal standard. Everything in each issue will be a reprint of already-published work, and the opinion expressed in the publication should be a valuable guide for the entire musical profession. An editorial team will spend nearly a year in planning the publication, with the first issue expected at the beginning of the 1968-69 season.

It is difficult for music criticism, far and away the most evanescent of journalistic endeavors, to attain any kind of permanence. "Overview" is expected to preserve some criticism that deserves preservation, and to set a standard for the more than 600 music critics in the United States against which their own work may be set. If we sometimes do not know where we are going, though we may know where and what we are, "Overview" may provide, or a least suggest, an answer.

LOWENS: Fromm Foundation Concerts

Continued From Page D-4

the years this service will help to clarify the central issue—how to get the public at large to be as curious, as expectant, as eager for a new opus from a living composer as were our grandfathers when a new work by Brahms was announced for performance."

Surely, it is also the music critic's job to help to clarify this central issue, for unless the issue is clarified, the state of music will never be really healthy.

The music critics got to hear (as well as three Boston orchestra concerts conducted by Leinsdorf and Steinberg, and a piano recital by John Browning) four of the seven concerts in the 1967 Festival of Contemporary American Music.

Reactions to the new music were, to put it mildly, not quite unanimous. The feature of the Aug. 9 concert was the world premiere of a "Concert Piece" for Syn-Ket and symphony orchestra commissioned especially for the occasion from the 32-year-old Pennsylvania composer, John C. Eaton, by the Fromm Foundation.

Eaton's work exemplified some of the problems faced by the professional listener as well as the professional performer. Eaton said, in his program note:

"This is to my knowledge the first piece which combines an instrument capable of performing live the materials of electronic music with a symphony orchestra. There is nothing pre-recorded; all the electronic music is being played at the moment; and my interpretation, or that of another Syn-Ket soloist, might be somewhat different on another occasion. In order to give the orchestra a richer sound—a sound somewhat more accommodating to the materials of the electronic music drawn from the Syn-Ket—I have divided it in half and tuned the second section a quarter of a tone lower."

The Syn-Ket, by the way, is a synthetic tone generator invented by an Italian sound and electronics engineer, Paul Ketoff.

The Eaton work may perhaps be an important one—surely it is a pioneering one which deserves careful study. But the technical difficulty of preparing the performance was so horrendous that it is doubtful that what was heard could be considered in any way definitive. The audience's animosity and confusion were comprehensible, if not excusable.

Shafer's "Gita"

That such an unfortunate reaction to a new and difficult piece of music is not by any means inevitable was demonstrated by another Fromm Foundation commission which received its first performance on Aug. 10—R. Murray Shafer's "Gita" for chorus, brass ensemble and pre-recorded tape.

Shafer is one of Canada's brightest hopes for the future, and "Gita," a setting of a portion of the "Bhagavad Gita" in the original Sanscrit, shows why. It is an astonishing tour de force in which the chorus, utilizing the strange sounds of the unfamiliar tongue, is stretched to the very limits of expressivity. Of course, Shafer does not expect that his listeners will understand the individual words. What he attempts to do is to etch, in terms of pure sound, the feeling-tone of the text, which describes how one can attain serenity of spirit while avoiding the dangers of egoism and passion.

"Gita" succeeds magnificently in communicating its message with immediacy and eloquence, despite Shafer's wild tonal vocabulary, which ranges from direct quotations of a Heinrich Schuetz motet through savagely brutal intrusions by the brass to the taped sound of Rabindranath Tagore reading. The composer proved himself always master of his sonic materials, and to me, "Gita" was the high point of the Fromm festival.

Other Highlights

Between Eaton and Shafer there were many degrees of achievement and expertise. There was, during the opening concert, a fine performance of Gunther Schuller's "Triplum." This work, first heard on the same night that Schuller's unfortunate opera, "The Visitation," was receiving its American premiere at the hands of the Hamburg State Opera Company with the conductor on the podium, once again demonstrated its excellent quality.

On the same program as the Shafer, four absolutely lovely unaccompanied madrigals written in 1958 by Jacob Druckman were programmed. Their idiom was highly conservative, but Druckman's mastery of it was a thing of joy. It is interesting to note that in 1967, he is hard at work in the Columbia-Princeton Electronic Music Center.

The entire Aug. 12 concert, which was held outdoors in the formal gardens, was devoted to electronic music. Somehow, the taped sounds appeared much less formidable in the open air, and even the tots present listened to the strange sounds attentively and with keen appreciation. I found myself especially impressed by the humor of Kenneth Gaburo's "Lemon Drops" (1965) and "For Harry" (1966), by the strength of Bulent Arel's "Stereo Electronic Music No. 1" (1961), and by the liquid poetry of Luciano Berio's "Homaggio a Joyce" (1958).

All in all, I found the Tanglewood Festival of Contemporary American Music a mind-stretching, difficult, exhilarating experience. It is the kind of inundation in the sounds of today that all music critics should be subjected to periodically, and I hope that some way will be found to ensure the presence of at least some members of the craft at each future festival.

The Sunday Star
WASHINGTON, D. C.
CIR. 351,015
AUG 20 1967

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 537,050
AUG 20 1967
New England Newsclip

PRICES: Mon. thru Thur. 8:30 p.m. $4.95, 4.50, 3.95, 2.95.
Fri. 8:30 p.m. & Sat. 9:00 p.m. $5.95, 5.50, 4.50, 3.50.
GOOD SEATS NOW!
NEXT WEEK • 7 DAYS
AUG. 28th to SEPT. 3rd
PETER, PAUL & MARY
SEPT. 11-16 DIANA ROSS and The SUPREMES WITH the TEMPTATIONS
SEPT. 17 ● 1 PERF. The YOUNG RASCALS
Box Office Open 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. daily, 2 p.m. to 10 p.m. Sundays
RESERVATIONS: Boston 235-9180 Framingham 872-3577
Frank Connelly's CAROUSEL THEATRE Framingham, Exit 13, Mass. Pike Mail Order Box 633
CASTING NOTICE! AUDITIONS—MON., AUG. 31 AT 3
JULIE ANDREWS
pates the attitudes boss whom she ho
marry during "Thor Modern Millie," screen at the Circle.
it's FUN fo
GEOR
CIR
Starts
AIR-CONDITIONED
E. M. LOEW'S CENTER Now
WASHINGTON at STUART
FIRST DOWNTOWN SHOWING!
IN ENGLISH!
Woman
UNDER 21 ADMITTED

Wen-Chung, Wolpe, a

divided into quarter tone apart, though I daresay the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra of 1992 will find this as easy as the present one does the Bartok Concerto. Even peering, as one had to, through a somewhat foggy performance, it was clear that here was a piece with fresh and lively ideas about combining electronic and instrumental music, the microtonal orchestra being a good example, and full of verve and humor.

Shafer and Levine, also Ghent in his "Hex" (1966), used electronic sounds in more conventional ways, but their music, as well as that by the seven composers represented on an all-electronic concert, showed that the electronic sounds serve a great variety of compositional styles and purposes, and that to many composers they have become an altogether natural extension of music's timbral and rhetorical possibilities.

Most of the new music was serial, some of it too complex (obscure?) for me to put together on one hearing, some of it obvious. Very few pieces sounded mechanical, though not really heard by their composers. A few com-interested, glad to be informed about some of what is happening, occasionally thoroughly engaged by this piece or that, also sometimes bored, cross, bewildered. It is also important to bear in mind that several works that seemed tiresome heard at a festival under saturation conditions would have appeared fresher, and would have made its individual communication with more impact if heard under other conditions.

A word, finally, about performance, first to say that performance level was generally high, second to regret that even so there is never enough time to prepare everything as it should be prepared, and third, to commend particularly the achievement of a few persons, the always impressive conducting of Gunther Schuller, that of Lawrence Foster, the young assistant conductor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic, the remarkable playing by the violinist Paul Zukofsky, the outstanding sensitive work of the pianist Craig Sheppard, the contributions also of bassoonist Kazuyoshi Asano and soprano Phyllis Bryn-Julson.

THE KANSAS CITY STAR
KANSAS CITY, MO.
D. 335,705 SUN. 392,378
AUG 20 1967

Music in Mid-America

A few random reflections on the 1967 meeting of the Music Critics Association . . . see below

By John Haskins
(The Star's Music Editor)

LENOX, MASS.—THE MUSIC CRITICS ASSOCIATION, having tried various formats for its annual meeting, settled this year for a tried-and true formula—go where the action is. 33 members of the association, representing a wide geographical distribution of metropolitan newspapers, gathered at Tanglewood on August 9 through 13 as guests of the Boston Symphony. There the action consisted, so far as their trade is concerned, of three concerts by the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf and guest conductor William Steinberg, and four concerts of the Fromm Foundation-sponsored Festival of Contemporary American Music.

When they were not listening to music, they listened to talk, their own and that of panels gathered together for their meeting. Roger Stevens, chairman of the National Foundation on the Arts, was one of the panelists; so was Paul Fromm, president of the Fromm Music Foundation, a great benefactor of contemporary American music who sponsors, among other things, a ten-day festival annually at Tanglewood; Erich Leinsdorf, musical director of the Boston Symphony (who introduced Roger Stevens as "the official culture of the United States"), also was a panelist, as were composers George Perle, Gunther Schuller and Roger Sessions, editor Lawrence K. Miller (Berkshire Eagle), and singer Phyllis Curtin.

THE PANELS DEALT with the state of music criticism (there was general agreement that music criticism is in a state); with the state of contemporary music (also in a state, according to the more conservative members of the profession); with the plans to establish "Overview," a new journal of critical opinion backed by a substantial grant-in-aid; and most stimulating of all, a free-for-all session presided over by the resident critic, Jay Rosenfeld (Berkshire Eagle).

Music critics, by the nature of their trade, tend to be an opinionated group, and they are seldom overcome with shyness when it comes to expressing opinion. Thus, in the final free-for-all session, considerable heat as well as some light was generated when discussion turned on the question of critical attitude. The standard positions were taken, and defended—the music critic is a journalist engaged in the practice of comparative shopping in the arts, seeing that his readers get their money's worth; the critic is a philosopher, intent on establishing and maintaining the highest standards; the critic is as much an artist as those he reviews, though he works in a different medium, and much too rapidly for sober assessment; the critic normally is far closer to being a juror than a judge. While nothing really conclusive emerged from all the talk, it was as much fun as a college bull session. Through one participant's whimsical mind kept running a quotation from that great music critic, George Bernard Shaw: "Musical critiques, like sermons, tend not to improve; they are seldom discussed, and never contradicted."

THE POSITIVE accomplishment of the 1967 Music Critics association meeting at Tanglewood came in the discussion of the projected magazine, "Overview." Irving Lowens (Washington Evening Star) and Roger Stevens (Chairman, National Foundation on the Arts) led the discussion. The point was made that as of now there exists no publication which gives a clear idea of what music criticism is like in the United States, and specifically, what is the difference between a critic writing for a New York audience and one who writes for a Chicago, New Orleans, or San Francisco audience.

"Overview" should give a running account of how American critics rate against each other and against an ideal standard. Everything in each issue will be a reprint of already-published work, and the opinion expressed in the publication should be a valuable guide for the entire musical profession. An editorial team will spend nearly a year in planning the publication, with the first issue expected at the beginning of the 1968-69 season.

It is difficult for music criticism, far and away the most evanescent of journalistic endeavors, to attain any kind of permanence. "Overview" is expected to preserve some criticism that deserves preservation, and to set a standard for the more than 600 music critics in the United States against which their own work may be set. If we sometimes do not know where we are going, though we may know where and what we are, "Overview" may provide, or a least suggest, an answer.

LOWENS: Fromm Foundation Concerts

Continued From Page D-4

the years this service will help to clarify the central issue—how to get the public at large to be as curious, as expectant, as eager for a new opus from a living composer as were our grandfathers when a new work by Brahms was announced for performance."

Surely, it is also the music critic's job to help to clarify this central issue, for unless the issue is clarified, the state of music will never be really healthy.

The music critics got to hear (as well as three Boston orchestra concerts conducted by Leinsdorf and Steinberg, and a piano recital by John Browning) four of the seven concerts in the 1967 Festival of Contemporary American Music.

Reactions to the new music were, to put it mildly, not quite unanimous. The feature of the Aug. 9 concert was the world premiere of a "Concert Piece" for Syn-Ket and symphony orchestra commissioned especially for the occasion from the 32-year-old Pennsylvania composer, John C. Eaton, by the Fromm Foundation.

Eaton's work exemplified some of the problems faced by the professional listener as well as the professional performer. Eaton said, in his program note:

"This is to my knowledge the first piece which combines an instrument capable of performing live the materials of electronic music with a symphony orchestra. There is nothing pre-recorded; all the electronic music is being played at the moment; and my interpretation, or that of another Syn-Ket soloist, might be somewhat different on another occasion. In order to give the orchestra a richer sound—a sound somewhat more accommodating to the materials of the electronic music drawn from the Syn-[illegible] I have divided it in half [illegible] divided [illegible] quarter tone apart, though I daresay the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra of 1992 will find this as easy as the present one does the Bartok Concerto. Even peering, as one had to, through a somewhat foggy performance, it was clear that here was a piece with fresh and lively ideas about combining electronic and instrumental music, the microtonal orchestra being a good example, and full of verve and humor.

Shafer and Levine, also Ghent in his "Hex" (1966), used electronic sounds in more conventional ways, but their music, as well as that by the seven composers represented on an all-electronic concert, showed that the electronic sounds serve a great variety of compositional styles and purposes, and that to many composers they have become an altogether natural extension of music's timbral and rhetorical possibilities.

Most of the new music was serial, some of it too complex (obscure?) for me to put together on one hearing, some of it obvious. Very few pieces sounded mechanical, though not really heard by their composers. A few com- [illegible] ed, glad to be informed about some of what is happening, occasionally thoroughly engaged by this piece or that, also sometimes bored, cross, bewildered. It is also important to bear in mind that several works that seemed tiresome heard at a festival under saturation conditions would have appeared fresher,, and would have made its individual communication with more impact if heard under other conditions.

A word, finally, about performance, first to say that performance level was generally high, second to regret that even so there is never enough time to prepare everything as it should be prepared, and third, to commend particularly the achievement of a few persons, the always impressive conducting of Gunther Schuller, that of Lawrence Foster, the young assistant conductor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic, the remarkable playing by the violinist Paul Zukofsky, the outstanding sensitive work of the pianist Craig Sheppard, the contributions also of bassoonist Kazuyoshi Asano and soprano Phyllis Bryn-Julson.

ensemble and pre-recorded tape.

Shafer is one of Canada's brightest hopes for the future, and "Gita," a setting of a portion of the "Bhagavad Gita" in the original Sanscrit, shows why. It is an astonishing tour de force in which the chorus, utilizing the strange sounds of the unfamiliar tongue, is stretched to the very limits of expressivity. Of course, Shafer does not expect that his listeners will understand the individual words. What he attempts to do is to etch, in terms of pure sound, the feeling-tone of the text, which describes how one can attain serenity of spirit while avoiding the dangers of egoism and passion.

"Gita" succeeds magnificently in communicating its message with immediacy and eloquence, despite Shafer's wild tonal vocabulary, which ranges from direct quotations of a Heinrich Schuetz motet through savagely brutal intrusions by the brass to the taped sound of Rabindranath Tagore reading. The composer proved himself always master of his sonic materials, and to me, "Gita" was the high point of the Fromm festival.

Other Highlights

Between Eaton and Shafer [illegible] more many degrees of [illegible] brass formal gardens, was devoted to electronic music. Somehow, the taped sounds appeared much less formidable in the open air, and even the tots present listened to the strange sounds attentively and with keen appreciation. I found myself especially impressed by the humor of Kenneth Gaburo's "Lemon Drops" (1965) and "For Harry" (1966), by the strength of Bulent Arel's "Stereo Electronic Music No. 1" (1961), and by the liquid poetry of Luciano Berio's "Homaggio a Joyce" (1958).

All in all, I found the Tanglewood Festival of Contemporary American Music a mind-stretching, difficult, exhilarating experience. It is the kind of inundation in the sounds of today that all music critics should be subjected to periodically, and I hope that some way will be found to ensure the presence of at least some members of the craft at each future festival.

The Sunday Star
WASHINGTON, D. C.
CIR. 351,015

AUG 20 1967

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 537,050

AUG 20 1967

New England Newscltp

Electronics at Tanglewood

Through Fog Some Fresh, Lively Ideas

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

LENOX—Aug. 9-12, 13-15 were the dates for the now traditional festival within a festival, the Festival of Contemporary American Music sponsored at Tanglewood by the Fromm Music Foundation and the Berkshire Music Center.

Thirty-six composers were represented. There were first performances of works newly commissioned by the Fromm Foundation from Carlos Alsina, John Eaton, Jeffrey Levine and R. Murray Shafer, and first performances of other works by Brien Fennelly, Gerardo Gandini, Alcides Lanza, George Perle, Stanley Persky and Peter Phillips.

There were also works by Arel, Babbitt (3), Berio, Bernstein, Crumb, Davidovsky (2), Druckman, Finney, Gaburo (2), Ghent, Kraft, London, Malec, Mamlok, Martirano, Riegger, Schuller, Sessions, Shifrin, Silverman, Sollberger, Ussachevsky, Varese, Wen-Chung, Wolpe, and Wuorinen, a list that covers ground from classics like Riegger's Study in Sonority (1927), the Sessions Duo for violin and piano (1942), and Babbitt's Composition for Four Instruments (1947), to pieces as new as Babbitt's Sextet for violin and piano (1966) and Schuller's Triplum (1967).

Not surprisingly, the most assured music and that with the most to say, was by the "old" composers. The most impressive by far of the works receiving first performances was the Fifth String Quartet by George Perle, who is 52, teaches at Queens College, and who was on the Berkshire Music Center faculty all Summer.

It was unconventional, first, in its choice of a standard instrumental combination and in a kind of writing for that combination that showed no concern at all for showing how unlike their normal selves the instruments could be made to sound. Moreover, within the context of the festival, its harmonic language with its chromatically flowing, gently dissonant triads, was wildly unconventional as well. Such language is not of itself worn out. Perle's ear for such harmony is sensitive; he has a lively feeling for rhythm, an area in which he is a bit indebted to Carter; he is altogether unself-conscious; and the the Fifth Quartet was not only, in its paradoxical way, the most innovatory work of the festival, but one that had particular pleasure for being so personal and so new.

Mostly, though, this was a festival devoted to composers around 30. A few generalizations are perhaps possible about the 20 pieces by young composers that I heard for the first time here.

The composers prefer mixed, non-standard instrumentations. They write for the instruments skilfully, with knowledge of and fancies for extreme positions and special effects.

THE KANSAS CITY STAR
KANSAS CITY, MO.
D. 335,705 SUN. 392,378

AUG 20 1967

Music in Mid-America

A few random reflections on the 1967 meeting of the Music Critics Association . . . see below

By John Haskins
(The Star's Music Editor)

LENOX, MASS.—THE MUSIC CRITICS ASSOCIATION, having tried various formats for its annual meeting, settled this year for a tried-and true formula—go where the action is. 33 members of the association, representing a wide geographical distribution of metropolitan newspapers, gathered at Tanglewood on August 9 through 13 as guests of the Boston Symphony. There the action consisted, so far as their trade is concerned, of three concerts by the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf and guest conductor William Steinberg, and four concerts of the Fromm Foundation-sponsored Festival of Contemporary American Music.

When they were not listening to music, they listened to talk, their own and that of panels gathered together for their meeting. Roger Stevens, chairman of the National Foundation on the Arts, was one of the panelists; so was Paul Fromm, president of the Fromm Music Foundation, a great benefactor of contemporary American music who sponsors, among other things, a ten-day festival annually at Tanglewood; Erich Leinsdorf, musical director of the Boston Symphony (who introduced Roger Stevens as "the official culture of the United States"), also was a panelist, as were composers George Perle, Gunther Schuller and Roger Sessions, editor Lawrence K. Miller (Berkshire Eagle), and singer Phyllis Curtin.

THE PANELS DEALT with the state of music criticism (there was general agreement that music criticism is in a state); with the state of contemporary music (also in a state, according to the more conservative members of the profession); with the plans to establish "Overview," a new journal of critical opinion backed by a substantial grant-in-aid; and most stimulating of all, a free-for-all session presided over by the resident critic, Jay Rosenfeld (Berkshire Eagle).

Music critics, by the nature of their trade, tend to be an opinionated group, and they are seldom overcome with shyness when it comes to expressing opinion. Thus, in the final free-for-all session, considerable heat as well as some light was generated when discussion turned on the question of critical attitude. The standard positions were taken, and defended—the music critic is a journalist engaged in the practice of comparative shopping in the arts, seeing that his readers get their money's worth; the critic is a philosopher, intent on establishing and maintaining the highest standards; the critic is as much an artist as those he reviews, though he works in a different medium, and much too rapidly for sober assessment; the critic normally is far closer to being a juror than a judge. While nothing really conclusive emerged from all the talk, it was as much fun as a college bull session. Through one participant's whimsical mind kept running a quotation from that great music critic, George Bernard Shaw: "Musical critiques, like sermons, tend not to improve; they are seldom discussed, and never contradicted."

THE POSITIVE accomplishment of the 1967 Music Critics association meeting at Tanglewood came in the discussion of the projected magazine, "Overview." Irving Lowens (Washington Evening Star) and Roger Stevens (Chairman, National Foundation on the Arts) led the discussion. The point was made that as of now there exists no publication which gives a clear idea of what music criticism is like in the United States, and specifically, what is the difference between a critic writing for a New York audience and one who writes for a Chicago, New Orleans, or San Francisco audience.

"Overview" should give a running account of how American critics rate against each other and against an ideal standard. Everything in each issue will be a reprint of already-published work, and the opinion expressed in the publication should be a valuable guide for the entire musical profession. An editorial team will spend nearly a year in planning the publication, with the first issue expected at the beginning of the 1968-69 season.

It is difficult for music criticism, far and away the most evanescent of journalistic endeavors, to attain any kind of permanence. "Overview" is expected to preserve some criticism that deserves preservation, and to set a standard for the more than 600 music critics in the United States against which their own work may be set. If we sometimes do not know where we are going, though we may know where and what we are, "Overview" may provide, or a least suggest, an answer.

LOWENS: Fromm Foundation Concerts

Continued From Page D-4

the years this service will help to clarify the central issue — how to get the public at large to be as curious, as expectant, as eager for a new opus from a living composer as were our grandfathers when a new work by Brahms was announced for performance."

Surely, it is also the music critic's job to help to clarify this central issue, for unless the issue is clarified, the state of music will never be really healthy.

The music critics got to hear (as well as three Boston orchestra concerts conducted by Leinsdorf and Steinberg, and a piano recital by John Browning) four of the seven concerts in the 1967 Festival of Contemporary American Music.

Reactions to the new music were, to put it mildly, not quite unanimous. The feature of the Aug. 9 concert was the world premiere of a "Concert Piece" for Syn-Ket and symphony orchestra commissioned especially for the occasion from the 32-year-old Pennsylvania composer, John C. Eaton, by the Fromm Foundation.

Eaton's work exemplified some of the problems faced by the professional listener as well as the professional performer. Eaton said, in his program note:

"This is to my knowledge the first piece which combines an instrument capable of performing live the materials of electronic music with a symphony orchestra. There is nothing pre-recorded; all the electronic music is being played at the moment; and my interpretation, or that of another Syn-Ket soloist, might be somewhat different on another occasion. In order to give the orchestra a richer sound—a sound somewhat more accommodating to the materials of the electronic music drawn from the Syn-Ket—I have divided it in half and tuned the second section a quarter of a tone lower."

The Syn-Ket, by the way, is a synthetic tone generator invented by an Italian sound and electronics engineer, Paul Ketoff.

The Eaton work may perhaps be an important one—surely it is a pioneering one which deserves careful study. But the technical difficulty of preparing the performance was so horrendous that it is doubtful that what was heard could be considered in any way definitive. The audience's animosity and confusion were comprehensible, if not excusable.

Shafer's "Gita"

That such an unfortunate reaction to a new and difficult piece of music is not by any means inevitable was demonstrated by another Fromm Foundation commission which received its first performance on Aug. 10—R. Murray Shafer's "Gita" for chorus, brass ensemble and pre-recorded tape.

Shafer is one of Canada's brightest hopes for the future, and "Gita," a setting of a portion of the "Bhagavad Gita" in the original Sanscrit, shows why. It is an astonishing tour de force in which the chorus, utilizing the strange sounds of the unfamiliar tongue, is stretched to the very limits of expressivity. Of course, Shafer does not expect that his listeners will understand the individual words. What he attempts to do is to etch, in terms of pure sound, the feeling-tone of the text, which describes how one can attain serenity of spirit while avoiding the dangers of egoism and passion.

"Gita" succeeds magnificently in communicating its message with immediacy and eloquence, despite Shafer's wild tonal vocabulary, which ranges from direct quotations of a Heinrich Schuetz motet through savagely brutal intrusions by the brass to the taped sound of Rabindranath Tagore reading. The composer proved himself always master of his sonic materials, and to me, "Gita" was the high point of the Fromm festival.

Other Highlights

Between Eaton and Shafer there were many degrees of achievement and expertise. There was, during the opening concert, a fine performance of Gunther Schuller's "Triplum." This work, first heard on the same night that Schuller's unfortunate opera, "The Visitation," was receiving its American premiere at the hands of the Hamburg State Opera Company with the conductor on the podium, once again demonstrated its excellent quality.

On the same program as the Shafer, four absolutely lovely unaccompanied madrigals written in 1958 by Jacob Druckman were programmed. Their idiom was highly conservative, but Druckman's mastery of it was a thing of joy. It is interesting to note that in 1967, he is hard at work in the Columbia-Princeton Electronic Music Center.

The entire Aug. 12 concert, which was held outdoors in the formal gardens, was devoted to electronic music. Somehow, the taped sounds appeared much less formidable in the open air, and even the tots present listened to the strange sounds attentively and with keen appreciation. I found myself especially impressed by the humor of Kenneth Gaburo's "Lemon Drops" (1965) and "For Harry" (1966), by the strength of Bulent Arel's "Stereo Electronic Music No. 1" (1961), and by the liquid poetry of Luciano Berio's "Homaggio a Joyce" (1958).

All in all, I found the Tanglewood Festival of Contemporary American Music a mind-stretching, difficult, exhilarating experience. It is the kind of inundation in the sounds of today that all music critics should be subjected to periodically, and I hope that some way will be found to ensure the presence of at least some members of the craft at each future festival.

The Sunday Star
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D. 351,015

AUG 20 1967

THE KANSAS CITY STAR
KANSAS CITY, MO.
D. 335,705 SUN. 392,378

AUG 20 1967

Music in Mid-America

A few random reflections on the 1967 meeting of the Music Critics Association . . . see below

By John Haskins
(The Star's Music Editor)

LENOX, MASS.—THE MUSIC CRITICS ASSOCIATION, having tried various formats for its annual meeting, settled this year for a tried-and true formula—go where the action is. 33 members of the association, representing a wide geographical distribution of metropolitan newspapers, gathered at Tanglewood on August 9 through 13 as guests of the Boston Symphony. There the action consisted, so far as their trade is concerned, of three concerts by the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf and guest conductor William Steinberg, and four concerts of the Fromm Foundation-sponsored Festival of Contemporary American Music.

When they were not listening to music, they listened to talk, their own and that of panels gathered together for their meeting. Roger Stevens, chairman of the National Foundation on the Arts, was one of the panelists; so was Paul Fromm, president of the Fromm Music Foundation, a great benefactor of contemporary American music who sponsors, among other things, a ten-day festival annually at Tanglewood; Erich Leinsdorf, musical director of the Boston Symphony (who introduced Roger Stevens as "the official culture of the United States"), also was a panelist, as were composers George Perle, Gunther Schuller and Roger Sessions, editor Lawrence K. Miller (Berkshire Eagle), and singer Phyllis Curtin.

THE PANELS DEALT with the state of music criticism (there was general agreement that music criticism is in a state); with the state of contemporary music (also in a state, according to the more conservative members of the profession); with the plans to establish "Overview," a new journal of critical opinion backed by a substantial grant-in-aid; and most stimulating of all, a free-for-all session presided over by the resident critic, Jay Rosenfeld (Berkshire Eagle).

Music critics, by the nature of their trade, tend to be an opinionated group, and they are seldom overcome with shyness when it comes to expressing opinion. Thus, in the final free-for-all session, considerable heat as well as some light was generated when discussion turned on the question of critical attitude. The standard positions were taken, and defended—the music critic is a journalist engaged in the practice of comparative shopping in the arts, seeing that his readers get their money's worth; the critic is a philosopher, intent on establishing and maintaining the highest standards; the critic is as much an artist as those he reviews, though he works in a different medium, and much too rapidly for sober assessment; the critic normally is far closer to being a juror than a judge. While nothing really conclusive emerged from all the talk, it was as much fun as a college bull session. Through one participant's whimsical mind kept running a quotation from that great music critic, George Bernard Shaw: "Musical critiques, like sermons, tend not to improve; they are seldom discussed, and never contradicted."

THE POSITIVE accomplishment of the 1967 Music Critics association meeting at Tanglewood came in the discussion of the projected magazine, "Overview." Irving Lowens (Washington Evening Star) and Roger Stevens (Chairman, National Foundation on the Arts) led the discussion. The point was made that as of now there exists no publication which gives a clear idea of what music criticism is like in the United States, and specifically, what is the difference between a critic writing for a New York audience and one who writes for a Chicago, New Orleans, or San Francisco audience.

"Overview" should give a running account of how American critics rate against each other and against an ideal standard. Everything in each issue will be a reprint of already-published work, and the opinion expressed in the publication should be a valuable guide for the entire musical profession. An editorial team will spend nearly a year in planning the publication, with the first issue expected at the beginning of the 1968-69 season.

It is difficult for music criticism, far and away the most evanescent of journalistic endeavors, to attain any kind of permanence. "Overview" is expected to preserve some criticism that deserves preservation, and to set a standard for the more than 600 music critics in the United States against which their own work may be set. If we sometimes do not know where we are going, though we may know where and what we are, "Overview" may provide, or a least suggest, an answer.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 327,050

1967

New England Newspaper

STEINBERG

Continued from Page A-9

Sina in his "Auftrag" and Levine in "Chamber Setting No. II" produced textures that were evidence of sensibility and imaginativeness that went beyond just skill, and Fennelly in his Wind Quintet wrote passages that will give composers and bassoonists something new to think about.

Three of the four new Fromm pieces were partly electronic. Eaton wrote a Concert Piece for Syn-Ket and Orchestra, the Syn-Ket being a device that makes possible the actual and "live" (as opposed to tape-prerecorded) performance of electronic music possible. It is difficult to manage completely accurate intonation by twiddling the dials of the Syn-Ket; the orchestral part presented formidable problems also, the group being divided into halves tuned a quarter tone apart, though I daresay the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra of 1992 will find this as easy as the present one does the Bartok Concerto. Even peering, as one had to, through a somewhat foggy performance, it was clear that here was a piece with fresh and lively ideas about combining electronic and instrumental music, the microtonal orchestra being a good example, and full of verve and humor.

Shafer and Levine, also Ghent in his "Hex" (1966), used electronic sounds in more conventional ways, but their music, as well as that by the seven composers represented on an all-electronic concert, showed that the electronic sounds serve a great variety of compositional styles and purposes, and that to many composers they have become an altogether natural extension of music's timbral and rhetorical possibilities.

Most of the new music was serial, some of it too complex (obscure?) for me to put together on one hearing, some of it obvious. Very few pieces sounded mechanical, though not really heard by their composers. A few composers had ambitious and potentially interesting ideas for pieces unmatched by an ability to translate these ideas into appropriately interesting music.

Phillips and Lanza, both in their late 30s, were the only composers to use aleatory procedures; the latter's "Eidesis II" was the only work even to come slightly close to the Dada spirit that has been rather strongly represented at past festivals. There was virtually no concern with sight-gags, Phillips' "Music for Wind Quintet" being an exception with its direction to the clarinetist to conduct with his head in a parodistic manner, a surprising exception, too, in a piece otherwise so bland.

Program notes, often pretentious, full of gobbledygook, preoccupied with technical matters, reflected some lack of common sense and occasionally a certain contempt for the audience as well.

I was stimulated, interested, glad to be informed about some of what is happening, occasionally thoroughly engaged by this piece or that, also sometimes bored, cross, bewildered. It is also important to bear in mind that several works that seemed tiresome heard at a festival under saturation conditions would have appeared fresher, and would have made its individual communication with more impact if heard under other conditions.

A word, finally, about performance, first to say that performance level was generally high, second to regret that even so there is never enough time to prepare everything as it should be prepared, and third, to commend particularly the achievement of a few persons, the always impressive conducting of Gunther Schuller, that of Lawrence Foster, the young assistant conductor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic, the remarkable playing by the violinist Paul Zukofsky, the outstanding sensitive work of the pianist Craig Sheppard, the contributions also of bassoonist Kazuyoshi Asano and soprano Phyllis Bryn-Julson.

Newark Sunday News
NEWARK, N. J.
SUN. 427,240

AUG 20 1967

Squeal Big Element In Avant-Garde Work

By ALAN BRANIGAN
Staff Correspondent.

LENOX, Mass.—A great many activities have been under way at Tanglewood, the famous old Hawthorne-haunted estate where the Berkshire Music Festival is held each year. The chief attraction is, of course, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

A great deal of attention also was focussed last week on the Festival of Contemporary Music, a week-long celebration of what is new in the composition line. This second-line festival was held in the Theater-Concert Hall, a small modernistic auditorium designed by Eero Saarinnan, noted European architect, and built on a natural slope with a dirt floor.

During the course of the Music Critics' Conference, held concurrently at Tanglewood, this observer had a chance to hear several programs in this unusual and distinguished series. The music was conducted by Gunther Schuller and performed by a youthful orchestra taken chiefly from the Berkshire Music Center. Several choral works were presented under the direction of Iva Dee Hiatt. The Festival is sponsored by the Fromm Foundation, an organization devoted to expanding the appreciation of the new music.

Probably the most adventurous work presented was "Concert Piece for Syn-Ket and Orchestra," by John Eaton, a Pennsylvanian who attended Princeton and won the Prix de Rome three times. The "syn-ket," deivsed by an Italian electronic expert, Paul Ketoff, turned the forefront of the stage into a maze of wiring, loud speakers and a peculiar-looking switchboard. Eaton himself set at the controls during the performance.

Unlike the more common pre-recorded tape compositions, the Syn-ket music was performed right on the spot and therefore had something of a human element in its makeup.

Skillful Playing

What future audiences may make of Eaton's work is arguable. But it soon became evidence that here was a major work, with a new kind of voice and a strange and sometimes appealing sound. The electronic gadget whooped, blipped and squeled, somewhat in the style of the old super-het radios; but there was also present a human quality. The most amazing part of the composition was the manner in which the marvelously trained orchestra and the squeals combined.

In many ways Eaton's music was harsh, discordant and, to our ears, at least, formless. But it was too complex a work to be evaluated completely at one hearing. Let's just say it was a shocker and something that one might look forward to hearing again.

The remainder of the program was in fairly traditional forms, but mainly dissonant and jarring in expression. A pure delight was Leonard Bernstein's "Serenade" for violin solo, strings, percussion and harp. Joseph Silverstein, the symphony concertmaster, came over to play the solo and sang out the involved passages with great beauty of tone. Bernstein's inspiration for the work was Plato's "Republic" but the connection eluded us.

Ross Lee Finney was present to receive applause after his "Concerto for Percussion and Orchestra" ended. This is a pleasant work with drums, gongs and other noise-makers stacked up at each of the orchestra's four corners. Some of the sonorities were overwhelming.

The evening came to a close with "Triplum," composed by Schuller, who had been leading the orchestra with notable success all evening. The work — the title merely means three parts—is a notably interesting experiment in the different textures offered by a modern orchestra. It is not melodic or rhythmic in the ordinary sense of the word; instead, it deals in figurations and time sequences.

Works for Voice

The next evening's choral works were in every way more immediately likeable, although equally polyrhythmic, dissonant and disjointed. Edwin London's "A Washington Miscellany" amazed everyone by being frankly humorous. Jacob Druckman's "Madrigals" were almost conventional in harmony. Murray Schafter's "Gita" made its world premiere, sung in Sanskrit and accompanied by exotic instrumental dress.

The evening's most appealing piece, oddly enough, was "Study in Sonority," a work for ten violins by the late Wallingford Riegger, an early modern composer whose harmonic experiments were far ahead of his time. The bright, spatial work, endlessly inventive in chord structure, was handsome done and deserved the ovation it received.

GUNTHER SCHULLER

Chicago Tribune
SUNDAY, AUGUST 20, 1967

SAW B.S.O.

AMUSEMENTS
THEATER • MUSIC • MOVIES • EDUCATION

Tanglewood's New Music Festival Offers Variety

By Thomas Willis

TANGLEWOOD, NEAR LENOX, MASS. — A visitor walking by the glassed-in green room which adjoins the entrance gate of the Boston Symphony orchestra's summer home here could be pardoned for a double take. One of the events which brought him to the Berkshires was the Fromm Foundation's Festival of Contemporary American Music, but the composition which the gentleman at the piano was playing was "The Palms."

In case the esoteric regions of Protestant church music have eluded you, "The Palms" in an adaptation of "Le Rameaux" by Jean-Baptiste Faure. Mr. Faure, it must be added, was no relation to his namesake, Gabriel, whose art songs are of a different class. "The Palms" author was a turn-of-the-century operatic baritone, and his music sounds like it. Neither the sentiment nor the soupy chords in the accompaniment were what one expected to find in such a setting.

As it turned out, the man at the piano was a visitor, too, and his performance probably was gratification of the old "They laughed when I sat down to play . . ." desire. The festival itself was of a different order.

Paul Fromm, the Chicago wine importer, has been collaborating with the Berkshire Music center for these presentations of new music since 1963. The week-long confrontation of composer, performer, and audience has offered a variety of experience and composition styles. This year's programs held first performances and Fromm commissions by R. Murray Shafer, Jeffrey Levine, John Eaton, and Carlos Roque Alsina.

• • •

Other composers represented on the seven concerts were Ross Lee Finney, Leonard Bernstein [the same Serenade played by James Buswell at Ravinia two weeks ago], Gunther Schuller, Seymour Shifrin, Wallingford Riegger, Emmanuel Ghent, Edwin London, Jacob Druckman, Bulent Arel, Ivo Malec, Milton Babbitt, Luciano Berio, Mario Davidovsky, Vladimir Ussachevsky, George Crumb, Peter Phillips, William Kraft, Stanley Persky, Ursula Mamlok, Milton Babbitt, Alcides Lanza, George Perle, Salvatore Martirano, Gerardo Gandini, Brian Fennelly, Roger Sessions, Stanley Silverman, Chou Wen-Chung, Harvey Sollberger, Charles Wuorinen, Stefan Wolpe, and Edgard Varese. The last named was represented by the first performance of an adaptation by Mr. Schuller of "Nocturnal," a 1961 composition based on a text from Anais Nin's "House of Incest" and never finished.

• • •

The length of the list is a worthwhile reminder of the amount of music being composed in this country today. Far from being a wasteland or a stepchild of Europe, America shows every sign of developing a vigorous new voice of her own in the musical Babel. The languages spoken may be strange to ears hardened by systems and scales, but the force and skill of some of the new men is impressive.

• • •

Three of the new works seem especially worthwhile as indicators of the direction things are going.

"Hex," by Emmanuel Ghent, is scored for a dozen instruments and three tape channels of electronic sound. The instruments function as independent entities and the solo trumpet plays a key role. There is no conductor, but all the performers are linked to the tape by headphones, and a special channel, unheard by the audience, gives them synchronizing signals and other instructions. The resulting independence of sound from visual cuing lent an added dimension of surprise; for much of its length, the work managed to sound improvised and highly structured at the same time.

• • •

John Eaton's Concert Piece for Syn-Ket and Symphony Orchestra also featured an electronic performer. In this case, it was a machine whose console resembled a spaceman's, complete with flashing lights, knobs, and sliding switches. The Syn-Ket, invented by Paul Ketoff, sounds like the child of a theremin and a mocking bird. Placed in a fabric of microtones—antiphonal orchestras tuned a quarter tone apart—it created some interesting combinations of feedback and regenerative trills, cheeps, and cycles. Much of the time, the composer at the console appeared to be improvising, and it was obvious that the new machine had a touch-and-go temperament. Given time, it

[Continued on page 10]

92

GRANTS AND AWARDS

HAMILTON, N. Y.
MID-YORK WEEKLY
W. 3,000

MAY 11 1967

Hamilton Cellist Wins Tanglewood Scholarship

MARY ANN ELDER

HAMILTON — Mary Ann Elder, a 16 year old Junior at Hamilton Central School, and a cellist in the high school orchestra and the Colgate Chamber Orchestra, placed first among twenty outstanding high school instrumentalists in auditions at Munson-Williams-Proctor Institute in Utica on Saturday, May 6. Two music scholarships were offered the winners, one is sponsored by the Boston University, the Boston Symphony, and the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass. and the other by the Musicians' Union of the AFL-CIO for its "Congress of Strings" at Saratoga.

Mary Ann chose the Tanglewood program, which will bring together sixty-five students from throughout the United States for eight weeks of intensive study of their instruments, symphony orchestra, chamber music, and music theory.

Participants at Tanglewood will attend rehearsals and all concerts of the Boston Symphony and related Chamber Music programs presented at the Berkshire Music Center during the eight - week program. Faculty cellist will be Leslie Parnas, a Casals Festivel winner.

Mary Ann began her study of cello with Lynn Waas and continued it with Annette Hadley before taking lessons from Felix Magandanz in Utica. For the past two years she has worked under Frederick Miller of the Syracuse University School of Music faculty, a member of the Krasner String Quartet.

She has twice been selected to attend string institutes sponsored by the Budapest Quartet at Buffalo.

As a Freshman, she was first stand cellist in the Utica area all-state orchestra; the following year, first cellist in the Binghamton area all-state orchestra. This past fall, she was first cellist in the Syracuse area all-state orchestra.

CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL
D. 4,000

MAY 9 1967

Anne Graff Granted Fellowship To Berkshire Music Center

Ann Graff, who is a t present a Creative Associate in Buffalo in the Center for the Performing Arts, under Lukas Foss, where she is Contralto soloist (with performances in Buffalo and at Carnegie Hall in New York City) has been awarded a full Fellowship to the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

This is the Berkshire Music Center established by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Erich Leinsdorf has been Director of the Center since 1963. Established in 1934, the Berkshire Festiva now presents, during the summer season, 24 week-end performances by the Boston Symphony orchestra and by the Chamber Players and guest artists. Among the members of its advisory committee are Leonard Bernstein, Isaac Stern, Victor Babin, Nino Pirrotta, and other notables. Now in its third year, the Fellowship program will be expanded to give many musicians an opportunity to participate in many different performing groups. The singers in the Fellowship program will perform in chamber ensembles, as well as performing solo music for the Baroque and Contemporary music programs.

In addition, Anne formerly of the Vosenkill Road, Catskill, and well known in area musical circles, will also be presented in a solo program with Chamber orchestra, the date of which will be sent to the paper as soon as it is scheduled. She will be at Tanglewood from June 25 to August 20th.

SUNDAY HERALD
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 280,100

MAY 7 1967 New England Newsclip

BU, Berkshire Offer Joint Piano Course

Boston University and the Berkshire Music Center are offering an intensive four-week course for advanced pianists and teachers at Tanglewood in western Massachusetts.

Under the direction of Boston University professor Bela Boszormenyi-Nagy, the course will emphasize various aspects of public performance and effective projection. Each student, in addition to a seminar, will receive master class instruction

The course will extend from June 25 to July 22. Further information may be obtained from Dr. Wilbur D. Fullbright, chairman, Division of Music, Boston University, 855 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, Mass., 02215.

TRIBUNE-ADVOCATE
SANFORD, MAINE
WEEKLY CIRC. 6,700

JUN 22 1967 New England Newsclip

Towle Family Members "In The News" This Week

Three members of the family of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Towle of 6 Merrill street, Springvale, their sons and son-in-law, are "in the news" this week.

Their son Jon will attend a music institute at Tanglewood, Mass.; their other son Charles has received a Master's degree from Middlebury, Vt., College; and their son-in-law, Dr. Bruce D. McCombe, is in Copenhagen, Denmark, attending a NATO Summer Advance Institute.

Creteau's Studio
JON H. TOWLE

Music Institute

Jon H. Towle will leave Sunday to attend a two-week seminar at The Tanglewood Institute, Berkshire Music Center, located near Lennox and Stockbridge in the Berkshire Hills of Massachusetts.

The seminar offers an overall program for musical laymen, teachers, students, and non-performing musicians who wish to broaden their musical horizons. Those attending will attend classes and lectures as well as participate in informal chamber music.

A junior at Sanford High School, Jon studied the baritone sax for two years with Everett Firth and has studied flute with Robert Dubois for four years. He is a member of the Sanford High Band, and was a member of the 1967 All State orchestra.

Awarded MS

Charles H. Towle, Jr. received an MS degree in biology at Middlebury College, Middlebury, Vt., at graduation exercises June 12.

Mr. Towle graduated from Sanford High School in 1957 and from Bowdoin College in 1967 with an AB degree in biology. He has been accepted by the University of New Hampshire for study leading to a PhD degree in zoology.

He will be employed this summer in the laboratory of the Great Northern Paper Company in Millinocket where he will be working on pollution.

Mr. Towle is married to the former Judy Waters of Stamford, Conn., a graduate of Oberlin College Conservatory of Music, Oberlin, Ohio.

NATO Institute

Dr. Bruce D. McCombe, son of Mr. and Mrs. George W. McCombe, 10 Pearl street, left by plane from Washington, D. C., Monday for Copenhagen, Denmark.

Dr. McCombe, a physicist at the U. S. Naval Research Laboratory in Washington, D. C., will attend a NATO Summer Advance Institute on tunneling properties in solids.

He is a graduate of Sanford High School, received a BA degree from Bowdoin College in 1960, and a PhD in physics from Brown University, Providence, R. I., in 1966. He is a member of Phi Beta Kappa, Sigma Xi, and The American Physical Society.

Dr. McCombe is married to the former Susan Towle of Springvale. They have a two-year old son, C. Scott McCombe.

JOURNAL
HINGHAM, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 2,400

JUN 22 1967 New England Newsclip

Associate Fellow

Larry Wolfe, son of Mr. and Mrs. Evan L. Wolfe of 10 Bay View Ave., and a member of the Class of 1966 at the Hingham High School, has been named an Associate Fellow of the Boston Symphony Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

The winner of the Wallis Lee Chipman Music Prize at last year's graduation, Larry has recently completed his freshman year at Boston University School of Fine and Applied Arts where he is a music major.

Concurrently, he has been performing with the Boston Opera, Boston Ballet and Boston Pops Orchestras.

During his high school days, Larry received valuable training under Myron Thomas, Director of Music.

READING, PA.
EAGLE
D. 49,500 S. 77,000

JUN 11 1967

Wyomissing Institute Awards Scholarships

The Wyomissing Institute of Fine Arts has announced the recipients of special scholarship awards.

Barbara Cernobyl, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Cernobyl, 229 Reading Ave., West Reading, has been named to receive the Emily Hiester Harden Scholarship for the Tanglewood Institute of the Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass.

The music center is under the sponsorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Miss Cernobyl is a senior at West Reading High School, and is a student in voice, studying with Fritz Krueger, voice instructor at the institute. She has sung in county, Eastern District and regional choruses, has done solo work in local churches and community programs, is a member of the Reading Choral Society, and served as president of the Junior Music Club of Reading.

Miss Cernobyl attended the West Chester State College High School Summer Workshop in 1965 and returned on a scholarship in 1966. She was a semi-finalist in the Drexel Institute of Technology music award competition, and attended the Fred Waring Choral Workshop. She has enrolled at West Chester State College where she will major in music education.

The Emily Hiester Harden Scholarship will provide five weeks of study at the Berkshire Music Center, where Miss Cernobyl will be enrolled in the voice seminar. The scholarship is an award made annually by Mrs. Bruce Harden, a former members of the faculty of the Wyomissing Institute of Fine Arts and now a resident of Hilo, Hawaii.

Patrick Sensenig, son of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Sensenig, 410 Walnut St., Denver, will attend the Berkshire Music Center on a scholarship awarded by several members of the board of directors of the Wyomissing Institute. He will be enrolled as an auditor in the voice seminar for a two-week period. Sensenig is a senior at Cocalico High School, and is a voice student with Helen Buchanan Hitner at the Wyomissing Institue of Fine Arts. He has sung in Lancaster County, Eastern District and regional state choruses, and has done solo work in school, community and institute programs.

Jean Dunkleberger, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Dunkleberger, 321 Spruce St., has been named the recipient of the award presented each year by the music division of the Woman's Club of Reading to a student at the institute who has done outstanding work in a musical field. Miss Dunkleberger is a ninth grade pupil at Southwest Junior High School and is a piano student with Ann Hasbrouck at the Wyomissing Institute.

Miss Dunkleberger is accompanist for the All-City Chorus and for the Southwest Junior High School Chorus. She has done solo work in all the string concerts presented at the school and has performed in several community programs. She also was given two musical awards at Southwest Junior High School this spring.

BARBARA CERNOBYL

PATRICK SENSENIG

JEAN DUNKLEBERGER

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Tuesday, June 20, 1967

Miss Wagner Wins Study Grant at Tanglewood

Ellen Wagner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Wagner of 49 Terry Ave., has been accepted as a scholarship student to attend the full eight weeks session of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

* * *

A violinist and a pupil of Earl Hummel for the past year, Miss Wagner is also co-valedictorian of the Guilderland High School 1967 class and last year was a member of the Schenectady Symphony Orchestra. She also was a finalist in the Anthony Stefan Award competition and was one of three students at the Guilderland school who were National Merit scholarship finalists.

At Tanglewood and later in the year as a scholarship student at the School of Fine Arts of Boston University she will study with Roman Totenberg. Prior to studying with Earle Hummel she had studied with his father, the late Ford Hummel in Albany. Miss Wagner will begin her study at the Berkshire Music Center next Monday.

At 16, Miss Wagner is the oldest of six children of whom five play musical instruments. A brother, Glenn Wagner, a 'cello pupil of Arthur Catricala, plays with the Northeastern New York Student Orchestra under Edgar Curtis. Another brother, Eris, 13, also studies violin with Hummel and Karen, age 10, is a beginning violin pupil. One youngster plays the French horn.

* * *

Both parents are active in the arts with the father serving as supervisor of music for the Guilderland schools and serving as choir director at the First English Lutheran Church and Mrs. Wagner singing both in her husband's choir and with the Octavo Singers and making sketches in India ink. Some of Mrs. Wagner's India ink sketches have been accepted for the August exhibit at the Mechanics Exchange Savings Bank of Stuyvesant Plaza.

ELLEN WAGNER
Guilderland Violinist

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ROME SENTINEL
Tuesday, June 20, 1967

STUDENT MUSICIAN — H. Thomas Lloyd, right, ninth grader at Strough Junior High School, is congratulated by his music teacher, Samuel A. Mood, upon his acceptance for the summer program at the Berkshire Music Center.

Roman Among Select Music Center Group

H. Thomas Lloyd, 15-year-old son of Dr. and Mrs. Harold Lloyd, 414 Ridgewood Drive, has been selected as one of four bassoon players in the United States to attend the program at the Berkshire (Mass.) Music Center, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, from June 30 through Aug. 19.

A ninth grader at Strough Junior High next year, he will study with members of the orchestra in an intensive program geared to train young professionals for major symphony orchestra work.

This was announced today by Robert Pecci, Central New York representative for the Boston University summer program for high school students. Selection was based on auditions.

Lloyd, who received a scholarship to aid in his studies, is the student of Samuel A. Mood, woodwind teacher with the Rome Public School System.

Pecci said six other instrumentalists from New York State were selected for the Berkshire program. The Rome youth will perform in a orchestra of 56 stutions from throughout the United States.

WEST ROXBURY TRANSCRIPT
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 5,100

JUN 28 1967 New England Newsclip

Michael St. George Is Awarded Drama Scholarship To Tanglewood

An enviable award, a scholarship to study at the Berkshire Arts Center in Tanglewood, has been won by Michael W. St. George, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward St. George of 10 Savin street, Dedham.

The announcement of the scholarship award was made by Theodore Kazanoff, drama professor at Boston University School of Fine and Applied Arts.

St. George is a 1965 graduate of Catholic Memorial High School in West Roxbury and has just completed his sophomore year at BU's School of Fine Arts, majoring in drama

The talented young actor has appeared in comedy, heavy drama to musicals and his singing roles have taken in opera, jazz and rock n' roll. This year he has appeared in four major productions, "The Devil's Disciple," "The Mad Woman of Chalot," Richard III, and the musical "Salad Days." Also he appeared in the Little Theater at BU in numerous one act plays including "1000 Clowns", "The Father", "Tenderloin", "Appollo of Bellac."

He has appeared on TV and will be seen on Channel 2 on June 22 and 29 at 9 p.m. on the program "What's Happening Mr. Silver?"

After four weeks at Tanglewood St. George will join the Spot Players of New Hampshire in summer stock. Plays scheduled for the summer season include the musicals "Carin", "Carnival", "A Fnuny Thing Happened to Me on the Way to the Forum", the melodrama, "The Drunkard" and others.

SUBURBAN NEWS
SHELTON, CONN.
WEEKLY CIRC. 3,500

JUN 22 1967 New England Newsclip

MR. ALAN GRYZB, son of Mr. and Mrs. Matthew Frank Gryzb of 19 Monroe Street, Shelton, received a Master of Music degree in Bassoon from the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston

Mr. Gryzb received his Bachelor of Music degree from the Boston Conservatory. While at the New England Conservatory, he studied bassoon with Mr. Sherman Walt, played with the New Event Ensemble and was a part of the Graduate Quintet. He will be playing at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood this summer.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

VESTAL NEWS
Thursday, June 8, 1967

Keith McClelland, son of Mr. and Mrs. F. McClelland of 2501 Owego Rd., Ross Corners, will study at Tanglewood, Mass. this summer as an associate fellow.

This Fellowship entitles Keith to a summer of free tuition and dormitory living. The competition for such fellowships is national in scope.

At Tanglewood, Keith will study chamber music in addition to studying the bassoon with the principal bassoonist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Sherman Walt. Keith will also participate in the Berkshire Festival and Orchestra.

During the year, Keith attends the Eastman School of Music where he is majoring in music education and applied music. He is a graduate of Vestal Central High School.

94

The American-Statesman
AUSTIN, TEXAS
SAT. & SUN. 65,496

JUL 9 1967

Violist Lee Kull Awarded Fellowship to Tanglewood

Lee Kull, a former music student at the University of Texas, has been awarded a fellowship in viola to the Tanglewood Institute at Lenox, Mass., this summer.

At this widely famed summer music camp, operated by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Austinite will study and also play with the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra.

One of the Berkshire orchestra's concerts will be televised in August.

Kull started his musical training in the UT Junior String Project while he was still in public school here. He later studied in the UT music department and was part of the University's nationally acclaimed Viola Sextet.

He is now a candidate for a master of music degree in applied viola at the University of Houston.

His parents are Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Kull, 4107 Wildwood Road, Austin.

UT-EX LEE KULL
. . .awarded fellowship

TIMES (e)
HARTFORD, CONN.
CIRC. 133,800

JUL 10 1967
New England Newsclip

Pianist Academy Concert Feature

WOODSTOCK — The second concert of the 1967 Woodstock Academy Music Festival will feature pianist Robert Guralnik, according to Thomas J. N. Juko, director.

The concert will be in the auditorium of the Bowen Building on the Academy campus and will begin at 8:00 Wednesday.

Guralnik has made five European tours and was praised by performances.

Juko said Guralnik's program for Wednesday's performance will be the one he is planning to play at his October recital in Carneige Hall in New York.

Three concerts remain on the 1967 Music Festival schedule and include the new Marlboro Chamber Players July 19 and Aug. 2 and pianist Richard Goode, who recently returned from a tour of Europe as featured piano soloist with the Boston Symphony, July 26.

Juko said that although the concert series was to be limited to subscription members, tickets for single concerts are being made available at the door one-half hour before each performance.

CITIZEN (E)
WINSTED, CONN.
CIRC. 4000

JUL 29 1967
New England Newsclip

Miss Canfield At Tanglewood

Miss Agatha S. Canfield, former Canaan resident, arrived in the States early in July and is taking a six-weeks course in music at Tanglewood, having been awarded a scholarship. Miss Canfield, who makes her home in St. Thomas in the Virgin Islands, had been awarded a scholarship to study at the Berkshire Music Center, at Tanglewood, three years ago, but then was unable to accept due to other commitments.

047

Miss Canfield attended Canaan schools and later studied music, worked in Pilgrim Congregational church with the young people's choir. In St. Thomas she has been teaching music at the Lutheran School in Charlotte Amalie, the capital of St. Thomas, and helped form the first glee club at the Charlotte Amalie High school, staging its first musical productions.

GARDEN CITY, N. Y.
NEWS
W. 5,500

JUL 2 1967

TANGLEWOOD FELLOWSHIP GOES TO MISS WOODARD

Miss Susan Woodard of 3 Seabury Rd. is studying this summer at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood, Mass., on a fellowship — one of four awarded in piano by audition throughout the United States. The eight-week session will include piano studies directed by John Browning and Claude Frank with emphasis upon chamber music. There will be participation, also, in chorus work.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

GARDEN CITY NEWS
Thursday, July 20, 1967

047

TANGLEWOOD FELLOWSHIP GOES TO MISS WOODARD

Miss Susan Woodard of 3 Seabury Rd. is studying this summer at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood, Mass., on a fellowship — one of four awarded in piano by audition throughout the United States. The eight-week session will include piano studies directed by John Browning and Claude Frank with emphasis upon chamber music. There will be participation, also, in chorus work.

ESCANABA, MICH.
PRESS
D. 10,000

JUL 17 1967

Alan Bush

Rose Nepper's Grandson Picked For Music Study

Alan Bush, 16, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Bush, 1116 Pocohontas Drive, Madison, Wis., and grandson of Rose Nepper of Isabella has been selected to attend the Boston university summer music program for high school students. He was one of 50 from across the nation selected.

A junior at Monona Grove High School, he will study percussion and attend rehearsals and concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra at the Berkshire Music Center.

His music instructor in high school is Doster Dehaven. He also studies privately with Joe Rasmussen. His mother is the former Myrtle Morrison of Isabella.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
BAY NEWS
W. 14,500

JUL 1 1967

Youthful Cellist, 16, To Play Tanglewood

Timothy Scott, young Brooklyn cellist, left this week for Tanglewood where he will participate in a special summer program for young musicians directed by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Scott, 16, studies the cello with Maurice Eisenberg at the Juilliard School of Music and is a student at the High School of Music and Art. He participated most recently in the annual String Seminar conducted by the Budapest String Quartet at the University of the State of New York in Buffalo.

The Tanglewood program was launched last year as a joint venture of Boston University and the Berkshire Music Center

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

Albany Knickerbocker News
Monday, July 3, 1967

047

2 at Berkshire To Get Grants

The ABC Radio Network has announced the second annual presentation of two $500 fellowships for aspiring musicians to study at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. The fellowship program, established last year is part of the American Broadcasting Company, Inc.'s continuing efforts to encourage and develop young writing, performing, journalistic and administrative talent in the arts and communications.

Robert R. Pauley, President of the ABC Radio Network will present the fellowships to two Berkshire students at Tanglewood, the home of the music center on July 12. The student recipients will be selected by the Berkshire Music Center on Thursday.

CAPE COD
STANDARD TIMES (e)
HYANNIS, MASS.
CIRC. 21,300

JUL 27 1967
New England Newsclip

Expo 67 Soloist Sets Cape-tip Performance

PROVINCETOWN — The distinguished American pianist, Earl Wild, will perform tomorrow in the opening concert of the Provincetown Music Festival at Town Hall.

Mr. Wild has been selected to play with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Expo 67 in conjunction with the celebration of Massachusetts Day there. At Expo, Mr. Wild will be heard in the Tschaikovsky "Piano Concerto No. 1." Cape Cod audiences will hear him play the "Piano Concerto No. 2 in F monor" by Frederic Chipin.

Mr. Wild also will perform Aug. 8 at the Tanglewood Music Festival in a Gershwin program.

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WEEKLY AMUSEMENTS

JUL 5 1967
New England Newsclip

The second annual presentation of two $500 fellowships for aspiring musicians to study at the Berkshire Music Center was made by the ABC Radio Network. The fellowship program, established last year, is part of ABC's efforts to encourage young writing, performing, journalistic and administrative talent in the arts and communications.

ABC Radio Network prexy Bob Pauley will present the fellowships to two Berkshire students at Tanglewood, the home of the music center on Wednesday (12). The student recipients will be selected by the Berkshire Music Center tomorrow (Thurs.).

94

The American-Statesman
AUSTIN, TEXAS
SAT. & SUN. 65,496

JUL 9 1967

Violist Lee Kull Awarded Fellowship to Tanglewood

Lee Kull, a former music student at the University of Texas, has been awarded a fellowship in viola to the Tanglewood Institute at Lenox, Mass., this summer.

At this widely famed summer music camp, operated by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Austinite will study and also play with the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra.

One of the Berkshire orchestra's concerts will be televised in August.

Kull started his musical training in the UT Junior String Project while he was still in public school here. He later studied in the UT music department and was part of the University's nationally acclaimed Viola Sextet.

He is now a candidate for a master of music degree in applied viola at the University of Houston.

His parents are Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Kull, 4107 Wildwood Road, Austin.

UT-EX LEE KULL
. . .awarded fellowship

TIMES (e)
HARTFORD, CONN.
CIRC. 133,800

JUL 10 1967
New England Newsclip

Pianist Academy Concert Feature

WOODSTOCK — The second concert of the 1967 Woodstock Academy Music Festival will feature pianist Robert Guralnik, according to Thomas J. N. Juko, director.

The concert will be in the auditorium of the Bowen Building on the Academy campus and will begin at 8:30 Wednesday.

Guralnik has made five European tours and was praised by performances.

Juko said Guralnik's program for Wednesday's performance will be the one he is planning to play at his October recital in Carneige Hall in New York.

Three concerts remain on the 1967 Music Festival schedule and include the new Marlboro Chamber Players July 19 and Aug. 2 and pianist Richard Goode, who recently returned from a tour of Europe as featured piano soloist with the Boston Symphony, July 26.

Juko said that although the concert series was to be limited to subscription members, tickets for single concerts are being made available at the door one-half hour before each performance.

CITIZEN (E)
WINSTED, CONN.
CIRC. 5000

JUL 29 1967
New England Newsclip

Miss Canfield At Tanglewood

Miss Agatha S. Canfield, former Canaan resident, arrived in the States early in July and is taking a six-weeks course in music at Tanglewood, having been awarded a scholarship. Miss Canfield, who makes her home in St. Thomas in the Virgin Islands, had been awarded a scholarship to study at the Berkshire Music Center, at Tanglewood, three years ago, but then was unable to accept due to other commitments.

Miss Canfield attended Canaan schools and later studied music, worked in Pilgrim Congregational church with the young people's choir. In St. Thomas she has been teaching music at the Lutheran School in Charlotte Amalie, the capital of St. Thomas, and helped form the first glee club at the Charlotte Amalie High school, staging its first musical productions.

GARDEN CITY, N. Y.
NEWS
W. 5,500

JUL 2 1967

TANGLEWOOD FELLOWSHIP GOES TO MISS WOODARD

Miss Susan Woodard of 3 Seabury Rd. is studying this summer at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood, Mass., on a fellowship — one of four awarded in piano by audition throughout the United States. The eight-week session will include piano studies directed by John Browning and Claude Frank with emphasis upon chamber music. There will be participation, also, in chorus work.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

GARDEN CITY NEWS
Thursday, July 20, 1967

TANGLEWOOD FELLOWSHIP GOES TO MISS WOODARD

Miss Susan Woodard of 3 Seabury Rd. is studying this summer at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood, Mass., on a fellowship — one of four awarded in piano by audition throughout the United States. The eight-week session will include piano studies directed by John Browning and Claude Frank with emphasis upon chamber music. There will be participation, also, in chorus work.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
DAY NEWS
W. 14,500

JUL 1 1967

Youthful Cellist, 16, To Play Tanglewood

Timothy Scott, young Brooklyn cellist, left this week for Tanglewood where he will participate in a special summer program for young musicians directed by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Scott, 16, studies the cello with Maurice Eisenberg at the Juilliard School of Music and is a student at the High School of Music and Art. He participated most recently in the annual String Seminar conducted by the Budapest String Quartet at the University of the State of New York in Buffalo.

The Tanglewood program was launched last year as a joint venture of Boston University and the Berkshire Music Center

ESCANABA, MICH.
PRESS
D. 10,000

JUL 17 1967

Alan Bush

Rose Nepper's Grandson Picked For Music Study

Alan Bush, 16, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Bush, 1116 Pocohontas Drive, Madison, Wis., and grandson of Rose Nepper of Isabella has been selected to attend the Boston university summer music program for high school students. He was one of 50 from across the nation selected.

A junior at Monona Grove High School, he will study percussion and attend rehearsals and concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra at the Berkshire Music Center.

His music instructor in high school is Doster Dehaven. He also studies privately with Joe Rasmussen. His mother is the former Myrtle Morrison of Isabella.

CAPE COD
STANDARD TIMES (e)
HYANNIS, MASS.
CIRC. 21,300

JUL 27 1967
New England Newsclip

Expo 67 Soloist Sets Cape-tip Performance

PROVINCETOWN — The distinguished American pianist, Earl Wild, will perform tomorrow in the opening concert of the Provincetown Music Festival at Town Hall.

Mr. Wild has been selected to play with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Expo 67 in conjunction with the celebration of Massachusetts Day there. At Expo, Mr. Wild will be heard in the Tschaikovsky "Piano Concerto No. 1." Cape Cod audiences will hear him play the "Piano Concerto No. 2 in F monor" by Frederic Chipin.

Mr. Wild also will perform Aug. 8 at the Tanglewood Music Festival in a Gershwin program.

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WEEKLY AMUSEMENTS

JUL 5 1967
New England Newsclip

The second annual presentation of two $500 fellowships for aspiring musicians to study at the Berkshire Music Center was made by the ABC Radio Network. The fellowship program, established last year, is part of ABC's efforts to encourage young writing, performing, journalistic and administrative talent in the arts and communications.

ABC Radio Network prexy Bob Pauley will present the fellowships to two Berkshire students at Tanglewood, the home of the music center on Wednesday (12). The student recipients will be selected by the Berkshire Music Center tomorrow (Thurs.).

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

Albany Knickerbocker News
Monday, July 3, 1967

2 at Berkshire To Get Grants

The ABC Radio Network has announced the second annual presentation of two $500 fellowships for aspiring musicians to study at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. The fellowship program, established last year is part of the American Broadcasting Company, Inc.'s continuing efforts to encourage and develop young writing, performing, journalistic and administrative talent in the arts and communications.

Robert R. Pauley, President of the ABC Radio Network will present the fellowships to two Berkshire students at Tanglewood, the home of the music center on July 12. The student recipients will be selected by the Berkshire Music Center on Thursday.

HAVRE DE GRACE, MD.
RECORD
W 4 707

AUG 17 1967

Fellowship To Maurice Bonney

Maurice Bonney, music director and conductor of the Albuquerque Symphony Orchestra, has received the Koussevitzky Memorial conducting fellowship for 1967. Mr. Bonney is the son of Mr. M. Harold Bonney, this city.

The musical honor was announced at Tanglewood, summer home of the Bostor Symphony and Berkshire Music Festival. This award, given in the name of the conductor who led the Boston Symphony for 25 years, was presented Mr. Bonney in addition to the regular fellowship he holds while a resident conductor at Tanglewood this summer. The prize is donated by the Winifred O. Callwell Foundation of Canterbury, England.

Mr. Bonney will return to Albuquerque in September to prepare for the opening of the orchestra musical season there. In past summers he has been a guest conductor in Japan, England, Australia and New Zealand. He also served as an associate conductor to Maestro Leopold Stokowski in Houston, Tex., for the Houston Symphony Orchestra.

SUN (e)
LOWELL, MASS.
CIRC. 46,350

AUG 7 1967

New England Newsclip

Lowell Winners of International Piano Teachers Association Awards

LOWELL According to an announcement made by Jack Payne, widely known local musician and member of the International Piano Teachers Association, top award winners of the annual competition sponsored by the association were all members of chapter 81 of the organization composed of students of the Greater-Lowell area.

Each year in March, student members of the organization make tape recordings of a classical selection graded to their ability as pianist. The recordings are judged during the following months by nationally prominent teachers and musicians. Ratings are given for accuracy, timing, expression and pedal. A student receiving a score of 85 or over for three successive years is awarded an all expense paid trip to the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox.

This year's winners were guest at the concert featuring Van Clibunr, guest pianist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Erick Leinsdorf. Winners are provided with cabins, meals and various trips to places of interest in the Berkshire area and they occupy the best seats at the concert.

A student earning a score of 90 or over is given the covered award without having to compete three years.

Tanglewood trip winners this year were Sandra Bindas, 12, of 17 Reservoir St., who scored 92 points; Richard Iby, 10, of Willard St., who scored 87 points; Diana Kelleher, 13, of Moore St., whose total was 88 points; Stephen Heenan, 13, of Coburn St., 85 points; Bryant Desmarais, 15, of 6 Lancaster Ave., Chelmsford, 85 points and John Michopoulos, 14, of Wentworth Ave., Salutatorian of the Moody Junior High School class of '66 who scored 85 points.

Students who received award pins for earning a score of 85 or over for the first or second time in the competition are: Eleanor Lehtinen of Dunstable, 85 St., 85 points; Batya Kovler, Westford St., 87 points. Donna Couture, Crawford St., 85 points; Robert Couture, Crawford St., 86; Ann Struzziero. North Road, Chelmsford, 87; Marsha Gilbride, St. James St., 86; Edwin Bozer, Vernon St., 85; Mark Eastham, Forest St., 85; Deborah Donovan, Billerica St., Chelmsford, 86; Joseph Quigley, Beacon St., 85; Phyllis Levin, Hampden St,. 88; Martha Sullivan, Bunker Hill Ave., 85 and Alan James, Old Westford Road, Chelmsford, 86.

The News American
BALTIMORE, MD.
D. 211,932 SUN. 310,264

AUG 9 1967

WINNER AT TANGLEWOOD — Christopher Wolfe, young Baltimore Symphony Orchestra clarinetist, has won the national fellowship at famed Berkshire Music Festival, at Lenox, Mass. Shown with him here is Erich Leinsdorf, music director of Boston Symphony.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900

AUG 8 1967

New England Newsclip

ABC Announces Grant Winners At Tanglewood

Recipients of the ABC radio network fellowship grants for study this summer at the Berkshire Music Center have been announced by Robert R. Pauley, president of the network.

The annual grants were awarded for the first time last year. The 1967 fellowships will go to William Lane, 23, of Winter Park, Fla., and Marion Valasek, 31, of Minneapolis, Minn. Each will receive a $500 stipend.

Lane, who studied French horn at the New England Conservatory in Boston for the past two years under James Stagliano, first horn in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will become principal horn with the Buffalo Philharmonic next year.

Miss Valasek is principal flute with the Nashville Symphony Orchestra. She received bachelor and master of music degrees from the Eastman School of Music where she studied with Joseph Mariano. She holds an artist's diploma from the New England Conservatory where she studied with James Pappoutsakis.

CAPE COD
STANDARD TIMES (e)
HYANNIS, MASS.
CIRC. 21,300

AUG 22 1967

New England Newsclip

Former Oberlin Players Director Wins Award

FALMOUTH—James Paul, music director for the Oberlin College Gilbert and Sullivan Players from 1962-1965, has won the coveted Koussevitsky Award in Music.

This award includes a fellowship which will allow Mr. Paul to study with the famed Boston conductor Erich Leinsdorf this coming year. He has been a student of Leinsdorf this Summer at Tanglewood, Summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Paul joined the Oberlin Players in 1960, working two years as associate music director and four years as music director. He is a student of voice as well as conducting and he has studied at the Mozarteum in Salzburg, Austria.

Since his graduation from Oberlin, Mr. Paul has worked as music director for several churches in the Boston area. He has also been associate conductor for the Boston Ballet under Arthur Fiedler. Last Spring he was music director for a Harvard production of "Yeomen of the Guard."

THE NASHVILLE TENNESSEAN
D. 137,900 SUN. 222,693

AUG 6 1967

Flutist Wins Grant

MARION Valasek, 31-year-old flutist originally from Minneapolis, Minn., and presently principal flue of the Nashville Symphony, is the recipient of one of two fellowships given by the ABC Radio Network for study at the Berkshire Music Center.

Miss Valasek received her bachelor and master of music degrees from the Eastman School of Music where she studied with Joseph Mariano; holds an artist's diploma from the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston where she studied with James Pappoutsakis.

She has taught at the State University of New York College of Education at Potsdam, and has given extensive solo recitals and played in chamber music ensembles. During the academic year 1964-1965 she was a Fulbright scholar at the Hochschule fuer Musik in Berlin where she worked with Aurele Nicolet.

In 1940, the Berkshire Music Center was established at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in fulfillment of the dream of Serge Koussevitzky, its music director, to provide an environment in which young musicians could continue their professional training and add to their artistic experience through the guidance of eminent musicians. The Center was developed under his leadership until his death in 1951, when he was succeeded by Charles Munch. Erich Leinsdorf has been director of the Center since 1963 and Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the orchestra, is chairman of the faculty.

At Tanglewood: Robert R. Pauley, president of ABC Radio; Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Berkshire Music Center chat with Marion Valasek, winner of an ABC Fellowship for study at the Berkshire Music Center.

96

HERALD (m)
RUTLAND, VT.
CIRC. 20,500

AUG 5 1967

New England Newsclip

3 Named To Faculty

Two Musicians, Artist to Join St. Michael's Staff This Fall.

WINOOSKI — (Special) — Two musicians and an artist will join the Fine Arts Department faculty at St. Michael's College in the fall, Dr. Robert J. Giroux, academic vice president and dean of the college, has announced.

Roy Kennedy, Underhill Center painter-sculptor, and Mrs. Norma Holmes Auchter of Colchester will be lecturers in the department and Paul Dorsam of Lyndon will be an instructor.

A native of Buffalo, N. Y., Kennedy has lived and worked in Underhill Center since 1953.

He began painting at 20 under Isaac Sawyer at the Albright Art School.

In 1946, Kennedy attended the Ozenfant School of Fine Arts in New York City and in 1947 studied at the Academie Julian in Paris.

After extensive travel in Europe, he returned to the United States where he has had exhibits in Buffalo, Denver, New York, and Burlington.

Kennedy's works also have been shown at the Rockefeller Center in New York and at Dartmouth College.

A native of Rochester, N. Y., Mrs. Auchter received a bachlor of music degree in 1942 from the Eastman School of Music at the University of Rochester. In 1944, she received a master of music from the department of theory and in 1950, an artist's diploma in piano.

She has studied at Tanglewood under Boston Symphony personnel and with Edwin Hughes.

Mrs. Auchter has studied the organ with Paul Sifler and Virgil Fox.

She was a piano pupil under Carl Friedberg for five years in New York.

Mrs. Auchter has been on the faculty of the University of Connecticut, the University of Texas, the Eastman School, Middlebury College, and the University of Vermont.

She also has private studio pupils.

Mrs. Auchter made her Town Hall debut in March, 1952, and has appeared at Carnegie Hall on two occasions. She has been on concert tours throughout the United States and Canada.

She has been a soloist with the Eastman - Rochester Symphony Orchestra, the Watertown, N. Y., Symphony, The University of Connecticut Symphony, the Vermont Philharmonic, and the University of Vermont.

Mrs. Auchter has given recitals at several universities and colleges.

A native of New York City, Dorsam holds bachelor of music degrees from the New England Conservatory of Music and a master of music in education from the same school.

He has studied composition with F. Judd Cooke and Felix Wolfes; arranging with William Tosson; trumpet with Roger Voison, Andre Come, Armand Ghittalla and John Coffey; voice with Rodora Smith, and conducting with James Patterson.

Dorsam has been director of the Lyndon State College Community Chorus, director of the St. Johnsbury City Band, director of music for the Hardwick schools and director of a number of performing groups.

NEWS (e)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 98,600

AUG 15 1967

Elms College Student at Tanglewood

Fine Arts

Along with the bright array of concerts and musical events Tanglewood, the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, maintains a high level school for singers, instrumentalists, conductors and composers. It would be correct to state that education is being conducted most of the time, in and out of classes. The fact that the students are in constant contact with some of the best professional musicians in the world might be activity enough.

Johnnella Butler, a student entering her senior year at Chicopee's College of Our Lady of the Elms, is a serious minded vocalist who intends to continue her higher education by entering a music college after graduation.

Earlier this year she decided to take on the rigours of the schedule devised by Tanglewood for the training and development of singers. The program is not created with the beginner in mind, nor is it conducted with anything less than a professional respect for the student.

Studying voice development technique for eight weeks at the Berkshire Music Center, Miss Butler was guided by the professional wisdom of such musical figures as Phyllis Curtin, Adah Mays Curran and Ryan Edwards.

Self scheduled rehearsal sessions with fellowship pianists and daily technique classes are buttressed by general seminars each week during which students and teachers apply knowledge to the problems in the musical art form.

The lyric soprano made her debut last season and will sing the rôle of Belinda in "Dido and Aeneus" when the Purcell opera is performed at the Elms on Nov. 18 during that school's fine arts festival.

JOHNNELLA BUTLER WITH ERICH LEINSDORF

STUDENT ORCHESTRA, part of the Boston University summer program at Tanglewood in music, art, theatre, and dance, rehearses under the direction of its conductor, Walter Eisenberg. The group will present a concert at 2:30 p.m. tomorrow.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900

AUG 16 1967

New England Newsclip

Wide Assortment of Talented Students Attend BU Arts Courses at Tanglewood

The Boston University Tanglewood Young Artists Orchestra will present the last in a series of concerts this summer as part of Tanglewood-on-Parade. Tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 it will perform works by Berlioz, Sibelius, Prokofieff and Brahms with Walter Eisenberg of the BU faculty as conductor.

The young artists orchestra is one of the programs offered by BU at Tanglewood in cooperation with the Berkshire Music Center. This is the second year that such programs have been offered.

A total of 171 students from 29 states and two Canadian provinces are enrolled for programs in music, theatre, dance and art. The instruction in music includes work in composition, applied teaching and chamber music; a four-week piano workshop under the direction of Bela Nagy; and a program for instrumentalists.

Playwrights' Lab

The primary purpose is to give talented young instrumentalists the opportunity for intensive study for eight weeks in the musical environment of Tanglewood in a way not usually open to young people.

Boston University's other programs at Tanglewood include a continuation of the "Writing for the Theatre" project established last year. It is essentially a professional working lab for young playwrights. The over-all director of this project is Harold Clurman.

There are also programs in dance, painting and drawing.

Works of members of the faculty and students in the painting and drawing program will be on display in the Exhibition Hall at Tanglewood until Sunday.

96

HERALD (m)
RUTLAND, VT.
CIRC. 20,500

AUG 5 1967

New England Newsclip

3 Named To Faculty

Two Musicians, Artist to Join St. Michael's Staff This Fall.

WINOOSKI — (Special) — Two musicians and an artist will join the Fine Arts Department faculty at St. Michael's College in the fall, Dr. Robert J. Giroux, academic vice president and dean of the college, has announced.

Roy Kennedy, Underhill Center painter-sculptor, and Mrs. Norma Holmes Auchter of Colchester will be lecturers in the department and Paul Dorsam of Lyndon will be an instructor.

A native of Buffalo, N. Y., Kennedy has lived and worked in Underhill Center since 1953.

He began painting at 20 under Isaac Sawyer at the Albright Art School.

In 1946, Kennedy attended the Ozenfant School of Fine Arts in New York City and in 1947 studied at the Academie Julian in Paris.

After extensive travel in Europe, he returned to the United States where he has had exhibits in Buffalo, Denver, New York, and Burlington.

Kennedy's works also have been shown at the Rockefeller Center in New York and at Dartmouth College.

A native of Rochester, N. Y., Mrs. Auchter received a bachlor of music degree in 1942 from the Eastman School of Music at the University of Rochester. In 1944, she received a master of music from the department of theory and in 1950, an artist's diploma in piano.

She has studied at Tanglewood under Boston Symphony personnel and with Edwin Hughes.

Mrs. Auchter has studied the organ with Paul Sifler and Virgil Fox.

She was a piano pupil under Carl Friedberg for five years in New York.

Mrs. Auchter has been on the faculty of the University of Connecticut, the University of Texas, the Eastman School, Middlebury College, and the University of Vermont.

She also has private studio pupils.

Mrs. Auchter made her Town Hall debut in March, 1952, and has appeared at Carnegie Hall on two occasions. She has been on concert tours throughout the United States and Canada.

She has been a soloist with the Eastman - Rochester Symphony Orchestra, the Watertown, N. Y., Symphony, The University of Connecticut Symphony, the Vermont Philharmonic, and the University of Vermont.

Mrs. Auchter has given recitals at several universities and colleges.

A native of New York City, Dorsam holds bachelor of music degrees from the New England Conservatory of Music and a master of music in education from the same school.

He has studied composition with F. Judd Cooke and Felix Wolfes; arranging with William Tesson; trumpet with Roger Voison, Andre Come, Armand Ghittalla and John Coffey; voice with Rodora Smith, and conducting with James Patterson.

Dorsam has been director of the Lyndon State College Community Chorus, director of the St. Johnsbury City Band, director of music for the Hardwick schools and director of a number of performing groups.

NEWS (e)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 37,500

AUG 15 1967

Elms College Student at Tanglewood

Fine Arts

Along with the bright array of concerts and musical events Tanglewood, the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, maintains a high level school for singers, instrumentalists, conductors and composers. It would be correct to state that education is being conducted most of the time, in and out of classes. The fact that the students are in constant contact with some of the best professional musicians in the world might be activity enough.

Johnnella Butler, a student entering her senior year at Chicopee's College of Our Lady of the Elms, is a serious minded vocalist who intends to continue her higher education by entering a music college after graduation.

Earlier this year she decided to take on the rigours of the schedule devised by Tanglewood for the training and development of singers. The program is not created with the beginner in mind, nor is it conducted with anything less than a professional respect for the student.

Studying voice development technique for eight weeks at the Berkshire Music Center, Miss Butler was guided by the professional wisdom of such musical figures as Phyllis Curtin, Adah Mays Curran and Ryan Edwards.

JOHNNELLA BUTLER WITH ERICH LEINSDORF

Self scheduled rehearsal sessions with fellowship pianists and daily technique classes are buttressed by general seminars each week during which students and teachers apply knowledge to the problems in the musical art form.

The lyric soprano made her debut last season and will sing the rôle of Belinda in "Dido and Aeneus" when the Purcell opera is performed at the Elms on Nov. 18 during that school's fine arts festival.

STUDENT ORCHESTRA, part of the Boston University summer program at Tanglewood in music, art, theatre, and dance, rehearses under the direction of its conductor, Walter Eisenberg. The group will present a concert at 2:30 p.m. tomorrow.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900

AUG 16 1967

New England Newsclip

Wide Assortment of Talented Students Attend BU Arts Courses at Tanglewood

The Boston University Tanglewood Young Artists Orchestra will present the last in a series of concerts this summer as part of Tanglewood-on-Parade. Tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 it will perform works by Berlioz; Sibelius, Prokofieff and Brahms with Walter Eisenberg of the BU faculty as conductor.

The young artists orchestra is one of the programs offered by BU at Tanglewood in cooperation with the Berkshire Music Center. This is the second year that such programs have been offered.

A total of 171 students from 29 states and two Canadian provinces are enrolled for programs in music, theatre, dance and art. The instruction in music includes work in composition, applied teaching and chamber music; a four-week piano workshop under the direction of Bela Nagy; and a program for instrumentalists.

Playwrights' Lab

The primary purpose is to give talented young instrumentalists the opportunity for intensive study for eight weeks in the musical environment of Tanglewood in a way not usually open to young people.

Boston University's other programs at Tanglewood include a continuation of the "Writing for the Theatre" project established last year. It is essentially a professional working lab for young playwrights. The over-all director of this project is Harold Clurman.

There are also programs in dance, painting and drawing.

Works of members of the faculty and students in the painting and drawing program will be on display in the Exhibition Hall at Tanglewood until Sunday.

MISCELLANY

97

ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH
D. 349,508 SUN. 566,562

AUG 22 1967

Hills Alive With Sound of Music

Thousands Flock to Tanglewood in Berkshires to Hear Boston Symphony's Summer Concerts

By Thomas B. Sherman

A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 22

EUROPEANS are still convinced that the people of the United States are not interested in culture and no amount of statistical evidence will change them. Yes, yes, they say, you have thousands of symphony orchestras, thousands of museums, thousands of libraries, thousands of schools and colleges; but what does that prove? Americans buy everything by the carload, whether they use it or not.

At that point the discussion may as well be dropped because nobody can say with any certainty that the consumers of culture are actually nourished by what they consume. Nevertheless the apparatus of American musical culture grows larger by the month and it is now operating throughout the year.

AT TANGLEWOOD in the Berkshire Hills, the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays a summer season of eight weeks. More than 750,000 people attended this festival in 1966 and the figures for the 1967 season, now in its closing phase, will probably be larger. The satellite institutions — the Berkshire Music Center for students, the conductors' workshops, the chamber music activities and a number of ad hoc or improvised musical events — add to the liveliness of the scene.

Buildings are necessary to house these activities and the Shed, which provides a cover for more than 6000 people, is the principal structure on the grounds. But the audience has outgrown the Shed since the first concerts were given there in 1938 and it now spills out into the well-clipped, adjoining grass plots.

Overflow audience at Tanglewood.

As at the Little Symphony concerts in St. Louis, a number of listeners bring their lawn chairs. The others lounge on the grass. At a recent concert when an all-Gershwin program was played, more than 13,000 persons were admitted to the grounds.

If the benediction of nature enhances the enjoyment of music the visitors to Tanglewood must be in a continuous state of euphoric susceptibility when the weather is right.

The 210-acre plot, donated to the Boston Orchestra by the heirs of William Aspinwall Tappan, is like the green carpet that privileged English country families used to boast about.

Then in the distance, if one arrives before sunset, the Berkshires may be seen, sometimes through a soft haze and sometimes under a sparkling sun. And if the visitor is housed in Lenox, he has seen New England at its best.

Nathaniel Hawthorne once lived at Tanglewood on the edge of the property where the festival is held. In describing the view from Tanglewood he wrote:

"There is a glen between this house and the lake through which winds a little brook with pools, and tiny waterfalls flow over the great roofs of trees. The glen is deep and narrow and filled with trees, so that it is all in a dense shadow of obscurity. Beyond the lake is Monument Mountain, looking like a headless Sphinx wrapped in a Persian shawl, when clad in the rich and diversified autumnal foliage of its woods; and beyond Monument the dome of Taconic."

Many people have been thrown into mild ecstasies over the New England autumns. But late summer is equally impressive. And summer or winter Lenox is a model of a small town that has matured without becoming decrepit. The frame houses have a serenity and a simple, direct beauty that harmonizes with the great hemlocks, pines and birches — all in full foliage in summertime — that line the streets.

Like all American towns, Lenox is full of automobiles, but even they are somehow subdued by the architecture and put in perspective as details in a gracious composition.

Visitors to Tanglewood and the Festival come from "all over." The students at the Center, however, wear the same variant of the required youthful costume of the day — blue jeans or shorts, men's shirts and no hats. The female of the species is not easily identified. One male student remarked that pony tails should be mandatory to prevent Jill from being mistaken for Jack.

But even though the young are in evidence everywhere they have not attempted to take over the place. Most of them seem charged with purpose. What goes on when they get together and after hours is not a matter of record. Lenox, unlike Fort Lauderdale, does not offer a standing invitation to corybantic revelry.

VISITORS to Bayreuth, the small German town where Richard Wagner established a Festspielhaus for the performance of his operas, are often impressed if not offended by its plainness. It offers none of the vistas of Salzburg, nor any of the charm of a Bavarian village. Wagner was satisfied with this environment since he sought no competition from either the architectural ingenuities of men or the wonders of nature.

So one may ask if the charm of Lenox, the green meadows outside or the mist-covered mountain tops are not too distracting to the roving music lovers. But the question cannot be answered. The program presented under the Shed, in the chamber music hall and the theater are usually weighted heavily with standard works. Listening is easy. It seems unlikely that anyone would drive 500 miles merely to hear a Tchaikowsky symphony.

The Tchaikowsky Violin Concerto played by the 22-year-old Israeli violinist Itzhak Perlman, might have been a more magnetic attraction because Perlman already shows a big talent. Both Perlman and the orchestra were heard again last Thursday night at Tanglewood when they played the Introduction and Rondo Capriccio by Saint-Saens on a nationwide television broadcast.

Both works were familiar. An enchanted summer's evening is not the time for wrestling with Stockhausen or Boulez or any other practitioner in the twelve-tone idiom, "accidental" music or music concert.

Students at the Center, of course, can unravel the knotty textures of the avant-garde composers in their study rooms and supervised classes. The lay public at the main concerts would find such music an intrusion.

Moreover, if my own experience can be used as a criterion, the dead-tired symphonies of the standard repertory are somehow freshened up and given a new kind of vitality in the Tanglewood ambience. I led the cheering that interrupted Tchaikowsky's "Pathetique" at the conclusion of the famous march.

Erich Leinsdorf, who conducts the Boston orchestra in the summer as well as in Boston, was obviously prepared for the ovation for he spun around like a top, when the final chords were sounded, and met the blast of applause head-on.

A review of the concert noted somewhat waspishly that the orchestra "played three movements and an encore." But the critic lived in Lenox and was obviously immune to everything but the music.

BOSTON
BOSTON, MASS.
MONTHLY CIRC. 7,500

JUL 1967 New England Newsclip

The Berkshires

The traveler who looks to Western Massachusetts for culture and entertainment finds in addition to Tanglewood, a vast and varied selection of worthwhile attractions, including Ted Shawn's Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival in Lenox, the Williamstown Summer Theater and the Berkshire Theater Festival at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge. But the eight-week Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox still remains the prime cultural attraction in the area.

Tanglewood's 210 acres were offered to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1936 by the descendants of William Aspenwall Tappan, the estate's original owner, and much of the land has remained in the form of sprawling lawns and meadows, and formal gardens of magnificent hemlocks, elms, pines and birches. On an acre and a half of this beautiful land is the Music Shed which seats approximately 6,000 people and is the main concert hall at Tanglewood. Here the 106 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with famous guest conductors and soloists, perform every Friday and Saturday evening, and every Sunday afternoon during the Festival weeks, which run from the beginning of July to the middle of August. The excellent acoustics of the canopy over the stage, project the music, without amplification, through the Shed and to the adjoining Great Lawn, where overflow crowds of music enthusiasts can listen to and enjoy the performance of the Orchestra.

The Berkshire Festival Chamber Music series is also presented here on Tuesday evenings during the Tanglewood season, in either the Theatre Concert Hall, with a capacity of 1200, or the smaller Chamber Music Hall, with a capacity of 500. Also open to the public are the Orchestra's rehearsals which take place on Saturday mornings for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Pension Institute.

Running concurrently with the Berkshire Festival is the Berkshire Music Center, established to provide an environment in which young musicians can continue their professional training under the guidance of eminent musicians. The more than three hundred students at the center give performances throughout the summer.

The public is invited to visit and enjoy the beauty of the Tanglewood grounds. Visitors to the estate, when the Berkshire Music Center is in session, are asked to meet at the Main Gate, and will be shown through the grounds by a guide. Tickets for concerts may be obtained at the Festival Ticket office in Lenox or at the gates daily and before concert time. A cafeteria, open on concert days, serves box lunches and beverages at reasonable prices for visitors to the Festival. For stays of more than one night in the Berkshires, accommodations may be secured through the Berkshire Hills Conference, Pittsfield. Shorter stays may be arranged on arrival through the local information bureaus of the towns in the area.

MISCELLANY

97

ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH
D. 319,408 SUN. 566,562

AUG 22 1967

Hills Alive With Sound of Music

Thousands Flock to Tanglewood in Berkshires to Hear Boston Symphony's Summer Concerts

By Thomas B. Sherman

A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 22

EUROPEANS are still convinced that the people of the United States are not interested in culture and no amount of statistical evidence will change them. Yes, yes, they say, you have thousands of symphony orchestras, thousands of museums, thousands of libraries, thousands of schools and colleges; but what does that prove? Americans buy everything by the carload, whether they use it or not.

At that point the discussion may as well be dropped because nobody can say with any certainty that the consumers of culture are actually nourished by what they consume. Nevertheless the apparatus of American musical culture grows larger by the month and it is now operating throughout the year.

Overflow audience at Tanglewood.

AT TANGLEWOOD in the Berkshire Hills, the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays a summer season of eight weeks. More than 750,000 people attended this festival in 1966 and the figures for the 1967 season, now in its closing phase, will probably be larger. The satellite institutions — the Berkshire Music Center for students, the conductors' workshops, the chamber music activities and a number of ad hoc or improvised musical events — add to the liveliness of the scene.

Buildings are necessary to house these activities and the Shed, which provides a cover for more than 6000 people, is the principal structure on the grounds. But the audience has outgrown the Shed since the first concerts were given there in 1938 and it now spills out into the well-clipped, adjoining grass plots.

As at the Little Symphony concerts in St. Louis, a number of listeners bring their lawn chairs. The others lounge on the grass. At a recent concert when an all-Gershwin program was played, more than 13,000 persons were admitted to the grounds.

If the benediction of nature enhances the enjoyment of music the visitors to Tanglewood must be in a continuous state of euphoric susceptibility when the weather is right.

The 210-acre plot, donated to the Boston Orchestra by the heirs of William Aspinwall Tappan, is like the green carpet that privileged English country families used to boast about.

Then in the distance, if one arrives before sunset, the Berkshires may be seen, sometimes through a soft haze and sometimes under a sparkling sun. And if the visitor is housed in Lenox, he has seen New England at its best.

Nathaniel Hawthorne once lived at Tanglewood on the edge of the property where the festival is held. In describing the view from Tanglewood he wrote:

"There is a glen between this house and the lake through which winds a little brook with pools, and tiny waterfalls flow over the great roofs of trees. The glen is deep and narrow and filled with trees, so that it is all in a dense shadow of obscurity. Beyond the lake is Monument Mountain, looking like a headless Sphinx wrapped in a Persian shawl, when clad in the rich and diversified autumnal foliage of its woods; and beyond Monument the dome of Taconic."

Many people have been thrown into mild ecstasies over the New England autumns. But late summer is equally impressive. And summer or winter Lenox is a model of a small town that has matured without becoming decrepit. The frame houses have a serenity and a simple, direct beauty that harmonizes with the great hemlocks, pines and birches — all in full foliage in summertime — that line the streets.

Like all American towns, Lenox is full of automobiles, but even they are somehow subdued by the architecture and put in perspective as details in a gracious composition.

Visitors to Tanglewood and the Festival come from "all over." The students at the Center, however, wear the same variant of the required youthful costume of the day — blue jeans or shorts, men's shirts and no hats. The female of the species is not easily identified. One male student remarked that pony tails should be mandatory to prevent Jill from being mistaken for Jack.

But even though the young are in evidence everywhere they have not attempted to take over the place. Most of them seem charged with purpose. What goes on when they get together and after hours is not a matter of record. Lenox, unlike Fort Lauderdale, does not offer a standing invitation to corybantic revelry.

VISITORS to Bayreuth, the small German town where Richard Wagner established a Festspielhaus for the performance of his operas, are often impressed if not offended by its plainness. It offers none of the vistas of Salzburg, nor any of the charm of a Bavarian village. Wagner was satisfied with this environment since he sought no competition from either the architectural ingenuities of men or the wonders of nature.

So one may ask if the charm of Lenox, the green meadows outside or the mist-covered mountain tops are not too distracting to the roving music lovers. But the question cannot be answered. The program presented under the Shed, in the chamber music hall and the theater are usually weighted heavily with standard works. Listening is easy. It seems unlikely that anyone would drive 500 miles merely to hear a Tchaikowsky symphony.

The Tchaikowsky Violin Concerto played by the 22-year-old Israeli violinist Itzhak Perlman, might have been a more magnetic attraction because Perlman already shows a big talent. Both Perlman and the orchestra were heard again last Thursday night at Tanglewood when they played the Introduction and Rondo Capriccio by Saint-Saens on a nationwide television broadcast.

Both works were familiar. An enchanted summer's evening is not the time for wrestling with Stockhausen or Boulez or any other practitioner in the twelve-tone idiom, "accidental" music or music concert.

Students at the Center, of course, can unravel the knotty textures of the avant-garde composers in their study rooms and supervised classes. The lay public at the main concerts would find such music an intrusion.

Moreover, if my own experience can be used as a criterion, the dead-tired symphonies of the standard repertory are somehow freshened up and given a new kind of vitality in the Tanglewood ambience. I led the cheering that interrupted Tchaikowsky's "Pathetique" at the conclusion of the famous march.

Erich Leinsdorf, who conducts the Boston orchestra in the summer as well as in Boston, was obviously prepared for the ovation for he spun around like a top, when the final chords were sounded, and met the blast of applause head-on.

A review of the concert noted somewhat waspishly that the orchestra "played three movements and an encore." But the critic lived in Lenox and was obviously immune to everything but the music.

BOSTON
BOSTON, MASS.
MONTHLY CIRC. 7,500

JUL 1967 New England Newsclip

The Berkshires

The traveler who looks to Western Massachusetts for culture and entertainment finds in addition to Tanglewood, a vast and varied selection of worthwhile attractions, including Ted Shawn's Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival in Lenox, the Williamstown Summer Theater and the Berkshire Theater Festival at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge. But the eight-week Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox still remains the prime cultural attraction in the area.

Tanglewood's 210 acres were offered to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1936 by the descendants of William Aspenwall Tappan, the estate's original owner, and much of the land has remained in the form of sprawling lawns and meadows, and formal gardens of magnificent hemlocks, elms, pines and birches. On an acre and a half of this beautiful land is the Music Shed which seats approximately 6,000 people and is the main concert hall at Tanglewood. Here the 106 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with famous guest conductors and soloists, perform every Friday and Saturday evening, and every Sunday afternoon during the Festival weeks, which run from the beginning of July to the middle of August. The excellent acoustics of the canopy over the stage, project the music, without amplification, through the Shed and to the adjoining Great Lawn, where overflow crowds of music enthusiasts can listen to and enjoy the performance of the Orchestra.

The Berkshire Festival Chamber Music series is also presented here on Tuesday evenings during the Tanglewood season, in either the Theatre Concert Hall, with a capacity of 1200, or the smaller Chamber Music Hall, with a capacity of 500. Also open to the public are the Orchestra's rehearsals which take place on Saturday mornings for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Pension Institute.

Running concurrently with the Berkshire Festival is the Berkshire Music Center, established to provide an environment in which young musicians can continue their professional training under the guidance of eminent musicians. The more than three hundred students at the center give performances throughout the summer.

The public is invited to visit and enjoy the beauty of the Tanglewood grounds. Visitors to the estate, when the Berkshire Music Center is in session, are asked to meet at the Main Gate, and will be shown through the grounds by a guide. Tickets for concerts may be obtained at the Festival Ticket office in Lenox or at the gates daily and before concert time. A cafeteria, open on concert days, serves box lunches and beverages at reasonable prices for visitors to the Festival. For stays of more than one night in the Berkshires, accommodations may be secured through the Berkshire Hills Conference, Pittsfield. Shorter stays may be arranged on arrival through the local information bureaus of the towns in the area.

98

TRANSCRIPT (e)
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
CIRC. 13,350

AUG 25 1967

New England Newsclip

Leinsdorf on Concert Day

Erich Leinsdorf

By LAURENCE V. KLEINMAN
Associated Press Writer

LENOX, Mass. (AP) — "So, you want to see what it's like backstage, what I'm like on the day of a concert. You're a moment too late. You just missed a chance to watch me changing my pants. But please, come in."

Erich Leinsdorf, music director and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, smiled and opened the door to his dressing room. Leinsdorf had 15 minutes to go before conducting the last concert of the summer at Tanglewood.

Leinsdorf paced. The room was small. It had dark green walls and a low, white ceiling. A desk, four straight-backed charis, two modern wicker chairs, a piano and stool were the only furniture. He tapped on the desk as he walked past it. The room seemed too small for him.

His wife, Anne, was sitting in one of the wicker chairs. She wore a yellow dress and was calm.

Leinsdorf sat down in a straight-backed chair alongside the desk. His hands were clasped in his lap and his feet tapped the wood floor with the rapidity of woodpeckers going to work on a tree.

"Today, for instance, I had breakfast with my family and ended up spending three hours in the dining room. I wasn't eating all that time, of course."

He smiled again. One was sure the jokes were aimed at reducing his own tension, not at getting laughs.

His feet stopped tapping. "Yes I'm nervous," he said. "The stomach still goes. One never gets rid of that." He has been conducting since 1934.

Leinsdorf resumed pacing. A man poked his head through the doorway. Leinsdorf did not wait for him to speak. "No I won't be using a score today, thank you very much," he told the man.

The all-Wagner program was to consist of the prelude to Die Meistersinger, act II of Die Walkure and parts of Gotterdammergung. It added up to about an hour and a half, during which time Leinsdorf would have no music in front of him.

The man reappeared. "It's time, Mr. Leinsdorf." Leinsdorf was at the door before the man had finished speaking. "Thank you very much," he said to the man as he walked past him to the stage door.

Mrs. Leinsdorf followed him out of the room to go to her seat in the audience.

The conductor stood rigidly behind the stage door waiting for it to be opened. His son Joshua, 21, had come in and stood near him. Leinsdorf did not appear to notice. He did not move at all. His eyes were fixed on the door. His anxiousness to begin was apparent. The door was opened and Leinsdorf walked at a measured pace to the podium.

As he walked through the door his face seemed to have relaxed somewhat. Ironically, a sign posted on the stage door reads: "Come on...Stop stalling."

Joshua remained backstage. "Of course there are difficulties involved in being the son of a famous man," he said. "For one thing my point of view about father is so different from most people's.

"They first see him conducting. He is well dressed, authoritative, maybe even a hero figure. My dominat view is of him walking around the house in a terry cloth robe or laughing at the dinner table. He's very tolerant and very human.

"On the day of the concert the biggest change in him is that he's quieter than usual. I think he's more impatient than nervous. He seems to lose the tension as soon as he begins to work."

Joshua was graduated from Columbia University this year and plans to attend graduate school in English at Columbia in the fall.

During intermission Leinsdorf was joined in the green room by his wife, Joshua, and his two daughters, Hester, 18, and Jennifer, 15.

He spent part of the time going over the score for the remainder of the concert. He hummed as he read.

Leinsdorf glanced up as one of the musicians walked past the door. "Those were some nice noises," he said. The musician smiled his thanks.

It had begun to rain. Marilyn Horne, who sang for the first time with the Boston Symphony during the second part of the program, looked helplessly at the sky. "I knew I was going to have sound effects," she said.

To escape the rain most of the 8,489 persons who attended the concert crowded under the covered music shed during the intermission.

Some remained out on the lawn. One of them was a young girl wearing a raccoon coat. It was a light rain and the temperature was in the 80s.

Leinsdorf stood ready to go out to conclude the performance. "Watch the whistling now," he cautioned the man who was preparing to open the stage door.

Shortly after the orchestra began playing Gotterdammerung Marilyn Horne stationed herself behind the door to wait for her cue. She kept clenching and unclenching her hands.

When the concert was over Leinsdorf rushed to his dressing room. He had but a few hours to drive to New York to catch a plane to London. During the 10 minutes he was in his dressing room he exchanged pleasantries with about 50 people.

Mrs. Leinsdorf greeted most of those who came to the dressing room also. But somewhere within those 10 minutes she had managed to pack Leinsdorf's suitcase.

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 192,400

JUL 29 1967

New England Newsclip

BSO films Beethoven story

Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra are featured in a two-part film entitled "Beethoven: Ordeal and Triumph." The McGraw-Hill film release presents Beethoven's music and portrays his life story, using as a theme his musical expression of the long struggle against despair caused by his loss of hearing.

The ABC color production in 16mm is designed for a wide range of audiences, both high school and adults.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 SUN. 122,607

JUL 23 1967

Everybody Else Is United — So Why Not the Audience?

By JOAN SIMMONS
Times-Union Music Critic

In addition to the usual collection of students and performers, Tanglewood this summer is playing host to a few other groups connected with the music world . . . first the music teachers and then the music critics.

Whether it is just coincidence or another indication of the inevitable, the week-long convention of the Music Educators Conference on the Tanglewood grounds will be followed almost immediately by a four day Music Critics Conference held by the Music Critics Association on the same grounds. (The latter to review the former?)

Each convention is purported to be a forum for the formulation of goals, guidelines and working criteria under which the members will function.

With all of this organization and strength through unity moving from one side of the footlights to the other, it would seem only fair if the final segment of the concert world became organized and set firm standards by which it would operate . . . namely the audience.

Envision an organization such as the Audience Public Protest League Against Unfair Systems in Entertainment (APPLAUSE) crusading for the welfare of each and every ticket buyer.

The mystery is why group-happy Americans haven't thought of this earlier. Think of the potential power that can be weilded, backed by all that money. Even the most outspoken and self protective individual in other matters cowers at the mercy of performers and management when it comes to his musical entertainment.

If he would just look at it in the context of an employer-employe relationship, he is the boss and it is his responsibility to make cer-

See EVERYONE, Page G-2

To be done away with entirely is the function of supply and demand. As the interest in a performer increases the price per head should decrease. If only a few people are interested in a particular performer they should bear the expense of their luxury. On the other hand if thousands are banging down the gates the cost per individual should reflect the demand. After all, it costs no more for one pianist to play for three thousand than for three.

Then there is the matter of program scheduling. No selling tickets for Beethoven's tion from the viewpoint of the audience. For example, cushiony, upholstered seats. Such seats were removed from Philharmonic Hall at Lincoln Center for the sake of the accousties . . . a perfect example of how the rights of the audience are being subjugated to those of the artist.

The first step by APPLAUSE should be to demand the return of plush seats and the removal of NO SMOKING signs. Next should be the universal installation of air conditioning. A little whirring noise doesn't disrupt the music that much, not when considered in its proper context of overall audience comfort, ergo enjoyment.

Other desireable elements are elevators and bars with realistic prices (at cost). In the true tradition of unionism, of course, APPLAUSE, will want to stamp out profits for management.

Timing is still another area of consideration. Concerts should begin late enough not to rush dinner and end early enough not to interfere with after-concert plans.

And finally dress requirements should be dropped to "come as you are." Many a man has been denied his rights as a concert-goer because of the undemocratic standard of a shirt and tie.

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.

AUG 25 1967

New England Newsclip

BSO guests next season

Seven guest conductors will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at next season's Tuesday and Thursday concerts in Symphony Hall. With the exception of Charles Munch and Leopold Stokowski, each of the following will be making his Boston debut with the orchestra: Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, Seija Ozawa, Sixten Ehrling, Jorge Mester, and Julius Rudel.

Charles Wilson, who begins his second year as the orchestra's assistant conductor, also will conduct his first concerts with the BSO in the new season. Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will be on the podium for the remaining 12 concerts.

Charles Munch has programed the Berlioz "Romeo and Juliet" Symphony with vocal soloists Rosalind Elias, Jerold Siena, and Donald Gramm. Mr. Leinsdorf has scheduled two special events: a concert performance of the first act of Wagner's "Die Walküre" with Claire Watson, Jess Thomas, and Kenneth Smith on Oct. 3; and Haydn's "The Creation" with Beverly Sills, John McCollum, Ara Berberian, and the New England Conservatory Chorus on Feb. 20 and 22.

The list of soloists for the orchestral concerts includes pianists Lilian Kallir, John Browning, Rita Bouboulidi, and Gary Graffman. Mezzo-soprano Beverly Wolff will sing with the symphony on Jan. 2.

There are three Tuesday series, and two Thursday series. Complete subscription information may be obtained from the Subscription Office, Symphony Hall, Boston, or by telephoning CO 6-1492.

98

TRANSCRIPT (e)
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
CIRC. 13,350

AUG 25 1967

New England Newsclip

Erich Leinsdorf

Leinsdorf on Concert Day

By LAURENCE V. KLEINMAN
Associated Press Writer

LENOX, Mass. (AP) — "So, you want to see what it's like backstage, what I'm like on the day of a concert. You're a moment too late. You just missed a chance to watch me changing my pants. But please, come in."

Erich Leinsdorf, music director and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, smiled and opened the door to his dressing room. Leinsdorf had 15 minutes to go before conducting the last concert of the summer at Tanglewood.

Leinsdorf paced. The room was small. It had dark green walls and a low, white ceiling. A desk, four straight-backed charis, two modern wicker chairs, a piano and stool were the only furniture. He tapped on the desk as he walked past it. The room seemed too small for him.

His wife, Anne, was sitting in one of the wicker chairs. She wore a yellow dress and was calm.

Leinsdorf sat down in a straight-backed chair alongside the desk. His hands were clasped in his lap and his feet tapped the wood floor with the rapidity of woodpeckers going to work on a tree.

"Today, for instance, I had breakfast with my family and ended up spending three hours in the dining room. I wasn't eating all that time, of course."

He smiled again. One was sure the jokes were aimed at reducing his own tension, not at getting laughs.

His feet stopped tapping. "Yes I'm nervous," he said. "The stomach still goes. One never gets rid of that." He has been conducting since 1934.

Leinsdorf resumed pacing. A man poked his head through the doorway. Leinsdorf did not wait for him to speak. "No I won't be using a score today, thank you very much," he told the man.

The all-Wagner program was to consist of the prelude to Die Meistersinger, act II of Die Walkure and parts of Gotterdammergung. It added up to about an hour and a half, during which time Leinsdorf would have no music in front of him.

The man reappeared. "It's time, Mr. Leinsdorf." Leinsdorf was at the door before the man had finished speaking. "Thank you very much," he said to the man as he walked past him to the stage door.

Mrs. Leinsdorf followed him out of the room to go to her seat in the audience.

The conductor stood rigidly behind the stage door waiting for it to be opened. His son Joshua, 21, had come in and stood near him. Leinsdorf did not appear to notice. He did not move at all. His eyes were fixed on the door. His anxiousness to begin was apparent. The door was opened and Leinsdorf walked at a measured pace to the podium.

As he walked through the door his face seemed to have relaxed somewhat. Ironically, a sign posted on the stage door reads: "Come on...Stop stalling."

Joshua remained backstage. "Of course there are difficulties involved in being the son of a famous man," he said. "For one thing my point of view about father is so different from most people's.

"They first see him conducting. He is well dressed, authoritative, maybe even a hero figure. My dominat view is of him walking around the house in a terry cloth robe or laughing at the dinner table. He's very tolerant and very human.

"On the day of the concert the biggest change in him is that he's quieter than usual. I think he's more impatient than nervous. He seems to lose the tension as soon as he begins to work."

Joshua was graduated from Columbia University this year and plans to attend graduate school in English at Columbia in the fall.

During intermission Leinsdorf was joined in the green room by his wife, Joshua, and his two daughters, Hester, 18, and Jennifer, 15.

He spent part of the time going over the score for the remainder of the concert. He hummed as he read.

Leinsdorf glanced up as one of the musicians walked past the door. "Those were some nice noises," he said. The musician smiled his thanks.

It had begun to rain. Marilyn Horne, who sang for the first time with the Boston Symphony during the second part of the program, looked helplessly at the sky. "I knew I was going to have sound effects," she said.

To escape the rain most of the 8,489 persons who attended the concert crowded under the covered music shed during the intermission.

Some remained out on the lawn. One of them was a young girl wearing a raccoon coat. It was a light rain and the temperature was in the 80s.

Leinsdorf stood ready to go out to conclude the performance. "Watch the whistling now," he cautioned the man who was preparing to open the stage door.

Shortly after the orchestra began playing Gotterdammerung Marilyn Horne stationed herself behind the door to wait for her cue. She kept clenching and unclenching her hands.

When the concert was over Leinsdorf rushed to his dressing room. He had but a few hours to drive to New York to catch a plane to London. During the 10 minutes he was in his dressing room he exchanged pleasantries with about 50 people.

Mrs. Leinsdorf greeted most of those who came to the dressing room also. But somewhere within those 10 minutes she had managed to pack Leinsdorf's suitcase.

Anyone Else United...

Continued from Page G-1

tain demands, a responsibility that has been sadly neglected thus far except for a few negative individual protests.

The disorganized concert world is ripe for some active and intelligent orientation from its most frequent source, the mass American public.

Some Suggested Guidelines . . .

We would suggest some tentative guidelines:

The first big question is "who?" This applies to performer and audience as well. Who will be allowed to perform and then who will be allowed to attend? Movies have made a step in this direction with their over-18 statute. For music we would suggest an under-24 statute applicable to all folk-rock-pop. A female over-50 statute for "smaltz" and a "tone deaf" recommendation for all music composed since 1950. These are only suggestions . . . the needs are endless.

A second vital consideration is price. Ticket prices wlil diminish in inverse proportion to the average age of the audience. In other words, the older you are the less you pay, making the ticket market more realistic in relation to concentration of available money.

To be done away with entirely is the function of supply and demand. As the interest in a performer increases the price per head should decrease. If only a few people are interested in a particular performer they should bear the expense of their luxury. On the other hand if thousands are banging down the gates the cost per individual should reflect the demand. After all, it costs no more for one pianist to play for three thousand than for three.

Then there is the matter of program scheduling. No selling tickets for Beethoven's Fifth Symphony and then suddenly changing to Hanson's Third. And no sneaking Stravinsky or Copland in among the Strauss and Tchaikowsky.

Planning a concert of course would become a little more involved, but after all the audience does have rights. The aesthetics of the matter are only secondary.

An event could begin from one of two points: who wants to listen or who wants to perform. One soon determines the other. The performer than states what he is capable of performing and the audience by democratic vote selects the program tailored to fit the vital dimensions of any concert: length, depth and volume.

Of course tickets are purchased before the selections are made, not after. If this is to be a true democratic union for the protection of audiences there will be no minority rights. The numbers must be protected against the undermining influences of those traitors in ther midst who are more interested in abstractions like quality rather than facts like rights.

The physical plant for a concert, long neglected, has received increased attention in recent years buy there are still some matters which are not being given proper attention from the viewpoint of the audience. For example, cushiony, upholstered seats. Such seats were removed from Philharmonic Hall at Lincoln Center for the sake of the accoustics . . . a perfect example of how the rights of the audience are being subjugated to those of the artist.

The first step by APPLAUSE should be to demand the return of plush seats and the removal of NO SMOKING signs. Next should be the universal installation of air conditioning. A little whirring noise doesn't disrupt the music that much, not when considered in its proper context of overall audience comfort, ergo enjoyment.

Other desireable elements are elevators and bars with realistic prices (at cost). In the true tradition of unionism, of course, APPLAUSE, will want to stamp out profits for management.

Timing is still another area of consideration. Concerts should begin late enough not to rush dinner and end early enough not to interfere with after-concert plans.

And finally dress requirements should be dropped to "come as you are." Many a man has been denied his rights as a concert-goer because of the undemocratic standard of a shirt and tie.

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 192,400

JUL 29 1967

New England Newsclip

BSO films Beethoven story

Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra are featured in a two-part film entitled "Beethoven: Ordeal and Triumph." The McGraw-Hill film release presents Beethoven's music and portrays his life story, using as a theme his musical expression of the long struggle against despair caused by his loss of hearing.

The ABC color production in 16mm is designed for a wide range of audiences, both high school and adults.

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.

AUG 15 1967

New England Newsclip

BSO guests next season

Seven guest conductors will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at next season's Tuesday and Thursday concerts in Symphony Hall. With the exception of Charles Munch and Leopold Stokowski, each of the following will be making his Boston debut with the orchestra: Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, Seija Ozawa, Sixten Ehrling, Jorge Mester, and Julius Rudel.

Charles Wilson, who begins his second year as the orchestra's assistant conductor, also will conduct his first concerts with the BSO in the new season. Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will be on the podium for the remaining 12 concerts.

Charles Munch has programed the Berlioz "Romeo and Juliet" Symphony with vocal soloists Rosalind Elias, Jerold Siena, and Donald Gramm. Mr. Leinsdorf has scheduled two special events: a concert performance of the first act of Wagner's "Die Walküre" with Claire Watson, Jess Thomas, and Kenneth Smith on Oct. 3; and Haydn's "The Creation" with Beverly Sills, John McCollum, Ara Berberian, and the New England Conservatory Chorus on Feb. 20 and 22.

The list of soloists for the orchestral concerts includes pianists Lilian Kallir, John Browning, Rita Bouboulidi, and Gary Graffman. Mezzo-soprano Beverly Wolff will sing with the symphony on Jan. 2.

There are three Tuesday series, and two Thursday series. Complete subscription information may be obtained from the Subscription Office, Symphony Hall, Boston, or by telephoning CO 6-1492.

SUNDAY TELEGRAM
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 107,550
AUG 6 1967
New England Newsclip

Music

Israel Orchestra On Benefit Tour

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

Members of the Israel Philharmonic Orchestra are having a "busman's holiday" in this country for the benefit of the Israel Emergency Fund.

Since July 29, when the orchestra gave the first of three concerts in Philharmonic Hall, New York City, conductors from all over the world have offered their services in this endeavor.

Management explains the tour as the result of "a dramatic chain of events which began on June 21st of this year."

William Steinberg, conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony and a co-founder of the Israel Philharmonic, received a cable requesting his assistance in raising money for the Israel Emergency Fund.

Normally, a tour of 15 American cities in 23 days, would require about a year to prepare. The entire tour was arranged in two weeks' time.

Contributing conductors include Steinberg, Eugene Ormandy, Eliahu Inbal, and one to be announced. Soloists are Richard Tucker, tenor; Daniel Barenboim, Rudolf Serkin, Claudio Arrau and Van Cliburn, pianists, Yehudi Menuhin, violinist; Jacqueline Du Pre, cellist.

The orchestra will not appear in this area. Remaining concerts will be given in Pittsburgh, Chicago, the West Coast and Maryland.

GRIM SITUATION Erich Leinsdorf of the Boston Symphony gave a hard-fact report of the world's music situation to Music Educators National Conference which was recently in session at Tanglewood.

His premise was that "the age of the airplane has altered the world tremendously, not only for the professional international artist, but for the student, teacher, the entire world of music."

He likened the situation of the young musician to that of the high school boy who, at 18, joins one of the baseball teams in the major leagues instead of going down to the farm club where he first learns to bat and to field.

"We do not have time for this," said Leinsdorf. "We are too shorthanded. We do not have enough candidates."

Leinsdorf continued, "We are caught in a double squeeze. The public wants more music, and musicians want longer contracts. We have orchestras that look to longer seasons, but they do not have enough musicians.

"Not only are we taking teenagers into our major orchestras, but as fast as we take them, we lose them to other orchestras which offer them positions as principals."

Discussing the repertory situation, Leinsdorf stated that a young player, entering the Boston Symphony, is required to play from 150 to 200 different pieces the first year.

"Nobody can come equipped with that amount of knowledge," said Leinsdorf. "Even the best sight-reader may, after a few weeks of this constant exposure to new material, become fatigued, cross-eyed, and develop migrain headaches."

THOMSON'S BYRON — A scene from Virgil Thomson's new opera, "Byron," libretto by Jack Larson, commissioned by the Metropolitan Opera through the Ford Foundation, will have its world premiere at the Newport Opera Festival.

The reading will take place on Aug. 24 at 4:30 p.m. at The Elms. This is an added event in the Met's Verdi Festival at Newport, Aug. 17-26.

Thomson will be in Newport a few days prior to the performance to supervise final rehearsals. The scene from his opera is between Lord and Lady Byron, but Lady Melbourne also makes an appearance, as to several other ladies.

The role of Lord Byron will be sung by Kenneth Riegel, and that of Lady Byron by Karen Wilson.

SARATOGA NEWS — With the abrupt cancellation of the Russian Festival of Music and Dance, Saratoga Performing Arts center is presenting folk singer Joan Baez as a substitute attraction. Miss Baez will sing at Saratoga tomorrow night.

Eugene Ormandy and Lorin Maazel share the podium before the Philadelphia Orchestra for this week's concerts, Thursday through Sunday nights. Thursday, Maazel; Friday, Ormandy with Szymon Goldberg, violin soloist; Saturday, Maazel; Sunday, Ormandy with Jorge Bolet, piano soloist.

PATRIOT-LEDGER (e)
QUINCY, MASS.
CIRC. 51,100
JUN 22 1967
New England Newsclip

VALUABLE EXCHANGE

The first year of an unique and highly-successful project in international relations has just been completed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Japan Philharmonic.

In this pioneering program, these orchestras exchanged two string players apiece for an entire season. Boston Symphony violist Robert Karol and cellist Richard Kapuscinski went to Tokyo to play with the Japan Philharmonic, while two Japanese musicians came to Boston to take their place.

Unquestionably, this long-term, personal exchange of musicians was a great success in both countries, both on the musical and personal levels. The orchestras and their four exchange musicians are enthusiastic. The Japanese say that their visit to the United States has provided "uncountable advantages for understanding each other."

The idea for this exchange originated with Boston Symphony violinist George Zazofsky, who felt that the Boston Symphony's foreign tours were important but impersonal, with little time or opportunity to meet with the people of the countries visited by the orchestra. "I believed the long residence by an individual performer in a foreign capital would enable much freer exchange," Mr. Zazofsky explains.

Unfortunately, the continuation of this exchange program is jeopardized by a lack of money.

The U.S. State Department contributed one round-trip ticket and payment for 140 pounds of air freight per musician. But this meant that the American musicians had to pay the cost of travel for their families. At the least, the State Department's Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs should pay the travel expenses for all those participating in a program which so clearly meets its objectives of contributing to international good will and understanding.

In addition, there is a good opportunity for private foundations and professional musicians' organizations to assist in this program by contributing toward the cost of living expenses of the exchange musicians.

The exchange musicians were paid their regular salaries by their home orchestras and the Japanese also received a $10 a day supplement. However, the American musicians went to Japan at personal financial sacrifice because of the high living costs in Tokyo, and both went heavily into debt. The Japanese came alone, and thus managed better financially.

It should not be necessary for persons engaged in an international good will program to go into debt. We hope that foundations and musicians' organizations will recognize the benefits from an exchange program of this type, and will offer assistance so that it can continue.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900
JUL 8 1967
New England Newsclip

As I Hear It

Why Men Leave Home

By Jay C. Rosenfeld

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE ~~TANGLEWOOD~~ debut of Yehudi Menuhin (accent on first syllable) last week brought up the subject of the peregrinations of artists. Musicians, more than others, seem to cross frontiers in the pursuit of their art, and more often than not put down roots in a new land.

There was a time when music students just had to go to Europe for the finishing touches of their studies, but that is no longer necessary. And, strangely enough, while once anyone with a name which indicated that he was European had a head start in the American public's view, these days Americans get a foothold in European opera houses, for instance, easier than they find opportunities here.

* * *

IT HAS PLEASED Menuhin to live in England and Switzerland in recent years. He is not the first by any means to have made such a decision. The first one of whom I have heard was Benjamin West, a Pennsylvania-born artist who left America in 1760 at the age of 23, lived to be 82, was appointed historical painter to George III, succeeded Sir Joshua Reynolds as president of the Royal Academy, became a British citizen and was buried in St. Paul's.

On the other hand, a recent event added another tangent to this subject. When poet laureate John Masefield died a short while ago, unofficial quarterbacks immediately set to work finding a successor. Among many, the name of W.H. Auden was suggested, but his eligibility was questioned since he had adopted United States citizenship.

* * *

OUR EARLIEST literary men went to Europe to study or for association with their peers in England, France and Germany, but several, notably Washington Irving and James Fenimore Cooper, stayed for long terms. They were attracted, no doubt, by the culture Europe offered in those years and also by the opportunities that continent provided for children's education. No one ever questioned their right or their motives.

In succeeding years there have been waves of scholars, musicians, literary men, artists and probably unashamed Sybarites who found in Europe whatever they may have lacked in America. There may even have been some whose patriotism may have been a factor. But expatriates in whatever degree—be it a search for academic fulfillment, exile, defection, treason or pure wanderlust—have been a small faction of our population always.

* * *

FOLLOWING WORLD War I there was the famous circle around Gertrude Stein which attracted Hemingway and Fitzgerald, composer Virgil Thomson and a fringe of others, including James Joyce. The Hemingway-Fitzgerald team remotely paralleled another association of literary names in the beginning of the 19th century. Byron and Shelley found England less attractive than other countries. One in each era was moved quixotically to enlist in the defense of another country.

The numbers of young singers who find opportunities in Europe are both significant and deplorable. No one of these young artists has any thought whatsoever of changing allegiance. But history reveals that over the years we have lost a few major figures, such as Henry James and T.S. Eliot. However, our late summer neighbor, "cottager" Edith Wharton, never forswore loyalty to this country, nor did Bernard Berenson, for all the years they spent in Europe. The case of Ezra Pound is sui generis.

* * *

ARTISTS AS A class have always been more or less migratory. Musicians find that the season "down under" makes possible tours at times when they might otherwise be "at liberty." But in the arts which do not require a stage, there are still other factors which effect their followers' choice of residence. It seems to please us not to relinquish John Singer Sargent. We would like to claim him as an American painter. Unlike Longfellow who stated, as a boy, that he was born in Portland while his parents were traveling in Europe, Sargent was born in Florence, where his father and mother had gone for "a change of air and scene" with no premonition that this journey would result in their permanent establishment abroad. We are also loath to let Whistler go, although he, too, became a president of the Royal Society of British Artists.

* * *

MILLIONS OF Europeans came to this country to start a new life. The almost total general classification of these immigrants came to be known as "greenhorns," people without any special education and who were armed only with courage, determination and hope. On the level of men of maturity in the arts there have been infinitely fewer. In the two-way traffic, there have been those who preferred voluntary exile because they preferred other systems of government, plain snobs, those fleeing uphappy love affairs, and doubtless others who do not fit in any cubbyhole.

Even Beethoven in some of his moments of deepest despair thought of America as a haven of sympathy and prosperity!

100

HERALD (e)
NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
CIRC. 32,400

AUG 17 1967 New England Newsclip

67

A Day's Excursion Through the Berkshires

By EUGENE L. GORLEWSKI

If late-summer lethargy has started to set in and the usual summer haunts have begun to lose their appeal, one might do worse than to consider a day-long, close-to-home auto trip through the Berkshire Mts. as suggested by the American Petroleum Institute.

Starting in the New Britain area, the trip is a sampling of the cultural and historical attractions to be found while traveling through an area straddling the Connecticut-Massachusetts line between Winsted and Pittsfield. The beauty of the trip is that you can make it as long or as short as you wish, stopping only at those places which interest you.

Beginning at Route 10 in Plainville, drive north, joining Route 44 in Avon. Drive northwest on 44 until you reach New Hartford, where you turn right on Route 219 to find

Compensating Reservoir

This state-maintained recreation area is open daily from 6 a.m. to 9 p.m. Picnic areas open at 10 a.m. The reservoir offers fishing, swimming areas, launching sites for private boats and fireplaces for picnickers. Maintained by the Water Bureau of the Metropolitan District, there is no admission charge. Parking costs 50 cents on weekdays, a dollar on Sundays and holidays. The boat-launching fee is $1.50. Water-skiing and amphibious aircraft are prohibited.

Returning to Route 44, continue north to Winsted, turning right to head north on Route 8. On meeting Route 20 near Stockbridge, take a sharp right to head east on 20, following signs which indicate a left turn on Geroge Carter road where, after seven-tenths of a mile, you will reach

Jacob's Pillow

The dance festival at Jacob's Pillow is now in its 35th year. One of many cultural attractions which bloom in the Berkshires during the summer, it has acquired the reputation of presenting first-rate performances of old and new dance forms. Performances are generally on Tuesday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday evenings, with matinees on Thursday, Friday and Saturday. The schedule, however, varies from week to week, so it might be wise to call the box office under the Becket, Mass., exchange.

All matinees at Jacob's Pillow begin at 3 p.m., with evening performances at 8:40 p.m. Ticket prices range from $3.50 to $4.50, depending on the day and whether you reserve a foam rubber seat or a metal seat. Remaining on this summer's schedule are performances of classical ballet, Polynesian, modern, indo-American and Korean dance.

Continuing west on Route 20, turn left on Route 8 and drive north to Dalton. Reaching the center of town, pass straight through the second traffic light (where Route 8 bears right) and take the first left-hand turn. At the bottom of the drive is located a maintained by the Crane Paper Co. The museum, open June through September, Monday through Friday, from 2 to 5 p.m., shows how paper currency has been made for the last 200 years. There is no admission charge.

Paper Museum

Returning to the main route, drive north to Route 9, taking this road west into Pittsfield. This city houses several interesting attractions, including the Pittsfield State Forest and the Berkshire Atheneum, a municipal library which peserves memorabilia of Herman Melville.

Heading through the center of Pittsfield, turn right on Route 20 driving west to reach, after five miles, the

Hancock Shaker Village

This village is an on-the-spot historical restoration of the community populated by this interesting Christian sect between 1780 and 1960. Eighteen buildings and hundreds of rooms of furniture show the Shaker legacy in art and craftsmanship. Jellies and preserves on Shaker recipes are offered for sale.

Open from June 1 to Oct. 15, the exhibit holds daily hours from 9:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tours are offered at 10:30 a.m. and 3 p.m. Admission is a dollar for adults, 50 cents for children under 12.

Returning to Route 7, drive south to Lenox, turning southwest on Route 183 to arrive at

Tanglewood

The summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra offers performances of the finest caliber on Friday and Saturday evening, with matinees on Sunday afternoons. The last weekend of the season, Aug. 18-20, includes Wagner programs Friday and Sunday, with a performance of the Verdi Requiem Saturday evening.

Performances begin Friday at 7 p.m. Saturday at 8 p.m. and Sunday at 2:30 p.m. Tickets range from $3.50 to $7.00.

Continuing south on Route 183, pass west of Stockbridge and arrive at

Chesterwood

This is the home of Daniel Chester French (1850-1931), the famous sculptor who was commissioned to create the Lincoln Memorial in Washington, D.C. Open daily from the middle of June through Labor Day from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., Chesterwood contains many examples of French's work, including the six-foot plaster cast of his statue of Lincoln and his three-foot bronze of the famous "Minute Man." Admission is one dollar.

From Chesterwood, continue south on 183 to Route 7, turning east on Route 44 at Canaan, and thence back to Avon, Route 10, and home.

HISTORICAL VILLAGE — The famous Round Stone Barn, built in 1826, burned in 1864, and replaced by the present superstructure several months later, is one of many historical sites in the Hancock Shaker Village, a restoration at Hancock, Mass.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ROME SENTINEL
Thursday, August 8, 1967

Tanglewood Country

Berkshires Attract Many

By Charles Yarbrough

PITTSFIELD, Mass. — High way 7 rambles the ancient Berkshire Hills across Western Massachusetts as though the engineers enjoyed scenery more than road-building.

Bless 'em for their legacy to today's motoring shun-pikers — that rare and lackadaisical legion of the Unhurrieds.

The two lanes of Highway 7 prowl a land of spectacular tranquility, crowned by the serene and cragless Mt. Greylock's 3,491 feet. It is a land of 90,000 acres of forest; white birches the exclamation points in a scene that needs no emphasis.

There are 90 wooded lakes and ponds; 247 trout streams and 20 ski areas; summer homes and camps for children; youth hostels and expensive chalets; appealingly-aged inns in their nests of venerable trees.

If it's true that Massachusetts rejected federal funds to avoid a high-speed through-way along this route which seldom strays more than 15 miles from New York State's eastern boundary, it is some of the best money unspent in highway history.

It is the region that inspired Nathaniel Hawthorne's "Tanglewood Tales," and long-remembered works from other authors.

If, during a pause at the side of the road you think you hear a symphony, you may well indeed. Tanglewood, with Hawthorne's cottage on the 200-acre grounds, has become internationally famed as the summer home of the Boston Symphony for 31 years and the Berkshire Musical Festival, which runs until Aug. 20.

Ted Shawn's Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival at Lenox; the Williamstown Summer Theater and the Berkshire Theater Festival in Stockbridge hold forth through August.

Helped by Expo 67

Elsewhere, the area bounds in summer playhouses, musical programs, antique shops and excellent eating places. There are 14 golf courses; swimming pools at the inns, tennis courts, riding trails and some of the best portions of the Appalachian Trail for exploring.

New vigor has come to the Berkshires this year through the reflected glamour of Canada's Expo 67 in Montreal and much of it flows on Highway 7. It isn't the quickest way to or from Montreal, but for tranquilizing effect alone, it's worth the routing, one way at least.

A boat trailer or a slow-paced sightseer may reduce your speed. The scenery 'round and about was put there several million years ago to help you through the pause.

The Berkshires cannily anticipated the transient traffic to Canada — existing accommodations have been refurbished and enlarged and new ones have been built.

Anywhere else, the contrast of old and new in inns and hotels might be startling. Up here, there are even such things as "new" landmarks.

One of the better examples of the subtle change can be found in the village of South Egremont, a few miles off Highway 7.

Here is the fine old mansion known since 1820 as the Gifford House. It was acquired by Nathaniel Benjamin, by tradition a typical New England storekeeper, in 1830, but the "Gifford House" appellation stayed on — as did Nathaniel, who rests in the old town cemetery.

Still the Gifford House, it was converted to a summer inn many years ago; then was taken over by Paul Gifford Anglim, a theatrical manager, who restored it to early glory.

Named After His Dog

Several months ago — and almost overnight without causing a ripple in town tradition, history and conservatism — it suddenly became the Red Saber Inn, purchased by William H. Bender, formerly of Reston, Va.

And whence "Red Saber?" Red Saber is the Benders' highly pedigreed Dachshund, typically a dog-and-a-half long and half-a-dog high.

A modernized old coach house offers several motor units; there are singles and doubles in the inn; a lounge in its historical old setting and an umbrella-lined outdoor pool.

A brochure says "pets on leash or in rooms are welcome, provided they have no desire to tangle with a 30-pound, low and dumpy, sometimes grumpy Dachshund."

Storekeeper Nathaniel Benjamin would crawl in his crypt!

TRANSCRIPT (e)
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
CIRC. 13,350

AUG 31 1967 New England Newsclip

Berkshire Area Resort Business Is Up 2 Per Cent

Despite bad weather Berkshire resort business was two per cent better than last year, it was reported yesterday by John V. Geary, executive director of the Berkshire Hills Conference.

Mr. Geary said that although attendance at Tanglewood was down from the preceding year there was an increase in attendance at the Williamstown and Stockbridge summer theaters. Lodges and motels also attracted more persons than last year.

The executive director said that although the two per cent increase was less than the three or four per cent increases experienced for the past several years it was a good showing because many other New England resort areas are complaining that their business decreased.

Mr. Geary said he could not assess the effect tourism had on the general economy, but that it is his belief, after talking with merchants, that the visitors had greatly helped to increase business.

Other New England resort areas have reported they were hurt not only by weather conditions but also by Expo '67 in Montreal.

Norman H. Cook, executive director of the Cape Cod Chamber of Commerce, said Expo '67 and the weather were responsible for a $5 million drop in resort revenues from the previous year. The Cape's resort industry grossed $121 million last year.

Boston, on the other hand, was one of the few New England areas to report that Expo '67 had resulted in a big increase of summer visitors.

MUSIC EDUCATORS
JOURNAL
WASHINGTON, D. C.
6 Tl. a YR. 41,600

JAN 1967

MENC

Tanglewood Symposium Project

■ The roles of music in contemporary life will receive national attention next summer when some fifty leaders in the arts and other professions meet in Lenox, Massachusetts, for a ten-day Tanglewood Symposium sponsored by the Music Educators National Conference. All sessions will be held at the Berkshire Music Center, Erich Leinsdorf, director. Tanglewood is the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Scheduling of the symposium coincides with the sixtieth anniversary year of the Conference.

Cooperating with the MENC in this project are the Berkshire Music Center, Boston University, and the Theodore Presser Foundation.

Louis G. Wersen, President of MENC and director of music education in Philadelphia, announced that the symposium—a "first" of its kind—will consider the "Roles and Functions of Music in a Democratic Society," with musicians, educators, businessmen, philosophers, labor leaders, sociologists, scientists, and others sharing views on the unique contributions of music to society.

In view of many developments in the United States and especially in education, such a project is timely and appropriate. The symposium will clarify and define more clearly the purposes and the significant, unique functions of music in American society and in education. The purpose of this nation-wide project is to explore the maximum potentials of music education for all citizens of the United States.

Four phases of the project are proposed:

1. Initial planning and discussion at division conferences this year;
2. The symposium itself at Tanglewood in the summer of 1967 which will be limited in attendance to the nature of the meetings;
3. Follow-up sessions and conferences at state and local levels during 1967 and 1968; and
4. Further development at the national convention of MENC in Seattle, Washington, in 1968.

Serving as director of the project is Robert A. Choate, professor of music, School of Fine and Applied Arts, Boston University, and past president of the MENC. Dates for the symposium will be July 26 through August 5, 1967.

The monographs, publications, dissemination of information, and follow-up conferences should help greatly to undergird, reinforce, and interpret programs in music education at all levels; these should also assist teachers, supervisors, and administrators in exploring and discerning possible directions and dimensions in the years ahead.

The Detroit News
D. 682,631 SUN. 917,360

APR 13 1967

Teachers Meet

Music Is Called a 'Must' for U.S.

By ARMAND GEBERT
Detroit News Staff Writer

When Louis Wersen, president of the Music Educators National Conference, talks about the importance of music to American society he uses a practical tone and excludes no one.

Wersen maintains that music is a "must" in these times.

"Music does something for the emotional health of an individual," he said, "and the responsibilities of the American education system to provide children with insights on how music can best serve their own needs is important."

These are some of the matters being considered by more than 3,000 music educators from a 10-state region attending the four-day convention which opened today at Cobo Hall.

Wersen said they will prepare for a major project and conference this summer when the conference holds a two-week "Tanglewood Symposium" in Lenox, Mass. Besides music educators, the event will be attended by representatives from science, sociology, theology and business.

Training in the sciences and other material subjects should be balanced with cultural activities, the educator said.

"Music requires cooperation, discipline and mutual respect," he said. "It integrates. It can't be successful otherwise. These are its important values."

These lessons are learned in the schools where children are given the opportunity to participate in music group performances, he said.

LOUIS WERSEN

Wersen, who has been director of the Philadelphia public schools' division of music education since 1944, said this country leads the world in providing young people with opportunities to participate in group performances.

Performances by elementary junior and senior high school and college and university groups will be presented during the convention, which is under the auspices of the conference's north central division.

The Detroit convention is one of six division meetings scheduled by the conference this spring in different parts of the country. Music educators are here from Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, North Dakota, Ohio, South Dakota and Wisconsin.

TRANSCRIPT (e)
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
CIRC. 13,500

APR 20 1967

New England Newsclip

BU Art Division Plans Tanglewood Summer School

A professional art school is taking up residence at Tanglewood this summer thanks to the Berkshire Music Center and Boston University.

At the invitation of Erich Leinsdorf, director of the Center, Prof. David Aronson and other members of the Boston University Division of Art are establishing the summer art program. Aronson is a distinguished painter and sculptor.

The school will be conducted on two levels, basic and advanced, with each level providing instruction in drawing and painting. Six semester hours credit is given for each level.

The eight-week school is open to serious students of art in college and to exceptionally qualified high school students.

A series of visiting critics will join the summer school faculty in lectures, seminars and group critiques.

Students in the program will become members of the Tanglewood community, which revolves around the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which summers at the Berkshire resort.

The art school will join schools in drama, dance, theater and music which are also being offered by Boston University and the Music Center.

NORTH CAROLINA
MUSIC EDUCATOR
RALEIGH, N.C.
5 Tl. a YR.-1,700

MAY 1967

MENC

TANGLEWOOD SYMPOSIUM MOVES AHEAD

MENC has invited hundreds of music educators across the country to help shape content for MENC's 1967 Tanglewood Symposium, now officially titled "Music in American Society." Special sessions at each of this spring's MENC Division conventions include presentation of six major "theme" issues for the Symposium. Discussion groups and audience reaction will be summarized in a document to be sent to persons participating in the Symposium at Tanglewood this summer.

According to Robert A. Choate of Boston University, project director, membership at the July 23-August 5 Symposium will include 15 music educators, 15 leaders from other disciplines and professions, five consultants, and four or five major speakers. Names of these participants will be announced shortly.

MENC president Louis G. Wersen recently appointed five national consultants to serve as group leaders at the Symposium. Two are former national presidents of MENC: Allen C. Britton of the University of Michigan and Karl D. Ernst of California State College at Hayward. Another is MENC's current president-elect, Wiley Housewright of Florida State University. The others come from outside the field of music education: Max Kaplan, sociologist and writer, and David P. McAllester, professor of anthropology at Wesleyan University.

The five consultants, Mr. Wersen and Mr. Choate met recently at MENC headquarters in Washington to set guidelines for the Tanglewood Symposium. As a result of this meeting, six major topic issues were selected for Division discussion: (1) Music in the Emerging Society; (2) Values: Music as Means and Ends; (3) Music of our Time; (4) Technology; (5) Economic Support; (6) Creativity: Its Nature and Nurture. The April Music Educators Journal features an article by Mr. Choate and Mr. Kaplan introducing these issues and presenting related questions and a bibliography.

SYMPOSIUM ON MUSICAL EDUCATION

MUSIC EDUCATORS
JOURNAL
WASHINGTON, D. C.
6 Tl. a YR. 41,600

JAN 1967

MENC

Tanglewood Symposium Project

■ The roles of music in contemporary life will receive national attention next summer when some fifty leaders in the arts and other professions meet in Lenox, Massachusetts, for a ten-day Tanglewood Symposium sponsored by the Music Educators National Conference. All sessions will be held at the Berkshire Music Center, Erich Leinsdorf, director. Tanglewood is the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Scheduling of the symposium coincides with the sixtieth anniversary year of the Conference.

Cooperating with the MENC in this project are the Berkshire Music Center, Boston University, and the Theodore Presser Foundation.

Louis G. Wersen, President of MENC and director of music education in Philadelphia, announced that the symposium—a "first" of its kind—will consider the "Roles and Functions of Music in a Democratic Society," with musicians, educators, businessmen, philosophers, labor leaders, sociologists, scientists, and others sharing views on the unique contributions of music to society.

In view of many developments in the United States and especially in education, such a project is timely and appropriate. The symposium will clarify and define more clearly the purposes and the significant, unique functions of music in American society and in education. The purpose of this nation-wide project is to explore the maximum potentials of music education for all citizens of the United States.

Four phases of the project are proposed:

1. Initial planning and discussion at division conferences this year;
2. The symposium itself at Tanglewood in the summer of 1967 which will be limited in attendance to the nature of the meetings;
3. Follow-up sessions and conferences at state and local levels during 1967 and 1968; and
4. Further development at the national convention of MENC in Seattle, Washington, in 1968.

Serving as director of the project is Robert A. Choate, professor of music, School of Fine and Applied Arts, Boston University, and past president of the MENC. Dates for the symposium will be July 26 through August 5, 1967.

The monographs, publications, dissemination of information, and follow-up conferences should help greatly to undergird, reinforce, and interpret programs in music education at all levels; these should also assist teachers, supervisors, and administrators in exploring and discerning possible directions and dimensions in the years ahead. ■

The Detroit News
D. 622,731 S. NL. 917,300

APR 13 1967

Teachers Meet

Music Is Called a 'Must' for U.S.

By ARMAND GEBERT
Detroit News Staff Writer

When Louis Wersen, president of the Music Educators National Conference, talks about the importance of music to American society he uses a practical tone and excludes no one.

Wersen maintains that music is a "must" in these times.

"Music does something for the emotional health of an individual," he said, "and the responsibilities of the American education system to provide children with insights on how music can best serve their own needs is important."

These are some of the matters being considered by more than 3,000 music educators from a 10-state region attending the four-day convention which opened today at Cobo Hall.

Wersen said they will prepare for a major project and conference this summer when the conference holds a two-week "Tanglewood Symposium" in Lenox, Mass. Besides music educators, the event will be attended by representatives from science, sociology, theology and business.

Training in the sciences and other material subjects should be balanced with cultural activities, the educator said.

"Music requires cooperation, discipline and mutual respect," he said. "It integrates. It can't be successful otherwise. These are its important values."

These lessons are learned in the schools where children are given the opportunity to participate in music group performances, he said.

LOUIS WERSEN

Wersen, who has been director of the Philadelphia public schools' division of music education since 1944, said this country leads the world in providing young people with opportunities to participate in group performances.

Performances by elementary junior and senior high school and college and university groups will be presented during the convention, which is under the auspices of the conference's north central division.

The Detroit convention is one of six division meetings scheduled by the conference this spring in different parts of the country. Music educators are here from Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, North Dakota, Ohio, South Dakota and Wisconsin.

TRANSCRIPT (e)
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
CIRC. 13,500

APR 20 1967

New England Newsclip

BU Art Division Plans Tanglewood Summer School

A professional art school is taking up residence at Tanglewood this summer thanks to the Berkshire Music Center and Boston University.

At the invitation of Erich Leinsdorf, director of the Center, Prof. David Aronson and other members of the Boston University Division of Art are establishing the summer art program. Aronson is a distinguished painter and sculptor.

The school will be conducted on two levels, basic and advanced, with each level providing instruction in drawing and painting. Six semester hours credit is given for each level.

The eight-week school is open to serious students of art in college and to exceptionally qualified high school students.

A series of visiting critics will join the summer school faculty in lectures, seminars and group critiques.

Students in the program will become members of the Tanglewood community, which revolves around the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which summers at the Berkshire resort.

The art school will join schools in drama, dance, theater and music which are also being offered by Boston University and the Music Center.

NORTH CAROLINA
MUSIC EDUCATOR
RALEIGH, N.C.
5 Tl. a YR.-1,700

MAY 1967

MENC

TANGLEWOOD SYMPOSIUM MOVES AHEAD

MENC has invited hundreds of music educators across the country to help shape content for MENC's 1967 Tanglewood Symposium, now officially titled "Music in American Society." Special sessions at each of this spring's MENC Division conventions include presentation of six major "theme" issues for the Symposium. Discussion groups and audience reaction will be summarized in a document to be sent to persons participating in the Symposium at Tanglewood this summer.

According to Robert A. Choate of Boston University, project director, membership at the July 23-August 5 Symposium will include 15 music educators, 15 leaders from other disciplines and professions, five consultants, and four or five major speakers. Names of these participants will be announced shortly.

MENC president Louis G. Wersen recently appointed five national consultants to serve as group leaders at the Symposium. Two are former national presidents of MENC: Allen C. Britton of the University of Michigan and Karl D. Ernst of California State College at Hayward. Another is MENC's current president-elect, Wiley Housewright of Florida State University. The others come from outside the field of music education: Max Kaplan, sociologist and writer, and David P. McAllester, professor of anthropology at Wesleyan University.

The five consultants, Mr. Wersen and Mr. Choate met recently at MENC headquarters in Washington to set guidelines for the Tanglewood Symposium. As a result of this meeting, six major topic issues were selected for Division discussion: (1) Music in the Emerging Society; (2) Values: Music as Means and Ends; (3) Music of our Time; (4) Technology; (5) Economic Support; (6) Creativity: Its Nature and Nurture. The April Music Educators Journal features an article by Mr. Choate and Mr. Kaplan introducing these issues and presenting related questions and a bibliography.

102

GLENS FALLS, N. Y.
TIMES
D 8,500

JUL 17 1967

Invited to Attend Tanglewood Event

DR. MAURICE C. WHITNEY

Dr. Maurice C. Whitney, coordinator of the music department in the City School District, is one of 30 leaders from across the nation who have been invited to participate in a symposium on "Music in American Society" July 23 to Aug. 2 at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass.

The purpose of the symposium is to consider the unique functions of music in a changing society and to develop projections for music in all levels of education throughout the United States.

The invited symposium participants will include representatives of music, industry, government, sociology, theology and communications, as well as 15 music educators from colleges, universities and public school systems.

Louis G. Wersen, president of the 54,000-member Music Educators National Conference which is sponsoring the symposium, has announced that honorary sponsors will include Mrs. Serge Kousevitzky, Erich Leinsdorf, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Harold C. Case, presdent of Boston University; Roger L. Stevens, chairman of the National Council on the Arts, and Governor John Volpe of Massachusetts.

Among the national authorities who will address the group are Samuel B. Gould, chancellor of the State University of New York; Mr. Leinsdorf, Stan Kenton, Los Angeles orchestra leader; Harry S. Broudy, professor of philosophy of education, University of Illinois, and F. S. C. Northrop, professor emeritus of philosophy, Yale University.

The symposium is in cooperation with the Berkshire Music Center, the Theodore Presser Foundation and the Boston University School of Fine and Applied Arts.

NEWS (e)
BANGOR, ME.
CIRC. 79,750

JUL 7 1967

New England Newsclip

Boston Music Conference Is Planned

LENOX, Mass. — The Boston Symphony Orchestra is sponsoring a music critics conference, particularly for members of the Music Critics Association at Tanglewood Aug. 9 — 13 during the festival of Contemporary American Music and the orchestra's regular Berkshire Festival concerts. There will be discussions during the day, concerts at night, with a complete schedule forthcoming later.

The orchestra will host a reception-dinner Wednesday evening, Aug. 9, and the Berkshire Eagle will sponsor a similar affair the following evening.

Arrangements for accommodations may be made individually through the Berkshire Hills Conference (John Geary), 100 North St., Pittsfield, Mass. 01203 (telephone 413-443-9187).

HERALD TRAVELER (M)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 240,000

JUL 26 1967

New England Newsclip

At Tanglewood Symposium

Leinsdorf Sees Need For Education in Arts

By ROBERT A. CHOATE

Professor of Music, Boston University, and Director, Tanglewood Symposium

An initial 24 hours at the Tanglewood Symposium on "Music in American Society," which has brought 60 leaders from across the country to Heaton Hall, in Stockbridge, produced statements by Boston Symphony director Erich Leinsdorf and two professors reinforcing the ned for education in the arts in America.

Speaking as music director of one of the country's leading symphony orchestras, Mr. Leinsdorf made a plea for stronger preparation of young musical performers. "We do not have enough candidates," he stated at the opening session of the symposium held Sunday afternoon in Chamber Music Hall on the Tanglewood grounds. He described the youngster—"just out of braces"—who is hired as a symphony orchestra member one year and the next is offered a position as principal cellist of a major orchestra in another city.

Leinsdorf expressed the view that "provincial standards are out for music in today's electronically influenced society." Music students must graduate equipped for the "international circuit." And although the fledgling performer "plays instruments better than ever before, he knows less what it is all about" when it comes to the daily pressures of professional performance.

The symposium, sponsored by the Music Educators National Conference in cooperation with the Berkshire Musical Center, the Theodore Presser Foundation, and the School of Find and Applied Arts of Boston University, has its primary purpose to define the future roles of music in society and to delineate implications for music education.

At Monday morning's session, Prof. Harry S. Broudy of the University of Illinois, stressed that "the good life, not science, not the humanities, not the arts, is the purpose of general education." And he emphasized that experience with the arts does "contribute to well-being in a unique way, by giving satisfaction and by intensifying every other kind of experience."

F. S. C. Northrop, Sterling professor of law and philosophy emeritus of Yale University, said we must provide opportunities both to directly perceive the arts and to understand them in terms of skills and theorq. He believes that "the modern world has made many new and trustworthy discoveries, but has misinterpreted them" by relying too much on the conviction that what is seen must be fact.

Mrs. Olga Koussevitsky addessed the morning symposium session informally, welcoming the group to the Tanglewood environment which, she said, provides for a great variety of activities and concerns related to music.

In the afternoon, three speakers responded to the addhesses of Profs. Broudy and Northrop: Ole Sand, director of the Center for the Study of Instruction, National Education Association, Washington, D. C.; William C. Hartshorn, supervisor in charge of the music section, Los Angeles City School Districts; and Ralph W. Tyler, chairman of the National Assessment Program, Chicago.

Participating in the symposium are representatives of music, education, industry, communications, labor, the foundations and many other areas of American life. Sesssions will continue through Saturday morning, with reports and recommendations coming out of five discussion groups. Next week, the 20 music educators involved will stay over for three additional days to formulate implications of the symposium for music education throughout the United States.

VISITOR
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
WEEKLY CIRC. 60,200

JUL 14 1967

New England Newsclip

Academic Festival

Those young people who are toying with the idea of dropping out of school ought to take a look at a few statistics. All things being equal, the average college graduate will amass $444,000 during his lifetime to a high school graduate's $303,000. For those who have completed but three, two or even one year of high school, total expected earnings drop off even more radically. While the cost of a college education may vary from between 7 and $13,000, the return from this investment has been computed at just about 10 to 1. Summarily, the present college graduate will earn $140,000 more during his lifetime than will his fellow student who dropped out four years earlier.

Now that the panorama of graduations has ended for another year, newly acquired and recently displayed sheepskins have added to the decor of many an American home. This past month has borne witness to something of a unique triumph of a triumverate in the home of the Boston Symphony Music Director, Doctor Erich Leinsdorf. Three new sheepskins adorn the Leinsdorf walls and all were acquired on the same day and at the same institution of higher learning.

Columbia University awarded the distinguished musician another honorary doctorate and to each of his sons respectively, a baccalaureate of laws and a baccalaureate of arts. Those who have sat spellbound listening to Erich Leinsdorf discourse upon divers cultural and scientific subjects are not at all surprised that the distinguished Viennese-born scholar celebrated a family Academic Festival Overture all his own!

Many young Americans now in the formative high school years could ascend comparable academic heights if they would realize that the educational experience on an advanced level is one of the greatest practical benefits of democracy.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900

JUL 28 1967

New England Newsclip

Key Question at Tanglewood Symposium: How To Broaden Music Education's Base

LENOX — A music educator's symposium here asked Paul Williams, 19-year-old editor of the folk-rock magazine Crawdaddy, what they could do to reach their students.

"Well," he said, "you can always get them to play 'Claire de Lune,' but they're not going to express themselves through that. Why don't you ask them to whistle something and then teach them to play that?"

The room was wreathed in smiles. Later there were nods of approval from the 14 participants when Williams suggested, to begin with, a study of the Beach Boys and the Beatles. When the panel discussion was to end, the audience called for more.

The mood here at the Tanglewood Symposium, entitled "Music in American Society" and sponsored by the 54,000-member Music Educators National Conference, was one of change.

A Course in Culture

"In an era of protest, irritation and rapid change," said Louis G. Wersen, president of the conference, "when the kids are telling us that our methods and music are irrelevant, we can't just sit back like fat cats."

The conference has amounted to a cram course in American culture — 30 speeches in four days from men in government, education, industry, the arts and sciences — because its planners think music education has been isolated from the mainstream of society.

"They are upset, but exhilarated," Wersen said of the symposium participants. "They've never heard some of these ideas, but they're anxious to think through the implications for music education."

Next week, after the speakers have gone home, the participants will produce a set of recommendations on the course of music education, which they hope will be a major influence in the field for years to come.

District Court

LEE — A 57-year-old Ashland Man, arrested by state police on the Massachusetts Turnpike for operating under the influence and drunkenness, was fined $3 in Lee District Court Friday.

Floyd Van Etten pleaded guilty to both charges. Judge John J. Dwyer assessed the $35 for operating under the influence and filed the second charge.

Brian F. Miller, 19, of Cheshire Road, Pittsfield, who pleaded not guilty to a speeding charge, was found guilty and fined $15.

Peter K. Hurley, of Tucker Street, Lenox, was fined $25 for speeding and $10 for driving without a license in possession.

Fined for speeding were: Russell A. McLean of Chicopee, $20; Stanley K. Healey of Westfield, Leonard W. Scott of Niantic, Conn., and Bernardino Pegrocco of Toronto, Canada, each $15.

102

GLENS FALLS, N. Y.
TIMES
D. 8,500

JUL 17 1967

Invited to Attend Tanglewood Event

DR. MAURICE C. WHITNEY

Dr. Maurice C. Whitney, coordinator of the music department in the City School District, is one of 30 leaders from across the nation who have been invited to participate in a symposium on "Music in American Society" July 23 to Aug. 2 at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass.

The purpose of the symposium is to consider the unique functions of music in a changing society and to develop projections for music in all levels of education throughout the United States.

The invited symposium participants will include representatives of music, industry, government, sociology, theology and communications, as well as 15 music educators from colleges, universities and public school systems.

Louis G. Wersen, president of the 54,000-member Music Educators National Conference which is sponsoring the symposium, has announced that honorary sponsors will include Mrs. Serge Kousevitzky, Erich Leinsdorf, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Harold C. Case, presdent of Boston University; Roger L. Stevens, chairman of the National Council on the Arts, and Governor John Volpe of Massachusetts.

Among the national authorities who will address the group are Samuel B. Gould, chancellor of the State University of New York; Mr. Leinsdorf, Stan Kenton, Los Angeles orchestra leader; Harry S. Broudy, professor of philosophy of education, University of Illinois, and F. S. C. Northrop, professor emeritus of philosophy, Yale University.

The symposium is in cooperation with the Berkshire Music Center, the Theodore Presser Foundation and the Boston University School of Fine and Applied Arts.

NEWS (e)
BANGOR, ME.
CIRC. 79,750

JUL 7 1967
New England Newsclip

Boston Music Conference Is Planned

LENOX, Mass. — The Boston Symphony Orchestra is sponsoring a music critics conference, particularly for members of the Music Critics Association at Tanglewood Aug. 9 — 13 during the festival of Contemporary American Music and the orchestra's regular Berkshire Festival concerts. There will be discussions during the day, concerts at night, with a complete schedule forthcoming later.

The orchestra will host a reception-dinner Wednesday evening, Aug. 9, and the Berkshire Eagle will sponsor a similar affair the following evening.

Arrangements for accommodations may be made individually through the Berkshire Hills Conference (John Geary), 100 North St., Pittsfield, Mass. 01203 (telephone 413-443-9187).

VISITOR
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
WEEKLY CIRC. 60,200

JUL 14 1967
New England Newsclip

Academic Festival

Those young people who are toying with the idea of dropping out of school ought to take a look at a few statistics. All things being equal, the average college graduate will amass $444,000 during his lifetime to a high school graduate's $303,000. For those who have completed but three, two or even one year of high school, total expected earnings drop off even more radically. While the cost of a college education may vary from between 7 and $13,000, the return from this investment has been computed at just about 10 to 1. Summarily, the present college graduate will earn $140,000 more during his lifetime than will his fellow student who dropped out four years earlier.

Now that the panorama of graduations has ended for another year, newly acquired and recently displayed sheepskins have added to the decor of many an American home. This past month has borne witness to something of a unique triumph of a triumverate in the home of the Boston Symphony Music Director, Doctor Erich Leinsdorf. Three new sheepskins adorn the Leinsdorf walls and all were acquired on the same day and at the same institution of higher learning.

Columbia University awarded the distinguished musician another honorary doctorate and to each of his sons respectively, a baccalaureate of laws and a baccalaureate of arts. Those who have sat spellbound listening to Erich Leinsdorf discourse upon divers cultural and scientific subjects are not at all surprised that the distinguished Viennese-born scholar celebrated a family Academic Festival Overture all his own!

Many young Americans now in the formative high school years could ascend comparable academic heights if they would realize that the educational experience on an advanced level is one of the greatest practical benefits of democracy.

HERALD TRAVELER (M)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 240,000

JUL 26 1967
New England Newsclip

At Tanglewood Symposium

Leinsdorf Sees Need For Education in Arts

By ROBERT A. CHOATE

Professor of Music, Boston University, and Director, Tanglewood Symposium

An initial 24 hours at the Tanglewood Symposium on "Music in American Society," which has brought 60 leaders from across the country to Heaton Hall, in Stockbridge, produced statements by Boston Symphony director Erich Leinsdorf and two professors reinforcing the ned for education in the arts in America.

Speaking as music director of one of the country's leading symphony orchestras, Mr. Leinsdorf made a plea for stronger preparation of young musical performers. "We do not have enough candidates," he stated at the opening session of the symposium held Sunday afternoon in Chamber Music Hall on the Tanglewood grounds. He described the youngster—"just out of braces"—who is hired as a symphony orchestra member one year and the next is offered a position as principal cellist of a major orchestra in another city.

Leinsdorf expressed the view that "provincial standards are out for music in today's electronically influenced society." Music students must graduate equipped for the "international circuit." And although the fledgling performer "plays instruments better than ever before, he knows less what it is all about" when it comes to the daily pressures of professional performance.

The symposium, sponsored by the Music Educators National Conference in cooperation with the Berkshire Musical Center, the Theodore Presser Foundation, and the School of Find and Applied Arts of Boston University, has its primary purpose to define the future roles of music in society and to delineate implications for music education.

At Monday morning's session, Prof. Harry S. Broudy of the University of Illinois, stressed that "the good life, not science, not the humanities, not the arts, is the purpose of general education." And he emphasized that experience with the arts does "contribute to well-being in a unique way, by giving satisfaction and by intensifying every other kind of experience."

F. S. C. Northrop, Sterling professor of law and philosophy emeritus of Yale University, said we must provide opportunities both to directly perceive the arts and to understand them in terms of skills and theory. He believes that "the modern world has made many new and trustworthy discoveries, but has misinterpreted them" by relying too much on the conviction that what is seen must be fact.

Mrs. Olga Koussevitsky addessed the morning symposium session informally, welcoming the group to the Tanglewood environment which, she said, provides for a great variety of activities and concerns related to music.

In the afternoon, three speakers responded to the addresses of Profs. Broudy and Northrop: Ole Sand, director of the Center for the Study of Instruction, National Education Association, Washington, D. C.; William C. Hartshorn, supervisor in charge of the music section, Los Angeles City School Districts; and Ralph W. Tyler, chairman of the National Assessment Program, Chicago.

Participating in the symposium are representatives of music, education, industry, communications, labor, the foundations and many other areas of American life. Sesssions will continue through Saturday morning, with reports and recommendations coming out of five discussion groups. Next week, the 20 music educators involved will stay over for three additional days to formulate implications of the symposium for music education throughout the United States.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,900

JUL 28 1967
New England Newsclip

Key Question at Tanglewood Symposium: How To Broaden Music Education's Base

LENOX — A music educator's symposium here asked Paul Williams, 19-year-old editor of the folk-rock magazine Crawdaddy, what they could do to reach their students.

"Well," he said, "you can always get them to play 'Claire de Lune,' but they're not going to express themselves through that. Why don't you ask them to whistle something and then teach them to play that?"

The room was wreathed in smiles. Later there were nods of approval from the 14 participants when Williams suggested, to begin with, a study of the Beach Boys and the Beatles. When the panel discussion was to end, the audience called for more.

The mood here at the Tanglewood Symposium, entitled "Music in American Society" and sponsored by the 54,000-member Music Educators National Conference, was one of change.

A Course in Culture

"In an era of protest, irritation and rapid change," said Louis G. Wersen, president of the conference, "when the kids are telling us that our methods and music are irrelevant, we can't just sit back like fat cats."

The conference has amounted to a cram course in American culture — 30 speeches in four days from men in government, education, industry, the arts and sciences — because its planners think music education has been isolated from the mainstream of society.

"They are upset, but exhilarated," Wersen said of the symposium participants. "They've never heard some of these ideas, but they're anxious to think through the implications for music education."

Next week, after the speakers have gone home, the participants will produce a set of recommendations on the course of music education, which they hope will be a major influence in the field for years to come.

District Court

LEE — A 57-year-old Ashland Man, arrested by state police on the Massachusetts Turnpike for operating under the influence and drunkenness, was fined $35 in Lee District Court Friday.

Floyd Van Etten pleaded guilty to both charges. Judge John J. Dwyer assessed the $35 for operating under the influence and filed the second charge.

Brian F. Miller, 19, of Cheshire Road, Pittsfield, who pleaded not guilty to a speeding charge, was found guilty and fined $15.

Peter K. Hurley, of Tucker Street, Lenox, was fined $25 for speeding and $10 for driving without a license in possession.

Fined for speeding were: Russell A. McLean of Chicopee, $20; Stanley K. Healey of Westfield, Leonard W. Scott of Niantic, Conn., and Bernardino Pegrocco of Toronto, Canada, each $15.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 885,000 SUN. 1,500,000

JUL 25 1967

EDUCATORS URGED TO HEED BEATLES

Music's Relevance to U.S. Life Is Tanglewood Topic

By JOHN LEO

Special to The New York Times

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., July 24—A conference of music educators, convened to seek ways of making music more relevant to American life, was told today that its quest might start with a study of the Beatles.

"If you want to know what youths are thinking and feeling," said William H. Cornog, superintendent of the New Trier Township High School District in Winnetka, Ill., "you cannot find anyone who speaks for them or to them more clearly than the Beatles."

"And you should also listen closely to the Rolling Stones, the Mamas and the Papas, Jefferson Airplane, Simon and Garfunkel and the Grateful Dead."

Mr. Cornog was among the opening speakers at the Tanglewood symposium, a 12-day gathering of some 40 music educators and advisers from other disciplines, sponsored by the Music Educators National Conference—a department of the National Education Association.

"Are you getting the messages from those most visible, center stage, in our culture?" Mr. Cornog asked. "They have something to communicate to the Establishment, or any part that will listen.

"Some of the musicians in that center stage, whom our young people applaud, to our Aristotelian annoyance, may look like the inmates of the asylum of Charenton, but if you have seen Peter Weiss's great play, "Marat/Sade," you know that we denizens of the rational world may be enjoying only an illusion of sanity."

Max Kaplan, professor of sociology at the University of South Florida, said the sociologist could help the music educator by studying the process by which new audiences, particularly the poor, can be introduced to the arts, and by studying school music systems in relation to community needs.

The feeling at the conference is that music has been pushed to the margin of school curriculum by the demand for more "useful," career-oriented training. Harry S. Broudy, professor of the philosophy of education at the University of Illinois, said that "the relentless pressure on the child to be literal, factual and scientifically terse" is a major stumbling block to esthetic education, even where the curriculum gives it full attention.

"These are indubitable virtues in modern man, and probably he could not survive without them," he said. "But if they do not wholly destroy the esthetic capacities, it becomes increasingly awkward to shift into the esthetic mood; what was simple and natural for the 5-year-old is embarrassing to the 12-year-old."

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 885,000 SUN. 1,500,000

JUL 28 1967

Music Teachers Listen to Youth At Symposium in Tanglewood

Special to The New York Times

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., July 27—A music educator's symposium here asked Paul Williams, 19-year-old editor of the folk-rock magazine Crawdaddy!, what they could do to reach their students.

"Well," he said, "you can always get them to play 'Claire de Lune,' but they're not going to express themselves through that. Why don't you ask them to whistle something and then teach them to play that?"

The room was wreathed in smiles. Later there were nods of approval from the 14 participants when Mr. Williams suggested to begin with a study of the Beach Boys and the Beatles. When the panel discussion was to end, the audience called for more.

The mood here at the Tanglewood Symposium, entitled "Music in American Society" and sponsored by the 54,000-member Music Educators National Conference, is one of change.

"In an era of protest, irritation and rapid change," said Louis G. Wersen, president of the conference, "when the kids are telling us that our methods and music are irrelevant, we can't just sit back like fat cats."

The conference has amounted to a cram course in American culture—30 speeches in four days from men in government, education, industry, the arts and sciences—because its planners think music education has been isolated from the mainstream of society.

Participants were excited but bewildered by a talk on "The Theoretic and Esthetic Components in Western Civilization" by F.S.C. Northrup, Sterling Professor of Philosophy and Law (emeritus) at Yale, and one on humanistic psychology by Abraham H. Maslow of Brandeis.

"They're upset, but exhilarated," Mr. Wersen said of the symposium participants. "They have never heard some of these ideas, but they are anxious to think through the implications for music education." Next week, after the speakers have gone home, the participants will produce a set of recommendations on the course of music education that they hope will be a major influence in the field for years to come.

"The musical Establishment in education, like all Establishments, is run along political lines," said one symposium participant. "It's rigidly run along 19th-century lines, suspicious of new music—both pop and classical—and it's still killing the love for music in most of the kids it touches."

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 191,400

AUG 19 1967
New England Newsclip

School music calls for renovation

By Clifford Barnes

Staff writer of The Christian Science Monitor

Stockbridge, Mass.

Who will need lessons on the cornet, when the school band is comprised of transistors and tapes, programed by IBM, led by Ampex, and played on a Clipshorn or Electro-Voice?

This probing question is typical of many that were raised at the Tanglewood Symposium on "Music in American Society," sponsored by the Music Educators National Conference (MENC). Psychologists, industrialists, communications experts, labor and religious leaders, professional musicians, and music educators met for 10 days, July 23 to Aug. 2, at Heaton Hall, here, to consider this topic.

A summary session representing study-group opinions and recommendations of the 44 symposium participants centered on the general opinion that all types of music belong to the mainstream of American life. If we respect the individual human being, we will respect his right to his own taste in music and his privilege to change it. All types of music should be written, studied, and performed in our schools.

Reports predicted basic changes for music in the years ahead. With completely serialized music, we may come to the elimination of the performer as a creative interpreter, or in the case of electronic music, the eradication of the performer entirely. Direct communication from composer to listener may overtake us. It is now possible to write or compose directly on the Cathode Ray face of the terminal of an IBM 2250, using a light pen.

A strong plea was made for breakthroughs among music educators to get up to date on computer and other technological concepts which may completely alter music of the future. Guest speakers emphasized that the main purpose of all music is to communicate, and that today's society has created great plurality in taste to meet the needs of all people. These speakers represented the fields of education, philosophy, sociology, psychology, and various foundations, as well as composers, conductors, opera specialists, and rock 'n' roll performers.

Members of the symposium were divided into groups to discuss five subjects areas: A Philosophy of the Arts for an Emerging Society, Music of our Time, The Impact and Potentials of Technology, Economic and Community Support for the Arts, and The Nature and Nurture of Creativity. These were supplemented by panel discussion called "Dimensions."

"Prospects for the Future: Television-Symphony-Opera" brought together Curtis W. Davis, of National Educational Television; Helen M. Thompson, of the American Symphony Orchestra League; and Sarah Caldwell, artistic director of the new National Opera Company and the Opera Company of Boston.

Stan Kenton, composer Gunther Schuller, Father Norman O'Connor (the "jazz priest"), and David McAllester (professor of anthropology, Wesleyan University) explored "Music of Our Time."

Oliver Daniel, of Broadcast Music, Inc., was moderator for "Economic and Community Support: Perspectives." His panel included men from the American Federation of Musicians, the U.S. Steel Foundation, American Telephone and Telegraph Co., and the U.S. Office of Education.

Suggested methods of bringing live music to more people included the "jazz-mobile, piano-mobile, dance-mobile, and chamber-music-mobile." The purpose of these moveable music-makers is to reach the masses with the widest possible spectrum of musical experience.

The 20 music educators involved in the project emphasized their belief that music must be placed at the core of the school curriculum because of the dynamic contribution it can make to children of all backgrounds.

The symposium was directed by Louis G. Wersen, president of the MENC, and Robert A. Choate, professor of music at Boston University. The Berkshire Music Center (Erich Leinsdorf, director), the Theodore Presser Foundation, and the School of Fine and Applied Arts at Boston University cooperated in making it possible.

When music supervisors and teachers throughout the country begin to translate the "educationalese" of these recommendations into active, workable English, these purposeful ideas will have real meaning.

HERALD TRAVELER (M)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 240,000

JUL 28 1967
New England Newsclip

Looking Ahead to 2000

Arts in Higher Education Urged

By ROBERT A. CHOATE

Professor of Music, Boston University, and Director, Tanglewood Symposium

Samuel B. Gould, chancellor of the State Universities of New York, has made a strong plea for inclusion of the arts throughout higher education.

Speaking on the third day of the Tanglewood Symposium, a conference of 60 leaders from education, music, sociology and psychology, philosophy and other fields, he reminded the group that "an appreciation of the arts does not necessarily make a humane person, but that the arts are essential, among other things, to create a balance for the science and technology which have been stressed in the post-Sputnik era."

Several speakers at Stockbridge outlined a projection for the year 2000. Max Lerner, professor of American civilization at Brandeis University and Herald-Traveler columnist, sketched a world in which increased leisure will make the arts indispensable for the enrichment of the individual.

Describing himself as a "possibilist," he took an optimistic stance about the future. He stressed that individuals will always have the ability to shape their own destinies and that it is more likely that "machines will become humanized than that humans will become mechanized." In his view, the man of 2000 will be "omniscient, omnipotent and omnipresent."

The symposium, being held under the sponsorship of the Music Educators National Conference, heard a Ford Foundation executive and an American composer evaluate the present condition of the creative artist in the United States.

W. McNeil Lowry, vice president of the Ford Foundation, deplored the "heavy toll and erosion of personal vitality of key artists and artistic performers." He claimed that "too much of the financial support goes into buildings, programs and conferences . . . not enough to the artists."

Norman Dello Joio, New York composer and chairman of the policy committee for the MENC's Contemporary Music Project for Creativity in Music Education (a project which, among other things, has placed young composers in residence in public schools across the country), took a different view.

He said this century has seen America come out of the era of purely imported artistic talent and that musicians, in his opinion, are not suffering from a "lack of change in their pockets." He added that it is often a question of artistic versus commercial values, commenting that " 'The Pajama Game' should not be confused with 'Tristan and Isolde' ".

Alvin C. Eurich, president of the Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies, urged supporters and educators for the arts to maintain high standards of quality. "Democracy has never created a truly great culture," he said, "but it can be done." In his opinion, popularization of the arts does not require a compromise with mediocrity.

The symposium participants have divided into discussion groups which are dealing with major issues affecting the future of music in America, including values for the arts, music of our time, technology, support for the arts, and the issue of creativity. These groups will produce reports and recommendations.

104

ESPLANADE

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 193,400
JUN 29 1967
New England Newsclip

Monday on the Esplanade

The Boston Pops concluded their 82d season last week with Arthur Fiedler, who just completed his 38th season as conductor. Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are now preparing for the opening concerts of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.) this Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, June 30-July 2.

About three-quarters of the orchestra will then return to Boston for the Esplanade Concerts, beginning Monday evening, July 3, at the Hatch Memorial Shell. These concerts will continue nightly, at 8:30, through Saturday, July 15, with the exception of Sunday, July 9.

The schedule for the first week of concerts is as follows:

Monday Evening, July 3, at 8:30
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
Academic Festival Overture ..... Brahms
Symphony No. 4, in A major ("Italian") ..... Mendelssohn
Piano Concerto in A minor ..... Schumann
Soloist: Ilan Rogoff

Tuesday Evening, July 4, at 8:30
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
Semper Fidelis March ..... Sousa
Symphony "From the New World" ..... Dvořák
Rhapsody in Blue for Piano and Orchestra ..... Gershwin
Soloist: Leo Litwin
Bostonia Suite ..... Brown

Wednesday Morning, July 5, at 10:15
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
March of the Toys ..... Herbert
Little Fugue ..... J. S. Bach
"Nutcracker" Suite ..... Tchaikovsky
Piano Concerto in B flat, K. 595, Finale ..... Mozart
Soloist: Michael Thomopoulos
The Sorcerer's Apprentice ..... Dukas
Colonel Bogey March ..... Alford

Wednesday Evening, July 5, at 8:30
Arthur Fiedler, conductor
Capriccio Italien ..... Tchaikovsky
"Nutcracker" Suite ..... Tchaikovsky
Piano Concerto No. 1 in B flat minor ..... Tchaikovsky
Soloist: Eugene Indjic

Thursday Evening, July 6, at 8:30
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
Symphony No. 1 in C minor ..... Brahms
Capriccio Espagnol ..... Rimsky-Korsakov
Marche Slave ..... Tchaikovsky

Friday Evening, July 7, at 8:30
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
Overture "Leonore" No. 3 ..... Beethoven
Symphony No. 8 ..... Beethoven
The Animals' Carnival ..... Saint-Saëns
Soloists: Leo Litwin and Anthony Paratore
Bacchanale from "Sampson and Delilah" ..... Saint-Saëns

Saturday Evening, July 8, at 8:30
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" ..... Mozart
Symphony No. 5, in C minor ..... Beethoven
Piano Concerto in G minor ..... Mendelssohn
Soloist: Bennett Lerner
Suite from "The Water Music" ..... Handel

SUNDAY HERALD
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 220,100
JUN 25 1967
New England Newsclip

Symphony Hall Concerts End, Esplanade Next

After the closing of the Boston Pops concerts in Symphony Hall last night, Symphony Hall will be dark. The orchestra will take part in the opening of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood during this week and weekend. Then, most of the players will return next week for the annual season of Esplanade concerts at the Hatch Memorial Shell on the Charles River.

Arthur Fiedler and Harry El Dickson will conduct the Espla ade concerts beginning Mond July 3, and continuing throu Saturday, July 15, with the e ception of Sunday, July 9. Co certs by the Boston Pops will l nightly at 8:30; two children concerts will be presented : 10:15 a.m. on Wednesdays, Ju 5 and 12.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600
JUN 25 1967
New England Newsclip

Esplanade Series Opening July 3

The Boston Symphony's Esplanade concerts will begin Monday evening, July 3, at 8:30, at the Hatch Memorial Shell. The orchestra will perform nightly through July 15, omitting July 9. Two children's concerts are planned for the Wednesday mornings of July 5 and 12.

The same orchestra concluded the Boston Pops season last night in Symphony Hall. Symphony Hall will be dark in the coming weeks. Boston Symphony players are now at Tanglewood for rehearsals for week-end concerts June 30-July 2. About three-quarters of the orchestra then returns to Boston for the Esplanade series, while the remaining players present two weeks of chamber concerts at the Berkshire Festival.

Full Boston Symphony concerts at Tanglewood resume July 21-Aug. 20.

DORCHESTER-ROXBURY
RECORD
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 10,200
JUL 20 1967
New England Newsclip

Free Band Concerts At Hatch Memorial Shell

Four outstanding military bands representing the United States Coast Guard, Air Force, Army and Navy will present a series of free concerts at the Hatch Memorial Shell on the Charles River Esplanade, Boston at 8:00 p.m., July 26, Aug. 9, Aug. 16 and Aug. 23, under the sponsorship of the Metropolitan District Commission.

Commissioner Howard Whitmore, Jr. said he was "most enthused with this opportunity to extend the Esplanade season with such an array of fine talent."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has presented 13 evening and two daytime children's performances, completed its season at Hatch Shell on July 15.

Commissioner Whitmore announced the first concert Wednesday, July 26, will be performed by the Coast Guard Academy Band of New London, Conn., under the direction of Lieut. William L. Broadwell.

The Air Force will be represented on Wednesday, Aug. 9, by the Eighth Air Force Band which is stationed at Westover Air Force Base, Westover, Mass. Chief Warrant Officer William D. Berky will be conducting.

On the program for Wednesday, Aug. 16, will be the Eighteenth Army Band from Fort Devens. Warrant Officer-Bandmaster Marcus W. Callender will be the conducter.

Scheduled for Wednesday, Aug. 23, is Boston's own First Naval District Band. The Band, which is stationed at Boston Naval Base, is under the direction of Warrant Officer B. A. Waltrip.

The programs offered by these military bands will be varied with classical, military, popular and novelty compositions in a program designed to meet all musical tastes.

Also slated for performances at the Hatch Shell will be the 60-member Needham High School Parents Band on Aug. 1 and the Canton Chorus of the Society for the Preservation And Encouragement of Barber Shop Quartet Singing In America on Aug. 8. The choral group, consisting of 60 members, will perform as quartets at various stages of the program.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 537,050
JUL 2 1967
New England Newsclip

MUSIC ON THE CHARLES—The Boston Symphony's Esplanade concerts begin Monday evening at 8:30 and continue through July 15 (omitting July 9). Programs are classical, admission is free and seating informal on the lawn in front of the Hatch Memorial Shell.

EVENING JOURNAL
WILMINGTON, DELAWARE
D. 84,006
JUL 20 1967

Music Notes

Children Concerts Sparkling at Dell

By DAVID B. KOZINSKI

(Today's semimonthly column begins with a review of the three childrens' concerts at Robin Hood Dell, June 28, July 5 and 12. The guest writer is the 14-year-old composer-musician son of the Evening Journal music critic)

By STEFAN KOZINSKI

Beautiful music, excellent weather, pleasant scenery and exciting young pianists all contributed to three Wednesdays of pleasurable children's concerts by the Robin Hood Dell Orchestra in Philadelphia's Fairmount Park.

William Smith, the assistant conductor of the Dell orchestra and conductor of the children's concerts, based each concert on a broad theme. The first program ,entitled "Music — The Magic Carpet," featured Norman D. Mackenzie, 12-year-old pianist, in a masterful performance of the third movement of Haydn's "Piano Concerto in D Major."

Norman is a student of the famous pianist Maryan Filar who recently played a recital for the Polish millennium at the University of Delaware.

Smith led the orchestra in fine performances of Mozart's bubbling overture to "The Magic Flute," the cunning, entrancing "Sorcerer's Apprentice" by Dukas, the shining "Magic Fire Music" from Wagner's music drama, "Die Walkure," and the poignant "Berceuse" and glittering, triumphant "Finale" of Stravinsky's ballet, "The Firebird."

Benjamin Louis Pasternak, 11, piano soloist on the second concert, entitled "The World of Opera," played the finale of Mozart's "Piano Concerto in E flat, K. 449" with musicianship and verve.

The third and final program was entitled "Composers Love to Travel, Too," and featured the brilliant 12-year-old pianist, Kim Monroe, one of the 10 sons of the former first cellist of the Philadelphia Orhestra, Lorne Monroe, who is now serving in the same capacity in the New York Philharmonic.

Kim captured his audience in a dazzling performance of the third movement of Mendelssohn's "Piano Concerto in G minor." Eight countries were represented in exciting performances of the four orchestral selections on the program — Germany and Scotland in Mendelssohn's "Fingal's Cave" overture; England and Japan in Guyver Britton's "Tokyo Impressions" featuring the percussion players with authentic instruments and a beautiful violin solo in the second movement.

Not included in our last column was mention of this year's orchestra conductor at Delaware Music Camp. He was Dr. Vytautas Marijosius of the Hartt College of Music in Hartford, Conn., and he brought to the campers a continental attitude and seriousness about music. His conducting experience (aided by the ability to speak five languages) includes premieres in his native Lithuania of works by Staravinsky and Prokofieff with the composers observing.

★ ★ ★

The Music Critics Association has been awarded a technical assistance grant of $67,200 by the National Endowment for the Arts in order to develop OVERVIEW, a monthly digest of musical criticism to be published by MCA as a service to the world of music.

Music critics throughout this country and Canada have been invited to hold their annual workshop at Tanglewood, Mass., Aug. 9-13 as guests of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A festival of American music is featured.

★ ★ ★

The Wilmington Opera Society will receive a $1,000 matching grant from the Federal Government through the Delaware State Arts Committee for the fall production of "Tosca."

WSO is conducting a contest in order to select an official "crest" or "seal." Artists are encouraged to contact Joan Pederson, 1908 Dorset Rd., Wilmington 19803, for more details.

★ ★ ★

Friday and Saturday — Festival of Classics. Manhattan Festival of Ballet. C. Colke Wilson Estate, Swedesford Rd., Paoli, Pa., 8:30 p.m. Admission $2 at the gate. Picnic area available on grounds.

Sunday — Linda Van Steenwyk, piano. Wilmington Music Svhool, 4 p.m. Free.

Sunday—De Pasquale String Quartet and Sylvia Glickman, piano. Stokes Auditorium, Haverford College, 8:30 p.m.

July 27, 28, 29 and Aug. 3, 4, 5—Brandywiners Ltd., "Carousel." Longwood Open Air Theater, 8:30 p.m. Tickets required.

104

ESPLANADE

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS
CIRC. 12,101
JUN 29 1967
New England Newsclip

Monday on the Esplanade

The Boston Pops concluded their 82d season last week with Arthur Fiedler, who just completed his 38th season as conductor. Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are now preparing for the opening concerts of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.) this Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, June 30-July 2.

About three-quarters of the orchestra will then return to Boston for the Esplanade Concerts, beginning Monday evening, July 3, at the Hatch Memorial Shell. These concerts will continue nightly, at 8:30, through Saturday, July 15, with the exception of Sunday, July 9.

The schedule for the first week of concerts is as follows:

Monday Evening, July 3, at 8:30
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
Academic Festival Overture ..... Brahms
Symphony No. 4, in A major ("Italian") ..... Mendelssohn
Piano Concerto in A minor ..... Schumann
Soloist: Ilan Rogoff

Tuesday Evening, July 4, at 8:30
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
Semper Fidelis March ..... Sousa
Symphony "From the New World" ..... Dvorak
Rhapsody in Blue for Piano and Orchestra ..... Gershwin
Soloist: Leo Litwin
Bostonia Suite ..... Brown

Wednesday Morning, July 5, at 10:15
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
March of the Toys ..... Herbert
Little Fugue ..... J. S. Bach
"Nutcracker" Suite ..... Tchaikovsky
Piano Concerto in B flat, K. 595, Finale ..... Mozart
Soloist: Michael Thomopoulos
The Sorcerer's Apprentice ..... Dukas
Colonel Bogey March ..... Alford

Wednesday Evening, July 5, at 8:30
Arthur Fiedler, conductor
Capriccio Italien ..... Tchaikovsky
"Nutcracker" Suite ..... Tchaikovsky
Piano Concerto No. 1 in B flat minor ..... Tchaikovsky
Soloist: Eugene Indjic

Thursday Evening, July 6, at 8:30
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
Symphony No. 1 in C minor ..... Brahms
Capriccio Espagnol ..... Rimsky-Korsakov
Marche Slave ..... Tchaikovsky

Friday Evening, July 7, at 8:30
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
Overture "Leonore" No. 3 ..... Beethoven
Symphony No. 8 ..... Beethoven
The Animals' Carnival ..... Saint-Saens
Soloists: Leo Litwin and Anthony Paratore
Bacchanale from "Sampson and Delilah" ..... Saint-Saens

Saturday Evening, July 8, at 8:30
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" ..... Mozart
Symphony No. 5, in C minor ..... Beethoven
Piano Concerto in G minor ..... Mendelssohn
Soloist: Bennett Lerner
Suite from "The Water Music" ..... Handel

SUNDAY HERALD
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 220,100
JUN 25 1967
New England Newsclip

Symphony Hall Concerts End, Esplanade Next

After the closing of the Boston Pops concerts in Symphony Hall last night, Symphony Hall will be dark. The orchestra will take part in the opening of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood during this week and weekend. Then, most of the players will return next week for the annual season of Esplanade concerts at the Hatch Memorial Shell on the Charles River.

Arthur Fiedler and Harry Ell Dickson will conduct the Espla ade concerts beginning Monda July 3, and continuing throu Saturday, July 15, with the e ception of Sunday, July 9. Co certs by the Boston Pops will l nightly at 8:30; two children concerts will be presented 10:15 a.m. on Wednesdays, Jul 5 and 12.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600
JUN 25 1967
New England Newsclip

Esplanade Series Opening July 3

The Boston Symphony's Esplanade concerts will begin Monday evening, July 3, at 8:30, at the Hatch Memorial Shell. The orchestra will perform nightly through July 15, omitting July 9. Two children's concerts are planned for the Wednesday mornings of July 5 and 12.

The same orchestra concluded the Boston Pops season last night in Symphony Hall. Symphony Hall will be dark in the coming weeks. Boston Symphony players are now at Tanglewood for rehearsals for week-end concerts June 30-July 2. About three-quarters of the orchestra then returns to Boston for the Esplanade series, while the remaining players present two weeks of chamber concerts at the Berkshire Festival.

Full Boston Symphony concerts at Tanglewood resume July 21-Aug. 20.

DORCHESTER-ROXBURY
RECORD
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 10,200
JUL 20 1967
New England Newsclip

Free Band Concerts At Hatch Memorial Shell

Four outstanding military bands representing the United States Coast Guard, Air Force, Army and Navy will present a series of free concerts at the Hatch Memorial Shell on the Charles River Esplanade, Boston at 8:00 p.m., July 26, Aug. 9, Aug. 16 and Aug. 23, under the sponsorship of the Metropolitan District Commission.

Commissioner Howard Whitmore, Jr. said he was "most enthused with this opportunity to extend the Esplanade season with such an array of fine talent."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has presented 13 evening and two daytime children's performances, completed its season at Hatch Shell on July 15.

Commissioner Whitmore announced the first concert Wednesday, July 26, will be performed by the Coast Guard Academy Band of New London, Conn., under the direction of Lieut. William L. Broadwell.

The Air Force will be represented on Wednesday, Aug. 9, by the Eighth Air Force Band which is stationed at Westover Air Force Base, Westover, Mass. Chief Warrant Officer William D. Berky will be conducting.

On the program for Wednesday, Aug. 16, will be the Eighteenth Army Band from Fort Devens. Warrant Officer-Bandmaster Marcus W. Callender will be the conducter.

Scheduled for Wednesday, Aug. 23, is Boston's own First Naval District Band. The Band, which is stationed at Boston Naval Base, is under the direction of Warrant Officer B. A. Waltrip.

The programs offered by these military bands will be varied with classical, military, popular and novelty compositions in a program designed to meet all musical tastes.

Also slated for performances at the Hatch Shell will be the 60-member Needham High School Parents Band on Aug. 1 and the Canton Chorus of the Society for the Preservation And Encouragement of Barber Shop Quartet Singing In America on Aug. 8. The choral group, consisting of 60-members, will perform as quartets at various stages of the program.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 537,050
JUL 2 1967
New England Newsclip

MUSIC ON THE CHARLES—The Boston Symphony's Esplanade concerts begin Monday evening at 8:30 and continue through July 15 (omitting July 9). Programs are classical, admission is free and seating informal on the lawn in front of the Hatch Memorial Shell.

EVENING JOURNAL
WILMINGTON, DELAWARE
D. 84,006
JUL 20 1967

Music Notes

Children Concerts Sparkling at Dell

By DAVID B. KOZINSKI

(Today's semimonthly column begins with a review of the three childrens' concerts at Robin Hood Dell, June 28, July 5 and 12. The guest writer is the 14-year-old composer-musician son of the Evening Journal music critic)

By STEFAN KOZINSKI

Beautiful music, excellent weather, pleasant scenery and exciting young pianists all contributed to three Wednesdays of pleasurable children's concerts by the Robin Hood Dell Orchestra in Philadelphia's Fairmount Park.

William Smith, the assistant conductor of the Dell orchestra and conductor of the children's concerts, based each concert on a broad theme. The first program ,entitled "Music — The Magic Carpet," featured Norman D. Mackenzie, 12-year-old pianist, in a masterful performance of the third movement of Haydn's "Piano Concerto in D Major."

Norman is a student of the famous pianist Maryan Filar who recently played a recital for the Polish millennium at the University of Delaware.

Smith led the orchestra in fine performances of Mozart's bubbling overture to "The Magic Flute," the cunning, entrancing "Sorcerer's Apprentice" by Dukas, the shining "Magic Fire Music" from Wagner's music drama, "Die Walkure," and the poignant "Berceuse" and glittering, triumphant "Finale" of Stravinsky's ballet, "The Firebird."

Benjamin Louis Pasternak, 11, piano soloist on the second concert, entitled "The World of Opera," played the finale of Mozart's "Piano Concerto in E flat, K. 449" with musicianship and verve.

The third and final program was entitled "Composers Love to Travel, Too," and featured the brilliant 12-year-old pianist, Kim Monroe, one of the 10 sons of the former first cellist of the Philadelphia Orhestra, Lorne Monroe, who is now serving in the same capacity in the New York Philharmonic.

Kim captured his audience in a dazzling performance of the third movement of Mendelssohn's "Piano Concerto in G minor." Eight countries were represented in exciting performances of the four orchestral selections on the program — Germany and Scotland in Mendelssohn's "Fingal's Cave" overture; England and Japan in Guyver Britton's "Tokyo Impressions" featuring the percussion players with authentic instruments and a beautiful violin solo in the second movement.

Not included in our last column was mention of this year's orchestra conductor at Delaware Music Camp. He was Dr. Vytautas Marijosius of the Hartt College of Music in Hartford, Conn., and he brought to the campers a continental attitude and seriousness about music. His conducting experience (aided by the ability to speak five languages) includes premieres in his native Lithuania of works by Staravinsky and Prokofieff with the composers observing.

★ ★ ★

The Music Critics Association has been awarded a technical assistance grant of $67,200 by the National Endowment for the Arts in order to develop OVERVIEW, a monthly digest of musical criticism to be published by MCA as a service to the world of music.

Music critics throughout this country and Canada have been invited to hold their annual workshop at Tanglewood, Mass., Aug. 9-13 as guests of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A festival of American music is featured.

★ ★ ★

The Wilmington Opera Society will receive a $1,000 matching grant from the Federal Government through the Delaware State Arts Committee for the fall production of "Tosca."

WSO is conducting a contest in order to select an official "crest" or "seal." Artists are encouraged to contact Joan Pederson, 1908 Dorset Rd., Wilmington 19803, for more details.

★ ★ ★

Friday and Saturday — Festival of Classics, Manhattan Festival of Ballet. C. Colke Wilson Estate, Swedesford Rd., Paoli, Pa., 8:30 p.m. Admission $2 at the gate. Picnic area available on grounds.
Sunday — Linda Van Steenwyk, piano. Wilmington Music Svhool, 4 p.m. Free.
Sunday—De Pasquale String Quartet and Sylvia Glickman, piano. Stokes Auditorium, Haverford College, 8:30 p.m.
July 27, 28, 29 and Aug. 3, 4, 5—Brandywiners Ltd., "Carousel." Longwood Open Air Theater, 8:30 p.m. Tickets required.

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC 418,250

JUL 6 1967

New England Newsclip

105

Hey Pops, Note Concert-Going Kids

Stevie Powers, 2, W. Concord, Has Sandwich Making It Perfect Day.

Young Lady Has A Comfy Perch Baneath Hooded Cerriage While Listening to Music

Although Program Was Designed For Young, It Meant Sleep For Mark Wilkins, Belmont

Record American Photos, Carroll Myett

Jill Fratelli, Charmed By Lilting Strains Of Music

NOT all the children who attended Wednesday's Children's Concert on Boston's Esplanade seem to have a clear understanding of the finest in music. But, you have to agree that they did have a fine time eating peanut butter and jelly sandwiches, and sipping their favorite beverages. A record crowd did attend the concert despite the glowering skies that blanketed the region.

Andriana Corinaldesi Sips Her Favorite

David Wilson, 2½, Boston Ironing Out An Umbrella Problem As The Celebrated Esplanade Concert At Boston's Hatch Memorial Shell On The Charles River Bank Thrilled Young And Old In This The 39th Season

106

HERALD (m)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 158,700

JUL 4 1967 New England Newsclip

Series Opens at Shell

Nearly 15,000 music lovers lined the banks of the Charles River Monday night to enjoy the opening of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 39th season of free public concerts at Hatch Memorial Shell.

The opening night directorial duties were performed by Harry Ellis Dickerson, who has alternated constantly between two roles. He joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a violinist in 1938. He was an active conductor before then and has ben since — at the Pops, the Esplanade and his very successful Symphony Hall Youth Concerts.

BRAHMS OVERTURE

Mr. Dickson began the evening — and a lovely, cool evening it was — with the Academic Festival Overture by Brahms. He followed with Mendelssohn's Symphony No. 4 in A major ("Italian") and Schumann's Concerto for Pianoforte in A minor.

Ilan Rogoff was the soloist.

Co-sponsoring the concert were the First National Bank of Boston and the Old Colony Trust Company.

The concerts will be held every evening at 8:30 p.m. through July 15, except for Sunday, July 9. There will be morning concerts Wednesday and July 12 from 10:15 to 11:15.

SOME COMPETITION

An amusing sidelight was the appearance of a record player. The "hippie" who owned it entertained those sitting on blankets near him with German arias and marching music by John Philip Sousa.

Hopefully, Mr. Dickson was unaware of the competition.

An attractive young lady from the Back Bay added a little Boston tone to the festivities when she was overheard to say:

"They're playing in shirtsleeves and jackets. Isn't that rather uncouth?

Red Relations

MOSCOW—South Vietnam's National Liberation Front, political arm of the Vietcong, has decided to establish full diplomatic relations with Cuba, the Soviet news agency Tass reported. The front has representatives in Moscow and in other Communist capitals, but they are not given full diplomatic status.

(Herald Staff Photo by George Dixon)

THOUSANDS GATHER at Hatch Memorial Shell to enjoy the opening of the 39th season of Esplanade concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Opening night conductor was Harry Ellis Dickson.

ROXBURY, MASS.
GAZETTE AND SOUTH END ADVERTISER
W. 2,015

JUL 20 1967 Byfuller

Four Military Bands To Be At Charles Hatch Shell July 26, August 9, 16, 23

Four outstanding military bands representing the United States Coast Guard, Air Force, Army and Navy will present a series of free concerts at the Hatch Memorial Shell on the Charles River Esplanade, Boston at 8:00 p.m., July 26, August 9, August 16 and August 23, under the sponsorship of the Metropolitan District Commission.

Commissioner Howard Whitmore, Jr. said he was "most enthused with this opportunity to extend the Esplanade season with such an array of fine talent."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has presented 13 evening and two daytime children's performances, completed its season at Hatch Shell on July 15.

Commissioner Whitmore announced the first concert Wednesday, July 26, will be performed by the Coast Guard Academy Band of New London, Conn., under the direction of Lieut. William L. Broadwell.

The Air Force will be represented on Wednesday, August 9, by the Eighth Air Force Band which is stationed at Westover Air Force Base, Westover, Mass. Chief Warrant Officer William D. Berky will be conducting.

On the program for Wednesday, August 16, will be the Eighteenth Army Band from Fort Devens. Warrant Officer-Bandmaster Marcus W. Callender will be the conductor.

Scheduled for Wednesday, August 23, is Boston's own First Naval District Band. The Band, which is stationed at Boston Naval Base, is under the direction of Warrant Officer B. A. Waltrip.

The program offered by these military bands will be varied with classical, military, popular and novelty compositions in a program designed to meet all musical tastes.

Also slated for performances at the Hatch Shell will be the 60-member Needham High School Parents Band on August 1 and the Canton Chorus of the Society for the Preservation And Encouragement Of Barber Shop Quartet Singing In America on August 8. The choral group, consisting of 60-members will perform as quartets at various stages of the program.

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. [illegible]100

JUL 6 1967 New England Newsclip

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. [illegible]750

JUL 6 1967 New England Newsclip

Eugene Indic At the Piano On Esplanade

By MARY X. SULLIVAN

The Wednesday night concert on the Charles River Esplanade is remarkable on two counts: it is an all-Tchaikovsky program, and it will have Eugene Indic as soloist in the Piano Concerto No. 1 in B-flat minor.

Eugene Indic (pronounced Inditch) is the very talented young pianist who was selected by Erich Leinsdorf to be soloist in the posh concert with the full Boston Symphony Orchestra which opened the Winterfest in the War Memorial Auditorium in 1965.

Indic, now 20 and entering his junior year at Harvard, came to this country from Yugoslavia with his mother when he was four. They went to live near relatives in Springfield, where Eugene entered school at age 6.

FELL IN LOVE

Up to that time he had shown no interest in music, but on his first exposure to it, he fell in love. A perceptive teacher noted his aptitude and urged his mother to foster it.

Later he commuted weekends to Waban to study with the internationally known pianist Alexander Borovsky. He first played with BSO musicians in Harry Ellis Dickson's Youth Concerts when he was 12, and has since appeared at Pops and the Esplanade concerts.

Another interesting facet of the Concerto is that it had its debut here in Boston rather than in Tchaikovsky's Russia. J. B. Lang (the Arthur Fiedler of his day) conducted it on Oct. 25th, 1875, in the old Music Hall which was located where Loew's Orpheum Theater now stands.

TORE IT APART

Tchaikovsky had completed his concerto and shown it to his teacher, Nicholas Rubenstein (brother of Anton, the famed pianist); the latter, instead of praising it, tore it to pieces and called it "unplayable." On an impulse, the composer sent it to Hans Von Beulow, a concert pianist who was about to embark on an American tour.

SPLASHY PERFORMANCE—Sun and rain alternated at the first morning concert by the Esplanade orchestra at Hatch Shell. Crowd basks in sunshine and children romp in showers. (Joe Dennehy Photos)

107

A Symphony of Music on Esplanade

NEITHER GLOWERING SKIES, light rains nor a chill wind off the Charles River succeeded Wednesday in dampening the auspiciousness of the Children's Concert on the Esplanade. A cloudburst soaked the attendance but they refused to move as Conductor Harry Ellis Dickson lead the orchestra, under the umbrella of the Hatch Shell, in "March of the Toys, Nutcracker Suite, Piano Concerto in B Flat, and completing the program—The Colonel Bogey March." Other Photos Below.

Record American Photos, Carroll Myett

All Children Love Music Especially If It's Being Played By Youngster

Cellophane Was The Curtain To Shield Element From Audience Attending Children's Concert At Hatch Shell

BLANK PAGE

V771
USE 70 MANILA
REFILL
SAMUEL WARD · BOSTON

END OF VOLUME

VOLUME 118

BSO
Pops

1967 - 1968

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

ERICH LEINSDORF Music Director

CONCERT SCHEDULE 1967–1968

SEPTEMBER

28	Boston	Rehearsal 1
29–30	Boston	Fri-Sat I

OCTOBER

3	Boston	Tuesday A1
5	Providence	1
6–7	Boston	Fri-Sat II
10	Boston	Tuesday B1
12	Boston	Rehearsal 2
13–14	Boston	Fri-Sat III
17	Boston	Cambridge 1
18	New York	1
19	Brooklyn	1
20	New York	1
21	Newark
24	Boston	Tuesday A2
26	Boston	Thursday A1
27–28	Boston	Fri-Sat IV
31	Boston	Tuesday B2

NOVEMBER

2	Providence	2
3–4	Boston	Fri-Sat V
7	Boston	Tuesday A3
9	Boston	Thursday B1
10–11	Boston	Fri-Sat VI
14	Boston	Cambridge 2
16	Boston	Thursday A2
17–18	Boston	Fri-Sat VII
21	Boston	Tuesday B3
24–25	Boston	Fri-Sat VIII
28	Boston	Tuesday A4
29	New York	2
30	New Brunswick

DECEMBER

1	New York	2
2	Carnegie Hall	1
5	Boston	Cambridge 3
7	Providence	3
8–9	Boston	Fri-Sat IX
12	Boston	Tuesday A5
14	Boston	Thursday A3
15–16	Boston	Fri-Sat X
28	Boston	Rehearsal 3
29–30	Boston	Fri-Sat XI

JANUARY

2	Boston	Tuesday A6
5–6	Boston	Fri-Sat XII
9	Boston	Tuesday B4
11	Providence	4
12–13	Boston	Fri-Sat XIII
16	Boston	Cambridge 4
18	Boston	Rehearsal 4
19–20	Boston	Fri-Sat XIV

JANUARY (continued)

23	Boston	Tuesday A7
25	Boston	Thursday B2
26–27	Boston	Fri-Sat XV
29	Hartford
30	Philadelphia
31	New York	3

FEBRUARY

1	Brooklyn	2
2	New York	3
3	Carnegie Hall	2
6	Boston	Tuesday A8
8	Boston	Thursday A4
9–10	Boston	Fri-Sat XVI
15	Boston	Rehearsal 5
16–17	Boston	Fri-Sat XVII
20	Boston	Tuesday B5
22	Boston	Thursday A5
23–24	Boston	Fri-Sat XVIII
26	Washington
27	Washington
28	New York	4
29	Carnegie Hall

MARCH

1	New York	4
2	Carnegie Hall	3
8–9	Boston	Fri-Sat XIX
12	Boston	Tuesday A9
14	Providence	5
15–16	Boston	Fri-Sat XX
19	Boston	Cambridge 5
21	Boston	Thursday B3
22–23	Boston	Fri-Sat XXI
27	St Louis
28	Chicago
29	Cincinnati

APRIL

1	Boston	American College of Physicians
2	New Haven
3	New York	5
4	Brooklyn	3
5	New York	5
6	Carnegie Hall	4
9	Boston	Cambridge 6
11	Boston	Rehearsal 6
12–13	Boston	Fri-Sat XXII
16	Boston	Tuesday B6
18	Boston	Thursday A6
19–20	Boston	Fri-Sat XXIII
23	Boston	Tuesday A10
25	Boston	Rehearsal 7
26–27	Boston	Fri-Sat XXIV

Fri-Sat-I 1

Fri-Sat-II Tues B-I 3

Fri-Sat-III Cambridge-I 4

Tues A-II 7

Thurs A-I 9

Fri-Sat-IV Tues B-III 10

Fri-Sat V 12

Tues A III Thurs B-I 14

Fri-Sat-VI 15

Cambridge II 16

Thurs A-II Fir-Sat-VII 17

Tues B III 19

Fri-Sat-VIII 20

Tues A-IV 22

Cambridge III Fri-Sat-IX 23

Tues A V Thurs A III 24

Fri-Sat X 26

Fri-Sat-XI 28

Tues A-VI 30

Fri-Sat-XII 31

Tues B-IV 32

Fri-Sat XIII Cambridge IV 33

Fri-Sat XIV Tues A VII 36

Thurs B-II 37

Fri-Sat XV 39

Tues A-VIII Thurs A-IV 40

Fri-Sat-XVI 44

Fri-Sat- Xvii 46

Tues B-V Thurs A-V 47

Fri-Sat-XVIII 49

Fri Sat-XIX Tues a-Ix 52

Cambridge V Fri-Sat XX 54

Prokoviev Violin Concerto #2 116

Brahs Piano Concerto #1 Prokoviev Romeo & Juliet 117

Prokoviev Symphony #3 Bruckner Symphony #4 118

Eliot Carter Piano Concerto 119

Organ Recitals 120

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

ERICH LEINSDORF Music Director

CONCERT SCHEDULE 1967–1968

SEPTEMBER

28	Boston	Rehearsal 1
29–30	Boston	Fri-Sat I

OCTOBER

3	Boston	Tuesday A1
5	Providence	1
6–7	Boston	Fri-Sat II
10	Boston	Tuesday B1
12	Boston	Rehearsal 2
13–14	Boston	Fri-Sat III
17	Boston	Cambridge 1
18	New York	1
19	Brooklyn	1
20	New York	1
21	Newark
24	Boston	Tuesday A2
26	Boston	Thursday A1
27–28	Boston	Fri-Sat IV
31	Boston	Tuesday B2

NOVEMBER

2	Providence	2
3–4	Boston	Fri-Sat V
7	Boston	Tuesday A3
9	Boston	Thursday B1
10–11	Boston	Fri-Sat VI
14	Boston	Cambridge 2
16	Boston	Thursday A2
17–18	Boston	Fri-Sat VII
21	Boston	Tuesday B3
24–25	Boston	Fri-Sat VIII
28	Boston	Tuesday A4
29	New York	2
30	New Brunswick

DECEMBER

1	New York	2
2	Carnegie Hall	1
5	Boston	Cambridge 3
7	Providence	3
8–9	Boston	Fri-Sat IX
12	Boston	Tuesday A5
14	Boston	Thursday A3
15–16	Boston	Fri-Sat X
28	Boston	Rehearsal 3
29–30	Boston	Fri-Sat XI

JANUARY

2	Boston	Tuesday A6
5–6	Boston	Fri-Sat XII
9	Boston	Tuesday B4
11	Providence	4
12–13	Boston	Fri-Sat XIII
16	Boston	Cambridge 4
18	Boston	Rehearsal 4
19–20	Boston	Fri-Sat XIV

JANUARY (continued)

23	Boston	Tuesday A7
25	Boston	Thursday B2
26–27	Boston	Fri-Sat XV
29	Hartford
30	Philadelphia
31	New York	3

FEBRUARY

1	Brooklyn	2
2	New York	3
3	Carnegie Hall	2
6	Boston	Tuesday A8
8	Boston	Thursday A4
9–10	Boston	Fri-Sat XVI
15	Boston	Rehearsal 5
16–17	Boston	Fri-Sat XVII
20	Boston	Tuesday B5
22	Boston	Thursday A5
23–24	Boston	Fri-Sat XVIII
26	Washington
27	Washington
28	New York	4
29	Carnegie Hall

MARCH

1	New York	4
2	Carnegie Hall	3
8–9	Boston	Fri-Sat XIX
12	Boston	Tuesday A9
14	Providence	5
15–16	Boston	Fri-Sat XX
19	Boston	Cambridge 5
21	Boston	Thursday B3
22–23	Boston	Fri-Sat XXI
27	St Louis
28	Chicago
29	Cincinnati

APRIL

1	Boston	American College of Physicians
2	New Haven
3	New York	5
4	Brooklyn	3
5	New York	5
6	Carnegie Hall	4
9	Boston	Cambridge 6
11	Boston	Rehearsal 6
12–13	Boston	Fri-Sat XXII
16	Boston	Tuesday B6
18	Boston	Thursday A6
19–20	Boston	Fri-Sat XXIII
23	Boston	Tuesday A10
25	Boston	Rehearsal 7
26–27	Boston	Fri-Sat XXIV

Thurs III		56
Fri-Sat XXI		58
Cambridge VI		60
Fri-Sat XXII		61
Tues B VI	Thurs A VI	62
Fri-Sat XXIII	Tues A X	64
Fri-Sat XXIV		67
Out of town Concerts	Newark	68
New York	Brooklyn	69
New Brunswick		70
New Brunswick cont.	Carnegie Hall	71
Providence		72
Providence cont.	Hartford	73
Philadelphia		74
Framingham	Washington	75
St. Louis		76
Chicago		77
Ciccinnati		78
Youth Concerts		79
Pops		84
Chamber Concerts		89
B.S.O. & Japanese players in exchange		100
Cultural Center		108
Recofdings	Beethoven Piano Concerto #3	111
Beethoven Symphony #7		112
Mahler Symphony #3		114
Ginastera Piano Concerto	Prokoviev Violin Concerto #2	116
Brahs Piano Concerto #1	Prokoviev Romeo & Juliet	117
Prokoviev Symphony #3	Bruckner Symphony #4	118
Eliot Carter Piano Concerto		119
Organ Recitals		120

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

ERICH LEINSDORF Music Director

CONCERT SCHEDULE 1967–1968

SEPTEMBER

28	Boston	Rehearsal 1
29–30	Boston	Fri-Sat I

OCTOBER

3	Boston	Tuesday A1
5	Providence	1
6–7	Boston	Fri-Sat II
10	Boston	Tuesday B1
12	Boston	Rehearsal 2
13–14	Boston	Fri-Sat III
17	Boston	Cambridge 1
18	New York	1
19	Brooklyn	1
20	New York	1
21	Newark
24	Boston	Tuesday A2
26	Boston	Thursday A1
27–28	Boston	Fri-Sat IV
31	Boston	Tuesday B2

NOVEMBER

2	Providence	2
3–4	Boston	Fri-Sat V
7	Boston	Tuesday A3
9	Boston	Thursday B1
10–11	Boston	Fri-Sat VI
14	Boston	Cambridge 2
16	Boston	Thursday A2
17–18	Boston	Fri-Sat VII
21	Boston	Tuesday B3
24–25	Boston	Fri-Sat VIII
28	Boston	Tuesday A4
29	New York	2
30	New Brunswick

DECEMBER

1	New York	2
2	Carnegie Hall	1
5	Boston	Cambridge 3
7	Providence	3
8–9	Boston	Fri-Sat IX
12	Boston	Tuesday A5
14	Boston	Thursday A3
15–16	Boston	Fri-Sat X
28	Boston	Rehearsal 3
29–30	Boston	Fri-Sat XI

JANUARY

2	Boston	Tuesday A6
5–6	Boston	Fri-Sat XII
9	Boston	Tuesday B4
11	Providence	4
12–13	Boston	Fri-Sat XIII
16	Boston	Cambridge 4
18	Boston	Rehearsal 4
19–20	Boston	Fri-Sat XIV

JANUARY (continued)

23	Boston	Tuesday A7
25	Boston	Thursday B2
26–27	Boston	Fri-Sat XV
29	Hartford
30	Philadelphia
31	New York	3

FEBRUARY

1	Brooklyn	2
2	New York	3
3	Carnegie Hall	2
6	Boston	Tuesday A8
8	Boston	Thursday A4
9–10	Boston	Fri-Sat XVI
15	Boston	Rehearsal 5
16–17	Boston	Fri-Sat XVII
20	Boston	Tuesday B5
22	Boston	Thursday A5
23–24	Boston	Fri-Sat XVIII
26	Washington
27	Washington
28	New York	4
29	Carnegie Hall

MARCH

1	New York	4
2	Carnegie Hall	3
8–9	Boston	Fri-Sat XIX
12	Boston	Tuesday A9
14	Providence	5
15–16	Boston	Fri-Sat XX
19	Boston	Cambridge 5
21	Boston	Thursday B3
22–23	Boston	Fri-Sat XXI
27	St Louis
28	Chicago
29	Cincinnati

APRIL

1	Boston	American College of Physicians
2	New Haven
3	New York	5
4	Brooklyn	3
5	New York	5
6	Carnegie Hall	4
9	Boston	Cambridge 6
11	Boston	Rehearsal 6
12–13	Boston	Fri-Sat XXII
16	Boston	Tuesday B6
18	Boston	Thursday A6
19–20	Boston	Fri-Sat XXIII
23	Boston	Tuesday A10
25	Boston	Rehearsal 7
26–27	Boston	Fri-Sat XXIV

Gala Party 121

Funds 122

Awards 126

Trustee News 127

Friends 128

John F. Kennedy Center 133

Co-Operative Orchester formed in Boston 134

Erich Leinsdorfs Resignation 137

Jack Bennys Concert 146

Miscellaneous 150

SEPTEMBER 1967 / FRI - SAT - I / TUES A - I

(1)

EIGHTY-SEVENTH SEASON 1967–1968

First Program

Friday afternoon September 29 at 2 o'clock

Saturday evening September 30 at 8.30

WAGNER

Der fliegende Holländer – Overture

Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg – from Act III

Introduction – Dance of the apprentices –
Procession of the mastersingers

INTERMISSION

Die Walküre – Act I

CLAIRE WATSON Sieglinde

JESS THOMAS Siegmund

KENNETH SMITH Hunding

These concerts are given in memory of John N. Burk

The concerts will end at about 4.10 on Friday and at 10.40 on Saturday

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

HERALD TRAVELER (M)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 240,000

SEP 30 1967 New England Newsclip

SYMPHONY

All-Wagner Concert Opens 87th Season of Symphony

By McLAREN HARRIS

As reverberations of the final chord melted away, concluding Friday's all-Wagner concert by the Boston Symphony, inaugural of the 87th season, the thought occurred to me that Erich Leinsdorf might have done well to schedule this program five years ago. No program could have drawn a sharper delineation between his reign and that of Charles Munch.

Here is a conductor whose Wagnerian affinities, having been amply demonstrated elsewhere, were mostly hearsay in Boston. At Tanglewood in 1965 he conducted a complete "Lohengrin"; the final concert of this year's Berkshire Festival was devoted to Wagner. This weekend it is Boston-proper's turn. Perhaps Leinsdorf suspected five years ago that such a sudden and deliberate switch from the Gaullic tastes of Munch to purely Teutonic fare would give offense to his audience and appear as a spike driven into the reputation of his predecessor.

This year, however, we can openly embrace both Wagner and his interpreter. Here is a man who encourages large-bore throatiness of tone from his brasses, which challenge comparison with stormy seas in the overture to "The Flying Dutchman"; who calls for trumpet fanfares like shafts of pure sound, piercing but not stinging; who revels in the timbral richness of Wagner's scoring in "Die Meistersinger" who can capture the sweep, the glory, the consuming tenderness of Act I of "Die Walkuere." (I must note here that Charles Munch conducted "Die Walkuere," Act I, at Tanglewood in 1956, though I did not hear the performance.)

Act I of "Die Walkuere" is among the most rewarding of Wagner's works in concert, for it reveals both musical resplendence and a dramatic completeness of sorts, in which Siegmund and Sieglinde meet, join together and flee the house of Hunding. The tales of tragedy, the words of sorrow, love and resolution all carry an aura of heroism; the motives of Valhalla and the sword stir in the musical context as supernatural influences within a framework of human events.

From the podium, Leinsdorf saw them all and guided his large forces with a gentle but unmistakable authority. His phrasing, ardent and persuasive, contained ample breathing space, hushes contrasted with massive orchestral outbursts which somehow never overwhelmed the singers, and motives were always drawn from within, never borrowed from elsewhere and attached.

As Sieglinde, Claire Watson had not an all-consuming Wagnerian voice, yet she displayed a lyric gift which she could sustain at a healthy volume, building a sympathetic, purely feminine portrayal. Jess Thomas brought his finest phrasing and restraint to Siegmund's ode to spring; elsewhere his tenor was gutsy but a trifle desperate, strong but without warmth. Kenneth Smith, Hunding, was able to assume a startling command with his full bass and did so as long as his words were measured, but as the intensity grew his pitch clarity turned into ambiguity. The diction of all three was passable.

"Die Walkuere's" wide-span texture, the internal clarity of Wagner's pseudo-polyphony in the "Meistersinger" excerpts and the churning swiftness of the "Flying Dutchman" overture made for an auspicious season-opener, and for those who did not know about Leinsdorf and Wagner, it meant discovery.

Next week Charles Wilson, assistant conductor, will lead the orchestra in Brahms' Academic Festival Overture, Hans Werner Henze's Symphony No. 1 and Rimsky-Korsakov's symphonic suite, "Sheherezade."

EIGHTY-SEVENTH SEASON 1967–1968

First Program

Tuesday evening October 3 at 8.30

WAGNER

Der fliegende Holländer – Overture

Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg – from Act III

Introduction – Dance of the apprentices –
Procession of the mastersingers

INTERMISSION

Die Walküre – Act I

CLAIRE WATSON Sieglinde

JESS THOMAS Siegmund

KENNETH SMITH Hunding

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

VISITOR
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
WEEKLY CIRC. 60,200

SEP 29 1967 New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony's Series Opens Oct. 5

The annual series of five Providence concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be opened by its Music Director, Erich Leinsdorf, at Veterans Memorial Auditorium, Thursday, Oct. 5 at 8:30 p.m.

Two Wagner scores will head the program: "The Overture to The Flying Dutchman" and excerpts from "The Mastersingers." They were performed by this orchestra under its first conductor, George Henschel, 85 years ago, one year before the death of Wagner.

The second half of the concert includes Tchaikovsky's "Sixth Symphony."

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 26,000

SEP 28 1967 New England Newsclip

BSO Assist. Conductor To Lead Concerts

Boston Symphony Orchestra Assistant Conductor Charles Wilson will conduct at the Friday-Saturday, Oct. 6 and 7 concerts. Program will include Hans Werner Henze's Symphony No. 1, Rimsky-Korsakov's Sherherazade and the Academic Festival Overture by Brahms.

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the opening program of the Tuesday, Series A, Oct. 3 concerts at 8:30 in Symphony Hall. This program will include Wagner's Overture to The Flying Dutchman, excerpts from Act III of Die Meistersinger and the complete Act I from Die Walkure with Claire Watson, Jess Thomas and Kenneth Smith, soloists.

SEPTEMBER 1967

FRI - SAT - I / TUES A - I

(1)

First Program

Friday afternoon September 29 at 2 o'clock

Saturday evening September 30 at 8.30

WAGNER

Der fliegende Holländer – Overture

Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg – from Act III

Introduction – Dance of the apprentices –
Procession of the mastersingers

INTERMISSION

Die Walküre – Act I

CLAIRE WATSON Sieglinde
JESS THOMAS Siegmund
KENNETH SMITH Hunding

These concerts are given in memory of John N. Burk

The concerts will end at about 4.10 on Friday and at 10.40 on Saturday

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

HERALD TRAVELER (M)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 240,000

SEP 30 1967 New England Newsclip

SYMPHONY

All-Wagner Concert Opens 87th Season of Symphony

By McLAREN HARRIS

As reverberations of the final chord melted away, concluding Friday's all-Wagner concert by the Boston Symphony, inaugural of the 87th season, the thought occurred to me that Erich Leinsdorf might have done well to schedule this program five years ago. No program could have drawn a sharper delineation between his reign and that of Charles Munch.

Here is a conductor whose Wagnerian affinities, having been amply demonstrated elsewhere, were mostly hearsay in Boston. At Tanglewood in 1965 he conducted a complete "Lohengrin"; the final concert of this year's Berkshire Festival was devoted to Wagner. This weekend it is Boston-proper's turn. Perhaps Leinsdorf suspected five years ago that such a sudden and deliberate switch from the Gaullic tastes of Munch to purely Teutonic fare would give offense to his audience and appear as a spike driven into the reputation of his predecessor.

This year, however, we can openly embrace both Wagner and his interpreter. Here is a man who encourages large-bore throatiness of tone from his brasses, which challenge comparison with stormy seas in the overture to "The Flying Dutchman"; who calls for trumpet fanfares like shafts of pure sound, piercing but not stinging; who revels in the timbral richness of Wagner's scoring in "Die Meistersinger" who can capture the sweep, the glory, the consuming tenderness of Act I of "Die Walkuere." (I must note here that Charles Munch conducted "Die Walkuere," Act I, at Tanglewood in 1956, though I did not hear the performance.)

Act I of "Die Walkuere" is among the most rewarding of Wagner's works in concert, for it reveals both musical resplendence and a dramatic completeness of sorts, in which Siegmund and Sieglinde meet, join together and flee the house of Hunding. The tales of tragedy, the words of sorrow, love and resolution all carry an aura of heroism; the motives of Valhalla and the sword stir in the musical context as supernatural influences within a framework of human events.

From the podium, Leinsdorf saw them all and guided his large forces with a gentle but unmistakable authority. His phrasing, ardent and persuasive, contained ample breathing space, hushes contrasted with massive orchestral outbursts which somehow never overwhelmed the singers, and motives were always drawn from within, never borrowed from elsewhere and attached.

As Sieglinde, Claire Watson had not an all-consuming Wagnerian voice, yet she displayed a lyric gift which she could sustain at a healthy volume, building a sympathetic, purely feminine portrayal. Jess Thomas brought his finest phrasing and restraint to Siegmund's ode to spring; elsewhere his tenor was gutsy but a trifle desperate, strong but without warmth. Kenneth Smith, Hunding, was able to assume a startling command with his full bass and did so as long as his words were measured, but as the intensity grew his pitch clarity turned into ambiguity. The diction of all three was passable.

"Die Walkuere's" wide-span texture, the internal clarity of Wagner's pseudo-polyphony in the "Meistersinger" excerpts and the churning swiftness of the "Flying Dutchman" overture made for an auspicious season-opener, and for those who did not know about Leinsdorf and Wagner, it meant discovery.

Next week Charles Wilson, assistant conductor, will lead the orchestra in Brahms' Academic Festival Overture, Hans Werner Henze's Symphony No. 1 and Rimsky-Korsakov's symphonic suite, "Sheherezade."

VISITOR
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
WEEKLY CIRC. 60,200

SEP 29 1967 New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony's Series Opens Oct. 5

The annual series of five Providence concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be opened by its Music Director, Erich Leinsdorf, at Veterans Memorial Auditorium, Thursday, Oct. 5 at 8:30 p.m.

Two Wagner scores will head the program: "The Overture to The Flying Dutchman" and excerpts from "The Mastersingers." They were performed by this orchestra under its first conductor, George Henschel, 85 years ago, one year before the death of Wagner.

The second half of the concert includes Tchaikovsky's "Sixth Symphony."

EIGHTY-SEVENTH SEASON 1967–1968

First Program

Tuesday evening October 3 at 8.30

WAGNER

Der fliegende Holländer – Overture

Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg – from Act III

Introduction – Dance of the apprentices –
Procession of the mastersingers

INTERMISSION

Die Walküre – Act I

CLAIRE WATSON Sieglinde
JESS THOMAS Siegmund
KENNETH SMITH Hunding

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 26,000

SEP 28 1967 New England Newsclip

BSO Assist. Conductor To Lead Concerts

Boston Symphony Orchestra Assistant Conductor Charles Wilson will conduct at the Friday-Saturday, Oct. 6 and 7 concerts. Program will include Hans Werner Henze's Symphony No. 1, Rimsky-Korsakov's Sherherazade and the Academic Festival Overture by Brahms.

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the opening program of the Tuesday, Series A, Oct. 3 concerts at 8:30 in Symphony Hall. This program will include Wagner's Overture to The Flying Dutchman, excerpts from Act III of Die Meistersinger and the complete Act I from Die Walkure with Claire Watson, Jess Thomas and Kenneth Smith, soloists.

2

PATRIOT-LEDGER (e)
QUINCY, MASS.
CIRC. 58,900

OCT 4 1967 New England Newsclip

The Sound of Music

Wagnerian Encounter

By Peter M. Knapp

The Boston Symphony has picked up where it left off in the concluding program at Tanglewood — with an all-Wagner program to open the winter season in Symphony Hall.

And to escape from the endless possibilities of bits and pieces from Wagnerian operas, Erich Leinsdorf chose something special in beginning the orchestra's 87th season: the entire first act of "Die Walkuere."

In the murky mythology of the Ring operation, "Die Walkuere" stands as the most human of the four grandiose stageworks. The first act plunks the listener in the midst of a familiar situation, the household triangle.

Orchestral Atmosphere

Siegmund, alias Wehwalt, has staggered into the rude home of Hunding, whose wife, Sieglinde, gives him hospitality. The warrior returns, suspicious of his guest — with good reason, for the pair fall in love and flee during the night as the drugged Hunding slumbers on. Wagner unfolds the confrontation of his three characters in a score rich in psychological rumblings, thick with foreboding atmosphere.

The performance was an exciting one, conducted with textbook lucidity by Leinsdorf and sung gloriously by tenor Jess Thomas (Siegmund), soprano Claire Watson (Sieglinde) and bass Kenneth Smith (Hunding). None of them qualify for the stereotyped image of the bulky, bawling, trussed-in Wagnerian singer. All rate high marks for the excellence of their diction, vocal placement, and expressive singing.

It is good to hear a Wagnerian performance in which detail stands out with such clarity as Leinsdorf and the Symphony musicians achieved. In "Die Walkuere," as well as in the opening selections on the program — the overture to "Der fliegende Hollaender" ("The Flying Dutchman") and portions of Act III of "Die Meistersinger" — Leinsdorf established comfortable tempos and bared the inner workings of the scores. In a concert version perhaps this is more possible than in the opera house. Nevertheless, one was grateful for the transparent textures, the luster of the strings, the sonority of woodwinds and brass.

Sturdy Tenor

It is an added pleasure to hear a Heldentenor who deserves the term. Jess Thomas has the sturdy, clarion voice required; he also has a refreshing, uncluttered tone quality. At the beginning of the act, he seemed to overdo in his effort to be dramatic, but this soon passed. Thomas' narration and his scene with Sieglinde were exciting examples of Wagnerian singing.

Miss Watson, too, contributed an appealing soprano, warm in her soft passages, traces of hardness around the edges showing at full voice. Smith was perfectly cast as Hunding — gruff, menacing, his powerful black bass echoing the storm scene that opens the act (with a wind machine for added effect). A clank of backstage chains announced his arrival. Too bad Hunding slept through the elopement scene; he missed some rousing vocalism.

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 192,100

SEP 30 1967 New England Newsclip

Leinsdorf's 'Die Walküre'

By Craig Stinson

The 87th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra got under way Friday afternoon with an all-Wagner program.

Erich Leinsdorf, graceful and energetic, led the orchestra and soloists through excerpts from "The Flying Dutchman," "Die Meistersinger," and "Die Waulküre." A sell-out crowd at Symphony Hall thundered its approval.

Mr. Leinsdorf is an exceptionally appealing conductor to watch. With the least possible waste of energy, he makes his entire body work toward the musical effect he wishes to achieve. Without distracting angular motions or grandiose gestures, he holds firm control over his players.

Those physical aspects of his conducting style combine with his temperament and musicianship to make Leinsdorf an outstanding interpreter of Wagner. His performances are intense and dramatic, without ostentation. If one were to make any complaint at all, it would be a minor one, having to do on occasion with his sense of pacing.

Thus, in the suite of three excerpts from the third act of "Die Meistersinger," the playing was clean, there was plenty of well controlled power, and the brasses were splendid, if not note perfect. Still, one longed for just a bit of relaxation at certain spots in the "Procession of the Mastersingers." Mr. Leinsdorf made his effect, but seemed too much in a hurry to have done with it.

Pictorial intentions

On the other hand, the "Flying Dutchman" overture did not suffer from the fast-paced reading it received at Mr. Leinsdorf's hands. This was easily the most satisfying performance of the afternoon. Well built crescendos, sudden drastic shifts of dynamic level, above all, the ability to underline Wagner's pictorial intentions made this familiar score a fresh and exciting experience.

The main event was a complete per formance of Act I from "Die Walküre." Th roles of Siegmund and Sieglinde were sun by Jess Thomas and Claire Watson, tw Americans who have recently been makin big names for themselves in European oper houses. Hunding was portrayed by th British-born, American-trained Kenneth Smith.

The latter is the fortunate owner of a voice that will penetrate the thickest Wagnerian bog. Neither Mr. Thomas nor Miss Watson was able to project as well, though they both possess more pleasing voices and experience fewer problems of technique.

Notwithstanding the generally high quality of yesterday's performance, this listener is still not convinced that Act I of "Die Walküre" makes an effective concert piece. True, there is a certain dramatic completeness to the act. But Wagnerian drama is hard enough to follow when done with sets, costumes and actors. Without any theatrical support, an hour and a quarter of "endless melody" becomes an esoteric pleasure indeed.

OCTOBER

FRI - SAT - II / TUES B - I

3

EIGHTY-SEVENTH SEASON 1967–1968

Second Program

Friday afternoon 6 October at 2 o'clock
Saturday evening 7 October at 8.30

CHARLES WILSON conducting

BRAHMS
Academic Festival Overture op. 80

HENZE
Symphony no. 1
- Allegretto, con grazia
- Lento (Notturno)
- Allegro con moto – Tempo giusto – Piu mosso

First performance in Boston

INTERMISSION

RIMSKY-KORSAKOV
Sheherazade op. 35

The Academic Festival Overture has been recorded by the Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky

The concerts will end at about 3.45 on Friday and at about 10.15 on Saturday

BALDWIN PIANO
RCA VICTOR RECORDS

HERALD TRAVELER (M)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 240,000

SEP 16 1967 New England Newsclip

Wilson Conducting New York Opera

Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been released from his duties with the orchestra for several guest appearances with the New York City Opera. He will conduct Mozart's "The Marriage of Figaro" for the first time tonight in the New York State Theater at Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts, with subsequent performances on Sept. 29, Oct. 21 and Oct. 29.

Wilson will make his conducting debut with the Boston Symphony at its second pair of concerts of the 1967-68 season on Friday afternoon, Oct. 6, and Saturday evening, Oct. 7. His program includes Brahms' Academic Festival Overture, Hans Werner Henze's Symphony No. 1 and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Sheherazade."

EIGHTY-SEVENTH SEASON 1967–1968

First Program

Tuesday evening 10 October at 7.30

WAGNER
Der fliegende Holländer – Overture

WAGNER
Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg
- Introduction to Act III – Prelude to Act I

INTERMISSION

SCHUBERT
Symphony no. 9 in C major The Great
- Andante; Allegro ma non troppo
- Andante con moto
- Scherzo
- Finale

Schubert's Symphony no. 9 has been recorded by the Orchestra under Charles Munch

BALDWIN PIANO
RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Old Symphony Hall Is Young Again

Last week's first concert in the Boston Symphony's Tuesday "B" Series was a pleasant occasion, with music by Wagner and Schubert — "Symphony No. 9 in C Major." Inasmuch as I already have reviewed the program, I have nothing really new to say about the music — most of which was familiar and time-tested, anyway.

However, I would like to congratulate the Boston Symphony management on the first-rate refurbishing job that has been done in staid old Symphony Hall. After the Pops season closed, work began, with the Edward K. Perry Company, who painted the hall 67 years ago, once more on hand for the redecoration. The statues in the niches of the auditorium look whiter than ever; their plaster surfaces have been renewed to give them again the look of marble.

The walls of the auditorium have been repainted as has the ceiling; seven colors were used in all, and these colors match perfectly the originals. Likewise, the ceiling was stripped and repainted so that the auditorium now has been restored to its original look of 1900.

The lovely chandeliers also have been cleaned and polished. Moreover, the organ pipes, the proscenium arch, and the balcony railings, all covered with gold leaf, have been washed and a new protective coat of gelatin added.

Although the handsome hall now looks fresh and shining and although throughout the redecoration special care was taken to make certain that no change would occur in the auditorium's unique acoustics (among the best in the world), there is still work to do. For example, the leather doors to Symphony Hall will gradually be re-covered. In addition, public elevators will be installed later, and a new entrance and foyer will be constructed.

All this refurbishing represents the first expenditure from the $1,500,000 which is being raised as part of the $5,500,000 for the Boston Symphony. In any event, Symphony Hall, long a source of pride to both proper and improper Bostonians, has never looked better.

STANDARD-TIMES (e)
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
CIRC. 68,850

OCT 11 1967 New England Newsclip

Program Is Well-Played By Boston Symphony

By EARL J. DIAS
Standard-Times Music Critic

Last night, in Symphony Hall, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Erich Leinsdorf, began its 1967-68 Tuesday "B" Series with a program that featured two works by Wagner, "Overture to 'The Flying Dutchman'" and excerpts from "Die Meistersinger," and Schubert's "Symphony No. 9 in C Major."

Obviously, the program offered no musical surprises, but it was well-played. And, inasmuch as Mr. Leinsdorf and his orchestra were in such good form even familiar music often had a quality of freshness and spontaneity.

Wagner's "Overture to 'The Flying Dutchman'" is of interest chiefly because it utilizes some of the ideas and techniques that were to come to full flower in his later work. Alternately meditative and sonorous, it makes for good listening.

From "Die Meistersinger" Mr. Leinsdorf chose the introduction to Act III and the perennially popular prelude to Act I. The introduction is somber and sometimes ominous; the prelude is a sort of cameo version of the opera itself inasmuch as it uses the major themes associated with the principal characters of the work.

It ends with the triumphant and thrilling theme of the meistersingers themselves — conveyed in glorious and rafter-shaking sound by the Boston musicians.

I have no doubt whatsoever that Schubert's Symphony No. 9 is his finest orchestral work — better in brilliance of instrumentation, in variety of melody, in its handling of the symphonic form than the much-played "Unfinished."

It is an irony of fate that Schubert himself never heard this symphony; it was rescued from oblivion a decade after his death by Mendelssohn who found the manscript in the possession of a friend.

Mr. Leinsdorf's reading o fthe work is firm, steady, somewhat rapid in tempo, and never over-romanticized. I thought the orchestra was especially effective in the lilting scherzo and in the magnificent finale which, even when it repeats itself, (and the only weakness of the work is Schubert's tendency to occasional long-windedness) manages, nevertheless, to hold one's attention.

The next concert in the series will be played Oct. 31, with Jorge Metser as guest conductor.

SUNDAY STANDARD TIMES
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
CIRC. 60,150

OCT 15 1967 New England Newsclip

OCTOBER

FRI - SAT - II / TUES B - I

3

EIGHTY-SEVENTH SEASON 1967–1968

Second Program

Friday afternoon 6 October at 2 o'clock
Saturday evening 7 October at 8.30

CHARLES WILSON conducting

BRAHMS
Academic Festival Overture op. 80

HENZE
Symphony no. 1
Allegretto, con grazia
Lento (Notturno)
Allegro con moto – Tempo giusto – Più mosso
First performance in Boston

INTERMISSION

RIMSKY-KORSAKOV
Sheherazade op. 35

The Academic Festival Overture has been recorded by the Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky

The concerts will end at about 3.45 on Friday and at about 10.15 on Saturday

BALDWIN PIANO
RCA VICTOR RECORDS

HERALD TRAVELER (M)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 240,000

SEP 16 1967 New England Newsclip

Wilson Conducting New York Opera

Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been released from his duties with the orchestra for several guest appearances with the New York City Opera. He will conduct Mozart's "The Marriage of Figaro" for the first time tonight in the New York State Theater at Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts, with subsequent performances on Sept. 29, Oct. 21 and Oct. 29.

Wilson will make his conducting debut with the Boston Symphony at its second pair of concerts of the 1967-68 season on Friday afternoon, Oct. 6, and Saturday evening, Oct. 7. His program includes Brahms' Academic Festival Overture, Hans Werner Henze's Symphony No. 1 and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Sheherazade."

EIGHTY-SEVENTH SEASON 1967–1968

First Program

Tuesday evening 10 October at 7.30

WAGNER
Der fliegende Holländer – Overture

WAGNER
Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg
Introduction to Act III – Prelude to Act I

INTERMISSION

SCHUBERT
Symphony no. 9 in C major The Great
Andante; Allegro ma non troppo
Andante con moto
Scherzo
Finale

Schubert's Symphony no. 9 has been recorded by the Orchestra under Charles Munch

BALDWIN PIANO
RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Old Symphony Hall Is Young Again

Last week's first concert in the Boston Symphony's Tuesday "B" Series was a pleasant occasion, with music by Wagner and Schubert — "Symphony No. 9 in C Major." Inasmuch as I already have reviewed the program, I have nothing really new to say about the music — most of which was familiar and time-tested, anyway.

